Murim Login

Murim Login: English Translation
Translation by jimzrt, licensed under CC BY 4.0:
https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by/4.0/
Source and credit: https://github.com/jimzrt/murim-login

Based on the Korean web novel Login Murim by Zerobic. All rights in the original novel belong to its rights holders and are not covered by this license. See the NOTICE file in the source repository.

Contents

Chapter 0 24
Chapter 1 25
Chapter 2 32
Chapter 3 42
Chapter 4 52
Chapter 5 61
Chapter 6 72
Chapter 7 80
Chapter 8 88
Chapter 9 95
Chapter 10 104
Chapter 11 113
Chapter 12 122
Chapter 13 131
Chapter 14 139
Chapter 15 147
Chapter 16 156
Chapter 17 164
Chapter 18 171
Chapter 19 178
Chapter 20 186
Chapter 21 194
Chapter 22 202
Chapter 23 209
Chapter 24 216
Chapter 25 225
Chapter 26 233
Chapter 27 241
Chapter 28 249
Chapter 29 258
Chapter 30 266
Chapter 31 274
Chapter 32 284
Chapter 33 291
Chapter 34 299
Chapter 35 307
Chapter 36 315
Chapter 37 322
Chapter 38 330
Chapter 39 339
Chapter 40 346
Chapter 41 355
Chapter 42 362
Chapter 43 370
Chapter 44 378
Chapter 45 386
Chapter 46 393
Chapter 47 402
Chapter 48 410

Chapter 49 418
Chapter 50 427
Chapter 51 436
Chapter 52 445
Chapter 53 454
Chapter 54 463
Chapter 55 471
Chapter 56 479
Chapter 57 488
Chapter 58 496
Chapter 59 505
Chapter 60 512
Chapter 61 520
Chapter 62 529
Chapter 63 539
Chapter 64 548
Chapter 65 556
Chapter 66 564
Chapter 67 572
Chapter 68 579
Chapter 69 587
Chapter 70 596
Chapter 71 604
Chapter 72 613
Chapter 73 622
Chapter 74 630
Chapter 75 640
Chapter 76 648
Chapter 77 656
Chapter 78 664
Chapter 79 671
Chapter 80 679
Chapter 81 687
Chapter 82 696
Chapter 83 704
Chapter 84 713
Chapter 85 721
Chapter 86 729
Chapter 87 736
Chapter 88 744
Chapter 89 752
Chapter 90 760
Chapter 91 768
Chapter 92 776
Chapter 93 783
Chapter 94 791
Chapter 95 799
Chapter 96 808
Chapter 97 815
Chapter 98 823
Chapter 99 831
Chapter 100 839

Chapter 101 848
Chapter 102 855
Chapter 103 863
Chapter 104 871
Chapter 105 878
Chapter 106 886
Chapter 107 894
Chapter 108 901
Chapter 109 908
Chapter 110 916
Chapter 111 923
Chapter 112 931
Chapter 113 938
Chapter 114 946
Chapter 115 954
Chapter 116 962
Chapter 117 970
Chapter 118 978
Chapter 119 985
Chapter 120 993
Chapter 121 1001
Chapter 122 1008
Chapter 123 1015
Chapter 124 1022
Chapter 125 1029
Chapter 126 1036
Chapter 127 1044
Chapter 128 1053
Chapter 129 1062
Chapter 130 1070
Chapter 131 1078
Chapter 132 1086
Chapter 133 1094
Chapter 134 1101
Chapter 135 1108
Chapter 136 1116
Chapter 137 1123
Chapter 138 1131
Chapter 139 1138
Chapter 140 1146
Chapter 141 1155
Chapter 142 1163
Chapter 143 1170
Chapter 144 1178
Chapter 145 1185
Chapter 146 1193
Chapter 147 1201
Chapter 148 1209
Chapter 149 1216
Chapter 150 1225
Chapter 151 1235
Chapter 152 1244

Chapter 153 1252
Chapter 154 1262
Chapter 155 1271
Chapter 156 1278
Chapter 157 1286
Chapter 158 1294
Chapter 159 1302
Chapter 160 1313
Chapter 161 1321
Chapter 162 1328
Chapter 163 1336
Chapter 164 1344
Chapter 165 1353
Chapter 166 1360
Chapter 167 1368
Chapter 168 1376
Chapter 169 1384
Chapter 170 1392
Chapter 171 1400
Chapter 172 1408
Chapter 173 1415
Chapter 174 1423
Chapter 175 1430
Chapter 176 1438
Chapter 177 1445
Chapter 178 1453
Chapter 179 1460
Chapter 180 1468
Chapter 181 1476
Chapter 182 1484
Chapter 183 1492
Chapter 184 1501
Chapter 185 1509
Chapter 186 1517
Chapter 187 1527
Chapter 188 1534
Chapter 189 1542
Chapter 190 1551
Chapter 191 1559
Chapter 192 1568
Chapter 193 1576
Chapter 194 1585
Chapter 195 1593
Chapter 196 1601
Chapter 197 1609
Chapter 198 1617
Chapter 199 1626
Chapter 200 1634
Chapter 201 1642
Chapter 202 1650
Chapter 203 1658
Chapter 204 1667

Chapter 205 1675
Chapter 206 1682
Chapter 207 1691
Chapter 208 1699
Chapter 209 1707
Chapter 210 1714
Chapter 211 1722
Chapter 212 1731
Chapter 213 1739
Chapter 214 1747
Chapter 215 1756
Chapter 216 1763
Chapter 217 1770
Chapter 218 1779
Chapter 219 1787
Chapter 220 1794
Chapter 221 1802
Chapter 222 1809
Chapter 223 1817
Chapter 224 1825
Chapter 225 1833
Chapter 226 1842
Chapter 227 1851
Chapter 228 1859
Chapter 229 1867
Chapter 230 1876
Chapter 231 1884
Chapter 232 1893
Chapter 233 1903
Chapter 234 1911
Chapter 235 1921
Chapter 236 1931
Chapter 237 1938
Chapter 238 1946
Chapter 239 1953
Chapter 240 1961
Chapter 241 1969
Chapter 242 1978
Chapter 243 1986
Chapter 244 1994
Chapter 245 2002
Chapter 246 2010
Chapter 247 2020
Chapter 248 2028
Chapter 249 2035
Chapter 250 2043
Chapter 251 2051
Chapter 252 2059
Chapter 253 2066
Chapter 254 2074
Chapter 255 2081
Chapter 256 2088

Chapter 257 2095
Chapter 258 2103
Chapter 259 2112
Chapter 260 2120
Chapter 261 2128
Chapter 262 2135
Chapter 263 2143
Chapter 264 2150
Chapter 265 2158
Chapter 266 2168
Chapter 267 2175
Chapter 268 2183
Chapter 269 2190
Chapter 270 2198
Chapter 271 2207
Chapter 272 2215
Chapter 273 2224
Chapter 274 2232
Chapter 275 2239
Chapter 276 2246
Chapter 277 2254
Chapter 278 2263
Chapter 279 2270
Chapter 280 2278
Chapter 281 2286
Chapter 282 2294
Chapter 283 2302
Chapter 284 2311
Chapter 285 2320
Chapter 286 2329
Chapter 287 2337
Chapter 288 2346
Chapter 289 2354
Chapter 290 2361
Chapter 291 2369
Chapter 292 2376
Chapter 293 2384
Chapter 294 2392
Chapter 295 2400
Chapter 296 2408
Chapter 297 2416
Chapter 298 2424
Chapter 299 2432
Chapter 300 2439
Chapter 301 2448
Chapter 302 2455
Chapter 303 2463
Chapter 304 2471
Chapter 305 2478
Chapter 306 2486
Chapter 307 2493
Chapter 308 2500

Chapter 309 2509
Chapter 310 2516
Chapter 311 2524
Chapter 312 2532
Chapter 313 2540
Chapter 314 2547
Chapter 315 2554
Chapter 316 2562
Chapter 317 2569
Chapter 318 2576
Chapter 319 2583
Chapter 320 2590
Chapter 321 2598
Chapter 322 2605
Chapter 323 2612
Chapter 324 2619
Chapter 325 2628
Chapter 326 2637
Chapter 327 2645
Chapter 328 2654
Chapter 329 2662
Chapter 330 2671
Chapter 331 2678
Chapter 332 2686
Chapter 333 2693
Chapter 334 2700
Chapter 335 2708
Chapter 336 2716
Chapter 337 2723
Chapter 338 2730
Chapter 339 2737
Chapter 340 2744
Chapter 341 2751
Chapter 342 2759
Chapter 343 2767
Chapter 344 2774
Chapter 345 2781
Chapter 346 2788
Chapter 347 2796
Chapter 348 2803
Chapter 349 2810
Chapter 350 2817
Chapter 351 2825
Chapter 352 2833
Chapter 353 2840
Chapter 354 2848
Chapter 355 2856
Chapter 356 2863
Chapter 357 2870
Chapter 358 2879
Chapter 359 2886
Chapter 360 2894

Chapter 361 2901
Chapter 362 2909
Chapter 363 2918
Chapter 364 2926
Chapter 365 2934
Chapter 366 2942
Chapter 367 2950
Chapter 368 2957
Chapter 369 2965
Chapter 370 2971
Chapter 371 2979
Chapter 372 2987
Chapter 373 2994
Chapter 374 3002
Chapter 375 3009
Chapter 376 3016
Chapter 377 3023
Chapter 378 3032
Chapter 379 3040
Chapter 380 3048
Chapter 381 3056
Chapter 382 3065
Chapter 383 3073
Chapter 384 3081
Chapter 385 3089
Chapter 386 3097
Chapter 387 3104
Chapter 388 3112
Chapter 389 3121
Chapter 390 3129
Chapter 391 3136
Chapter 392 3143
Chapter 393 3150
Chapter 394 3157
Chapter 395 3164
Chapter 396 3172
Chapter 397 3180
Chapter 398 3190
Chapter 399 3197
Chapter 400 3204
Chapter 401 3212
Chapter 402 3220
Chapter 403 3227
Chapter 404 3236
Chapter 405 3243
Chapter 406 3250
Chapter 407 3257
Chapter 408 3264
Chapter 409 3272
Chapter 410 3279
Chapter 411 3287
Chapter 412 3294

Chapter 413 3301
Chapter 414 3308
Chapter 415 3315
Chapter 416 3323
Chapter 417 3331
Chapter 418 3339
Chapter 419 3347
Chapter 420 3355
Chapter 421 3362
Chapter 422 3370
Chapter 423 3377
Chapter 424 3384
Chapter 425 3393
Chapter 426 3400
Chapter 427 3407
Chapter 428 3414
Chapter 429 3421
Chapter 430 3429
Chapter 431 3436
Chapter 432 3443
Chapter 433 3450
Chapter 434 3457
Chapter 435 3465
Chapter 436 3472
Chapter 437 3480
Chapter 438 3487
Chapter 439 3494
Chapter 440 3501
Chapter 441 3508
Chapter 442 3515
Chapter 443 3522
Chapter 444 3529
Chapter 445 3536
Chapter 446 3543
Chapter 447 3550
Chapter 448 3557
Chapter 449 3564
Chapter 450 3571
Chapter 451 3578
Chapter 452 3585
Chapter 453 3592
Chapter 454 3600
Chapter 455 3608
Chapter 456 3614
Chapter 457 3621
Chapter 458 3629
Chapter 459 3637
Chapter 460 3643
Chapter 461 3649
Chapter 462 3656
Chapter 463 3663
Chapter 464 3670

Chapter 465 3677
Chapter 466 3684
Chapter 467 3692
Chapter 468 3699
Chapter 469 3706
Chapter 470 3713
Chapter 471 3720
Chapter 472 3727
Chapter 473 3734
Chapter 474 3741
Chapter 475 3748
Chapter 476 3755
Chapter 477 3762
Chapter 478 3770
Chapter 479 3778
Chapter 480 3785
Chapter 481 3792
Chapter 482 3800
Chapter 483 3807
Chapter 484 3814
Chapter 485 3821
Chapter 486 3828
Chapter 487 3835
Chapter 488 3842
Chapter 489 3849
Chapter 490 3856
Chapter 491 3864
Chapter 492 3871
Chapter 493 3878
Chapter 494 3884
Chapter 495 3891
Chapter 496 3898
Chapter 497 3905
Chapter 498 3912
Chapter 499 3919
Chapter 500 3926
Chapter 501 3933
Chapter 502 3941
Chapter 503 3947
Chapter 504 3953
Chapter 505 3959
Chapter 506 3965
Chapter 507 3971
Chapter 508 3977
Chapter 509 3983
Chapter 510 3990
Chapter 511 3997
Chapter 512 4004
Chapter 513 4010
Chapter 514 4016
Chapter 515 4023
Chapter 516 4029

Chapter 517 4037
Chapter 518 4043
Chapter 519 4050
Chapter 520 4057
Chapter 521 4063
Chapter 522 4070
Chapter 523 4076
Chapter 524 4083
Chapter 525 4090
Chapter 526 4097
Chapter 527 4103
Chapter 528 4109
Chapter 529 4115
Chapter 530 4121
Chapter 531 4127
Chapter 532 4133
Chapter 533 4142
Chapter 534 4149
Chapter 535 4156
Chapter 536 4163
Chapter 537 4169
Chapter 538 4176
Chapter 539 4183
Chapter 540 4191
Chapter 541 4198
Chapter 542 4206
Chapter 543 4213
Chapter 544 4220
Chapter 545 4227
Chapter 546 4234
Chapter 547 4241
Chapter 548 4248
Chapter 549 4256
Chapter 550 4262
Chapter 551 4268
Chapter 552 4275
Chapter 553 4283
Chapter 554 4290
Chapter 555 4296
Chapter 556 4303
Chapter 557 4311
Chapter 558 4318
Chapter 559 4325
Chapter 560 4331
Chapter 561 4337
Chapter 562 4344
Chapter 563 4351
Chapter 564 4359
Chapter 565 4366
Chapter 566 4373
Chapter 567 4380
Chapter 568 4387

Chapter 569 4394
Chapter 570 4400
Chapter 571 4406
Chapter 572 4413
Chapter 573 4419
Chapter 574 4425
Chapter 575 4432
Chapter 576 4439
Chapter 577 4446
Chapter 578 4452
Chapter 579 4459
Chapter 580 4465
Chapter 581 4472
Chapter 582 4479
Chapter 583 4486
Chapter 584 4493
Chapter 585 4500
Chapter 586 4507
Chapter 587 4513
Chapter 588 4520
Chapter 589 4527
Chapter 590 4534
Chapter 591 4541
Chapter 592 4552
Chapter 593 4559
Chapter 594 4567
Chapter 595 4574
Chapter 596 4580
Chapter 597 4587
Chapter 598 4593
Chapter 599 4599
Chapter 600 4606
Chapter 601 4612
Chapter 602 4619
Chapter 603 4624
Chapter 604 4633
Chapter 605 4640
Chapter 606 4647
Chapter 607 4653
Chapter 608 4659
Chapter 609 4666
Chapter 610 4673
Chapter 611 4680
Chapter 612 4686
Chapter 613 4692
Chapter 614 4698
Chapter 615 4705
Chapter 616 4711
Chapter 617 4718
Chapter 618 4726
Chapter 619 4734
Chapter 620 4740

Chapter 621 4746
Chapter 622 4753
Chapter 623 4759
Chapter 624 4765
Chapter 625 4771
Chapter 626 4777
Chapter 627 4783
Chapter 628 4789
Chapter 629 4795
Chapter 630 4801
Chapter 631 4807
Chapter 632 4813
Chapter 633 4820
Chapter 634 4826
Chapter 635 4832
Chapter 636 4839
Chapter 637 4846
Chapter 638 4853
Chapter 639 4860
Chapter 640 4866
Chapter 641 4873
Chapter 642 4879
Chapter 643 4885
Chapter 644 4891
Chapter 645 4898
Chapter 646 4905
Chapter 647 4912
Chapter 648 4918
Chapter 649 4924
Chapter 650 4931
Chapter 651 4937
Chapter 652 4944
Chapter 653 4950
Chapter 654 4956
Chapter 655 4962
Chapter 656 4968
Chapter 657 4974
Chapter 658 4980
Chapter 659 4986
Chapter 660 4992
Chapter 661 4998
Chapter 662 5004
Chapter 663 5010
Chapter 664 5016
Chapter 665 5023
Chapter 666 5029
Chapter 667 5035
Chapter 668 5041
Chapter 669 5048
Chapter 670 5055
Chapter 671 5061
Chapter 672 5067

Chapter 673 5074
Chapter 674 5081
Chapter 675 5086
Chapter 676 5093
Chapter 677 5099
Chapter 678 5106
Chapter 679 5113
Chapter 680 5119
Chapter 681 5125
Chapter 682 5131
Chapter 683 5137
Chapter 684 5143
Chapter 685 5149
Chapter 686 5157
Chapter 687 5163
Chapter 688 5169
Chapter 689 5177
Chapter 690 5184
Chapter 691 5191
Chapter 692 5198
Chapter 693 5204
Chapter 694 5210
Chapter 695 5217
Chapter 696 5223
Chapter 697 5229
Chapter 698 5235
Chapter 699 5242
Chapter 700 5249
Chapter 701 5256
Chapter 702 5262
Chapter 703 5269
Chapter 704 5275
Chapter 705 5281
Chapter 706 5288
Chapter 707 5296
Chapter 708 5302
Chapter 709 5309
Chapter 710 5315
Chapter 711 5322
Chapter 712 5328
Chapter 713 5335
Chapter 714 5342
Chapter 715 5349
Chapter 716 5356
Chapter 717 5362
Chapter 718 5368
Chapter 719 5374
Chapter 720 5381
Chapter 721 5387
Chapter 722 5394
Chapter 723 5400
Chapter 724 5407

Chapter 725 5413
Chapter 726 5419
Chapter 727 5425
Chapter 728 5431
Chapter 729 5438
Chapter 730 5444
Chapter 731 5450
Chapter 732 5456
Chapter 733 5462
Chapter 734 5468
Chapter 735 5474
Chapter 736 5480
Chapter 737 5488
Chapter 738 5494
Chapter 739 5500
Chapter 740 5506
Chapter 741 5512
Chapter 742 5518
Chapter 743 5523
Chapter 744 5528
Chapter 745 5534
Chapter 746 5540
Chapter 747 5546
Chapter 748 5552
Chapter 749 5558
Chapter 750 5565
Chapter 751 5571
Chapter 752 5577
Chapter 753 5583
Chapter 754 5590
Chapter 755 5597
Chapter 756 5605
Chapter 757 5612
Chapter 758 5618
Chapter 759 5624
Chapter 760 5631
Chapter 761 5638
Chapter 762 5645
Chapter 763 5651
Chapter 764 5657
Chapter 765 5663
Chapter 766 5669
Chapter 767 5675
Chapter 768 5681
Chapter 769 5687
Chapter 770 5693
Chapter 771 5699
Chapter 772 5706
Chapter 773 5712
Chapter 774 5718
Chapter 775 5724
Chapter 776 5729

Chapter 777 5735
Chapter 778 5741
Chapter 779 5747
Chapter 780 5755
Chapter 781 5761
Chapter 782 5767
Chapter 783 5773
Chapter 784 5779
Chapter 785 5785
Chapter 786 5791
Chapter 787 5799
Chapter 788 5807
Chapter 789 5813
Chapter 790 5820
Chapter 791 5827
Chapter 792 5833
Chapter 793 5839
Chapter 794 5846
Chapter 795 5853
Chapter 796 5859
Chapter 797 5866
Chapter 798 5873
Chapter 799 5879
Chapter 800 5886
Chapter 801 5892
Chapter 802 5898
Chapter 803 5904
Chapter 804 5910
Chapter 805 5916
Chapter 806 5923
Chapter 807 5930
Chapter 808 5937
Chapter 809 5944
Chapter 810 5950
Chapter 811 5956
Chapter 812 5962
Chapter 813 5968
Chapter 814 5974
Chapter 815 5980
Chapter 816 5986
Chapter 817 5992
Chapter 818 5998
Chapter 819 6004
Chapter 820 6011
Chapter 821 6018
Chapter 822 6024
Chapter 823 6031
Chapter 824 6038
Chapter 825 6044
Chapter 826 6051
Chapter 827 6057
Chapter 828 6063

Chapter 829 6070
Chapter 830 6077
Chapter 831 6083
Chapter 832 6090
Chapter 833 6097
Chapter 834 6104
Chapter 835 6111
Chapter 836 6120
Chapter 837 6126
Chapter 838 6133
Chapter 839 6139
Chapter 840 6145
Chapter 841 6151
Chapter 842 6157
Chapter 843 6163
Chapter 844 6169
Chapter 845 6175
Chapter 846 6182
Chapter 847 6188
Chapter 848 6195
Chapter 849 6202
Chapter 850 6209
Chapter 851 6215
Chapter 852 6221
Chapter 853 6227
Chapter 854 6235
Chapter 855 6241
Chapter 856 6247
Chapter 857 6254
Chapter 858 6260
Chapter 859 6267
Chapter 860 6273
Chapter 861 6279
Chapter 862 6285
Chapter 863 6292
Chapter 864 6298
Chapter 865 6304
Chapter 866 6310
Chapter 867 6316
Chapter 868 6322
Chapter 869 6328
Chapter 870 6335
Chapter 871 6342
Chapter 872 6349
Chapter 873 6355
Chapter 874 6362
Chapter 875 6369
Chapter 876 6375
Chapter 877 6381
Chapter 878 6387
Chapter 879 6394
Chapter 880 6403

Chapter 881 6409
Chapter 882 6415
Chapter 883 6422
Chapter 884 6428
Chapter 885 6434
Chapter 886 6440
Chapter 887 6446
Chapter 888 6453
Chapter 889 6460
Chapter 890 6466
Chapter 891 6472
Chapter 892 6478
Chapter 893 6484
Chapter 894 6490
Chapter 895 6496
Chapter 896 6502
Chapter 897 6507
Chapter 898 6513
Chapter 899 6520
Chapter 900 6526
Chapter 901 6533
Chapter 902 6540
Chapter 903 6546
Chapter 904 6553
Chapter 905 6560
Chapter 906 6566
Chapter 907 6573
Chapter 908 6580
Chapter 909 6587
Chapter 910 6593
Chapter 911 6600
Chapter 912 6607
Chapter 913 6614
Chapter 914 6620
Chapter 915 6627
Chapter 916 6633
Chapter 917 6639
Chapter 918 6646
Chapter 919 6653
Chapter 920 6660
Chapter 921 6668
Chapter 922 6675
Chapter 923 6681
Chapter 924 6688
Chapter 925 6696
Chapter 926 6703
Chapter 927 6710
Chapter 928 6716
Chapter 929 6722
Chapter 930 6728
Chapter 931 6735
Chapter 932 6741

Chapter 933 6748
Chapter 934 6753
Chapter 935 6760
Chapter 936 6766
Chapter 937 6773
Chapter 938 6779
Chapter 939 6785
Chapter 940 6791
Chapter 941 6798
Chapter 942 6805
Chapter 943 6811
Chapter 944 6817
Chapter 945 6823
Chapter 946 6829
Chapter 947 6834
Chapter 948 6840
Chapter 949 6846
Chapter 950 6853
Chapter 951 6861
Chapter 952 6867
Chapter 953 6873
Chapter 954 6880
Chapter 955 6886
Chapter 956 6892
Chapter 957 6899
Chapter 958 6905
Chapter 959 6912
Chapter 960 6918
Chapter 961 6924
Chapter 962 6930
Chapter 963 6937
Chapter 964 6943
Chapter 965 6950
Chapter 966 6956
Chapter 967 6963
Chapter 968 6969
Chapter 969 6977
Chapter 970 6984
Chapter 971 6990
Chapter 972 6996
Chapter 973 7002
Chapter 974 7008
Chapter 975 7014
Chapter 976 7021
Chapter 977 7028
Chapter 978 7035
Chapter 979 7041
Chapter 980 7049
Chapter 981 7055
Chapter 982 7061
Chapter 983 7067
Chapter 984 7074

Chapter 985 7081
Chapter 986 7087
Chapter 987 7093
Chapter 988 7100
Chapter 989 7106
Chapter 990 7112
Chapter 991 7120
Chapter 992 7126
Chapter 993 7132
Chapter 994 7138
Chapter 995 7144
Chapter 996 7150
Chapter 997 7156
Chapter 998 7162
Chapter 999 7168
Chapter 1000 7174
Chapter 1001 7180
Chapter 1002 7186
Chapter 1003 7192
Chapter 1004 7198
Chapter 1005 7204
Chapter 1006 7211
Chapter 1007 7217
Chapter 1008 7223
Chapter 1009 7230
Chapter 1010 7236
Chapter 1011 7243
Chapter 1012 7250
Chapter 1013 7255
Chapter 1014 7261
Chapter 1015 7267
Chapter 1016 7273
Chapter 1017 7279
Chapter 1018 7285
Chapter 1019 7291
Chapter 1020 7297
Chapter 1021 7303
Chapter 1022 7309
Chapter 1023 7315
Chapter 1024 7321
Chapter 1025 7327
Chapter 1026 7333
Chapter 1027 7340
Chapter 1028 7346
Chapter 1029 7353
Chapter 1030 7360
Chapter 1031 7366
Chapter 1032 7372
Chapter 1033 7379
Chapter 1034 7385
Chapter 1035 7391
Chapter 1036 7397

Chapter 1037 7404
Chapter 1038 7412
Chapter 1039 7418
Chapter 1040 7425
Chapter 1041 7432
Chapter 1042 7438
Chapter 1043 7445
Chapter 1044 7451
Chapter 1045 7458
Chapter 1046 7465
Chapter 1047 7472
Chapter 1048 7478
Chapter 1049 7485
Chapter 1050 7491
Chapter 1051 7497
Chapter 1052 7503
Chapter 1053 7509
Chapter 1054 7514
Chapter 1055 7520
Chapter 1056 7525
Chapter 1057 7532
Chapter 1058 7538
Chapter 1059 7545
Chapter 1060 7551
Chapter 1061 7557
Chapter 1062 7562
Chapter 1063 7568
Chapter 1064 7574
Chapter 1065 7580
Chapter 1066 7588
Chapter 1067 7594
Chapter 1068 7600
Chapter 1069 7606
Chapter 1070 7612
Chapter 1071 7618
Chapter 1072 7624
Chapter 1073 7629
Chapter 1074 7635
Chapter 1075 7641
Chapter 1076 7647
Chapter 1077 7653
Chapter 1078 7658
Chapter 1079 7664
Chapter 1080 7670
Chapter 1081 7675
Chapter 1082 7680
Chapter 1083 7686
Chapter 1084 7691
Chapter 1085 7697
Chapter 1086 7703
Chapter 1087 7708
Chapter 1088 7713

Chapter 1089 7720
Chapter 1090 7727
Chapter 1091 7733
Chapter 1092 7739
Chapter 1093 7745
Chapter 1094 7751
Chapter 1095 7757
Chapter 1096 7763
Chapter 1097 7770
Chapter 1098 7775
Chapter 1099 7782
Chapter 1100 7788
Chapter 1101 7793
Chapter 1102 7800
Chapter 1103 7805
Chapter 1104 7811
Chapter 1105 7817
Chapter 1106 7823
Chapter 1107 7829
Chapter 1108 7835
Chapter 1109 7842
Chapter 1110 7849
Chapter 1111 7855
Chapter 1112 7861
Chapter 1113 7869
Chapter 1114 7875
Chapter 1115 7883
Chapter 1116 7888
Chapter 1117 7894
Chapter 1118 7901
Chapter 1119 7906
Chapter 1120 7914
Chapter 1121 7920
Chapter 1122 7926
Chapter 1123 7931
Chapter 1124 7940
Chapter 1125 7947
Chapter 1126 7953
Chapter 1127 7960
Chapter 1128 7966
Chapter 1129 7973
Chapter 1130 7979
Chapter 1131 7985
Chapter 1132 7991
Chapter 1133 7997
Chapter 1134 8003
Chapter 1135 8009
Chapter 1136 8016
Chapter 1137 8021
Chapter 1138 8027
Chapter 1139 8033
Chapter 1140 8039

Chapter 1141 8045
Chapter 1142 8050
Chapter 1143 8056
Chapter 1144 8063
Chapter 1145 8069
Chapter 1146 8075
Chapter 1147 8081
Chapter 1148 8087
Chapter 1149 8093
Chapter 1150 8099
Chapter 1151 8104
Chapter 1152 8110
Chapter 1153 8116
Chapter 1154 8121
Chapter 1155 8126
Chapter 1156 8131
Chapter 1157 8138
Chapter 1158 8144
Chapter 1159 8150
Chapter 1160 8155
Chapter 1161 8161
Chapter 1162 8166
Chapter 1163 8172
Chapter 1164 8179
Chapter 1165 8184
Chapter 1166 8190
Chapter 1167 8197
Chapter 1168 8203
Chapter 1169 8209
Chapter 1170 8215
Chapter 1171 8221
Chapter 1172 8227
Chapter 1173 8233
Chapter 1174 8240
Chapter 1175 8246
Chapter 1176 8251
Chapter 1177 8257
Chapter 1178 8262
Chapter 1179 8268
Chapter 1180 8274
Chapter 1181 8280
Chapter 1182 8286
Chapter 1183 8293
Chapter 1184 8299
Chapter 1185 8304
Chapter 1186 8309
Chapter 1187 8315
Chapter 1188 8321
Chapter 1189 8327
Chapter 1190 8332
Chapter 1191 8338

Chapter 0

There's a Russian proverb:

> "Free cheese is only found in a mousetrap."

Looking back, I can't help thinking that everything about that day was someone's mousetrap. I'd been fired from the job I'd held for seven years, the weather was brutally hot, and I lived in a poor hillside neighborhood[1] you had to cross two hills to reach…

I'd barely made it up and was still catching my breath when I spotted it.

An old game capsule beneath a streetlamp.

What happened next? You can guess.

I'd become unemployed overnight. I was a hungry rat who couldn't possibly ignore the free cheese right in front of me.

Wouldn't someone have clapped and laughed as they watched me grunt and strain with the capsule on my back?

"The fool got caught in the trap!"

[1] Daldongne, literally "moon village," is a Korean term for a poor hillside neighborhood.

Chapter 1

"It's garbage."

Jinho delivered the verdict with the solemnity of a judge. He was the manager of the goshiwon[2] where I lived, a thirty-year-old exam candidate.

We were fairly close, being only three years apart, and he was always bragging about how much he knew about IT. That was why I'd shown him the capsule I'd picked up, but…

"Is it really that bad?"

"No. I said it's garbage."

Wow. Not even a hint of hesitation. For some reason, I felt personally insulted.

"You didn't even look at it properly."

Just as I'd said, he hadn't even looked inside. He'd merely given it a quick once-over, top to bottom, before declaring it garbage. Since I'd been wondering how much I could get for it secondhand, the blow hit me hard.

"Taekyung. Taekyung. Jin Taekyung. You're laboring under a serious misunderstanding."

"…?"

"Shit is shit. You don't have to dig through it to check for yesterday's bean sprouts. You can tell it's shit just by looking at it."

"Oh."

"Shh. Don't say anything more. I wasn't fishing for praise."

"Hyung…"[3]

I wanted to kill him. My fist trembled with the urge, and Jinho flinched. Unlike him, who had spent his entire life hunched over a desk, I had a fairly intimidating build.

"Taekyung. Let's recall Article 1, Clause 12 of the Awakened Persons Special Act. What you're about to do constitutes assault of a civilian by an Awakened…"

"I thought you said an F-rank Hunter like me didn't even count as an Awakened?"

"I did? When? Was I blackout drunk?"

Watching him make such a fuss, I could only sigh.

My fist slowly dropped.

"That's right. Good thinking. This field is small enough as it is. If word got around that you assaulted a civilian, you'd get fired from your Guild too…"

"I already got fired."

"Huh?"

---

[2] A goshiwon is a Korean residence of very small, inexpensive rented rooms, often with shared facilities.

[3] Hyung is what a younger man calls an older brother or a close older male friend.

“The moment I showed up, my Team Leader thanked me for all my hard work.”

I’d started that job at twenty. I’d needed to support my family in place of my late father, which was why I’d chosen to become a Hunter.

F-rank. The lowest possible grade, with no particular talent to speak of, but I prided myself on having worked hard. With what I earned, I paid for my mother’s medical treatment and supported my only younger sibling.

But now… it felt as though the past seven years had vanished all at once. I remembered the Team Leader’s impassive face as he informed me of my dismissal a few hours earlier, and my chest tightened.

“Uh… well.”

I gave a short laugh at Jinho’s flustered expression.

“You feel bad, don’t you?”

“Honestly… kind of.”

This guy. A serious expression really didn’t suit him.

“Then buy me a drink. This is when you’re supposed to act like my hyung.”[4]

“Listen to the disrespect on you. Try treating me like your hyung[5] before you say something like that.”

He said that, but still jerked his chin for me to follow. Judging by his expression, we were getting plastered tonight.

A Gate marks the boundary of the world. Outside it—in other words, in the modern world—is the civilized society we know. Go inside, though, and it’s crawling with monsters no one has ever seen or heard of.

The weakest and most common of them are goblins—even an F-rank Hunter like me can handle one.

The reason I’m bringing this up now is…

Gwaah. Gwaah.

How can a person even do that?

Was that thing human or a monster? Leaning against a utility pole and vomiting, Jinho looked just like a goblin that had taken a hard blow to the solar plexus.

“Hey, Jinho. Mr. Seong Jinho. Try to come to your senses.”

“Gwaah?”

…Just carry on.

I told you to drink slowly.

[4] Hyung is what a younger man calls an older brother or a close older male friend.
[5] Hyung is what a younger man calls an older brother or a close older male friend.

He'd been pounding drinks like a lunatic since the first round, and this was how he'd ended up. Never mind that I'd had to pay the bill—I was soaked through after carrying the dead-drunk man all the way back to the goshiwon.[6]

Sweat came standard. Vomit was an optional extra. There was no question whose mouth it had come from.

With his intermittent retching as background music, I watched the sun sink toward the horizon.

Getting fired wasn't bad enough. Fuck.

The memories of the day flashed through my mind like a panorama.

What a spectacular day.

"Urp. Urrrgh. Where are we, driver? Huh?"

And you were the highlight of it all.

"We're home. We're here, so try to wake up."

"Home? My home's in Gangwon Province. Oh, Mom. Mom! I want some of my mom's doenjang stew.[7]"

"Oh, for crying out loud. It's the goshiwon,[8] hyung."[9]

"The goshiwon?[10] Hope Goshiwon?"[11]

"Yeah. So try to wake up."

"Hope… Right. Hope can't be bought with money. My mom always said it was in everyone's heart. She makes incredible doenjang stew.[12]"

I waited patiently until he reached the part about doenjang stew, then punched him in the gut.

Even while vomiting, he mumbled Article 1, Clause 12 of the Awakened Persons Special Act, proving that he was, in fact, an exam candidate.

"I still feel filthy."

I went straight to the goshiwon's[13] shower room and washed for thirty minutes, but I could still smell vomit clinging to the tip of my nose.

When I returned to my room, sniffing all the way, two nuisances were waiting for me.

---

[6] A goshiwon is a Korean residence of very small, inexpensive rented rooms, often with shared facilities.

[7] Doenjang is Korean fermented soybean paste, used here as the base of a stew.

[8] A goshiwon is a Korean residence of very small, inexpensive rented rooms, often with shared facilities.

[9] Hyung is what a younger man calls an older brother or a close older male friend.

[10] A goshiwon is a Korean residence of very small, inexpensive rented rooms, often with shared facilities.

[11] A goshiwon is a Korean residence of very small, inexpensive rented rooms, often with shared facilities.

[12] Doenjang is Korean fermented soybean paste, used here as the base of a stew.

[13] A goshiwon is a Korean residence of very small, inexpensive rented rooms, often with shared facilities.

Gwaah…

One was Jinho, dead drunk, and the other was…

“Oh, I forgot about this.”

The capsule. I’d left the refrigerator-sized thing in my room, barely three pyeong,[14] and it felt as though it took up the entire space. I retreated onto the bed and began wondering what to do with it.

Should I take it back and throw it away?

I could hand it over to a scrap dealer instead. What were scrap-metal prices like these days? It weighed at least fifty kilograms,[15] so I could probably get enough for a few snacks.

I thought it was a fairly useful piece of equipment.

Shit, huh? Was it really that much of a piece of junk?

Come to think of it, I hadn’t even looked inside. Curiosity got the better of me, and I began examining the capsule.

“First, the exterior is… not great.”

The capsule’s surface was stained yellow with nicotine or something, and rust seemed to have formed in places. Once I set aside my attachment and took a proper look, I understood what Jinho had meant.

“Is this how you open it?”

I pressed the lone protruding button, and the lid opened to reveal the interior. I’d expected something impressive, but there was nothing much to see after all.

There was only an ergonomically designed chair for extended play and a VR helmet that enclosed the entire head… Huh?

“What’s this? An instruction manual?”

More precisely, it was a small booklet labeled Product User Manual.

Did people really leave instruction manuals inside things they were throwing away? Especially junk like this?

Curious, I opened to the first page.

> Product User Manual
> Product name: Virtual Reality Interface
> Model: ARK-2020
> Manufacturer: H Soft
> Manufacturing date: January 1, 2020

I skimmed the print without much thought until my eyes stopped on the manufacturing date.

---

[14] A pyeong is a Korean unit of area, about 3.31 square meters (35.6 square feet).

[15] Fifty kilograms is about 110 pounds.

January 1, 2020. It had to be a printing error. Surely.

What kind of lunatic would have been making a game machine on that day—no, during that period?

That period was the Great Cataclysm.

January 1, 2015. Humanity received more than a New Year's sunrise.

Gates—or dungeons, as they were also called—began appearing all over the world, and monsters no one had ever seen or heard of poured through them.

Monsters and Awakened. War and destruction…

The unreal invaded reality, and the Great War, unlike any in Earth's history, ended only with the death of the monsters' lord, the Demon King Asmodeus.

That day was January 1, 2020. It was known as Victory Day.

So there's no way this can be right.

I clicked my tongue and turned the page.

> Warning
>
> - The player cannot log out at will.
> - If the player dies during gameplay, resurrection is impossible.

Ah, I see. I nodded and lay down on the narrow mattress. There were still a few pages left, but who cared?

"I should get some sleep."

I'd be better off sleeping than reading some deranged instruction manual. I pushed Jinho into a corner and closed my eyes.

Gwaah. Gwaah.

"…"

Gwaah. Gwaah.

"…"

Did that capsule have a soundproofing function?

The chair was hard. It had been made in 2020, so it was the same age as me. The chair was a youthful twenty-seven. Its cushion had gone flat long ago.

I took comfort in the fact that it didn't smell and pulled the blanket up to my neck.

Gwaah. Gwaah.

…I even put on the VR helmet.

Wearing something like this is going to make my neck hurt.

That minor complaint vanished the moment I put on the helmet. A world of complete silence. Not so much as a whisper of noise.

But what followed wasn't sleep. It was thought.

What am I going to do tomorrow?

Hunters were certainly well paid, but that depended on their rank.

F-rank Hunters like me were a dime a dozen, and unless you belonged to a Guild, you had to report to a day-labor agency before dawn.

Being unaffiliated was miserable. Government policy was never kind to unaffiliated Hunters, and the punishing tax rates imposed on Hunters were enough to leave you breathless just hearing about them.

So now I'm one of them.

Unlike me, my mother and younger sister lived in an apartment in a Safety Sector. It was an extravagant expense on an F-rank Hunter's income, but nothing mattered more to me than my family's safety.

Until now, I had barely managed to scrape together enough money for each annual renewal of their jeonse lease.[16] But from now on… who knew?

Fuck. I don't know.

I suddenly thought of my late father.

He had devoted himself to his family and was respected by society, but he died when I was seven.

A monster attack caused by a Gate breach. As an ordinary office worker, he probably never had a chance.

If my father were still by my side, could he have shown his son which way to go?

I've still done my best all this time. Please believe in me.

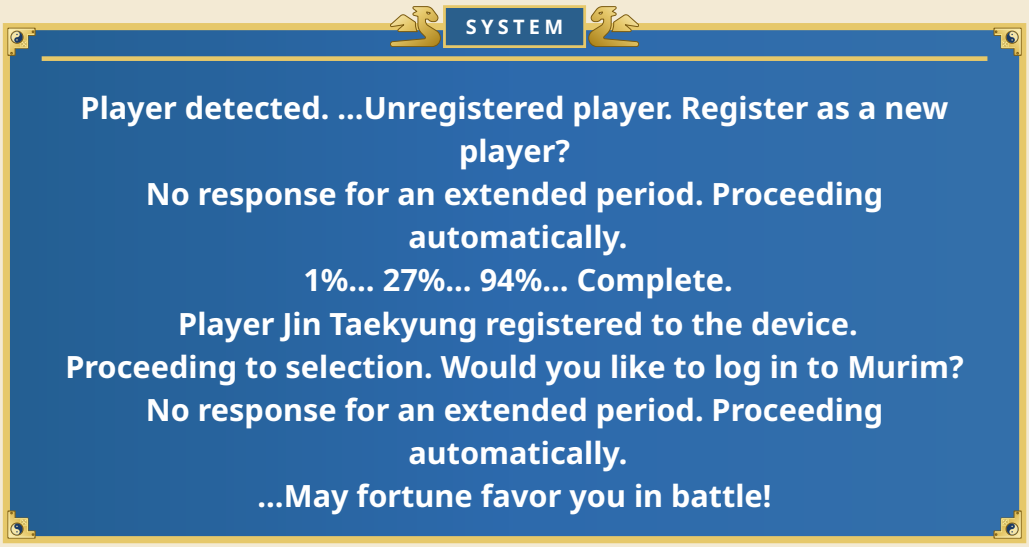
Maybe the alcohol was finally catching up with me, or maybe it was because I was thinking about the past. Without realizing it, my body went slack and my eyes began to close.

As I surrendered to the wave of drowsiness washing over me, I thought:

I hope things will be a little better when I open my eyes.

Someone's voice pierced my ears, but I didn't care anymore. I slipped gently into sleep.

[16] A jeonse lease is a Korean rental secured by a large refundable deposit instead of monthly rent.



SYSTEM
Player detected. ...Unregistered player. Register as a new player?
No response for an extended period. Proceeding automatically.
1%... 27%... 94%... Complete.
Player Jin Taekyung registered to the device.
Proceeding to selection. Would you like to log in to Murim?
No response for an extended period. Proceeding automatically.
...May fortune favor you in battle!

Chapter 2

A cold wind brushed my face.

I'd been sensitive to the cold since I was a kid, so I kept my windows closed all year round. Who had opened the window, then?

Obviously.

Seong Jinho, my mortal enemy.

Grumbling, I pulled the blanket up to my neck. The woman lying beside me let out a soft whine.

"…Huh?"

A woman? What woman?

I woke in an instant and shot upright like a soldier hearing the wake-up signal. Then I slowly turned my head.

"Tài lěng le.[17]"

Good lord. I was stunned twice over. First, because I couldn't make sense of the situation. Second, because the woman lying beside me was unbelievably beautiful.

She kept muttering words I couldn't understand as she burrowed deeper beneath the blanket. Even in my dazed state, she was beautiful enough to make my heart skip a beat.

If that cold wind hadn't blown in right then, I might have stared at her for quite a while.

But where am I?

I looked around. Red candlelight glowed softly through the room. A strangely provocative fragrance filled the air, and a beautiful woman lay beside me, covering her naked body with a blanket.

A place I'd never visited but had heard plenty about.

A room salon?[18]

But why was I here?

I was completely bewildered. What had happened? Yesterday, I'd had a drink with Jinho hyung[19] and returned to my room at the goshiwon.[20]

I clearly remembered climbing into the capsule to escape Jinho's thunderous snoring.

Am I dreaming?

I pinched my forearm hard. It hurt. This wasn't a dream.

---

[17] Tài lěng le is Mandarin Chinese for "It's too cold."

[18] A room salon is a Korean private-room entertainment venue where customers are served food, alcohol, and conversation by hostesses.

[19] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older male friend.

[20] A goshiwon is a Korean building of small, inexpensive single rooms, often rented by students or people living alone.

The situation grew more baffling by the second. After staring blankly around the room, I grabbed the woman by the shoulder and shook her.

“Excuse me?”

The woman peered at me through half-lidded eyes. Her irises shimmered dark blue, and my heart began pounding again.

“Who are you?”

“Shenme?”

“Ah, Ms. Sunmi. But that wasn’t what I meant…”

“Shenme?”

“…Yes?”

“Shenme…?”

What the hell is this?

For a moment, we stared at each other in silence. Then I realized it. This woman wasn’t Korean.

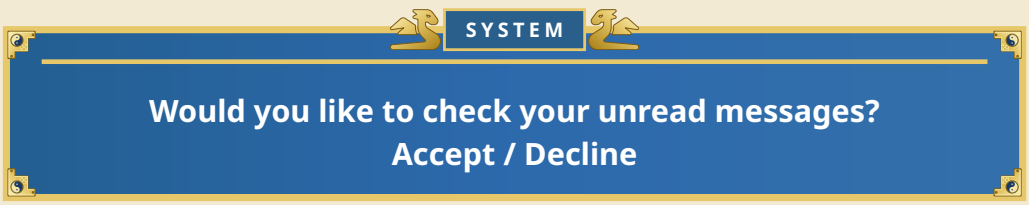
“Are you Chinese? Or Filipino?”

“…Zhōngguó rén ma?”

This is useless. We can’t communicate at all.

I scratched vigorously at the back of my head in frustration. The next moment, I sprang up like a coiled spring.

Ding.



A bell rang from somewhere.

A square window floated in midair like a ghost.

I had no idea where it had come from—or, more importantly, why I could see something like this. Goose bumps prickled across my skin.

“What the fuck is this?”

I lashed out on reflex, forcing the words through clenched teeth.

My fist pierced the square window—or rather, passed through it. More precisely, it passed through the word Accept.

Ding.

SYSTEM

No response for an extended period. Randomly selecting a character.
Searching Murim... Beginning play as character Jin Taekyung!
Logged in to Murim.
First-login rewards will be granted.
The player's current language can be changed. Apply the Integrated Language Pack?

A character? Murim? Login?

"Huh? Huh?"

SYSTEM

Applying the Integrated Language Pack.

"Wait, hold on!"

That was when the woman spoke.

"Young Master Jin. Are you feeling ill?"

She was speaking perfect Korean. I looked back and forth between the square window announcing that the Integrated Language Pack had been applied and the woman, then thought:

What the hell is going on?

Wolhwa. That was the woman's name.

She had smooth, pale skin and a tiny face—no bigger than my fist. Her delicate features were perfectly arranged, and her eyes were so large and clear that she could have put a celebrity to shame.

I marveled at her all over again.

The graphics are incredible.

By then, I'd already worked out the general situation. Once I put a few things together, the truth was simple.

Murim. Character. Login. Play. The last place I'd fallen asleep was inside a game capsule. And most importantly—

SYSTEM

Would you like to open the message window?
Accept / Decline

There was a System window. I could issue commands aloud or in my head. Scratching my head acted as a kind of shortcut. I could even click the options I wanted in midair.

The more I see, the more amazing this gets.

It was a far cry from the last game I'd played, but this was a game. I was playing a game right now.

But when did I log in?

I didn't remember plugging anything in. Just as I was trying to recall what had happened the night before, Wolhwa suddenly held out a bowl full of water in her spotless hands.

"Drink. You don't seem fully awake yet."

The AI is incredible, too.

I stole glances at Wolhwa's face as I drank the water, then started in surprise.

What the hell?

The cold water slid down my throat, cooling me all the way to my stomach. The sensation was so vivid that goose bumps rose on my forearms.

The lifelike graphics and the NPC's artificial intelligence were one thing, but even a sip of cold water felt too real for this to be a game.

Wow. I'd heard that technology had advanced by leaps and bounds, but I never imagined it had come this far. Now I understood why people became gaming addicts.

So this is why everyone goes on about virtual reality.

I looked around with my mouth hanging open like a kindergartener at an amusement park. Then acrid smoke rose from somewhere and obscured my view.

I turned my head. Wolhwa was watching me intently, a long-stemmed tobacco pipe already between her lips.

"Why…?"

She seemed so much like a real person that I slipped into polite speech without thinking. Of course, the fact that she was stunningly beautiful had something to do with it.

Wolhwa exhaled a stream of smoke and answered.

"Just because. I wanted to see you?"

I thought she was just a pretty face, but she had one hell of a presence, too.

If a bunch of high school girls saw her, they'd be screaming "Big Sis!" while blood poured from both nostrils. From head to toe, she practically had one phrase written all over her.

Femme fatale.

They really nailed her character concept. Plenty of players probably start the game just for Wolhwa.

“Young Master Jin, do you know you’ve been acting strange today?”

Young Master Jin? What an embarrassing way to be addressed.

Still, I pretended not to notice. Somehow, I wanted to enjoy the situation a little.

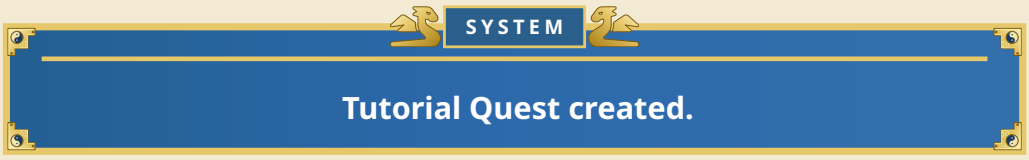
It’s a game, after all.

“What do you mean?”

“Everything? You keep staring into empty air as if you’ve lost your mind, and now you’re suddenly speaking formally. I can’t make heads or tails of you.”

The instant Wolhwa finished speaking—

Ding.



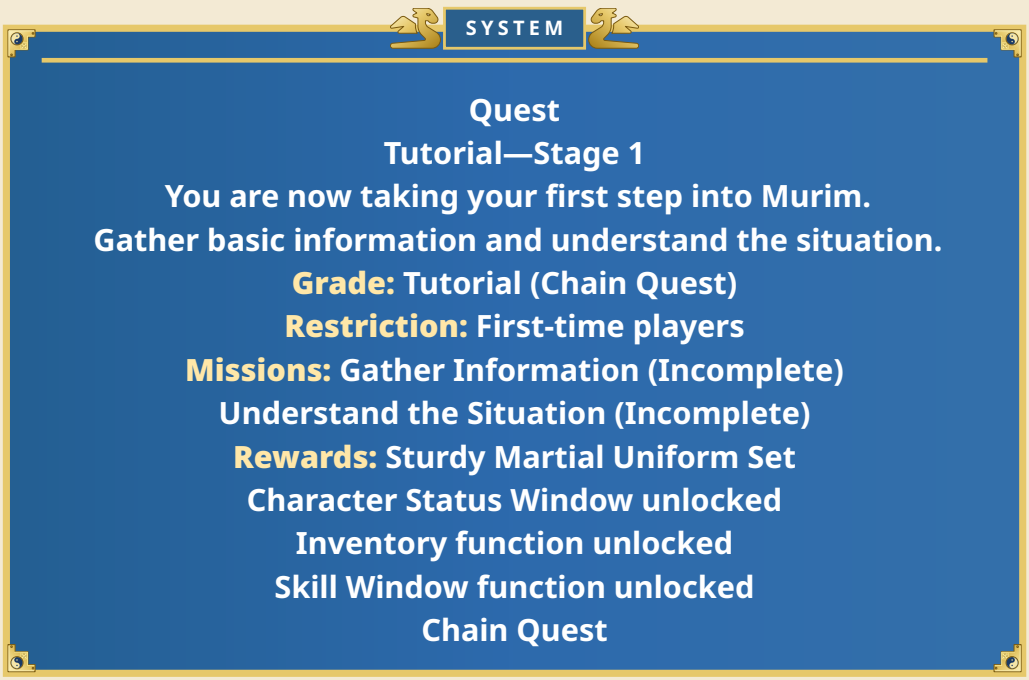
The way this game unfolds is pretty innovative.

Usually, games started with something like, “At last, you’re awake,” before immediately handing out a tutorial quest.

Is this what they call freedom?

Uh… Check quest?

Even as I thought it, I wasn’t sure whether that was the right command. But with the familiar sound effect, a quest window appeared at once.



Gather information? Understand the situation?

I hadn’t played many games, but I’d never seen a quest like this before.

Usually, they had you kill a few rabbits or practice using the game interface.

Still, I had to give it a try.

“How much do you know about me?”

Even I thought it was a blunt question. I could see Wolhwa smiling through the tobacco smoke.

“That’s an interesting question. Should I say you’re just like the rumors?”

“Rumors?”

“The stories you already know so well, Young Master. They aren’t exactly flattering enough to tell you to your face.”

“That’s fine. Let’s hear them.”

I was growing more interested in this game by the minute. It was the first game I’d played in a long time, but more than that, its approach was refreshingly different from the usual. Whoever had made it knew how to build a game.

“I’m just curious whether they match the rumors I’ve heard. It’s not like this has only been going on for a day or two. Why would I get offended?”

“…If you insist.”

She took the bait.

I smiled inwardly, pleased. Now all that remained was to pry out some real information.

“First. Do you know who I am?”

It was an even stranger question than the one before, but Wolhwa answered without hesitation. She almost seemed to be enjoying the situation, too.

“The youngest son of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, who turned twenty this year. Surely I don’t need to tell you his name as well?”

I answered confidently.

“I know. Jin Taekyung.”

My name is Jin Taekyung. I’m the youngest son of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

At my confident reply, Wolhwa choked in the middle of exhaling smoke.

“Second. What kind of place is the Jin Family of Taiyuan?”

After barely managing to stop coughing, Wolhwa answered.

“They have a good reputation among the people. From time to time, they wipe out bands of mounted bandits, and when droughts come, they distribute relief grain before even the magistrate’s office does.”

That’s it?

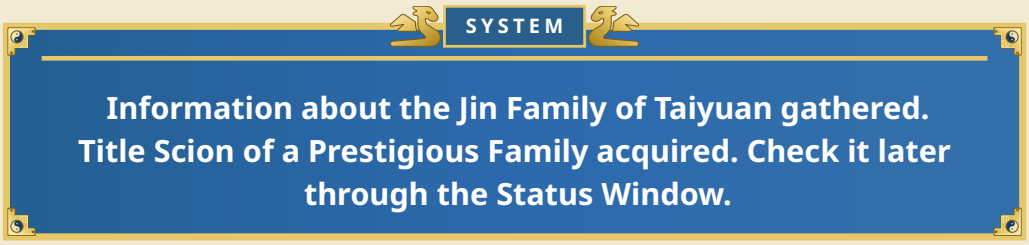
As if she had noticed my disappointment, Wolhwa continued.

“More than anything, they’re a prestigious family representing Shanxi Province. You could call them an old tree with deep roots.”

“Oh!”

I let out an involuntary exclamation—not because I was moved by the greatness of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, but because of the System notification.

Ding.



A title? Scion of a Prestigious Family?

I guessed it was something like a title in a fantasy game.

Dragon Slayer, or something like that.

You received one after accomplishing a certain feat, and equipping it granted additional effects. In that respect, I had to say I was pretty lucky.

This guy really was born with a silver spoon in his mouth.

Being born into a prestigious family counted as an achievement. It pissed me off and made me happy at the same time. That meant the random character selected against my will had turned out to be a lottery winner. But the story didn't end there.

"I've heard there are problems inside and outside the family these days."

"Problems? What kind of problems?"

Come to think of it, the quest window's information-gathering mission was still marked Incomplete. That meant there was more information to collect.

"Externally, there's the conflict with the Mount Heng Sword Sect, which is constantly eyeing the position of Alliance Leader in Shanxi Province. Internally…"

Wolhwa leisurely tapped the ash from her pipe.

"I hear that family's third son is a notorious good-for-nothing."

"Ah. There's always one of those wherever you go."

I nodded unconsciously, then was seized by a strange feeling.

"Excuse me."

"Yes?"

"I'm only asking as a joke, but how many sons does the Jin Family of Taiyuan have?"

She answered with a sunny smile.

"Three."

The Jin Family of Taiyuan had three sons, and I was the youngest of them. But the third son was a notorious good-for-nothing. Which meant—

Fuck. That's me, isn't it?

Ding.

SYSTEM

Title Shame of the Family acquired. Check it later through the Status Window.
Gather Information complete.

I couldn't decide whether to laugh or cry. Then I saw Wolhwa snickering and let out a hollow laugh myself.

Fine. No point getting worked up. So what if I'm the shame of the family? It's only a game, anyway.

I opened the quest window and confirmed that Gather Information had changed to Complete.

The problem is understanding the situation.

This damn quest was so vague that I had no idea what exactly it wanted. In the end, was Wolhwa my only solution?

"Where are we?"

"Honghwaru, the finest pleasure house in Shanxi. This is my room."

Through our conversation, I learned a few more miscellaneous facts.

We were in Honghwaru, located in the heart of Taiyuan. Wolhwa was a fairly high-ranking courtesan, and she and I had spent the night… Ahem.

Despite all the various things we discussed, no System notification appeared. Eventually, I ran out of questions to ask.

At the very end, I was reduced to asking this:

"What's my situation right now?"

Wolhwa sighed.

"Young Master Jin, I'm sorry to say this, but you seem a little crazy right now. How about getting some rest?"

Yeah. I feel like I'm going crazy, too.

As sunlight streamed through the window, I began to wonder what on earth I was doing.

This isn't some kind of mystery game.

The graphics and artificial intelligence were all great, but getting stuck on the tutorial had completely drained the fun out of it. If there was one thing I'd learned, it was that the capsule I'd found yesterday was a much better piece of equipment than it looked.

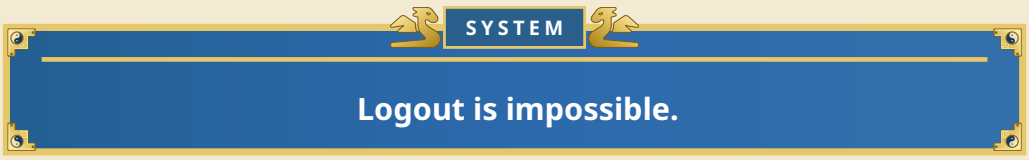
A game this advanced had to require serious hardware, yet I hadn't experienced a single bit of lag. It should sell for a decent price on the used market.

I need to start looking for a new job today, too.

Still, the game hadn't been bad for the little while I'd played it.

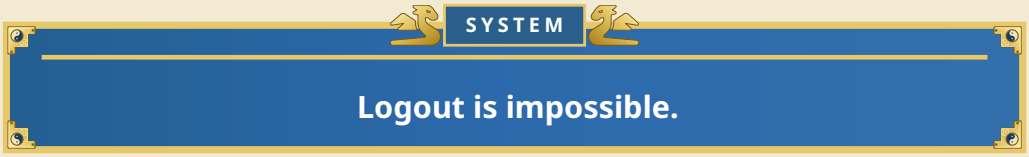
I gave Wolhwa a final nod and shouted:

“Log out!”



Huh?

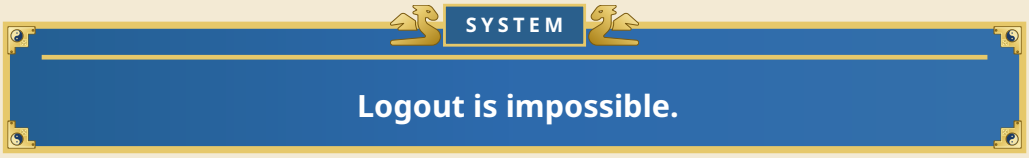
“Log out.”



What’s going on?

An error? Or had the piece-of-junk capsule finally started lagging?

“…Log out?”



There was no doubt about it. Error or lag, the damn junk capsule had finally caused trouble. I tried ten more times after that, but every attempt failed.

By this point, my anger had gradually turned into worry and regret.

Is something bad going to happen to me?

I shouldn’t have picked it up just because it was free. I should have thrown it away the moment Jinho called it garbage. Or at least the moment I read that insane instruction manual…

No. Wait.

The instruction manual. That was right—I’d read it. More precisely, I’d read a few of the warnings before tossing it aside, but I had read them.

What did they say?

The moment I finally remembered every warning I’d managed to read, a chill ran through my entire body.

> Warning
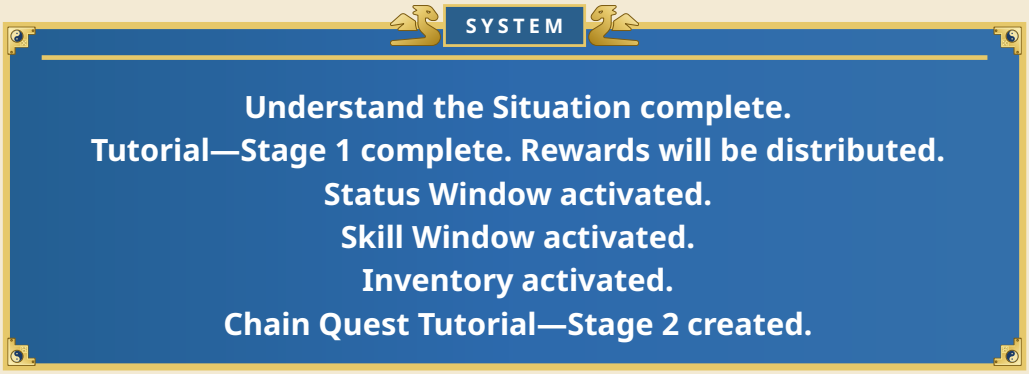
>
> - The player cannot log out at will.
> - If the player dies during gameplay, resurrection is impossible.

I’m trapped inside the game? Me?

The System notification answered my question for me.

Ding.



At that moment, a single thought filled my head.

I’m fucked.

Chapter 3

A young man’s reflection shimmered on the calm surface of the water.

Dark eyebrows. Sharp, well-defined features. When he lifted the corners of his mouth, deep dimples appeared. But the forced smile vanished as if washed away the very next moment.

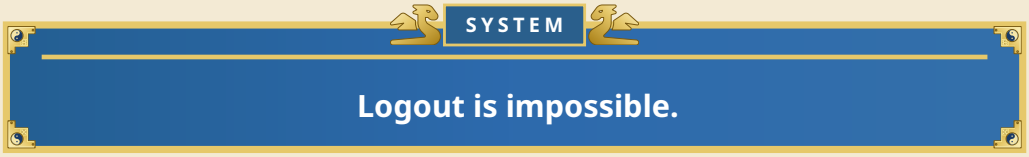
Crash.

I hurled the dish of wash water to the floor, sending shards flying in every direction.

“Fuck! Fuuuck!”

What good was being handsome if I couldn’t log out?

I’d spent the past three days raging and raising hell, but the answer never changed.



What kind of lunatics would make something like this?

I continued hurling curses as I recalled the warnings.

> Warning
>
> - The player cannot log out at will.
> - If the player dies during gameplay, resurrection is impossible.

In short, it was simple.

I was playing a martial-arts game called Murim, but I couldn’t log out whenever I wanted—and if my character died, so would I.

Ha. Ha. Ha.

What kind of bullshit is this?

And yet, it was really happening.

I couldn’t log out. I’d spent three days waiting for someone outside to rescue me, but nothing had happened. I hadn’t tested the part about dying, but judging by the circumstances, it was probably true too.

But there is a way.

If “the player cannot log out at will” was the wording, that implied logging out might become possible after meeting certain conditions.

For example, completing a quest or leveling up.

That was the answer I'd arrived at because this place, Murim, was a game.

Games rewarded you whenever you completed a quest or leveled up. Completing Tutorial—Stage 1 had already proved that much.

For now, I'll focus on quests and leveling up.

That was the conclusion I'd reached after three days of thinking. And it came with one essential requirement: survival.

I had to operate somewhere my life wouldn't be in danger. If I could get someone's help too, even better.

As it happens, I know exactly the right place.

Just then, Wolhwa's voice drifted in from outside the door.

"Young Master Jin, the carriage is ready."

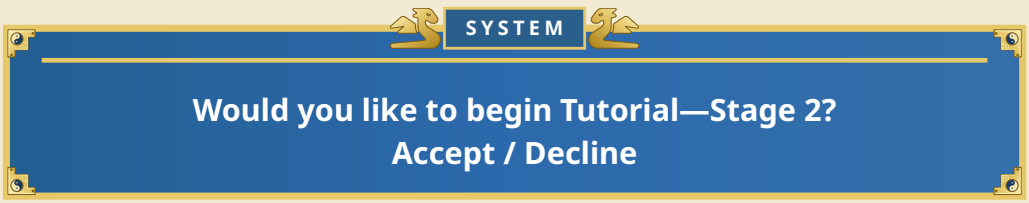
It was a carriage to take Jin Taekyung of the Jin Family of Taiyuan home—not F-rank Hunter Jin Taekyung.

The four-horse carriage Wolhwa—or rather, Honghwaru[21]—had provided was large and extravagant.

The coachman kept to himself and never said a word to me. That was fine by me.

I didn't want anyone bothering me right now.

Check the quest.



I'd opened this quest window dozens of times over the past three days, only to close it again. I'd been afraid of the unknown. But I wasn't hesitating anymore.

Accept.

Ding.

[21] Honghwaru is a pleasure house in Taiyuan.

SYSTEM

Quest
Tutorial—Stage 2
You have familiarized yourself with the basic information and situation.
But Murim is an unpredictable place. From this point on, use the only power unique to you: the System.
Grade: Tutorial (Chain Quest)
Restriction: First-time player
Objective: Check and Distribute Status Window Points (Incomplete)
Check and Distribute Skill Window Points (Incomplete)
Check and Equip Inventory Items (Incomplete)
Reward: Sharp Spear
Chain Quest

If that was all it wanted, I could have finished it ages ago. Then again, maybe this was the obvious next step.

No matter how strange things were, this place was still a game at its core.

I thought back to the online games I'd played once in a blue moon.

Check the Status Window.

SYSTEM

Status Window
LV. 10 Jin Taekyung
Occupation: Third Rate Martial Artist
Fame: 0
Titles: Scion of a Prestigious Family / Shame of the Family (Title effects active)
Strength: 10 Stamina: 10
Agility: 10 Intelligence: 10
Charm: 10 Internal Energy: 10 years
Unassigned Points: 100
- Distribute your unassigned points.
- Scion of a Prestigious Family (All stats +5, Fame +50)
- Shame of the Family (All stats −5, Fame −50)

What the hell is this?

I blinked. I felt completely blindsided.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan was a major power in the area. And this guy was even from one of Murim's great families…but he was only Level 10, a third-rate martial artist?

Is this for real?

My neck grew stiff as I read the special notes.

The effect of the Scion of a Prestigious Family title was completely canceled out by Shame of the Family.

I was an idiot for getting my hopes up.

A rich wastrel born into a good family, neglecting martial arts training while drowning in women and alcohol. No wonder they called him the shame of the family.

I'm screwed.

But there were no take-backs. I'd just have to suck it up and move on.

The one silver lining was that all my stats had been reset. Being able to raise the stats I wanted was a huge advantage.

I scrutinized the Status Window.

This isn't just a game. Think. Think, think…

I couldn't treat this place as an ordinary game.

My life was on the line. If I dumped everything into Strength or Agility like I had in the RPGs I played as a student, I'd be dead in no time.

Then something caught my eye.

Should I invest in Internal Energy?

Internal energy, or inner power.

It was another name for the kind of qi—mana or aura—that high-ranking Hunters used in the real world.

In most martial-arts novels, old geezers with one foot in the grave could chew up, tear apart, savor, and enjoy vigorous young masters—all because they possessed enormous internal energy.

Martial arts meant internal energy. And when you thought of a master, you thought of a master of internal energy. There was a reason people called internal energy the yardstick of a martial artist's strength.

I'll be cautious for now…one point into Internal Energy.

Beep.

SYSTEM

Internal Energy can only be increased through training and items such as elixirs.

Right. I knew that would happen. I hadn't gotten my hopes up at all.

...Damn this System.

Then Internal Energy is out.

That left five stats.

Strength, Stamina, Agility, Intelligence, and Charm.

I decided to exclude Intelligence and Charm.

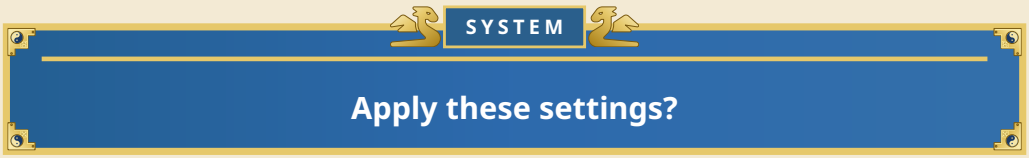
They won't help me.

My goal was survival and logging out—not taking the college entrance exam or dating.

Fortunately, I was a professional Hunter with seven years of experience, and I knew exactly what was needed to stay alive.

Thirty points each into Strength and Stamina. Forty into Agility.

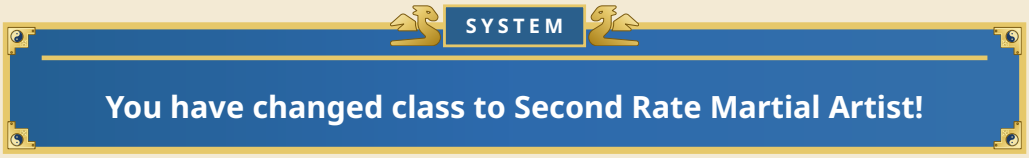
I'd reached that decision after careful thought. That gave me decent strength and stamina, along with excellent evasiveness. It was also the fighting style I'd grown accustomed to over the past seven years.



Yes.

That was when it happened.

Ding.



One hundred points in total.

As the number of unassigned points vanished, I felt the System's power seep through me from head to toe, reaching even the unseen depths of my body. It connected. Gathered. Loosened.

For an instant, heat swept through my body as if I'd swallowed the sun. Only after the lingering warmth faded could I finally open my eyes.

And then I was stunned.

"Th-this..."

My voice trembled despite myself. Not from the shock of an unfamiliar sensation, but because a feeling I'd experienced only once long ago—one I could never forget—had come rushing back.

How could I forget? That day, seven years ago.

Awakening...!

The sensation had come without warning, leaving my twenty-year-old self completely helpless.

When I opened my eyes again, I realized that I had been chosen. One of the chosen 0.1 percent. I had become an Awakened.

Remembering the exhilaration I'd felt that day only made me more confused now.

"Why is this happening here?"

The System notification snapped me out of my turmoil.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Check and Distribute Status Window Points complete.

I licked my parched lips and thought.

Right. Focus on the present for now. There are only two things left before Tutorial—Stage 2 is complete.

Check the Skill Window.

SYSTEM

Skill Window
LV. 10 Jin Taekyung
Cultivation Technique: Jin Family's Cultivation Technique (Unavailable)
Martial Arts: Jin Family's Spear Technique / Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique (Unavailable)
Muscles and Bones: 10
Sinews and Meridians: 10
Unassigned Points: 100

- Distribute your unassigned points.
- Martial arts cannot be used.
- You have forgotten the formula because you have not trained in martial arts for a long time.

Opening the Skill Window had been a good idea. The moment I saw it, every stray thought vanished and post-nut clarity hit me.

One, two, three.

Had I counted wrong? Or were the letters too small for me to see? I widened my eyes and stared at the Skill Window.

One, two, three…and three.

The Jin Family's Cultivation Technique, the Jin Family's Spear Technique, and the Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique. Those were all the skills Jin Taekyung—or rather, I—had. And apparently, I'd forgotten every one of them.

This is driving me insane.

If I died, the cause would be pent-up rage. Pure pent-up rage.

Only after calming down somewhat could I look at the Skill Window with a clear head.

Right. I could always learn more martial arts later.

At least I have unassigned points.

Trying to comfort myself with that thought, I looked at the Skill Window again. Maybe because it was so empty, two terms immediately caught my eye.

Muscles and Bones. Sinews and Meridians. I've seen those a lot in martial-arts novels.

Sinews and Meridians referred to tendons and blood vessels, while Muscles and Bones meant the muscles and skeletal frame.

In other words, Sinews and Meridians were for an internal-energy-focused build, while Muscles and Bones were for external martial arts. I decided to lean a little more toward Muscles and Bones.

The reason was simple.

I'll have a better chance of surviving if I choose what I'm already familiar with.

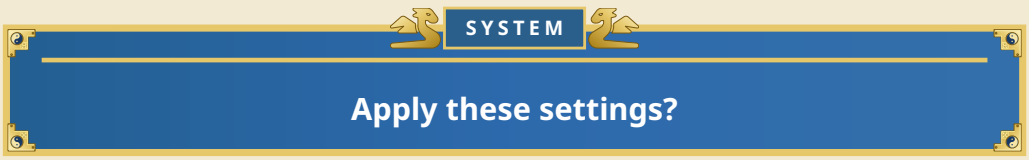
In the real world, I was an F-rank Hunter. In Murim terms, I was a third-rate martial artist, or maybe even worse.

Magic and aura… I'd seen them with my own eyes, but using them myself was out of the question. I couldn't even dream of it.

You're always better at something you've done before.

You had to have used internal energy before to know how to use it. The way I'd fought over the past seven years was closer to that of an external martial artist.

Sixty into Muscles and Bones. Forty into Sinews and Meridians.



Yes. Apply.

This time, what swept through me was nothing like the exhilaration I'd felt from the Status Window. If anything, it was pain. I could hear the bones deep inside my body twisting.

Urgh.

Seconds? Minutes? I had no idea. When the pain passed, all that remained was my ragged breathing—and the reward for enduring it.

My physique…

It had changed. My shoulders had broadened by half a span, and muscle had hardened across my chest and back. The silk clothes that had felt a little loose now felt constricting.

When I clenched my fist, I felt strength and springiness I hadn't been able to sense before. I'd grown stronger. It was an experience I'd never had in the real world.

Because there's no System there.

I could build strength, stamina, and flexibility through training in the real world, but until I underwent a measurement, I could only sense the changes vaguely.

But Murim was different.

I could see my abilities through the Status Window and improve the ones I needed. I didn't know where the endpoint was, but I could keep moving forward.

I'll get stronger. And I'll survive.

I'd fought countless monsters over the past seven years. Some days I'd returned without a scratch; other days I'd barely escaped with my life.

F-rank Hunter Jin Taekyung had something Murim's Jin Taekyung didn't: experience. And desire.

Stronger, stronger, stronger. And survive.

Just as I clenched my fist and made that vow, another notification rang out.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Check and Distribute Skill Window Points complete.

Only one thing remained.

Check the Inventory.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Inventory
Sturdy Martial Uniform Set
Grade: Third Rate
Restriction: None
Effect: None
Description: Made from light, durable cloth. Suitable for beginners.

The description was simple, befitting a basic item.

Equip item.

A cool sensation swept over my entire body, and I found myself dressed in a black martial uniform.

It wasn't just my clothes that had changed. A headband—commonly called a hero's headband in martial-arts novels—was tied firmly around my forehead, and I was wearing leather shoes instead of silk ones.

Did I at least look like a run-of-the-mill martial artist now?

Store item.

The moment I thought about storing the silk clothes I'd taken off, they vanished from my hands.

An Inventory. This is incredibly convenient. It might even be useful in combat, depending on how I used it.

Having an Inventory would make raids so much easier.

With one of these, I could hang back and collect Magic Gems without even fighting the monsters. I'd make enough in a year to put up a whole building.

But that's not going to happen.

Because this was a game. Once I logged out, it would all be over.

...Though I wasn't even sure I'd survive long enough to log out.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Check and Equip Inventory Items complete.
Tutorial—Stage 2 complete. Rewards will be distributed.
Chain Quest Tutorial—Stage 3 created.

A new reward!

I immediately opened the Inventory to check the new item.

SYSTEM

Inventory
Sharp Spear
Grade: Second Rate
Restriction: None
Effect: 5% chance to inflict Bleeding on hit
Description: A decent enough spear. It's sharp, so be careful when handling it.

"..."

If my Status Window and Skill Window were going to be such a mess, couldn't they at least give me a good item? Then again, considering everything that had happened so far, this was practically generous.

Equip item.

The moment the spear shaft appeared in my grasp—

Ding.

SYSTEM

Tutorial—Stage 3 begins. Prepare yourself.

"…Huh?"

Prepare myself? For what?

I hadn't even opened the quest window yet.

The answer came from an unexpected place.

The taciturn coachman spoke for the first time.

"Young Master."

"Yes?"

"We have a minor problem."

"What are you talking about all of a sudden—"

Ding.

SYSTEM

Quest
Tutorial—Stage 3
You have learned how to grow stronger through the System.
Learning must produce results.
Defeat the bandits who have appeared without warning!
Grade: Tutorial (Chain Quest)
Restriction: First-time player
Objective: Defeat the bandits (Incomplete)
Reward: Recover from all injuries
Chain Quest
Failure: Death

Some minor problem. My ass.

Chapter 4

Jang Sam was a bandit.

Born and raised near Mount Wutai, he had never ventured beyond the surrounding area in his life. Since around the age of twenty, he had made a living extorting tolls from travelers who looked like easy marks.

Perhaps thanks to his diligent round-the-clock operation, the name Heavenly Axe Jang Sam had eventually become fairly well known.

Today was no different. He had risen before dawn and set out to work with his five loyal underlings, the Five-Colored Ghosts… but for some reason, he couldn't stop walking.

How long had he been walking since leaving his home turf of Mount Wutai far behind? When his feet finally came to a halt, he saw a carriage approaching in the distance.

How did I get all the way here?

Had he been bewitched by a ghost? Jang Sam was bewildered, but the moment he saw the luxurious four-horse carriage, his professional instincts came roaring back to life.

I have to take that.

When Jang Sam and the Five-Colored Ghosts blocked the road, the coachman pulled on the reins.

Four fine steeds, their coats gleaming, snorted clouds of vapor as they came to a halt. At a glance, each one looked worth at least a thousand nyang.[22]

Today's my lucky day.

Jang Sam smiled contentedly and adjusted his grip on his axe. Now, put some power into the dantian. One, two—

"Hand over your money!"

What was that voice? Is he an opera singer?

But it would take more than that to make me blink. I'd spent seven years as a Hunter and been through every kind of battle imaginable—even aerial combat.

…Still, he was kind of scary.

"There are six of them in total. I don't see any signs of an ambush."

The coachman reported the situation in a voice as calm as a secret agent's.

Does this guy have some kind of ace up his sleeve? Why is he so relaxed?

When I stared at him, he scratched his head.

[22] Nyang is a traditional unit of money, often reckoned in silver; it is not modern Korean won.

“It happens from time to time. Though this is a first in this area.”

“Why?”

“Why? Unless they belong to a sizable mountain stronghold, attacking a Murim family is practically suicide. Robbing people in the Jin Family of Taiyuan’s own backyard… I wonder what kind of reckless fools they are.”

Who else? Tutorial NPCs.

Judging by the way he kept calling it the Jin Family’s backyard, we must have been fairly close.

Should I stall for time?

My current realm was second-rate.

The way my body felt after distributing my stats was beyond anything I’d experienced as an F-rank Hunter, but I had no idea whether that would be enough in Murim.

Six against one. Six against two, if I counted the coachman.

Could I do it?

There was a reason people said no one could stand against overwhelming numbers. The moment they tied up my hands and feet, I was done for.

“How much farther is it to our destination?”

“We’re nearly there. Another hour should be enough.”

Another hour…?

I’d suspected it, but apparently, the coachman and I had very different definitions of nearby.

What do you mean, nearly there?

Maybe it was because this was a continent-sized setting. The scale was different. The scale.

Either way, I had to assume no reinforcements were coming. At least I wasn’t alone.

The coachman’s unflappable attitude practically screamed that he was a master. Just like now.

“Shall I handle this?”

He coiled the horsewhip in his hand as if one crack would separate the bandits’ flesh from their bones.

He’s a master!

Of course. I was the heir of a prestigious martial family and a VIP customer of Honghwaru.[23] There was no way they would have sent an ordinary coachman with me.

Wolhwa must have arranged this. She isn’t just beautiful—she’s kind, too.

[23] Honghwaru is a pleasure house in Taiyuan.

My anxiety vanished, replaced by a pleased smile. The coachman must have taken it as permission, because the moment he turned away, a second shout rang out.

"You bastards! Can't you hear what the Heavenly Axe is saying?"

I peered through the carriage window and saw a hairy man shouting with an enormous double-bladed axe in his hands. His upper body was massive, and his arms and legs were as thick as pillars.

But the coachman muttered as if the sight were laughable.

"Where do these little pups get off?"

Damn, that aura.

Then the coachman laid into them.

"How dare bandits who suck the lifeblood of innocent civilians block our path! I will have you dragged before the authorities and punished to the fullest extent of the law!"

It was a speech worthy of Judge Bao,[24] but the hairy man—the Heavenly Axe—and his underlings didn't seem particularly moved.

"Yeah, we blocked the road. What are you going to do about it?"

"For all the countless crimes you've committed, I will gouge out your eyes, grind your limbs to powder in a mortar, and scatter the dust across the Nine Provinces![25] I will also exterminate all nine degrees of your kin—"

…Those punishments are no joke. That's practically treason.

As if he had read my thoughts, the Heavenly Axe spoke up.

"Hey, is there some member of the imperial family riding inside? Listening to you has my knees shaking. Why don't you let us see that precious face?"

"You will regret not retreating now once you learn this man's identity!"

"Okay, okay. We get it. Now come out already."

"You fools…!"

The coachman clicked his tongue and turned toward me. My heart began to race. Was I finally about to see a true Murim master in action?

"Young Master, I believe you'll have to come out."

"Huh?"

Me? Why me?

"They're the kind who won't cry until they see the coffin. To think they would dare block your path! They'll pay dearly for failing to recognize a master."

With a determined look, he opened the carriage door for me.

---

[24] Judge Bao is the popular name of Bao Zheng, a Song-dynasty official celebrated in Chinese stories for his incorruptible judgments.

[25] The Nine Provinces is a traditional expression for the lands of China.

“I have heard much of the Heaven Shaking Sword’s fame. A genius swordsman who reached the Peak realm at barely twenty! You cannot imagine how my old heart trembled whenever I heard stories about you, Young Master.”

…The Heaven Shaking Sword? A genius swordsman?

My thoughts tangled together. Who was the Heaven Shaking Sword? Who was this genius swordsman who had reached the Peak realm? And what the hell was this coachman playing at?

You said you’d handle it. Weren’t you a master?

“You bastards! Do you know who this man is?”

This was bad. The coachman was barreling ahead like an eight-ton truck with a broken steering wheel.

No. Stop. Please stop!

I grabbed his wrist tightly, and he turned to look at me.

He smiled as if he understood everything. His eyes shone with boundless trust.

“W-wait. I’m Jin—”

Before I could say another word, his thunderous voice rang out.

“He is the Second Young Master of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, the Peak master whose name resounds throughout Shanxi! The Heaven Shaking Sword, Young Master Jin Mukyung!”

“I’m Jin… Taekyung.”

At that moment, a cold wind blew.

“Pardon?”

“I mean, I’m Jin Taekyung, not Jin Mukyung. And I’m the Third Young Master, not the Second…”

“…The Third Young Master? That Third Young Master?”

Yes, you idiot.

The coachman’s pupils began to tremble. It was an 8.0-magnitude earthquake.

“Th-then where is Young Master Jin Mukyung?”

“How should I know?”

He’s probably sleeping at this hour.

The coachman stared at me with the expression of a man who had lost his country, then collapsed like a deflated inflatable toy.

He had fainted.

Fuck. Some master.

I released his wrist.

His wrist was as thin as a chicken bone. Something had felt off from the moment I grabbed it. He had put on quite a show, only to turn out to be an ordinary civilian.

“Ha! Ha-ha-ha!”

The bandits roared with laughter. My back was already damp with cold sweat, and I hadn't even noticed when it started.

If I'm really unlucky here…

I couldn't bring myself to say the word death. I swallowed it instead.

I swept my tense gaze over the bandits.

Fuck. I'd rather fight six goblins than deal with this. How am I supposed to beat guys that huge…?

Wait.

"Huh?"

Was it my imagination? No. No matter how I looked at them, it wasn't.

Massive upper bodies. Thick arms and legs. And… short.

The other five weren't much different. The Heavenly Axe at least had a decent physique, but the rest were about five hundred light-years away from anything you could call "well-built."

In other words, the bandits were built exactly like…

"They're goblins?"

Goblins?

I stood there dazed for a moment until an axe came flying at me and snapped me back to reality. They had the numbers, and they were launching a preemptive attack too?

"Hey, hey! Time out!"

The axe struck the ground a good ten meters[26] short of me. No—it didn't even stick. It toppled over. The bandit who had thrown it scratched the back of his head sheepishly.

"Should I have thrown it a little higher?"

…Maybe.

I might actually survive this.

The monster I had fought more than any other over the past seven years was the goblin.

Naturally, I knew them inside and out. They were even the reason I had chosen a spear as my primary weapon when I was a novice Hunter. Its reach gave me an overwhelming advantage.

And these bandits were exactly that size. To me, they no longer looked like bandits. They looked like six goblins. The Heavenly Axe was about the size of a goblin chieftain.

The other five might be even weaker than goblins.

At least goblins were good with poison darts. Judging by that axe throw, I had a hunch. A very strong hunch.

[26]Ten meters is about 33 ft.

I licked my parched lips, then raised both hands high.

A few of them looked confused by my gesture of surrender, while the Heavenly Axe smiled proudly, like a father watching his son return from military service.

“Good lad.”

Yeah. Laugh while you can.

One step, two. I slowly closed the thirty-meter[27] distance between us.

With a steady stride and balanced posture. One breath per step. My breath escaped my mouth in white clouds that pierced the dawn air.

I could feel it just from putting one foot in front of the other.

It’s different!

I realized it once more.

The version of me inside this game was stronger than the real me.

My heart pounded. At the same time, caution stirred in the back of my mind.

I had to stay focused until the very last moment.

“I heard the Jin Family had a son they’d given up on. Third-rate at martial arts, first-rate with women. Now that I see you, you’ve got pretty good instincts too.”

The Heavenly Axe spoke with the hand holding his axe hanging loosely at his side.

I knew exactly how I looked to them.

A useless playboy with nothing but a good family name. Empty hands.

The Heavenly Axe had let his guard down.

And letting your guard down gets you killed.

I might send most of my salary to my family and live miserably in a tiny goshiwon[28] room, but I was still a Hunter.

Even an F-rank Hunter risked his life fighting inside Gates. No—an F-rank Hunter had to risk his life precisely because he was only F-rank.

For seven years, I had fought every single day. I was a gambler with my life on the line—and a martial artist called a Hunter.

So I knew.

Life and death were separated by a hair’s breadth. Letting your guard down meant death.

The distance had been cut in half. My steps gradually quickened.

The Heavenly Axe beckoned me over.

“Now, now. Take your time. If you trip on the way over, you’ll lower your ransom.”

Twenty meters.[29]

“Boss, doesn’t the way he’s toddling over look just like a puppy?”

---

[27] Thirty meters is about 98 ft.

[28] A goshiwon is a Korean building that rents out small, inexpensive single rooms.

[29] Twenty meters is about 66 ft.

Fifteen meters.[30]

“A puppy? Ha-ha-ha! You’ve got that exactly right!”

Ten meters.[31]

The moment I took my next step, heat began to churn in my stomach.

It was a sensation I had never experienced before, yet somehow, it felt strangely familiar. What was it?

Could it be… internal energy?

The heat flowing from my dantian raced toward my lower body.

It had only one purpose: faster, lighter, stronger!

Whoosh. I drew a long breath. My whole body tensed, every muscle drawn tight like a bowstring.

Then came the final step.

Boom!

I shot straight forward. The ground cratered beneath my foot, and the sound followed after me. In that frozen moment, the Heavenly Axe’s mouth slowly fell open.

“No way…”

The Heavenly Axe and his underlings stared at me in disbelief.

I could see everything about them now. Feel it.

Their stiff, greasy hair. Their cracked lips, like a rice paddy in a drought. Their teeth—so foul-looking I could almost smell them…

All of it.

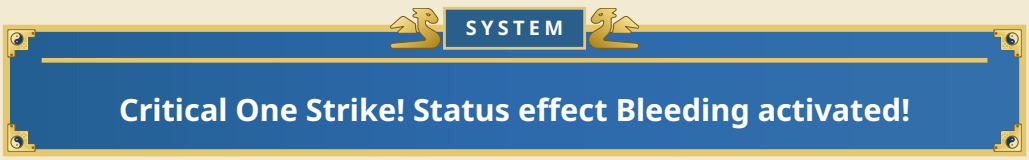
The corners of my mouth lifted before I knew it.

Open Inventory. Equip Sharp Spear.

A cold spear shaft appeared in the hand I had thrust into empty air.

I drove it forward with all my strength. The Heavenly Axe hastily raised his axe to block, but the sharp spearhead shattered the axe blade and punched straight through his chest.

At the same time—



“Ghk!”

A fountain of blood erupted. The Heavenly Axe’s eyes trembled once, then went dark.

[30] Fifteen meters is about 49 ft.

[31] Ten meters is about 33 ft.

SYSTEM

Lv. 10 Jang Sam defeated.
Level up!
You received 10 Stat Points as a level-up reward.
You received 10 Skill Points as a level-up reward.
Jin Family's Cultivation Technique unlocked.

Whew.

I let out a long breath. Notifications had sounded, but all I could hear was my own pounding heart.

One breath. Everything had happened in a single breath. I pulled the spear from the Heavenly Axe's lifeless chest.

So this is possible.

Raise my abilities with points, enhance them with internal energy, and link them together with skills. This was the power of the System—the power that belonged to me alone.

A power F-rank Hunter Jin Taekyung could never have dreamed of.

I can do this. I will.

The road home was beginning to look brighter and wider.

I gripped the spear shaft and turned around.

"So…"

The five pairs of eyes fixed on me wavered uncertainly.

"Anyone else want to try?"

The bastard who threw that axe can go first.

"…"

Thud. Thud. Clatter.

The five bandits exchanged glances, dropped their weapons, and threw themselves flat on the ground.

"Please forgive us, Great Hero!"

SYSTEM

The enemies have lost their will to fight and surrendered after losing their leader.
Defeat the Bandits complete.
You have fully recovered from all fatigue and injuries.
You have defeated the bandits. Fame increased by 10.
Tutorial—Stage 3 complete. Rewards will be distributed.
Chain Quest Tutorial—Stage 4 created.

Now I can finally catch my breath.

Chapter 5

“On one, be good. On two, stay alive. Ready? One.”

“Be good!”

“Two.”

“Stay alive!”

“Louder.”

“Be gooood!”

Is this hell?

That was the coachman’s first thought when he came to. His body felt as heavy as waterlogged cotton, and his head was spinning. All the while, scream-like cries continued in the distance.

“Stay aliiive!”

“Louder!”

…This has to be hell.

Every time the grim reaper’s merciless voice rang out, the screams of the dead followed.

“Be gooood!”

Eyes closed, he wept bitter tears of regret. To think he had ended up in hell. If he’d known he would meet such an untimely death, he would at least have made more donations to a temple.

Oh, Mother!

The coachman began to sob, too consumed by grief to notice someone quietly looking down at him.

“Excuse me.”

The coachman’s heart stopped for a split second, then started pounding again. Clutching his chest, he shrieked.

“You nearly scared me to death!”

“…”

“…?”

Now that he’d said it, something seemed off. The coachman stared blankly down at his chest and placed a hand over it.

It was beating. His heart was beating.

And that wasn’t all. The horses were there. So was the carriage. The cold early-winter wind made him shiver.

“I’m alive?”

Hardly daring to believe it, he turned around and saw a man with one eye bruised deep purple. The man's expression was rather strange, but there was no doubt about it.

He was alive.

I'm alive!

"I survived! I'm alive!"

The man pushed the coachman away from his exuberant embrace and answered awkwardly.

"Congratulations."

"Sniff. Sob. Thank you. Thank you so much. But who are you…?"

"Ah, well. We met briefly earlier."

Earlier? Who did I meet earlier?

The coachman knew everyone at Honghwaru by sight, and the day's first guest had been the wastrel of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

Where had he seen this traveler he was so grateful to before?

The coachman stared intently at his face, then suddenly sucked in a breath.

"That bandit from earlier!"

"Yes. That was me—"

"The one standing next to the big guy! One of those five idiots who looked like morons!"

"…That's right."

"The shortest one!"

"…"

"The ugliest one!"

"…"

"And the one with the smallest package!"

"No, I'm not!"

The bandit's shout brought the coachman to his senses.

What did I just say?

Regret and despair surged over him like a rising tide.

Now I'm really dead.

He almost wished he were already dead. At least then there wouldn't be any pain.

But then—

"Whew. Enough nonsense. Just follow me."

The bandit, who looked like a ferocious demon, calmed down in an instant and started walking ahead. The coachman found himself following and was struck by a strange sense of déjà vu.

This feels like I'm being escorted.

Compared to before the coachman had passed out, the bandit's manner wasn't merely subdued—it was downright polite. Mustering every ounce of courage he had, the coachman spoke.

"Um, where are we going?"

"To the boss."

The coachman's face went white. He remembered what he had said to the Heavenly Axe.

Gouge out his eyes, grind his limbs to powder in a mortar...

I need to run. Right now.

But the next moment, his legs began to tremble, and cold sweat poured off him like rain. He couldn't take a single step.

Dark red blood was splattered everywhere. A leg that seemed to belong to a corpse jutted from the bushes beside the road.

These lunatics.

He had feared as much, but they had actually killed someone in broad daylight—and not just anyone, but a young master of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

The coachman knew he was going to die.

Until someone emerged from the bushes.

"Oh, you're awake?"

Behind him, the bandits were panting with their arms slung over one another's shoulders.

Each of them sported a matching bruise around one eye.

"What are you doing, punk? Can't you see your comrades busting their asses? Get over here and help."

"Yes, Boss."

"You little bastard. How many times have I told you not to call me that?"

The coachman watched the scene in a daze and thought:

At least I'm still alive.

"So that's what happened."

The coachman's eyes lit up like flashlights as he listened to the story.

Ow, my eyes. He's blinding me. I can barely look at him.

"Um, excuse me."

What now?

"Are you really Young Master Jin Mukyung?"

"...Please, just stop."

How many times do I have to tell him? I'm Jin Taekyung.

He was an NPC who drove me insane in every possible way. I couldn't decide whether to call it a triumph of artificial intelligence or a failure.

If I knew how to drive a carriage, I would've ditched him ages ago.

"Are you finished?"

The coachman answered as he tied the final knot.

"Yes. It's all done."

What knot, you ask? The knots in the ropes binding the five bandits hand and foot. He had tied them so tightly that their pitiful groans never stopped.

"Boss. Could you loosen them just a little?"

"Nope. Can't do that. Won't do it. Stay put."

"Please, Boss. Give your little brothers the chance to serve you—"

"Call me Boss one more time, and I'll give you the chance to serve Yama.[32]"

Leaving their silence behind, I climbed into the carriage.

I had already confiscated the bandits' weapons and placed them in my Inventory, and the level-up effect had restored me to perfect condition.

"We're leaving."

The coachman took up the reins, and the four-horse carriage began to move.

The mountain road was as well maintained as the hiking trails behind town. Cool wind and mountain air flowed in through the carriage window.

It's incredible, no matter how I look at it.

I shook my head.

Science. Technology. Whatever you called it, it was beyond my comprehension.

Besides, in my current situation, even thinking about that was a luxury.

Damn it. What the hell is the time ratio in this game?

Virtual-reality games had something called a time ratio. If the ratio between reality and virtual reality was one to three, three hours in virtual reality would mean only one hour had passed in the real world.

That was why I had forced myself to hold out at Honghwaru for three days.

I had been clinging to the hope that someone would get me out by then.

What the hell is Seong Jinho doing?

A deep sigh escaped me. At the same time, a sliver of unease began to creep in.

What if the time ratio is wildly different?

No way.

It couldn't be. Jinho hyung[33] had once told me that a capsule's time ratio was proportional to its performance and price. A piece of junk like this couldn't possibly manage an extreme ratio.

---

[32] Yama is the lord of the underworld in Buddhist tradition.

[33] Hyung is how a Korean man addresses an older brother or an older male friend.

Though it was performing better than I'd expected.

No. It's performing unbelievably well.

I hadn't played a game in years, but I wasn't so clueless that I couldn't recognize that much. Murim was clearly a high-spec game, yet this old capsule was running it without any trouble.

That alone was astonishing. So—

Please stop giving me new things to be astonished by.

Please. I muttered the word like a spell and opened my Skill Window.

SYSTEM

Skill Window
LV. 11 Jin Taekyung
Cultivation Technique: Jin Family's Cultivation Technique
Martial Arts: Jin Family's Spear Technique / Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique (Unavailable)
Muscles and Bones: 70
Sinews and Meridians: 50
Remaining Points: 10
Distribute your remaining points.
You have forgotten the formulas because you have not trained in martial arts for a long time.
You can view information about your acquired skills.

It was astonishing even the second time I saw it. I couldn't use my martial arts because I hadn't trained?

How much had this guy slacked off?

With a sigh, I moved on. First were the remaining points.

Apparently, I received ten points every time I gained a Level. The Status Window probably worked the same way.

If I combine the Skill Window and Status Window, does that mean I get twenty points every time I level up?

That felt like a strangely awkward amount. I put off distributing my points and touched the final sentence.

SYSTEM

Would you like to view your acquired skills?

View all.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Skill Window
Jin Family's Spear Technique
Grade: First Rate
Restriction: Must have learned Jin Family's Cultivation Technique
Realm: Unknown
Effect: Unknown
Description: A hereditary martial art of the Jin Family of Taiyuan. Can be learned through a martial arts manual. Currently unavailable because you have forgotten the formula.
Skill Window
Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique
Grade: First Rate
Restriction: Must have learned Jin Family's Cultivation Technique
Realm: Unknown
Effect: Unknown
Description: A hereditary martial art of the Jin Family of Taiyuan. Can be learned through a martial arts manual. Currently unavailable because you have forgotten the formula.
Skill Window
Jin Family's Cultivation Technique
Grade: Peak
Restriction: Direct descendant of the Jin Family of Taiyuan
Realm: Second Stage
Effect: Allows you to circulate and accumulate internal energy through qi circulation.
Description: Exceptionally stable, but slow to accumulate internal energy.

Hmm.

The first thing that caught my eye was the grade.

The Spear Technique and Manoeuvre Technique were First Rate. Only the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique was Peak. It was also the only one with a clearly listed realm and effect.

I haven't even been able to try the Spear Technique or Manoeuvre Technique. As for the Cultivation Technique…not bad.

Who cared how slowly it accumulated internal energy? Exceptionally stable. That was all I needed. My motto in life was to keep my head down and live a long time.

That was when—

SYSTEM

Quest
Tutorial—Stage 4
You can now use Circulate Qi to control internal energy.
However, uncontrolled internal energy is a double-edged sword.
Do not let your guard down until the very end!
Grade: Tutorial (Final)
Restriction: First-time player
Objective: Circulate Qi (Incomplete)
Reward: Item Chest
Qi Sense acquired
Main Quest unlocked
Failure: Status Effect Qi Deviation or Death
Would you like to accept the Quest?
Accept / Decline

I answered without hesitation.

Nope. Not doing it.

A reward? I didn't need some lousy reward. There had to be a limit to this bullshit. Were these lunatics really trying to bargain with me by putting game items on one side and my life on the other?

SYSTEM

Your response is being delayed.

Look at it trying to pull a cheap trick.

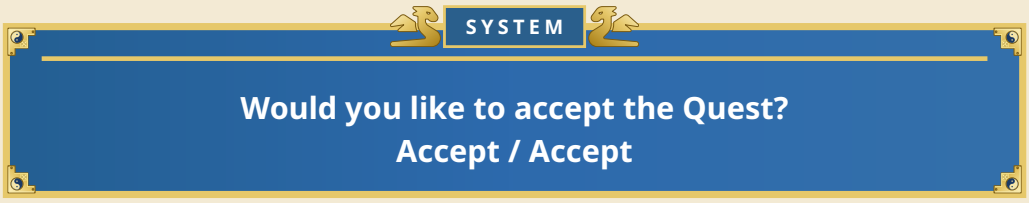
Ignoring the coachman's stare, I enunciated each syllable.

"De-cline."

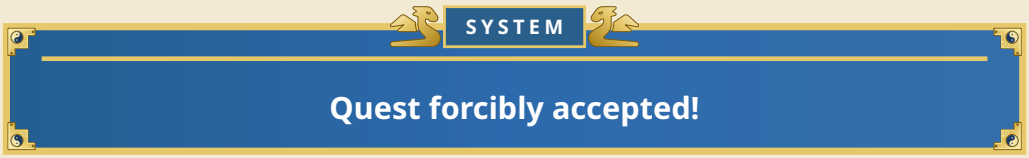
SYSTEM

Tutorial Quests cannot be declined.

"…?"

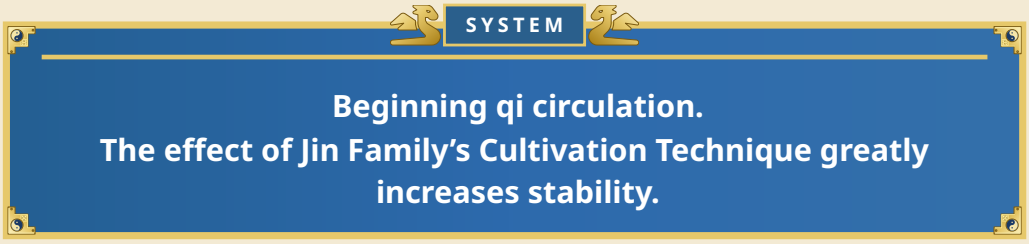


“I said decline! Why are both options Accept?”



“Hey! You sons of bitches!”

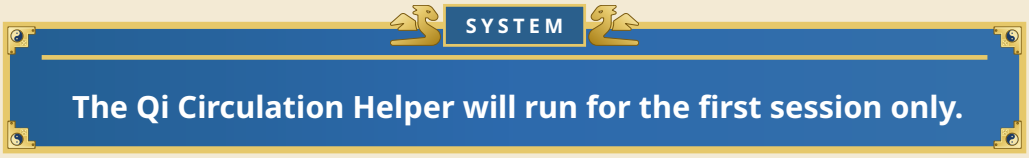
The string of curses I had been holding back finally burst out.



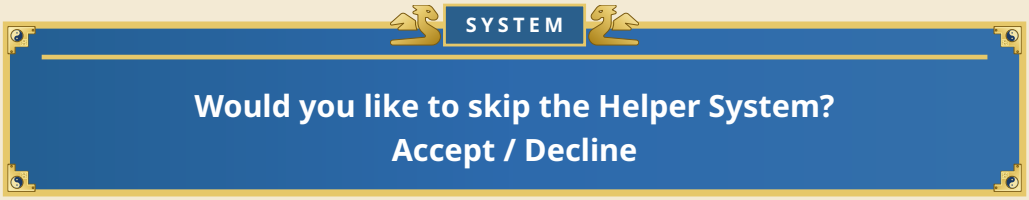
I had never missed my family as much as I did then. My beloved mother. My adorable little sister…or rather, my pain-in-the-ass little sister, Hayeon.

When I get out, your big brother will buy you enough fried chicken to make your stomach burst.

If I ever get out.



This was like stabbing someone and then applying ointment to the wound…



I fixed my trembling gaze on the message window.

“D-Decline.”

SYSTEM

Continuing.

That was a coincidence, right? Yeah. It had to be.

Before my unease had even faded, my vision flipped upside down.

When I came to, I was in an unfamiliar gray space.

“Over here.”

I whipped my head around in surprise and saw an old man beckoning me.

If an old man who looked like that called me over in a dream, I’d turn around and run for my life. But this was a game.

So he’s the helper.

Even if I hadn’t reasoned it out, I would have followed him without much suspicion.

It was strange, even to me, but that was how I felt. An inexplicable sense of familiarity. And trust.

“Take whatever position you find most comfortable.”

Huh? Aren’t you supposed to sit cross-legged when circulating qi?

As if he had read my thoughts, the old man answered.

“Weaklings are the ones who fuss over things like that. Masters don’t need to.”

I could smell it in his calm voice. I could smell it.

This was the scent of a master. The real deal had finally appeared!

“Good grief. What a handful.”

His wrinkled hand seemed to reach toward me, then vanished in a blur.

Huh?

Tap. Tap-tap.

Something flashed past, and the next moment, I was frozen stiff.

Was this what it felt like to be a corpse with its eyes still open?

I couldn’t move a muscle.

“It’s only a simple Pressure-Point Strike, so don’t be alarmed. Focus from this point on.”

As he spoke, the old man placed a hand on my back. Then he rapidly rattled off words in a low voice.

“Circulating qi is the most important form of training for a martial artist. It not only allows you to accumulate internal energy, but also refines essence, qi, and spirit, enabling you to advance to a higher realm. Therefore…”

I listened closely, but I couldn’t understand a word of what came after that. All I gathered was that circulating qi was extremely important.

“Clear your mind like a stream, maintain your focus, and draw out the flow. Now I will recite the formula of the Jin Family’s Cultivation Technique.”

Without giving me time to stop him, he rattled off the formula at breakneck speed, like beans popping in a pan—but I could understand it all. It felt as though a foreign language were being translated automatically inside my head.

What is this?

The formula was exactly 318 characters long. The moment I felt it become perfectly engraved in my mind, something changed.

“Descend.”

One word from the old man.

Where to?

Before the question could fade, I felt myself being drawn somewhere deep.

No—it only felt as though I was being drawn in.

My eyes were definitely closed, but I could see. I could feel.

The breeze that gently blew in before scattering. Sunlight. The coachman’s breathing and the horses’ snorts…

I pushed all of it away.

There was only one place to focus on: my body.

SYSTEM

Beginning the circulation of Jin Family’s Cultivation Technique. Follow the glowing acupoints.

I didn’t notice the old man disappear. I didn’t even hear the System’s voice.

My consciousness stirred awake in my head and slid downward. I didn’t know the points shining like stars were acupoints. Everything simply felt familiar, as though it had always been this way.

At last, I reached my dantian.

A small but pure energy.

Ten years of internal energy.

But what’s that?

In one corner of my dantian was something else, as large and hard as a boulder.

I understood instinctively.

Another store of internal energy.

It was energy that I—Jin Taekyung—had not yet assimilated and made my own. There was nearly as much of it as the internal energy I already possessed.

What if I absorb it?

There was no question that I would become stronger.

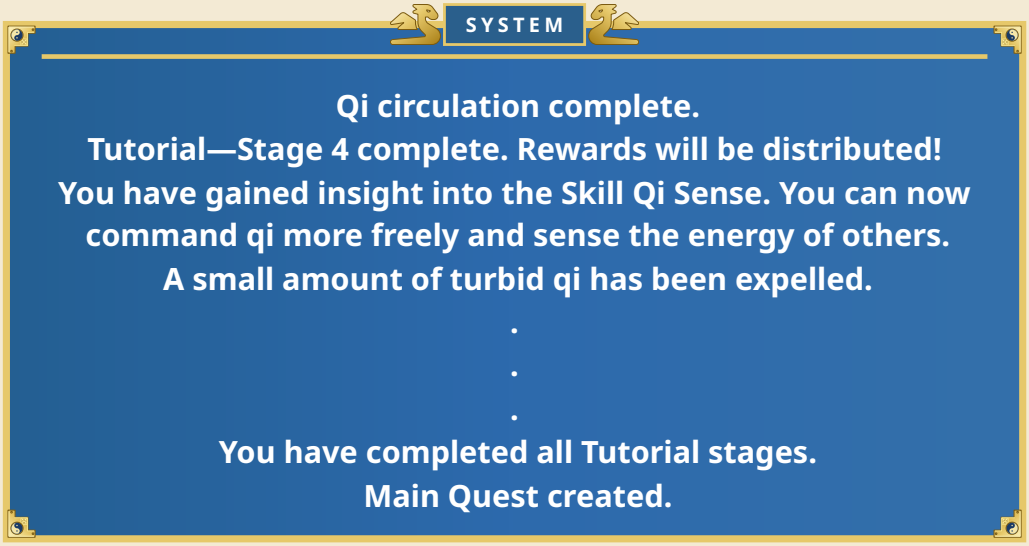
But for me, right now, it would be a reckless challenge. An adventure without a purpose.

I can't push my luck and die out here.

I steadied my mind and stirred my internal energy. Following the path the System's voice had shown me, I slowly guided it along.

At some point, I thought I faintly heard someone's voice.

"Good judgment."



As the System's final announcement sounded, the coachman spoke.

"We've arrived. This is the Jin Family of Taiyuan."

Yeah. At last.

Chapter 6

From the hill above, the Jin Family of Taiyuan looked like a village unto itself.

Dozens of buildings, large and small, spread across the vast grounds, while high stone walls enclosed the entire estate without leaving a single gap.

And that wasn't all. The cliff looming behind the Jin Family of Taiyuan was a spectacle in its own right.

Nature that had weathered the ages, and one family crouched beneath it.

The sight alone was imposing.

"Wow."

Even the coachman was impressed. Wait a minute.

"Didn't you say you'd been here often?"

"This is my second time."

"…How long have you been working?"

"Not even a month."

This guy had more layers than an onion.

He looked and carried himself like a twenty-year veteran, yet he was a new hire.

Then again, if he really had that much experience, there was no way he wouldn't recognize this face.

I'd practically worn down Honghwaru's threshold with all my visits. If he was new, it made sense that he might mistake me for Jin Mukyung.

Good thing everything worked out.

I had completed the final Tutorial Quest, and the Jin Family of Taiyuan was right in front of me. I could finally relax a little.

"Could you slow down a bit?"

"Ah, yes."

As the carriage slowed, I opened my Skill Window.

SYSTEM

Skill Window
Qi Sense
Grade: None
Restriction: None
Realm: 1st Mastery
Effect: Can identify targets at or below Lv. 30.
Description: Scans targets within a designated range. As the realm rises, the scan range and maximum target level increase.

When I finished reading the description, something occurred to me.

That's exactly what it is. A power-level scanner.

In a famous manga, they used a mechanical device to measure an opponent's power level.[34] I wondered how Qi Sense would work.

Curious, I called the command to mind.

Activate Qi Sense.

Was that right? The instant I hesitated, a blue circle appeared beneath my feet and a notification chimed.

Ding.

SYSTEM

You used Qi Sense. Since your current realm is 1st Mastery, you can scan targets at or below Lv. 30 within 10 jang.[35]

Ten jang—that was thirty meters.[36]

Whoosh.

Blue concentric rings swept outward, catching someone within their radius. A System window popped up over the coachman's round head.

SYSTEM

You identified the target with Qi Sense.
Lv. 4 Jang Sam

Aha. So that was how it worked.

Easy, simple, and most of all…

It was an essential skill for survival. Whether an enemy was strong, weak, or roughly on my level—I could find out at once by using Qi Sense.

I picked up a good one.

I nodded and opened the Quest Window. The moment I checked the new Main Quest, my mouth fell open before I knew it.

"…Huh?"

The world seemed to brighten before my eyes. If Qi Sense was a single ray of light reflected in a sewer, this was the sun. My heart pounded, and my head grew hot.

[34] The device alludes to the scouter in Dragon Ball, which displays a fighter's power level.
[35] A jang is about 3.03 m (9.94 ft). Ten jang is about 30 m (99 ft).
[36] A jang is about 3.03 m (9.94 ft). Ten jang is about 30 m (99 ft).

SYSTEM

Quest
Logout
Now you must make your way through this harsh Murim.
Grow stronger and become famous.
For that day, when it finally comes...
Grade: Main Quest
Restriction: Jin Taekyung
Objective: Reach the First Rate realm (Incomplete)
Reach Lv. 30 (Incomplete)
Reach 500 Fame (Incomplete)
Reward: Logout

The word I had been desperate to see.

Logout!

I was overjoyed, but dazed too. I had been determined to survive by any means necessary, yet a sliver of anxiety had always lingered in the back of my mind. Can I get out? What if I'm trapped here forever? Those dark suspicions had never quite left me.

I can get out.

But now things were different. I finally knew I could log out. It felt as though my mind had awakened anew.

Yeah, fuck it. It's only a game.

A Quest? How hard could it be?

For seven years, I had crossed the line between life and death almost every day. A Hunter's ability to survive—and sheer willpower—were beyond comparison with an ordinary person's.

And then there's this power.

My fist clenched on its own. All of this might be virtual, but the strength surging through my body felt real.

That was how I knew.

I was stronger in the game than I was in reality.

Only by the slightest margin, but there was no doubt about it.

It's all thanks to the System.

Leveling up, Quests, distributing stats, and Skills. All of it came from the System. It was only possible because this was a game and I was a player.

With my experience as a Hunter and the System at my disposal, logging out was only a matter of time.

Once I get out, they're all fucking dead.

I'd start by beating the shit out of the game's developers. Fucking bastards. I was grinding my teeth when someone shouted in my ear.

"Stop!"

Matching uniforms. Disciplined postures. Clipped voices.

The moment I saw the martial artists guarding the Jin Family of Taiyuan's main gate, the word Murim flashed through my mind.

So this is what a prestigious family is like.

They were clearly different. If the Heavenly Axe and the bandits I'd encountered earlier were a rabble, these men were trained regulars.

One of the NPCs approached the coachman. He was a young martial artist with a boyish face and thick caterpillar eyebrows.

"I am Hyuk Mujin, Captain of the Gatekeepers of the great Jin Family of Taiyuan. State your identity and purpose."

Captain of the Gatekeepers. Come to think of it, he was the only one wearing a sash that resembled an armband. He barely looked twenty.

Then again, if you're talented enough, that's all that matters.

While I was thinking that, the coachman answered.

"We're from Honghwaru."

"Honghwaru? You mean the pleasure house?"

"Yes."

Through the window, I saw the NPC's face—or rather, Hyuk Mujin's—twist into a frown. His previously courteous tone turned curt at once.

"What business could a pleasure house possibly have with our family?"

"Ah, well…"

No matter where you went, there were always people like that—the kind who worked for a conglomerate and thought that made them a chaebol,[37] when the actual chaebol was someone else entirely.

I quietly opened the window and coughed.

"Ahem. Hmm-hmm."

A very deliberate cough. The famous Don't you know who I am? cough, reserved for those who had made it in life.

"Hmm."

Sure enough, Hyuk Mujin recognized me at a glance. I gave him a mild smile and spoke.

[37] A chaebol is a large, family-controlled South Korean business conglomerate; the word can also refer to its wealthy owners.

It was a magic phrase used far and wide by high-ranking politicians, military officers, and businessmen.

“Hmm. Right. Good work.”

I was about to close the window when—

Clack. Rattle.

“Huh?”

It wouldn’t close. A hand had shot forward and caught it.

The hand belonged, of course, to Hyuk Mujin. Through the half-closed window, I saw his stiff expression.

“Get down.”

“Me?”

“Who else? Did you think I was talking to the air?”

What the hell? Why was this guy reacting like that?

He didn’t recognize me after all.

I put on a generous smile.

“You might not know this, but I live here.”

“So do I.”

“No, what I mean is…”

“You’re the Third Young Master of the Jin Family of Taiyuan. Is that what you’re trying to say?”

“…”

Exactly right. Hyuk Mujin continued.

“I know perfectly well who you are, Young Master. Now get down from the carriage. We’ll proceed according to protocol.”

What else could I do? He said it was protocol. But warning lights were flashing in my head as I climbed down from the carriage.

Why do I have such a bad feeling about this?

The other NPCs in the Jin Family of Taiyuan were giving me strangely chilly looks too. Just as their stares began to make my face burn, Hyuk Mujin took out paper and a brush and spoke.

“Name.”

“…”

“I’ll ask again. Name.”

What was this, a criminal interrogation?

I was in a foul mood, but I decided to wait and see what happened.

“…Jin Taekyung.”

“Affiliation.”

“Jin Family of Taiyuan.”

“Age and martial arts realm.”

“Twenty. Second Rate.”

Hyuk Mujin’s brush paused.

“Don’t let pointless pride get in the way. Answer honestly.”

Honestly?

Would you understand if I said I reached the Second Rate realm by distributing stats?

When I merely stared at him instead of answering, he shook his head.

“Well, if you insist, we’ll move on. Let’s see… You’ve been away for several days. Where did you go?”

“Honghwaru.”

“Several days at the famously expensive Honghwaru? Must have been nice. You must have spent a fortune. Or did you skim the family funds again?”

“Again?”

“Why pretend otherwise? Isn’t that something the Young Master has done now and then, time and time again, as a matter of course?”

The hostility in Hyuk Mujin’s eyes reminded me of something.

Jin Taekyung.

For a moment, I had forgotten what kind of person the character Jin Taekyung was in this game—especially within the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

The Shame of the Family.

There was no way the Jin Family of Taiyuan’s NPCs would like someone saddled with a title like that. As if to prove it, every ounce of their contempt was now directed at me.

In this game where nothing ever went my way.

Ah, for fuck’s sake…

Something surged up from deep in my chest. My head throbbed, and my eyes grew hot. Then a low voice reached me.

“Third Young Master, I may only be a low-ranking Captain, but let me say one thing.”

His expression said it all.

What a pathetic bastard.

“Stop tarnishing the family’s reputation. At least try to live like a human being. Understood?”

He tossed out the remark and turned away. I stared blankly at the back of his head, then let out a hollow laugh.

“Live like a human being?”

I knew Hyuk Mujin was nothing more than an NPC who knew nothing.

I knew he was saying it to Jin Taekyung, not to me.

But…

This is fucking bullshit.

The fact that this was a game and Hyuk Mujin was an NPC didn't matter. No—I decided not to think about it.

All the stress that had built up erupted, shattering the last of my patience.

"Hey. You. Stop right there."

Hyuk Mujin turned around, irritation written all over his face. I'd been wanting to punch that face for a while now.

I beamed like a child who had just seen Santa Claus.

"You're… fucking dead."

I sent my clenched fist flying toward his jaw.

The air hung heavy. A pile of documents towered over the desk. And, as always, a cold-looking escort stood beside his master like a shadow.

Scratch. Scratch.

The Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion swallowed. His mouth had been bone-dry from the moment he entered the office.

"Tell me."

The calm voice from beyond the pile of documents was an oasis.

The Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion finally managed to speak.

"There is a promising young man among my subordinates. He's quite loyal to our family and possesses considerable martial talent, but…"

"I'm listening."

"Perhaps because he's young, he's arrogant and insolent. He never thinks before he acts."

"Get to the point."

"I hear he got into a fight with the Third Young Master."

"…I can imagine. What about the youngest?"

"We moved him to Medicine King Hall immediately. He's unconscious, with some bruising…"

Silence fell.

"It was all my fault. Please punish me severely!"

The Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion bowed deeply, his vision going dark. A long while passed before the voice came again.

"That's enough. You may leave."

The Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion raised his head, feeling as though he had narrowly escaped death.

“Ah, one more thing.”

“Your command, Lesser Family Head.”

“Could I see that young man? I’d like to speak with him for a moment.”

“Lesser Family Head, forgive me for saying so, but his treatment isn’t finished yet.”

“Treatment?”

“Yes. He’s at Medicine King Hall too. I hear one of his bones was cracked.”

“…Is that so? Then never mind.”

The silence continued even after the Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion withdrew, until the precarious tower of documents came crashing down.

“Wipeng.”

Jin Wikyung, the thirty-five-year-old Lesser Family Head of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, called to his trusted retainer with a stiff expression.

“Yes.”

“I’m going to step out for a while.”

Here we go again.

Wipeng, Jin Wikyung’s escort, let out an inscrutable sigh as he watched his master walk away.

Chapter 7

I'm dreaming.

How do I know? Well…

Because I'm watching myself?

I mean that literally. I'm watching myself—or, more precisely, Jin Taekyung in the game, not the real-world me.

"Huff, huff."

Jin Taekyung gasped for breath. His clothes were torn, and his face and body were covered in bruises and swelling.

Meanwhile…

That bastard's perfectly fine.

Hyuk Mujin was still fresh. He even had enough breathing room to sneer at his opponent.

"You're better than I expected, but…you can't fight that crudely. A martial artist ought to use martial arts."

God, what an annoying bastard. I wanted to run over and smack him in the back of the head, but maybe because it was a dream, I couldn't move or make a sound.

Watching it like this just pisses me off even more.

That was right. This dream was showing me my earlier fight with Hyuk Mujin from a third-person perspective.

"You fucking sooon of a bitch!"

Jin Taekyung charged at him with a furious scream, but it was pointless. I knew because I'd been there.

By then, I was already exhausted.

My arms and legs were heavy, and my breathing was ragged. My movements had grown wider, leaving plenty of openings.

Sure enough, Hyuk Mujin easily dodged the punch, then kicked Taekyung's leg out from under him.

His movements were smooth and nimble, flowing like water. The entire fight had been a series of moments like that.

Bastard really can fight.

I had to admit it. Hyuk Mujin was stronger than me. He used his internal energy efficiently and neutralized me every time with martial arts I didn't recognize.

In a word, he was a true martial artist of Murim.

It was a shock.

I'd gotten cocky after taking down the Heavenly Axe. I'd vaguely assumed I was already strong enough to hold my own. Add my seven years of combat experience as a Hunter and the power of the System, and I'd thought logging out was only a matter of time.

That was exactly the kind of thinking that gets you killed.

The Heavenly Axe and those bandits had been nothing more than tutorial monsters.

I'd been celebrating after killing a Level 1 rabbit in a beginner hunting ground. A seven-year Hunter? My thinking had been so shallow it made a joke of all that experience.

I have to learn martial arts.

This wasn't just a game. My life was on the line.

I had to do whatever it took to survive. Level up, learn martial arts—whatever it took, I was ready to learn and struggle with everything I had.

I was ready to become a martial artist of Murim instead of an F-rank Hunter.

Thud. Thud. Thud.

"Fuck. You're tough as hell. Let go! You won't let go!"

"Graaagh!"

Jin Taekyung kept getting knocked down, only to rise again. No—that was me.

I did land one good hit at the very end.

Smack!

Yeah. That's how you do it. The way I have for the past seven years. The way I always have.

But what Level is Hyuk Mujin?

At that moment, as if answering my question, a System window rose above Hyuk Mujin's head.

...Should I just shut up and level up first?

I opened my eyes to the System's voice. For a split second, I imagined waking up in my room at the goshiwon[38], but it was a pointless hope.

[38] A goshiwon is a building of small, low-cost rooms, often rented by students or people living alone in South Korea.

"Are you awake, Young Master?"

I looked around at the man dressed in white. A strange smell hung in the neat, clean room.

Where am I?

As if he had read my mind, the man answered.

"This is Medicine King Hall. You regained consciousness half a shichen[39] after you fainted."

So this was a Korean medicine clinic, and this NPC was a physician.

Half a shichen… Was I unconscious for an hour?

That bastard Hyuk Mujin had really laid into me.

"You'll be in considerable pain from the bruising. Please lie still for a while."

With that, the physician left the room. Once his footsteps had faded, I quietly muttered,

"Open Status Window."

Ding.

SYSTEM

Status Window
Lv. 11 Jin Taekyung
Occupation: Second Rate Martial Artist
Fame: 10
Titles: Scion of a Prestigious Family / Shame of the Family
(Title effects active)
Strength: 40 Stamina: 40
Agility: 50 Intelligence: 10
Charm: 10 Internal Energy: 10 years
Unassigned Points: 10
Distribute your unassigned points.

The ten points I'd earned from defeating the Heavenly Axe were still there. I'd held off on distributing them in case something unexpected happened, but I hadn't expected to end up fighting Hyuk Mujin.

I hadn't expected to get beaten to a pulp, either.

After thinking for a moment, I put all ten points into Stamina.

The sight of myself exhausted and gasping during the fight with Hyuk Mujin was still fresh in my mind.

If I'd distributed the points beforehand, would I have stood a chance?

The thought crossed my mind, but I soon shook my head.

[39] A shichen is a traditional time unit of approximately two hours; half a shichen is about one hour.

The outcome wouldn't have changed.

It had been a fight between an adult and a child. The gap between Hyuk Mujin and me was that vast.

And as far as I was concerned, that gap had less to do with Levels and stats than with whether or not we knew martial arts.

How could he react like that? Move like that?

Martial arts did exist in the real world too. Boxing, krav maga, jiu-jitsu, and so on—the things people called practical martial arts these days.

But martial arts here were on an entirely different level.

Every movement was both practical and precise, like interlocking gears driven by internal energy.

I have to learn martial arts.

What if I'd encountered Hyuk Mujin in the tutorial instead of the Heavenly Axe?

Defeat. Death. The words came naturally to mind.

I had to learn martial arts. I wouldn't survive without them.

"Fuuuck…"

As I let out a long, vicious curse from the bottom of my lungs, I heard someone outside the door.

"This is the room."

"Thank you."

Creak.

The door opened before I could react. And there, standing in the doorway…

"Well, aren't you a sight."

A middle-aged man was glaring at me with icy eyes.

"What's his condition?"

"He has bruises, but nothing too serious."

"That's a shame. He should have broken a leg, at least."

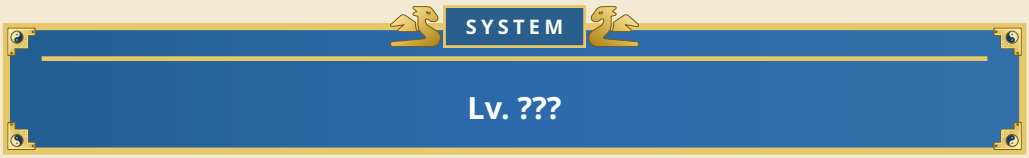
"…"

The middle-aged man fixed me with a menacing glare.

"You reckless little bastard!"

I quietly lowered my eyes. I had never seen this man—or rather, this NPC—before, but for some reason, I felt like I should.

No. I absolutely had to.



Three question marks. Even Qi Sense couldn't identify his Level.

At least Level 30.

He made Hyuk Mujin look cute. More importantly, judging by the physician's attitude and the way this man spoke to me, he was no ordinary NPC.

At the very least, he seemed to have enough authority to slap the Third Young Master of the Jin Family of Taiyuan right across the mouth.

If that hits me…

Gulp.

I swallowed involuntarily at the sight of his palm, which was as large as a pot lid.

Level aside, the man looked dangerous in every way.

He stood nearly two meters[40] tall, his entire body sheathed in muscles like a bulletproof vest. His cold gaze was enough to freeze a person solid.

He looked like murder was both his hobby and his specialty, and I found myself wondering who he was.

But his face looks strangely familiar.

Where had I seen this man before? I thought hard, then realized.

Jin Taekyung?

The middle-aged man looked like Jin Taekyung. No—it would be more accurate to say Jin Taekyung looked like him.

His incomprehensibly high Level. The way he spoke while trampling all over the Third Young Master of the Jin Family of Taiyuan. And finally, his face.

There could only be one answer. He was Jin Taekyung's…

"Father?"

The word slipped out before I could stop it, and the middle-aged man's eyes bulged.

"F-Father?"

Even his fist began to tremble. Anyone watching would have thought I'd insulted his mother. Keeping a wary eye on his fist, I said,

"Please, just calm down for a moment…"

"Calm down? You dare say that to me? You're still playing games at a time like this!"

"I'm very sorry if I got it wrong. I spoke out of turn."

"Shut your mouth."

[40] Two meters is about 6 ft 7 in.

He silenced me with a chilly glare, then turned to the physician, who was still waiting nearby.

“Thank you for showing me here. You may leave now.”

I sent the physician a desperate SOS with my eyes, but he immediately turned away.

What the fuck… A doctor is abandoning his patient?

Bang.

The door slamming shut sounded like the gates of hell opening.

Alone together in the room, the man raised his pot-lid-sized palm and began walking toward me.

“There’s a limit to how much of a wastrel you can be! How long are you going to keep living like this?”

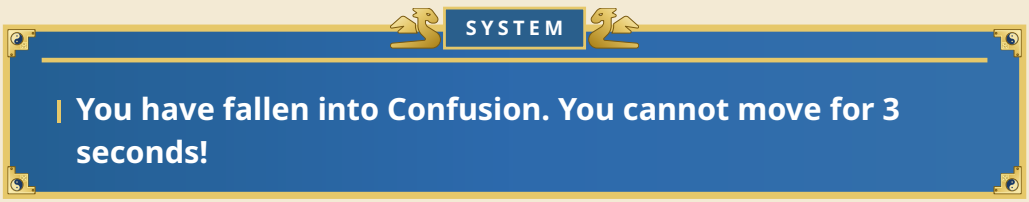
Before I knew it, I had jumped to my feet and was slowly backing away.

Bruises? Pain? I couldn’t feel any of that anymore. Maybe I was about to end up in a body that would never feel pain again.

“Give me just ten minutes. No, a quarter hour. I can explain everything properly. What are you angry about? Huh? Is it because I called you Father? Are you actually my mother?”

“You little brat!”

His booming voice made my body lock up. I felt my back touch the wall.



What the actual fuck…

I’m finished.

My twenty-seven years of life flashed before my eyes. With a little exaggeration, I even remembered the fierce race to reach the egg back when I was still a sperm. That had been rough.

Mom, Dad, Hayeon…

I thought of my family and slowly closed my eyes.

“Whenever you get a chance, all you do is chase women!”

Pat, pat.

“You’re always in and out of gambling dens!”

Fondle, fondle.

“This is why the family looks down on you!”

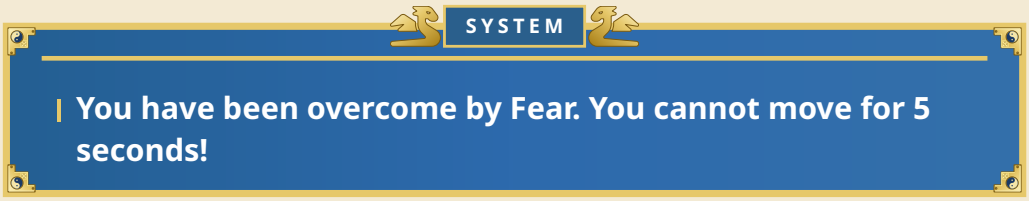
Rub, rub.

…What the hell was this guy doing?

His mouth kept pouring out angry scoldings, but his hands were gently feeling me all over. A chill ran down my spine.

No way…

Ding.



“You’re a disgrace to the family. A disgrace!”

I certainly was feeling overwhelming shame. I was being sexually harassed by an AI—and one that looked like a middle-aged man, at that.

Mom…

It took me a moment to realize that I had completely misunderstood.

His hands moved quickly, but they moved like those of a physician examining a patient.

He lifted my eyelids, checked my pulse, and carefully examined the bruised areas. Every time his hands passed over me, the pain faded and my body felt refreshed, as if I were getting a massage.

“You little bastard! Keep acting like this and—huh? Huh!—you’ll get what’s coming to you. Do you understand?”

“…”

At last, he stopped moving his hands and whispered,

“Thank goodness it’s not as bad as I expected. Why did you have to fight him? You never even train in martial arts.”

I answered with complete sincerity. It was one question loaded with all kinds of meaning.

“Who are you?”

The next moment, his stern, solemn, serious expression transformed into that of a wounded fawn.

“Why are you speaking formally all of a sudden? When I called you a disgrace to the family, I only said it for other people to hear… Did it hurt your feelings?”

“Huh?”

“Your big brother is sad. You know how dearly I raised you. When you were little, I changed your dirty diapers every day, carried you around whenever you cried, and soothed you to sleep.”

“Huh? You’re my brother?”

Silence fell.

He was my brother, not my father?

I was stunned that this old guy was my brother.

“Oh dear, our youngest must have hurt his head. Physician! Physician!”

The middle-aged man ran out shouting for the physician. As I watched him go, a piece of the puzzle suddenly fell into place.

Now I understand why Jin Taekyung grew up such a mess.

A shining example of what happens when parenting goes wrong.

Chapter 8

"There's nothing wrong with him."

That was the physician's conclusion. Hearing the certainty in his voice, I nodded to myself. He was right.

There's nothing wrong with my brain.

I was simply inhabiting this body.

But someone didn't seem satisfied with the diagnosis.

"Then why can't he remember anything?"

A dignified air and a commanding voice. I knew his name now.

Jin Wikyung.

Jin Taekyung's eldest brother and the Lesser Family Head of the Jin Family of Taiyuan. Right. He really wasn't my father.

The man was even tearing up earlier.

Now he was pretending nothing had happened, his stern, solemn, serious mask firmly back in place.

The poor physician fumbled for an answer.

"Well, that is certainly my diagnosis, but there can occasionally be exceptions…"

"That will do. You may leave."

The physician left looking wounded. As if he had been waiting for the chance, Jin Wikyung immediately moved closer. His voice overflowed with affection and concern.

"You truly don't remember?"

"No."

"Not a thing?"

I quietly nodded. I had already worked out how I was going to play this.

Let's keep going like this.

Amnesia—the kind I had only ever seen in dramas. Nothing could have been more convenient in my current situation. I didn't have to make any effort to fit into the game world or dig up information.

All I had to do was lie still, blink at everyone with an expression that said I don't know anything, and let events unfold on their own. Just like now.

"Do you remember what you just said?"

"Which part?"

Believing that I had lost my memory, Jin Wikyung had told me a few basic facts. That was how I had learned who he was.

"Tell me my name."

"Jin Wikyung. The Lesser Family Head of the Jin Family of Taiyuan."

“How old am I?”

“Thirty-five.”

Good grief. He was in his thirties with that face? He wasn’t even married yet.

“What about our parents?”

“Our father is touring the Central Plains. Our mother died ten years ago.”

“That’s right. And your second brother?”

“Jin Mukyung, the Heaven Shaking Sword. Twenty-five. Currently a cadet at Heaven’s Gate Temple.”

I had no idea where Heaven’s Gate Temple was. I was simply parroting back what I had heard.

Jin Wikyung had been mechanically saying, “That’s right, that’s right,” after each answer, but now he tilted his head.

“The Heaven Shaking Sword? Did I tell you his sobriquet too?”

No. The coachman had told me that.

The moment our eyes met, I clutched my forehead.

“Ah, my head! My head hurts!”

“Oh no, my youngest!”

This was practically a cheat code.

“It’s only a simple contusion. The swelling and bruises should be completely gone within three days at most.”

Leaving the physician’s final words behind, I walked out of Medicine King Hall. A servant with an unassuming, approachable face was waiting for me at the entrance.

“I’ll show you to your quarters, Young Master.”

The servant set off without hesitation. He already seemed to know that I had lost my memory, because whenever we passed a building or a person, he would quietly explain who or what they were.

A guide, an errand boy, and an encyclopedia.

I could roughly guess why Jin Wikyung had sent him.

He was busy with his duties, so this was probably his way of looking after me.

“We’ve arrived.”

At last, we stopped in front of a two-story wooden building.

Wasn’t this the kind of building they called a pavilion in China? It had a distinctly old-fashioned charm.

“Wow.”

It was unbelievably spacious too. The moment the servant opened the door, my jaw dropped.

"Your bedroom is on the second floor. Bells have been installed throughout the building, so please ring one if you need anything."

Once the servant left, I collected myself and began exploring the pavilion. The first floor alone looked to be well over three hundred square meters.[41]

To someone who had lived in a goshiwon[42] room barely seven square meters[43] in size, it might as well have been an Olympic stadium.

This is the first time I've ever envied an NPC.

There were six rooms on the first floor alone. Curiosity suddenly surged through me.

What could be inside?

Treasures? Martial arts manuals? Amazing items?

I didn't care what it was. I flung open the nearest door.

"Whoa."

The exclamation slipped out the moment the door opened. There were no fluorescent lights, yet the room was bright—thanks to the silk clothes packed onto the shelves along the walls. There was an astonishing amount of them, even at a glance.

Of course, it wasn't what I was looking for.

This bastard owns a lot of clothes.

A club regular—no, a pleasure-house regular through and through. I clicked my tongue, closed the door, and went straight to the second room. Then I threw that door open too.

"More clothes?"

I had underestimated Jin Taekyung. At this point, he might as well have been the fashionista of his age.

Trying to ignore the unease creeping over me, I moved on to the third room.

The door flew open.

"…You fucking shopaholic."

Seriously, what the hell was wrong with this guy? Seeing three whole rooms crammed with clothes left me feeling like I had a sweet potato lodged in my throat.[44]

Could it be…

---

[41] Three hundred square meters is about 3,200 square feet.

[42] A goshiwon is a small, inexpensive rented room, traditionally associated with students preparing for exams.

[43] Seven square meters is about 75 square feet.

[44] In Korean, the feeling of having eaten sweet potatoes can describe frustration or a sense of being stifled.

My unease was becoming real, growing heavier by the second. I trudged to the final room. Unlike the others, it clearly hadn't been used in a long time. I took hold of the rusty handle and slowly pushed.

Creeeak.

With an irritating groan, the final room revealed what lay inside.

Sunlight filtered through a small window. Dust rose with every step. And beyond it stood several bookshelves.

"Found it."

A smile spread across my face before I even realized it.

There were five bookshelves in total. I approached the nearest one and pulled out a book. When I brushed off the thick layer of dust, the writing on the cover appeared.

This was why the System was so convenient. Thanks to Synchronization, I could read and pronounce even writing that looked like an alien language as naturally as my mother tongue.

"Three-Turn Footwork?"

Ding.

SYSTEM

Item Window
Three-Turn Footwork
Type: Martial Arts Manual
Grade: Third Rate
Restriction: None
Description: The most basic practical footwork technique. It can even be purchased on the open market.
Would you like to train in this martial art? (3 / 10)

Yes!

My heart pounded as I read through the System window.

Three-Turn Footwork. The most basic third-rate footwork technique. This was it—the kind of martial arts manual I had only ever seen in novels.

My first plan was to learn martial arts.

So the System applies to martial arts training too.

The suspicion I had formed after completing the Quest to circulate my qi, just before coming to the Jin Family of Taiyuan, had now become certainty.

Thank goodness.

I had been worried that I might have to learn everything step by step, like the protagonists and NPCs in novels. Fortunately, that fear had proved unfounded.

Even a trash game is still a game.

If the System applied to ordinary martial arts the same way it had when I circulated my qi, rapid growth would be a piece of cake.

I was about to shout, “I accept!”—but stopped.

SYSTEM

Would you like to train in this martial art? (3 / 10)

The number in parentheses really bothered me. I had learned exactly three martial arts so far: the Jin Family’s Cultivation Technique, the Jin Family’s Spear Technique, and the Jin Family’s Manoeuvre Technique.

Could it be…

Is there a limit to how many martial arts I can learn?

If that suspicion was true, now was not the time to learn a third-rate martial art like Three-Turn Footwork. I needed to find a higher-grade martial art—one that could keep me alive until Logout and help me raise my Level and Fame quickly.

The good news was that this room contained several hundred martial arts manuals, give or take.

“Good. Good.”

That meant I could learn seven more martial arts. If I filled those slots with nothing but the best techniques, Logout would only be a matter of time.

With a satisfied smile, I pulled out the next book.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Item Window
The Night King: Well-Endowed Man
Type: Erotic Novel
Grade: None
Restriction: None
Description: Even better when read with illustrations.

“…”

Today's battle against work had been fierce. Jin Wikyung had not left the office once since morning, and now it was nearly midnight. This grueling pace had already continued for two months.

"Thank you for your hard work."

Wipeng's words signaled the end of the day's work.

Jin Wikyung hauled his stiff body upright and left the office. After all, the owner of that room was not Jin Wikyung, but his father, who had suddenly vanished one day.

His residence was a pavilion in the inner compound at the center of the Jin Family estate, about a quarter hour away on foot.

"It's cold tonight."

Wipeng, who followed him like a shadow, draped a thick fur cloak over his shoulders. Jin Wikyung smiled tiredly.

"Thank you. Without you, I might have collapsed long ago."

"What choice do I have? Someone has to play the lady of the house."

"Don't start. The old men are already hounding me about it."

Jin Wikyung rubbed his gritty eyes. Though he was in his mid-thirties, he remained unmarried. He had kept putting marriage off on the grounds that he was still young, and those delays had added up to more than a decade.

I suppose I'll have to do it eventually. For the family's sake.

It wasn't as though he had never been in love.

But Jin Wikyung was no immature child. One day, he would become the Family Head and bear responsibility for everyone in the household. If a political marriage could strengthen the family, he considered it a small sacrifice to make.

"The stars are bright tonight. We almost didn't need torches."

Sensing his mood, Wipeng changed the subject. Jin Wikyung shook his head. His residence had already come into view.

"Hmm?"

"What is it?"

Following Jin Wikyung's gaze, Wipeng tilted his head. A faint light was leaking from a nearby pavilion.

"Isn't that the Third Young Master's residence?"

"It is. It's late, but the lights are still on."

As he spoke, Jin Wikyung strode forward. Wipeng had no choice but to follow.

"My lord, why don't we come back another time? He's only using the memory loss as an excuse. He's obviously in there drinking."

"Shh."

The two men entered the pavilion. The light came from the old room on the far left. Constant creaking sounded from within, as if someone were moving around nonstop.

“I underestimated the Third Young Master. It sounds like he even brought a woman in. Listen to that. I’ll bet this month’s salary on it.”

Wipeng’s lips moved. He was using Sound Transmission, sending his voice through internal energy.

“Wipeng.”

“Yes?”

“Shut your mouth.”

Jin Wikyung sent the short, heavy reply through Sound Transmission, then moved right up to the door. Through the open crack, he could see what was happening inside.

Then Wipeng cut in with a wounded expression.

“I never took you for this sort of person, my lord, but your tastes are rather unusual…”

He gasped.

The next moment, Wipeng’s mouth fell open.

What did I just see?

Am I seeing things because I’ve been feeling weak lately?

He rubbed his eyes with his sleeve, but all five senses kept insisting that the scene before him was real.

“Now, take two steps diagonally…”

A sturdy young man muttered to himself as he moved without rest. Countless footprints covered the dusty floor, and more were appearing even now.

Swish. Slip.

“Fuck, this martial art is designed like shiiiiit!”

It was the Third Young Master. That god-awful temper and that foul mouth. There was no doubt that he was Jin Taekyung.

He had not trained in martial arts since he was twelve, yet here he was, practicing past midnight until he was drenched in dust and sweat.

“Wipeng.”

Wipeng, who had been staring blankly, snapped back to his senses.

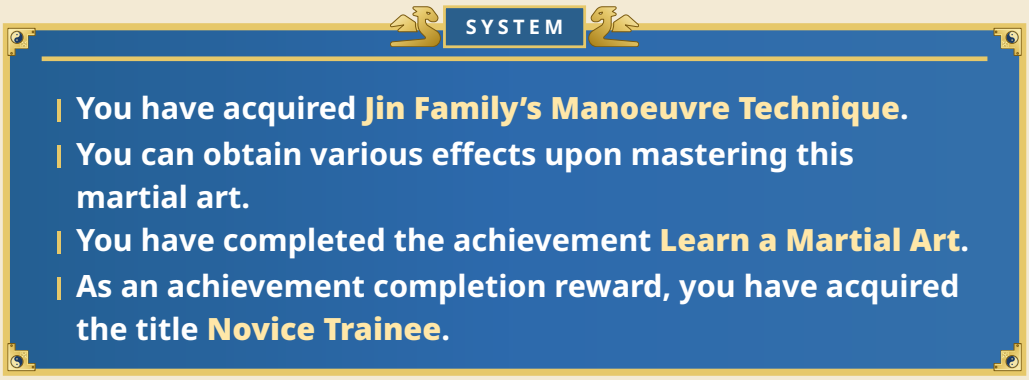
“Yes, yes?”

Jin Wikyung gazed into the room with dazed eyes. Jin Taekyung had fallen over and was hurling vicious curses at the ceiling, but he soon got back up and resumed practicing his footwork.

“As promised, you won’t be getting paid this month.”

Chapter 9

Ding.



"Good grief."

The moment the System notification appeared, I slumped to the floor. Dust billowed around me, but who cared? I already looked like a bum anyway.

Why is this so damn hard?

There were only two kinds of books in Jin Taekyung's study.

Erotic novels. And books that weren't erotic novels.

Of the more than four hundred books, only about a hundred remained after I took out the erotic novels.

What an incredible bastard.

If he'd been born in Korea, he would've run an illegal adult website. If he'd been born in the United States, he would've ended up in prison.

At any rate, once I finished sorting them, there were only about thirty martial arts manuals.

If only he'd collected half as many manuals as erotic novels.

It was a shame as far as I was concerned, but the search had still paid off. I'd found the martial arts manuals I needed right now.

The Jin Family's Spear Technique and the Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique. They were hereditary martial arts of the Jin Family of Taiyuan—arts I'd forgotten because I hadn't practiced them in far too long.

Let's check the Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Skill Window
Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique
Type: Manoeuvre Technique
Grade: First Rate
Restriction: Direct descendants of the Jin Family of Taiyuan
Realm: First Stage
Description: A manoeuvre technique devised by the founder of the Jin Family of Taiyuan. It has few variations and is monotonous, but it is practical.

The description of the Jin Family's Spear Technique wasn't much different. Except…

Few variations and monotonous, my ass.

The hereditary martial art created by some fellow called the founder—or was it Archaeopteryx?—was insanely complicated. Just thinking about last night made me grind my teeth.

SYSTEM

You are beginning to acquire Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique.
You are memorizing the formula. The speed varies according to the martial art's grade and your Intelligence stat.

Right. Everything was fine up to that point.

The problem came next.

SYSTEM

The movement sequence for Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique is being displayed. (0 / 100)

I followed the footprints displayed by the System and practiced the manoeuvre technique, but it was incredibly strict. Step even slightly outside the footprints, and I failed. Take too long to perform the next movement, and I failed again.

I had to follow the entire sequence perfectly for it to count as one completion.

What a fucking garbage game.

There was a major difference between my real-world physique and this character's. I was nearly half a handspan[45] shorter now, and my reach was shorter too. I couldn't make the fine adjustments I needed, so one mistake followed another.

It's a miracle I succeeded at all.

By the time I completed the sequence one hundred times, my hands and feet were trembling.

Still, I gained something.

After years of working as a Hunter, I was thoroughly familiar with combat—especially group battles. In a fight where life and death were on the line, the most important thing was luck first and your feet second.

Advance. Retreat. Or stop.

Even if you lost an arm, you could survive as long as your legs still moved. But if you lost your legs, it was over.

Your feet had to move before your arms. That was how every battle I'd fought had gone, and it was why I'd chosen to learn a manoeuvre technique first.

But…

This was too slow. Even with the System's help, more than half a day had flown by. How much longer would it take to learn the spear technique too?

This is already day five.

I'd heard that time passed faster in virtual-reality games than in the real world. But even after accounting for the time multiplier, five days was a long time.

"Phew…"

I sighed and forced the distracting thoughts from my mind.

Rescue? Logout?

This wasn't the time to cling to possibilities. I had to keep moving forward, even if I had to do it alone.

That's enough for today.

I gathered up the martial arts manuals and stood.

When I reached the bedroom on the second floor, I realized that one unusual book had been mixed in among them.

The Night King: Well-Endowed Man

"Ahem."

Oh dear. What a mistake.

"Are you up already?"

[45] A Korean handspan (ppyeom) is the distance between the tips of an outstretched thumb and little finger, roughly 20 cm (8 in). Half a handspan is about 10 cm (4 in).

The servant stared at me with wide eyes, a breakfast tray in his hands.

“I couldn’t sleep…”

It was the truth. Circulating my qi was to blame.

This is ridiculously effective.

Circulating my qi didn’t just clear my mind and sharpen my senses. It also relieved fatigue. Come to think of it, I didn’t think I’d felt tired even once since I started doing it.

The pain is almost gone too.

“Your wounds could worsen, so please don’t push yourself too hard.”

A warm feeling spread through my chest at the servant’s words. Even in this shitty game, there was an NPC who shone like a ray of light. I’d finally met a normal person.

Why is this enough to make me emotional?

Strangely choked up, I started on breakfast.

Every side dish was either too salty or too bland, but hunger made a fine seasoning. I polished off the meal, then downed the bowl of herbal medicine in one gulp.

“Ugh.”

The taste made me grimace. After clearing away the table, the servant bowed his head.

“Then I shall take my leave.”

“Ah, wait a second.”

“Please speak more casually to me. Why are you addressing me so respectfully?”

Come to think of it, he had a point.

At first, the graphics and artificial intelligence had been so realistic that I’d used polite speech with every NPC I met. By now, though, I’d grown somewhat accustomed to them.

The time had finally come to reclaim my dignity as a user.

I answered sternly.

“For now, I’ll speak however I’m comfortable.”

Fuck, I can’t bring myself to drop the honorifics.

I couldn’t exactly talk down to a man who clearly looked over forty and call him “you bastard” or “you punk.”

Damn game. The graphics were so good I couldn’t even speak informally.

At this rate, I’ll end up becoming buddies with an NPC.

When I emphasized that I’d suffered a head injury, the servant reluctantly nodded.

“I suppose it can’t be helped. Is there something you require?”

“I was wondering if there was an empty room.”

The servant tilted his head.

“I can arrange one for you, but what might you need it for?”

“I want to practice martial arts.”

“Pardon?”

“All the rooms here are either dirty or stuffy… Why do you look like that?”

After leaving the pavilion, the servant went straight to the Family Head’s office.

Once his report was finished, Jin Wikyung’s solemn voice rang out from behind a tower of documents.

“You’ve done well.”

The instant the servant left, Jin Wikyung sprang to his feet and flung the documents into the air.

“This calls for a celebration! I’m not working today!”

“Who said you could decide that?”

Wipeng caught every last fluttering sheet and sighed.

“If the others find out you’re acting like this, they’ll start talking again.”

“The Third Young Master says he’s going to take up martial arts in earnest. What could possibly be more important than that?”

“The fact that the Council of Elders is waiting to pounce on you is more important.”

At the words Council of Elders, Jin Wikyung’s expression darkened.

“Damn old men.”

“A family council meeting may be held soon. From their perspective, they’ve spotted an opening, so naturally they’ll sink their teeth into it.”

The agenda was obvious. It would begin with Jin Taekyung’s usual conduct and end with an attack on Jin Wikyung himself, the Lesser Family Head.

“Those bastards are persistent.”

“Is that anything new? Old pillars always end up crawling with bugs.”

“Isn’t there any way around it?”

“So you’re volunteering to serve as the Third Young Master’s shield again.”

Wipeng sighed.

“My lord, may I offer a word?”

“I refuse.”

“Then I refuse your refusal. This is the fifth time he’s embezzled the family’s public funds. I’ve lost count of everything else. If we’d enforced the family rules properly, it would be a miracle if the Third Young Master were still alive.”

“Now, now.”

“Since we’re on the subject, grab anyone in the family and ask them. To you, he’s your beloved little brother. To everyone else… Honestly, I can’t even say it.”

“Do you have something against my youngest brother? Why are you talking like that?”

“Because I’m frustrated. That’s why. The Third Young Master causes trouble, you clean it up, and then you give in to the Council of Elders’ demands to keep them from making things worse. They’re slowly stripping away your authority. Do you know what kind of rumor is going around these days?”

“What rumor?”

“Some people say the Third Young Master is part of the Elder faction. That he gets pocket money from the Council of Elders and deliberately causes trouble.”

Jin Wikyung’s eyelids twitched.

“That’s an outrage!”

“I’d actually prefer that to be true. If the Council of Elders slipped him even a few silver coins, he wouldn’t have to embezzle the family’s funds.”

“You…”

“I’ve said my piece. Fire me if you want.”

Groaning, Jin Wikyung let out a deep sigh.

“I’ve been thinking things can’t go on like this either.”

“Thinking is good. The problem is that you never act on it.”

“Even so, I should do everything I can this time.”

“Oh, my lord…”

“This will be the last time. I give you my word.”

Jin Wikyung’s expression turned serious. Wipeng asked skeptically,

“Do you really mean it?”

“He’s still a child, and his memory hasn’t fully returned. Besides… he became a completely different person overnight. You’ve noticed it too.”

“That’s true, but…”

Wipeng trailed off.

The Third Young Master had definitely changed. Whether his memory loss was real or a lie, the way he was behaving now gave them reason to hope.

Jin Wikyung thought for a moment, then spoke.

“Wipeng.”

“Yes.”

“Prepare an order in my name.”

“What sort of order?”

“Use a few suitable charges and order him into indefinite confinement in the training hall.”

“Ah.”

Wipeng slapped his forehead.

It was mostly for show, but under the circumstances, it was an excellent emergency measure. It would ease the pressure Jin Wikyung was bound to face at the upcoming family council meeting while keeping Jin Taekyung’s punishment relatively light.

And on top of that…

“It also fulfills the Third Young Master’s request. He was looking for somewhere to train.”

Wasn’t that three birds with one stone? Wipeng was genuinely impressed.

“As expected of you, my lord.”

“That’s how my family is. Oh, did I ever tell you? Taekyung was such a clever child. One day, when he was young…”

“…I’ll go write the order.”

“Therefore, for violating fourteen regulations and disrupting discipline within the family, the Third Young Master, Jin Taekyung, is hereby ordered to undergo indefinite confinement in the training hall.”

Was his name Wipeng? I listened silently to the unpleasant-looking bastard, then raised my hand.

“I have a question.”

“Go ahead.”

“What does ‘indefinite’ mean?”

Wipeng answered reluctantly.

“It means there is no set deadline.”

“Oh.”

I’d thought the game’s language system had malfunctioned. Fortunately, it meant exactly what I thought it meant.

Ha ha.

“Ha ha ha.”

“Ho ho ho.”

Laughter was contagious. The warriors who’d come with Wipeng started laughing along with me.

In that warm atmosphere, Wipeng read the final line.

“The convict, Jin Taekyung, shall submit to the bonds.”

“No.”

“…”

"…"

"I said no. Fuck."

The two men approaching with binding ropes looked at Wipeng as if to say, This isn't how it was supposed to go.

I ignored them and said what I had to say.

"I asked you to find me a room so I could practice. I didn't ask you to put me in prison."

Are these bastards completely insane?

"Now, Third Young Master. Calm down and listen to me."

"Listen, my ass. 'The training hall has everything you need for practice. The living conditions aren't bad either.' You're just going to spout that kind of nonsense."

Judging by Wipeng's expression, I'd hit the nail on the head. I drove the point home.

"You're the kind of bastards who'd tell someone to enjoy military service because soldiers got a pay raise. Forget it. I'm not going in. I'll practice by myself in my room or in the yard."

Honestly, when I thought about it in isolation, the training hall didn't sound so bad.

But the word indefinite stuck in my mind like a thorn. I urgently needed to learn martial arts and Level up. I couldn't spend forever in the training hall, craning my neck and waiting for someone to let me out.

I flopped onto the floor.

"Go ahead and gut me!"

"Third Young Master, that's enough. Please get up."

Wipeng scowled down at me.

"The Lesser Family Head made this decision entirely for your sake."

"Jin Wikyung—I mean, my brother?"

That brother-obsessed idiot had given this order?

At that moment, Wipeng's lips moved. A voice reached my ears at the same time, carrying a strange sensation unlike ordinary speech.

"This is Sound Transmission. Don't be alarmed. Just listen."

Sound Transmission. I remembered reading about it in martial arts novels. A kind of telepathy that only masters could use.

"You may not know this because you've lost your memory, but the Third Young Master is considered a serious troublemaker. A harsher punishment may be handed down soon, so the Lesser Family Head is taking action before that happens."

I'd worked hard all twenty-seven years of my life. How had I ended up facing an even harsher punishment?

As I lamented my fate, Wipeng's Sound Transmission continued in my ear.

"It may be called indefinite confinement, but do you really think the Lesser Family Head intends to bury you in the training hall for the rest of your life?"

I shook my head.

There's no way he'd do that.

Not unless he wanted the two of us locked up together in the training hall.

"I'll get you out within seven days and nights at the latest. How does that sound?"

There was fierce determination in Wipeng's eyes. If I refused this too, he looked ready to beat me and drag me there if he had to.

Fuck, are all the NPCs here thugs or what?

Hey, asshole. Are you really that good at fighting?

I raised my Qi Sense and checked Wipeng's Level.

"…"

He really is a thug.

A Level thug, at least.

He was probably every bit the human butcher Jin Wikyung was.

Wipeng's eyes widened as he asked,

"What will you do?"

Even as I trembled with fear, I held up three fingers.

"…You want me to get you out in three days?"

What kind of bastard is this?

Wipeng glared at me with that exact look, then finally sighed.

"Escort him."

#TrainingHall #ClosedDoorTraining #Negotiation #Successful.

Chapter 10

After walking for more than ten minutes, we arrived at a cliff that sealed off the rear of the Jin Family of Taiyuan. A massive cavern gaped open in its face, and one man stood before it.

“Hmm. So you’ve come.”

He had the build of a brown bear and spoke in a solemn tone.

Jin Wikyung.

I bowed awkwardly.

“Hello, hyung[46]… sir.”

Jin Wikyung made me uncomfortable. As if suddenly acquiring an NPC family wasn’t enough, he paid an absurd amount of attention to me.

Just look at him. He was trying desperately not to show it with everyone watching, but if you looked closely, his eyes were moist.

Is this guy seriously that sentimental?

He looked like he could make even a triad[47] boss back down, yet somehow every character in this game was completely bizarre.

“I can no longer overlook your conduct. As the Lesser Family Head and acting Family Head, I have ordered you into closed-door confinement. Do you have anything to say?”

Of course I do.

But this was all a staged performance. On the way to the training hall, Wipeng had explained what was really going on. There was a power struggle among the upper ranks of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, and Jin Wikyung was shielding me from it.

In other words, this forced confinement was all for show.

“The Young Master needed a place to train anyway, didn’t he? Just endure it for three days.”

Remembering Wipeng’s final words, I bowed my head and pretended to repent.

“I will gladly accept my punishment.”

The best thing about this play was how short my lines were.

Jin Wikyung delivered his final line with sorrow in his eyes.

“Confine the criminal to the training hall. The date of his release will be announced later.”

The moment he finished speaking, two warriors guarding the entrance to the training hall approached and grabbed me by both arms.

The play was over. Time to exit the stage.

I stood at the entrance to the training hall.

---

[46] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for his older brother or an older man he is close to.

[47] A triad is a Chinese organized-crime group.

I've had everything you need brought there. Little brother, don't overdo it.

With Jin Wikyung's Sound Transmission in my ear, I took my first step inside.

The training hall was, in a word, a cave. An artificial cave carved into the cliff, at that.

It was tall, spacious, and damp.

Splash. Splash.

I followed one of the training hall's warriors deeper inside. By the time I could no longer tell whether I was wearing leather shoes or wet mops, a massive iron gate appeared before us.

Wow…

My mouth fell open the moment I saw it. The gate filled the passage from edge to edge, making it look less like a door than a wall built to prevent anyone from entering or leaving.

The warrior guiding me raised his torch and shouted, "Open the gate!"

Grrrnnng—

The massive iron gate slowly opened its jaws. It wasn't some magic command like "Open Sesame." An NPC waiting nearby had simply pulled a protruding lever that operated the gate.

Even so, it was an overwhelming sight.

And the moment I saw what lay beyond—

"Whoa."

This time, I couldn't suppress the exclamation that escaped me.

When I first entered the training hall, I had imagined nothing more than a damp underground cave, but…

"What is all this?"

There was a broad bed with a fur blanket that lifted my spirits just by looking at it. In place of a damp, uneven stone floor, a smooth gray surface stretched across the chamber.

Cement… Obviously not. Limestone?

Aside from the chill in the air—and even taking that into account—it was far nicer than I had imagined.

This is supposed to be a punishment?

As I stared around in a daze, someone cleared his throat behind me. I turned to find the warrior who had guided me here.

"We've prepared everything you'll need. Then I'll be on my way."

Grrrnnng.

I watched the iron gate slowly close with another grinding sound, then suddenly remembered the Sound Transmission I had heard at the entrance to the training hall.

I've had everything you need brought there. Little brother, don't overdo it.

Ah, the heart of an NPC who cared for his little brother.

This unworthy user wept his eyes out.

It was something that happened all the time in the real world, too. High-ranking officials who had committed corruption showing up at the prosecutors' office in wheelchairs, or checking themselves into private hospital rooms to avoid investigation.

My circumstances were a little different, but the arrangement was much the same. Deeply moved, I surveyed my private suite in the training hall.

"So this is the life of a gold spoon."[48]

It wasn't only the graphics and artificial intelligence that were realistic. The game also carried the social message that, no matter how high you flew or how low you crawled, gold spoons[49] had it best.

Seriously, what would I have done without this character? His father was the Family Head, his eldest brother was the Lesser Family Head, and his second brother was a martial arts prodigy. No wonder he could spend every day loafing around pleasure houses without a care in the world.

Jin Taekyung, you bastard…

Now that I thought about it, wasn't he actually some great sage who had grasped the ways of the world at a young age?

Shuddering at the realistic God-Spoon[50] System, I walked around the training hall, which covered a little over a hundred pyeong.[51] Before long, I found the "necessities" the warrior had mentioned.

Food first.

The food was stored in two jars. When I looked inside, I found rice balls that gave off a strong medicinal scent.

---

[48] In Korean, "gold spoon" refers to someone born into wealth; "God-Spoon" plays on the expression to suggest an even more fortunate birth.

[49] In Korean, "gold spoon" refers to someone born into wealth; "God-Spoon" plays on the expression to suggest an even more fortunate birth.

[50] In Korean, "gold spoon" refers to someone born into wealth; "God-Spoon" plays on the expression to suggest an even more fortunate birth.

[51] A pyeong is a unit of area equal to 3.31 m^2 (35.6 ft^2). A little over a hundred pyeong is roughly 330 m^2 (3,600 ft^2).

SYSTEM

Item Window
Excellent Fasting Pill
Type: Pill
Grade: First Rate
Restriction: None
Description: A fasting pill made by crudely cramming in all kinds of beneficial medicinal ingredients. Restores vitality when consumed and grants additional effects with prolonged use.

"Oh, so these are the famous fasting pills?"

I had seen them plenty of times in martial arts novels. They were light, compact, easy to carry, and apparently provided nutritional supplementation, too.

The other jar was packed with fasting pills too.

I should put these in my inventory for now.

I grabbed the two jars and muttered, "Acquire items."

Anyone watching would have fallen over in shock. The two perfectly ordinary jars vanished as if they had evaporated.

I gazed fondly at them inside my inventory.

That takes care of food.

The second necessity I found was water. Since the training hall was, after all, a cave, a cold underground spring in one corner took care of my drinking water.

Then came the third and final necessity.

"Hmm."

A weapons rack held several weapons in a neat row. Naturally, the first thing I picked up was a sturdy-looking wooden spear.

Item appraisal.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Item Window
Training Wooden Spear
Type: Weapon
Grade: Third Rate
Restriction: None
Description: Made for beginners.

"Oh."

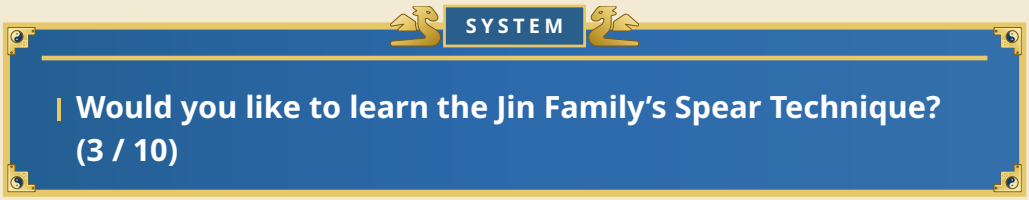
A wooden training spear made for beginners. It was exactly what I needed right now.

If I had just one more thing, everything would be perfect.

“Open inventory.”

Grinning, I took a martial arts manual titled Jin Family’s Spear Technique out of my inventory.

Ding.



“Obviously.”

The System was great.

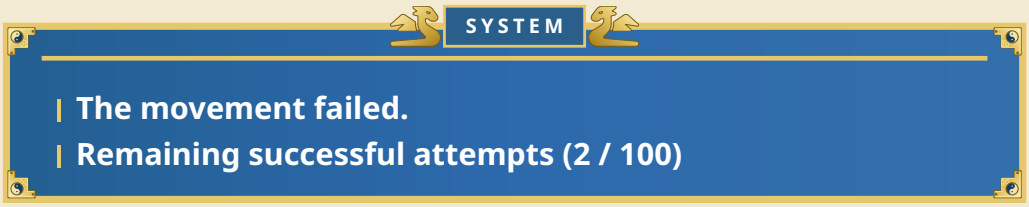
Sometimes, it was even adorable.

Yesterday, while learning the Jin Family’s Manoeuvre Technique, I had discovered something for the first time.

Ding wasn’t the System’s only notification sound.

I had also discovered just how much I hated the other one.

Beep!



The failure message. The System window that appeared without fail whenever I botched a movement.

I had no idea how many times I had seen it by now.

I stared at the Training Wooden Spear in my hand.

I was thinking about this all wrong.

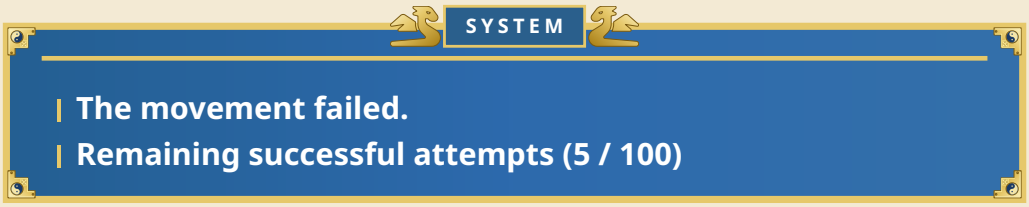
Maybe because it was made of wood, the spear was light. Whether I thrust or swung it, it moved fast.

That was the problem.

It’s too light to control.

The slightest adjustment was difficult, so I kept slipping up. There was no chance this damn nitpicky System would overlook even the tiniest mistake.

Beep.



“Ah, fuck.”

In the end, I tossed the Training Wooden Spear aside and pulled the Sharp Spear from my inventory. Its length and shaft thickness were roughly the same as the spear I had used in the real world.

So why hadn’t I taken it out from the start?

“It’s fucking heavy. Seriously.”

The entire thing was solid steel, so its weight was no joke. By feel alone, the monster had to weigh nearly fifty kilograms.[52]

My Stamina wouldn’t hold out if I swung something like this for hours.

My current realm was Second Rate. Even with the System’s help, there was no way I could whirl around more than half a sack of rice like a pinwheel.

It’s not like the strength of a tiger is suddenly going to well up inside me.

That was when it hit me.

“…Huh?”

What had I just said?

The strength of a tiger?

“I do have it.”

This was a game. It had a System and stats.

And it had internal energy.

Ten years of internal energy that I could draw out through a cultivation technique!

It was embarrassing that I had forgotten about it even for a moment.

“I should’ve tried using that…”

They say you only know what something is like once you’ve experienced it. Was it any wonder an F-rank Hunter was F-rank? With barely any mana to speak of, I made do with my bare body. Even among Hunters, I was treated like a half-baked amateur.

At least that solves one problem.

I laughed in disbelief and picked up the spear. Then, slowly and carefully, I began drawing out my internal energy.

[52] Fifty kilograms is about 110 lb.

The formula of the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique, imprinted in my mind by the System, rapidly played through my thoughts, guiding my internal energy along its prescribed path.

A prickling sensation ran through me.

The response was immediate.

The ten years of internal energy coiled in my dantian spread throughout my body. Because this was a game and I was a martial artist, I could feel that energy reaching every part of me.

This is…

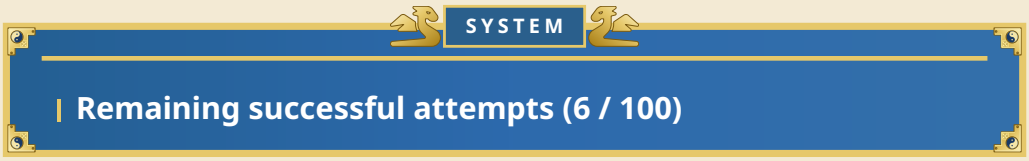
Strength overflowed through my entire body. My vastly improved physical abilities and senses once again filled me with exhilaration after my life as an F-rank Hunter.

I can change this much?

I gripped the spear and performed the Jin Family's Spear Technique. The fifty-kilogram[53] iron spear no longer felt heavy. Following my will, it thrust and slashed through the air.

Before long—

Ding.



At last, the notification I had been waiting for began to ring.

Jin Wikyung spoke with concern written across his face.

"He's doing well, isn't he?"

"He should be, if he has any sense of shame."

"He still hasn't fully recovered… He'll be all right, won't he?"

"Anyone who didn't know better would think the Third Young Master was on death's door. A little spit would fix him right up."

"No. You only say that because you don't know how frail the youngest was as a child."

Wipeng stared at him in disbelief.

"The elixirs and tonics that have gone into the Third Young Master could fill an entire room. And have you already forgotten the Hundred-Year-Old Snow Ginseng theft last year?"

[53] Fifty kilograms is about 110 lb.

“Ahem. That was…”

“The Medicine King Hall Master was so furious that he ran around threatening to cut open the Third Young Master’s stomach. To be honest, even while I was restraining him, I found myself thinking that cutting him open would count as self-defense.”

Jin Wikyung quietly looked away.

The matter had eventually been settled with compensation paid from Jin Wikyung’s personal fortune, but the Medicine King Hall Master’s fury at the time had been extraordinary.

“He swallowed that much elixir. Whatever else may be true, he probably won’t suffer from minor ailments until the day he dies.”

“It still isn’t enough. Can’t you tell just by looking at him? Every time I see the youngest, I feel sorry for him. He looks like a skeleton with a few scraps of flesh stuck to it. He’s so feeble and weak every morning.”

“No strength?”

Wipeng suddenly remembered a rumor he had once heard.

Among the courtesans of Taiyuan’s red-light district, Jin Taekyung was supposedly known as the Night King.

Just how impressive is he?

It seemed all that medicine had worked after all. Without realizing it, Wipeng raised his forearm and tried to imagine the size.

“What are you doing?”

“Ah, nothing.”

Jin Wikyung sighed as he looked over the mountain of documents piled before him.

“Between the youngest and everything happening inside and outside the family, there’s no end to my worries. Especially… the fact that ‘they’ have contacted us bothers me.”

“You mean the Mount Heng Sword Sect.”

The Mount Heng Sword Sect.

The weight of that name was anything but light.

Ever since an undefeated wandering martial artist hung up its signboard decades ago, the sect had grown at a terrifying pace. By now, it was powerful enough to threaten the Jin Family of Taiyuan’s position.

“What do they intend?”

“I’ve sent my subordinates to investigate.”

Jin Wikyung toyed with the letter from the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

Why were they coming? What did they want?

One question led to another, until he arrived at a single conclusion.

“Notify every branch in Shanxi Province. Whatever the Mount Heng Sword Sect’s purpose may be, tell them to prepare for every possibility.”

This was Murim.

Only those who were prepared would survive to see tomorrow.

Chapter 11

Whoosh. Fwoom—

The spearhead pierced dozens of glittering points in the air one after another.

Each time I completed a form, the red tassel hanging beneath the spearhead whipped around. It wasn't just for show. It was meant to distract the enemy.

Bang!

Again, the sound of wind being torn apart rang out. It was the seventh and final form of the Jin Family's Spear Technique: the Sky-Piercing Strike.

And this Sky-Piercing Strike was more precise and powerful than the ninety-nine I had successfully performed before it.

That's it.

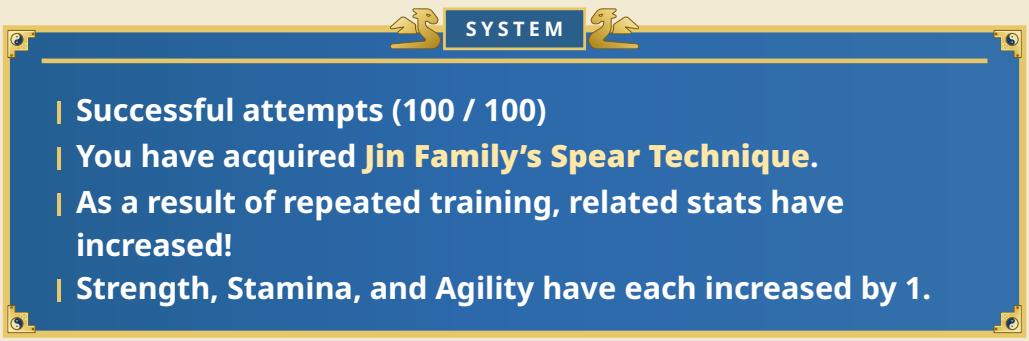
My fingertips tingled. Each of the seven forms of the Jin Family's Spear Technique was destructive enough on its own, but their true power emerged when they flowed together.

If I compared it to a car race, the first form started the engine, while the final Sky-Piercing Strike crossed the finish line.

"Whew."

I exhaled a hot breath and brought the spear upright.

Ding.



"Oh. My stats went up."

So this was another way to raise my stats. Intrigued, I opened my Status Window.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Status Window
Lv. 11 Jin Taekyung
Occupation: Second Rate Martial Artist
Fame: 10
Titles: 3 (Title effects active)
| Child of a Prestigious Family: All stats +5, Fame +50
| Shame of the Family: All stats –5, Fame –50
| Novice Trainee: Training speed +10%
Strength: 41
Stamina: 51
Agility: 51
Intelligence: 10
Charm: 10
Internal Energy: 10 years
Remaining Points: 0

At this point…

“What a fine second-rate nobody.”

Still, it was better than reality. Here, I could keep climbing. I didn’t feel the limits I’d run up against every day since awakening as an F-rank, or the glass ceiling society had placed over me.

“So what? I can’t even log out whenever I want.”

I sighed and sank to the floor. After training nonstop for several hours, my body felt as heavy as waterlogged cotton.

“Man, I’m exhausted.”

Ding.

SYSTEM

| You feel fatigued and hungry. Consume food to restore your physical condition.

Yeah. I figured as much.

“Fatigue and hunger…”

There was only one answer: rest. Eat well and sleep well. But I couldn’t afford to lounge around scratching my belly.

If only I had some kind of recovery item…

“Oh, right. The fasting pills.”

I took a fasting pill from my Inventory. It gave off a strange smell, but a professional Hunter couldn't afford to be picky about whether his rice was hot or cold.

I opened my mouth wide and took a huge bite.

Then I thought,

Should I just spit it out?

It wasn't merely tasteless. It was so vile that my tongue screamed for mercy and my stomach put up a no-entry sign.

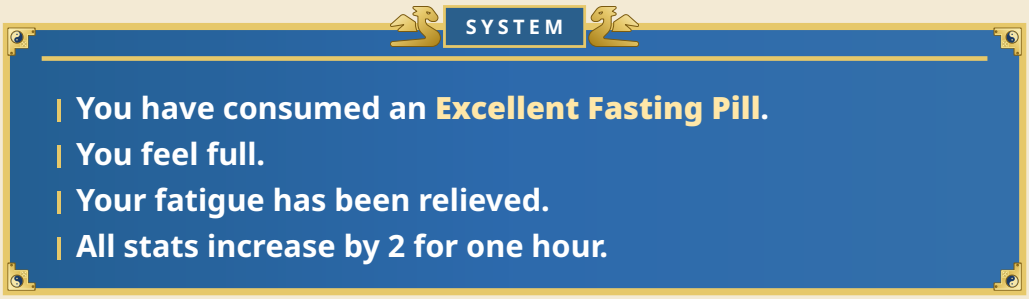
But humans could sometimes summon superhuman willpower. I squeezed my eyes shut, chewed the entire fasting pill, and forced it down.

Gulp.

"Uuugh. I ate it. I actually ate it."

If the System notification hadn't sounded the next moment, I probably would have kept rolling around on the floor for quite a while.

Ding.



"What?"

I hurriedly opened my Status Window. Every stat except Internal Energy had increased by 2. On top of that, my fatigue and hunger were both gone.

Feeling completely refreshed and comfortably full, I muttered,

"This is totally broken."

Who would have thought such a foul-tasting lump of grain could have such incredible effects?

Wait a second.

"Do the effects stack?"

Just one had raised my stats by a total of ten points. What if I ate two? Three? No, ten?

Even if that were goblin shit, I'd eat it.

Though goblin shit might actually taste better... Still, it was definitely worth trying.

I can do this. I can do this. Jin Taekyung.

With trembling hands, I picked up a second fasting pill.

A short while later—

SYSTEM

You have consumed an Excellent Fasting Pill.
The effects do not stack.
You feel excessively full.
Your movements will be slowed for one hour due to Overeating!

As the System notification sounded, I dropped to my knees.

“Bleaaargh!”

I could only resume training after my bloated stomach finally went down. I had three days to stay in the training hall. I needed to grow as strong as possible before leaving.

“Hah!”

With a short shout, the spearhead traced a heavy arc.

Keep my stance low, my feet heavy, and my spear fast.

The Jin Family’s Spear Technique was aggressive. It advanced relentlessly, keeping constant pressure on the enemy. Its movements were simple but lethal.

Didn’t it originate in the military?

I didn’t know the details of the game’s setting, but this didn’t seem like a martial art an ordinary foot soldier would learn.

It was a first-rate martial art, after all, and required considerable physical ability to perform. Maybe it had been practiced by elite soldiers or commanders.

Compared with what I learned at the Hunter training camp, it’s like heaven and earth.

Just then, my feet got tangled—whether from exhaustion or distraction, I couldn’t tell. Once my footwork fell apart, my hands followed. The spearhead, brimming with power, lost its momentum and sliced weakly through the air.

Whoosh—

The System sounded at the same time.

SYSTEM

Jin Family’s Spear Technique Mastery increased by 1. (6 / 100)

“Only 1?”

My Mastery increased each time I performed the martial art from beginning to end. The amount depended on the System's evaluation, and this time I'd only gained 1 because my feet kept getting tangled.

"Why am I getting worse the more I do this?"

This was the third time I'd performed the Jin Family's Spear Technique since acquiring it, and each attempt had been worse than the last. The first had earned me 3 Mastery. The second, 2. Now the third had given me 1.

"Three, two, one. What is this, a countdown?"

At this rate, the fourth attempt wouldn't give me any Mastery at all. I sighed and gripped the spear again. My breath was growing ragged, but I performed the Jin Family's Spear Technique once more.

Around the fourth form, I lost my balance and fell.

Ding.

SYSTEM

You did not gain Mastery for Jin Family's Spear Technique. (6 / 100)

"This is driving me insane."

I stayed flat on my back and stared at the stalactites hanging from the training hall's ceiling.

My feet kept getting tangled. I was performing the technique exactly as I had learned it, so why was this happening? Nothing like this had happened when I acquired it.

"What's the problem?"

Something kept catching and throwing me off. I had to figure out what it was.

I got back up like a roly-poly and performed the Jin Family's Spear Technique again. This time, I fell after only the third form.

SYSTEM

You did not gain Mastery for Jin Family's Spear Technique. (6 / 100)

When I focused on my feet instead of the spear, the problem began to reveal itself.

Good. One more time.

SYSTEM

You did not gain Mastery for Jin Family's Spear Technique. (6 / 100)

Now I understood. But…

"Why is the Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique showing up here?"

I had struggled when I first learned it. I'd spent half a day practicing nothing but footwork. But had I practiced it enough to unconsciously mix it into my spear technique?

No.

By that logic, I'd be mixing in every movement I've learned over the past seven years.

I had learned spear fighting before, too. It was one of the basics taught at the Hunter training camp. Since it was distributed to F-ranks who couldn't use mana, we called it shitty spear fighting among ourselves.

Compared with that, the Jin Family's Spear Technique was good enough for intermediate Hunters.

"Should I give it a try?"

No matter how hard I racked my brain, all I'd get was a bald spot. The only way to understand a technique was to try it with my whole body.

I slowly began performing the Jin Family's Spear Technique. At the same time, I used the Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique with my lower body.

The movements feel unnatural.

They kept falling out of sync. But this was different. Before, it had felt like a mass of tangled threads. Now it felt like two gears missing each other by the slightest fraction.

How many times did I try?

Whoosh—Bang!

It was a simple thrust. For a moment, I wondered if I had somehow performed all the way through the seventh and final form without realizing it, but it was only one movement from the fifth form.

"What was that?"

A shiver ran down my spine. For a single instant, the footwork and spear technique had meshed perfectly. The spear in my hand quivered.

SYSTEM

You did not gain Mastery for Jin Family's Spear Technique. (6 / 100)

I shoved the System notification into a corner of my mind and tightened my grip on the spear. Recalling the sensation from a moment ago, I stepped forward.

And tried again.

Swish—Whoosh—

This is it.

I felt it the instant I thrust the spear.

The footwork and spear technique—the two gears meshed perfectly.

An indescribable thrill swept over me as I turned those two gears again and again. Every step I took was fast and precise. Every thrust, slash, and sweep of the spear was fast, precise, and powerful.

My dantian grew hot. My internal energy became a ball of fire and seeped into the spear.

I had to unleash it.

Now!

"Hah!"

The Sky-Piercing Strike—the final blow of the Jin Family's Spear Technique, said to pierce the heavens—shot forward.

A deep, muffled boom erupted through the cavern.

Boom!

Dust billowed, and fragments of stone flew in every direction. The spear embedded in the training hall's wall trembled. A massive hole had formed around the spearhead, which had sunk so deep that it was no longer visible.

A hole?

No. This was a crater.

The sight took my breath away.

"Huff, huff…"

The exhilaration sent a shiver down my spine.

Fuck, that was me. I did that!

I had unleashed that insane strike—the kind that could take down a Troll in one blow.

Me!

I staggered.

Huh?

I needed to shout at the top of my lungs and take a picture as proof. I needed to wipe the smirk off Jinho hyung's[54] face for calling me Rice Weevil.

Oh, right. I'm in a game.

[54] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older male friend.

My vision blurred. The strength drained from my body. An unbearable wave of drowsiness washed over me.

I'm sleepy.

I stopped thinking and surrendered to instinct. A familiar sound faded into the distance.

Ding. Ding. Ding.

.

.

.

SYSTEM

All internal energy has been depleted.
You feel extreme fatigue.
You have completed the achievement Unity of Self and Object. A reward will be granted!
You have realized the connection between martial arts on your own. As a reward, the realms of your martial arts will rise substantially.
The realm of Jin Family's Cultivation Technique...
The realm of Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique...
The realm of Jin Family's Spear Technique...
Level up!
Level up!

SYSTEM

Sleep mode has ended.

I opened my eyes. The cave ceiling came into view, stalactites hanging overhead.

The training hall.

How long had I been unconscious? Half a day? A full day?

I didn't know. What mattered was that I was still inside the game and had gotten plenty of rest.

I feel great, too.

My body felt strangely good. Come to think of it, I vaguely remembered hearing System notifications just before I passed out.

"Open Message Window."

The next moment, unread messages filled my vision. By the time I finished reading them and sorting through my thoughts, more than ten minutes had passed.

I muttered a brief reaction.

“I hit the jackpot.”

The Jin Family’s Manoeuvre Technique and Spear Technique had both risen to the Third Stage—a jump of two whole stages. The Jin Family’s Cultivation Technique had reached the Second Stage.

And on top of that…

“I went up two Levels?”

I was happy, but also bewildered. I hadn’t seriously expected to Level up in the training hall.

“Don’t you usually Level up by completing Quests or killing monsters?”

Apparently, learning martial arts and gaining insight like this could also make me Level up. Was it because this was a martial-arts game? I really couldn’t predict anything here.

“No wonder I feel so light.”

The Level Ups must have restored my condition. Even the bruises and lingering aches I’d had before leveling up were completely gone.

“Open Status Window.”

The Status Window had changed too. Reaching Level 13 had given me twenty remaining points, and my training had slightly increased my Strength, Stamina, and Agility.

“Level 13…”

The Quest completion requirements were reaching the first-rate realm, Level 30, and 500 Fame.

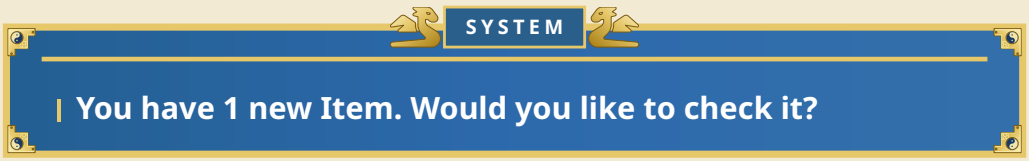
I wasn’t progressing quickly, but I was steadily leveling up through training alone. That meant I was cruising along.

Once I get out of the training hall, I can raise the sails and really take off.

I smiled contentedly and distributed my points.

Now all that remained was to check the reward I’d received for completing the Unity of Self and Object achievement.

“Open Inventory.”



Yeah. Hand it over.

Chapter 12

Was it about ten years ago? Back when I was in high school, several dozen ordinary people entered a Gate with government approval.

China, I think.

A Gate was the kind of place where even Hunters could end up dead the moment they let their guard down, yet they were sending ordinary people inside? It really was the Miracle Continent.

On the day of the expedition ceremony when this insane stunt took place, their identities were revealed during an interview with the overseas press.

The Chinese Martial Arts Alliance.

In other words, they were modern-day Murim martial artists. Made up entirely of non-awakened people, they stood before hundreds of cameras with their robes fluttering and solemnly declared:

Today, Zhonghua's[55] thousand-year martial lineage will be reborn in all its glory.

It certainly was glorious. Less than half a day later, their faces were plastered across the front pages of news outlets everywhere.

> Chinese Martial Arts Alliance: Twenty-Five Members Massacred in an F-Rank Gate. More Than Half Confirmed Dead from Goblin Poison Needles…

I didn't know how impressive a thousand-year martial lineage was supposed to be, but the incident humiliated China, and the Chinese Martial Arts Alliance was left with nothing but its signboard.

They got completely wrecked.

Some of the continent's most renowned martial artists were killed by goblin poison needles, while a tai chi master got beaten senseless by a mixed martial arts fighter.

That was reality. I had always thought the scenes in novels and movies were fiction dressed up by the media and wrapped in a veil of mystery.

But…

Now, I wasn't so sure. The movements Hyuk Mujin had shown me were real.

As I learned martial arts myself, my doubts gradually hardened into certainty. There was nothing weak or floppy about the martial arts here, unlike the ones in reality.

The martial arts of this world were systematic and incorporated countless movements. Real-world martial arts and boxing couldn't even compare.

[55] Zhonghua is a Chinese term for China and its people, often used to express national identity.

How is this possible? Is it simply because this is a game?

Ssshh. Hooouu.

As I breathed, I sensed the energy outside my body and drew it in.

Compared to the ten years of internal energy rotating through my acupoints, it was nothing but a speck of dust—small and weak. But I was in no position to complain about even that.

One circuit. Two…

I continued circulating my qi according to the formula of the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique. It came naturally, as if I had been practicing it since childhood.

Gyeonjeong, Amun, Bongan, Ip-dong…

Names of acupoints I had never heard of in all my twenty-seven years surfaced and vanished in my mind. Hundreds of them had been engraved into my memory like that. Just how far did the System's capabilities extend?

Now that I think about it, it's downright bizarre.

The human brain wasn't a computer. Yet the System had entered the information into my mind as if it were copying and pasting a file. The same was true of the other martial arts.

Was something like this really possible just because this was a game?

No. Focus on circulating qi for now.

I steadied my breathing and guided my internal energy once more. Only after circulating all ten years of internal energy through twelve complete circuits according to the formula of the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique did I open my eyes.

Ding.

SYSTEM

| You have completed Circulating Qi.
| Jin Family's Cultivation Technique Mastery has increased slightly.
| A small amount of turbid qi has been expelled.

"Whew."

The Third Stage of the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique was within reach. I didn't know whether it was because I had started from the very bottom, but my progress felt fairly fast.

Or it could be thanks to the Item.

I looked at the ring on my right middle finger.

It was the Item I had received as a Reward for completing the Unity of Self and Object achievement.

The Clear-Heart Pill.[56] It looked different from the one I knew, but its effects were similar. Ever since I put it on, it had taken me less time to settle into circulating qi, and the Mastery I gained had increased.

It's good, but…

I couldn't shake the uneasy feeling. I could chalk Logout up to some technical wizardry by engineers whose work I couldn't begin to understand. But the martial arts formulas and this ring—the Clear-Heart Pill—made me uncomfortable in a way I couldn't quite explain.

Was I supposed to call it the feeling of something being forcibly injected into me?

They might help me survive, but that didn't make it a pleasant experience. This game was a piece of shit in more ways than one.

"What the hell is Seong Jinho doing? Some goshiwon[57] manager he is."

If he'd gotten up, he should have woken me so we could at least have a bowl of hangover soup. And yet, the fact that nothing had changed even now meant…

No. That's not it.

At the very least, I was still alive in the real world. That was why I could still exist in this game as a player.

I was alive in reality and in the game. And I would make it out alive, no matter what. I had too much to live for and too many burdens on my shoulders to die a pointless death here.

I can't die here.

I clenched my teeth and sat cross-legged. Perhaps it was the Clear-Heart Pill's effect, but my mind gradually settled and my breathing steadied.

---

[56] A cheongsimhwan is a traditional Korean herbal pill used to calm the nerves.

[57] A goshiwon is an inexpensive boarding house made up of tiny private rooms, often rented by students preparing for exams.

As the internal energy in my dantian began to stir, I started yet another session of circulating qi.

It was my second day in the training hall.

I devoted myself to training without rest. I practiced the Spear Technique and Manoeuvre Technique like a madman, and whenever I completely exhausted my internal energy, I immediately began circulating qi.

Ding.

SYSTEM

The realm of Jin Family's Cultivation Technique has risen to the Third Stage.

Your internal energy has become purer, allowing you to circulate qi more efficiently.

The Third Stage of the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique. My progress had been slower than with the other two, but it wasn't bad.

No, I was trying to convince myself it wasn't bad.

This is the only way I can hold myself together.

At least training in martial arts let me drive away the dark thoughts. That was something to be grateful for.

Swish. Ssshk.

I performed the forms of the Jin Family's Spear Technique one after another. Ever since I realized its connection to the Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique, my attacks had grown sharper and more precise, sweeping through the empty space before me.

In that empty space, I pictured someone.

Hyuk Mujin.

The first genuine martial artist I had met in this game. A Level 20 powerhouse who had toyed with me like a child.

Could I beat that bastard as I am now?

The instant the question crossed my mind—

Ding.

SYSTEM

A new function, Training Mode, has been activated.
You can summon illusions of opponents you have fought. However, opponents whose Level differs from the user's by ten or more cannot be summoned.
Currently summonable opponents: Lv. 20 Hyuk Mujin, Lv. 10 Heavenly Axe

"Huh?"

Training Mode? I could summon illusions of opponents I had fought before?

After a brief hesitation, I decided to test the new function.

"Summon Hyuk Mujin."

SYSTEM

Summoning Lv. 20 Hyuk Mujin.

The System notification had barely appeared when a transparent figure sprang into existence. He wore the navy martial uniform of the Jin Family of Taiyuan and had Hyuk Mujin's distinctive caterpillar eyebrows. Standing there with his eyes closed, the figure looked exactly like him.

"Holy shit, it's real."

I cautiously approached and touched Hyuk Mujin's body. Perhaps because he was an illusion, my hand passed straight through him.

Good. That passes the safety test.

SYSTEM

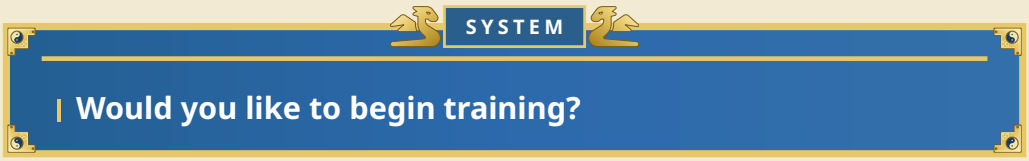
You can partially alter the summoned target's abilities.

"Start him at about half of Hyuk Mujin's strength."

SYSTEM

Entering the data for Lv. 20 Hyuk Mujin. The illusion can use 50% of the original's abilities.

At the same time, Hyuk Mujin's illusion opened his eyes. Maybe it had copied his personality as well as his abilities, because he stared at me with the same insolent look.



“Of course!”

Ding.

The System notification was the starting signal. I charged like lightning and thrust my spear. Even though I was fighting an illusion, I poured out my internal energy without holding back.

First form.

It began with a thrust as I advanced, followed by a twist of the spear shaft. If the enemy failed to evade that first attack, the fight was over.

Ssshwip—

But Hyuk Mujin slipped away like a loach. The next movement immediately became pointless.

Let’s see if you can dodge this too.

I continued unleashing the Spear Technique. The wind screamed as it was torn apart, but Hyuk Mujin dodged every attack.

For an instant, it seemed a sneer crossed his opaque face.

How can you fight so stupidly? A martial artist ought to use martial arts.

Those were the words he had thrown at me while toying with me last time. He was only an illusion I had created, but…

Damn, that pisses me off.

If you’re so confident, stop dodging and come at me.

Hyuk Mujin picked up on my thought and rushed at me in a smooth glide. But this was a fight between a spear and a fist. If I let him land that attack, it would mean I had spent the last seven years digging holes for nothing.

“Where do you think you’re going!”

Whoom—

I swung the spear shaft. If he had been real rather than an illusion, it would have landed with a solid thwack. Even if he dodged it, he would fail to close the distance.

Let’s see how far you can dodge.

I launched into the second form. Faced with the torrent of attacks, Hyuk Mujin didn’t dare approach and retreated step by step.

Combat had a flow. I had seized that flow, and Hyuk Mujin was being swept along by it. As I watched him roll across the ground with an exhausted expression, one thought came to mind.

He’s weak.

I could see his movements. The Hyuk Mujin projected here was a fist fighter. By watching his feet, I could tell how he would move and predict what he would do next.

His fists couldn't reach me.

Ssshk-swish-swish!

In a single instant, I thrust three times in succession. It was an attack Jin Taekyung the F-rank Hunter could never have performed.

But Jin Taekyung the Murim martial artist could do it by drawing on his internal energy.

"Kraaagh!"

Hyuk Mujin seemed to scream as the spear pierced his chest.

Without hesitation, I drove it deeper and twisted. The spearhead crushed his breastbone and split his heart. Hyuk Mujin collapsed, his form slowly fading away.

"Ah. This is way too easy."

The fight was over in less than five seconds.

I had held the advantage the entire time, and then it had ended anticlimactically.

Was half strength too weak?

I fell into thought while recovering the internal energy I had depleted by circulating qi.

Hyuk Mujin was Level 20 and a martial artist who had trained in martial arts for at least several years. There was no way he could be this weak.

All right. Again.

I stood with the spear in my hand and closed my eyes, picturing a new Hyuk Mujin.

One hundred eighty centimeters[58] tall. Lean muscles and insolent eyes. I gave him the movements I had seen back then.

When I opened my eyes, an illusion stood before me exactly as I had imagined.

But I wasn't finished yet. Hyuk Mujin needed to be stronger.

Your physical abilities are better than mine.

After I fed in a few more conditions, Hyuk Mujin's illusion smiled pleasantly. He had become much faster and gained stamina that would never run out.

"Yeah. Now you're worth fighting."

Those words were the starting signal.

As Hyuk Mujin charged at me like a streak of light, I thrust my spear.

Ssshk-swish!

[58] One hundred eighty centimeters is about 5 ft 11 in.

Vroooom. Boom!

The spearhead tore through the air. The air burst with the droning of a swarm of bees, whipping up a gust of wind.

It was the ultimate final form of the Jin Family's Spear Technique.

Sky-Piercing Strike.

"Kheugh…"

Hyuk Mujin's illusion looked down at the gaping hole in his chest. Disbelief filled his eyes. Then his knees buckled, and the illusion scattered.

"This isn't right."

As I heard the message announcing that my Mastery of the Jin Family's Spear Technique had increased, I scratched my head.

Why am I still winning?

Had the System made a mistake, or…

Did I just get stronger?

I brushed the thought away as soon as it came to me. That couldn't be it. I wasn't some peerless genius. I had only learned a couple of martial arts.

This isn't going to be much use at this rate.

The whole point was to simulate what would happen if I fought someone strong. What good was it if I kept winning?

If I at least knew which martial arts Hyuk Mujin had learned, I could draw out their power. But wait.

"There's an easier way."

The Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique and the Jin Family's Spear Technique.

What if I gave both of them to the Level 20 Hyuk Mujin?

Seeing them used against me might even let me identify their strengths and weaknesses from an outside perspective.

Yeah. That would be better.

"You think so too, right?"

Hyuk Mujin's illusion had reappeared at some point. It grinned and nodded.

"Then let's fight again."

I raised my spear diagonally and stepped forward with my left foot. Like my reflection in a mirror, the illusion assumed the exact same stance.

"You'll regret this."

"Regret, my ass."

Now I was even talking to an illusion. If anyone saw me, there would be no denying I was a lunatic.

"Crazy bastard."

…It was my own imagination, but it still pissed me off.

“You’re dead.”
Without hesitation, I pointed my spear at him.
Same weapon. Same martial arts.
This looked like it was going to be an interesting fight.
“Interesting? You really are a lunatic.”
Yeah. Fair point.
If I could find this fun in a situation like mine, I had to be pretty damn crazy too.

Chapter 13

The five horses galloped hard. They crossed mountains, fields, and rivers, finally reaching their destination around noon.

“Where have you come from?”

At the tension in the Jin Family of Taiyuan gate guard’s voice, the young man in the lead smiled. His lips curled crookedly, unable to hide the hostility behind them.

“Mount Heng.”

Fifteen minutes later, Jin Wikyung summoned the family’s senior members.

Hyuk Mujin was endlessly versatile. All I had to do was picture him in my mind. Spear, sword, saber, bow… Sometimes I won, and sometimes I lost, but one thing was certain.

“I’ve got the hang of it now.”

The martial arts had become second nature. At first, I had focused on executing them from beginning to end, one form after another. But things were different now.

Forms changed depending on the situation. Martial arts didn’t have to consist of one form flowing into the next in a fixed order. I had reached the point where I could skip the prescribed sequence and link the forms together.

Like this.

Whoooosh!

By the time I heard the wind, it was already too late. Hyuk Mujin, his abdomen pierced through, let out a rueful sigh.

“You’re improving quickly.”

“I spent seven years doing nothing but using a spear, you bastard.”

I closed my eyes. When I opened them again, the empty training hall came into view. As if celebrating my victory, the System notification rang out.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Jin Family's Spear Technique has risen to the Fourth Stage!
Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique has risen to the Fourth Stage!
The forms have become more refined, and their destructive power has increased.
Level up!

"So I'm Level 14 now?"

I had gained three Levels in three days.

That was a steep rise for someone who had spent those three days holed up in the training hall.

On top of that, the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique had reached the Third Stage, while the Manoeuvre Technique and Spear Technique had reached the Fourth Stage.

"Open Status Window."

After distributing my remaining points, my nose prickled with emotion.

SYSTEM

Status Window
Lv. 14 Jin Taekyung
Occupation: Second Rate Martial Artist
Fame: 10
Titles: 3 (Title effects active)
Scion of a Prestigious Family: All stats +5, Fame +50
Shame of the Family: All stats –5, Fame –50
Novice Trainee: Training speed +10%
Strength: 51
Stamina: 61
Agility: 61
Intelligence: 10
Charm: 10
Internal Energy: 10 years
Remaining Points: 0

"Beautiful. Just beautiful."

Look at those perfectly balanced stats.

These were stats of combat, by combat, and for combat.

And that's not even counting the martial arts.

I wasn't the same person I had been before. Hyuk Mujin? I was confident I could beat him now.

The F-rank Hunter Jin Taekyung, who hadn't known the first thing about martial arts, was dead. I was now a Murim martial artist who had learned a Peak cultivation technique and two first-rate martial arts.

It starts today.

Everything was ready. Once I left the training hall today, I would gather the things I had in mind and leave the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

I might even be able to get Jin Wikyung's help.

Just dealing with idiot bandits like the Heavenly Axe would let me reach my target quickly. Two days at most. After that, I could return to the warm embrace of my family.

Mom. Hayeon. I miss you.

My eyes were just beginning to redden when—

Grrrrrr—

"O-oh! Ohhh!"

This was the moment I had been waiting for. The iron door blocking the entrance to the training hall was opening. That ugly, heavy chunk of metal looked as beautiful as the gates of heaven.

"Finally! I'm getting out!"

My face alight with joy, I ran toward the entrance to heaven.

The angel who would free me from this place appeared from behind the door.

"Third Young Master. It's been three days."

He wasn't exactly a welcome sight, but I was too happy to care.

"You came to let me out, right? Huh? You did, right?"

Wipeng, an angel who resembled a desert fox, answered in a strangely qualified tone.

"Yes. For now."

"…What?"

"You will be leaving. But there's somewhere we need to stop by first."

"Somewhere we need to stop by?"

A chill ran down my spine. My survival instincts kicked in.

"Where are we going?"

"The main assembly hall. The Lesser Family Head is waiting there as well. And…"

Wipeng added,

"Senior members of our family and an envoy from the Mount Heng Sword Sect have also arrived."

"The Mount Heng Sword Sect? Why the hell are they here?"

Wolhwa had told me at Honghwaru that the Jin Family of Taiyuan and the Mount Heng Sword Sect were sworn enemies. So why were those bastards here?

Things are going wrong.

This was ominous. Very ominous. I had to find some way out of this.

“Then could I stop by my residence and change clothes first?”

“No.”

“It seems like an important occasion, and I can’t show up smelling like this…”

“Are you thinking of running away?”

He looked like a desert fox, but his instincts put a meerkat to shame. Before I could say anything, Wipeng’s hand pressed down hard on my shoulder.

“Third Young Master. From now on, answer my questions truthfully. Understood?”

His voice was dry, and his eyes were cold. The aura coming from him left me unable to speak. All I could do was nod.

Jin Taekyung.

The three-syllable name flashed through my mind.

There was no doubt about it. This bastard was responsible. He had dumped a load of shit without me even knowing.

And then…

“Is it true that you tried to violate a woman of the Mount Heng Sword Sect?”

That shit was far bigger than I could have imagined.

As I followed Wipeng toward the main assembly hall, my mind went completely blank.

Attempted sexual assault?

Even if it had only been an attempt, it was a sex crime so vile that beating the culprit to death wouldn’t have been enough.

I remembered how I had always said that, as a human being and an older brother with a younger sister, sex offenders should be executed.

That crazy son of a bitch.

My palms were slick with cold sweat. I said it again, no longer knowing how many times I had repeated myself.

“I really wasn’t the one. Please believe me.”

Without turning around, Wipeng replied,

“Has your memory returned?”

“No, that’s not what I mean. I’m telling you, it really wasn’t me. Do I look like the kind of guy who’d do that? The kind of guy who’d go around committing trash like that?”

"Yes."

No, fuck.

He answered without even taking a breath.

"Look, then let me stop by the bathroom. Or the privy, I mean."

"No."

"You have to let me take care of business!"

"Just go where you are."

Son of a bitch. I gave up and immediately spun around and ran, drawing up all my internal energy and concentrating it in my feet.

A hand clamped around the back of my neck.

"Third Young Master."

I had been caught in three steps. Wipeng looked down at me with cold eyes.

"If you keep this up… I might have to stop being polite."

Resistance was pointless. Wipeng was a master whose Level I couldn't determine even with Qi Sense.

No choice.

I walked on with a sinking heart. After what felt like ages, a towering pavilion came into view.

Several warriors stood guard outside. I recognized the Jin Family of Taiyuan's distinctive navy uniforms, but some of the men wore red clothes I had never seen before.

Those must be members of the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

Considering the usual relationship between the two sects, they should have been at each other's throats. Yet right now, they were united in glaring at me.

"Fuck…"

Wipeng turned his head at my mutter.

"The Lesser Family Head believes in you. Don't forget that."

Right. Jin Wikyung was there. My greatest hope and my shield.

As I reminded myself of that fact, Wipeng threw open the doors to the main assembly hall.

"I've brought the Third Young Master."

I took a deep breath and stepped into the pavilion, repeating the same words over and over in my head.

Even if a tiger carries you off, you can survive if you keep your wits about you. Even if a tiger carries you off, you can keep your wits—

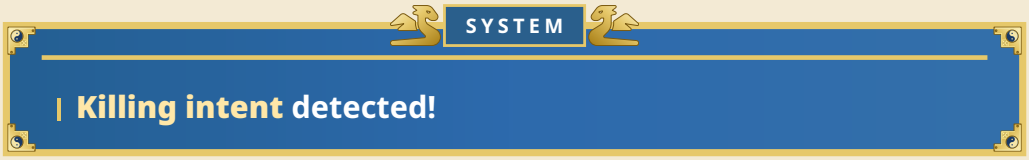
The moment I entered the hall, the low murmuring abruptly stopped. A dozen men, young and old, stood arrayed along either side, while Jin Wikyung occupied the seat of honor.

And in the center stood a young man.

“It’s been a while, Young Master Jin.”

The instant I met that unpleasant smile—

Ding.



…At least use your blinker before cutting in.

Killing intent.

I knew it well. Monsters were literally bundles of malice and killing intent. I had felt it countless times and thought I had grown used to it.

But this guy…

He was different.

This was on an entirely different level from anything I had experienced.

If I had to compare it to something, it was like the difference between a low-level monster and a mid-level monster. His killing intent was far more refined, more furtive, and more chilling.

“I believe I caught a glimpse of you in the marketplace last time. I don’t know whether you remember me.”

Lee Seogeun bit off each word. Above his head, a System window floated in the air.

That was the Level I had seen with Qi Sense the instant I detected his killing intent. It was more than twice my Level.

This is insane.

Even worse were the looks from everyone else.

Dozens of menacing gazes from men young and old were fixed on me. My knees went weak. In that tense atmosphere, Lee Seogeun spoke again.

“What a shame. If you had come a little earlier, we could have had a deeper conversation. We were discussing something interesting until just now.”

“…Were you?”

“Wouldn’t you like to know what we were discussing?”

“N-no, I’m fine.”

I only hoped it hadn't been a discussion about whether to cut off my head or my balls. And if that miserable guess was correct, I would rather they cut off my balls than my head.

If I'm lucky, a Level Up might restore them… Why am I even having to think about this?

This was beyond grim. Lee Seogeun studied my expression for a moment before speaking again.

"I heard you returned to the family a few days ago. Where have you been?"

"Honghwaru."

"Then where were you before you went to Honghwaru?"

I was at a goshiwon[59], you bastard.

I wanted to tell him everything honestly.

I got fired from my Guild that day, had some soju[60] with the hyung[61] from my goshiwon[62], then climbed into the capsule and fell asleep. When I woke up, I was at Honghwaru, and now I'm working hard so I can Logout. Something like that.

It'd be a miracle if he didn't draw his sword.

As I hesitated, unable to answer, Lee Seogeun pulled something from inside his robes. I thought he really was drawing a sword, but it turned out to be a bundle of papers.

"Since you don't seem to remember, I'll tell you. The night before you went to Honghwaru, you visited Myeongwollu. You went to the deluxe room you had reserved."

"Myeongwollu?"

"Isn't that the pleasure house you used to frequent? Don't try to claim you've never heard of it. I have the statements and signatures of the people who saw you there that day."

In other words, it was a list of witness statements. I read through the papers, figuring I might as well see what they said.

Then I noticed something strange.

"What is this?"

"You don't know even after seeing it yourself?"

This bastard was dropping the formal speech now, too.

"I'm saying that because I read it. There isn't a single proper testimony here."

---

[59] A goshiwon is a Korean building of small, inexpensive rented rooms, originally intended for people studying for exams.

[60] Soju is a Korean distilled alcoholic drink.

[61] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

[62] A goshiwon is a Korean building of small, inexpensive rented rooms, originally intended for people studying for exams.

I read every one of the dozens of statements, but not one of them contained decisive testimony.

They all said roughly the same thing: Jin Taekyung had gotten thoroughly drunk, gone to the wrong room, and found that the room belonged to a woman of the Mount Heng Sword Sect. Then someone had heard screaming.

“For a bastard who tore my sister’s clothes and tried to rape her, you have some nerve acting so shameless. You really are exactly as the rumors say.”

“No, that’s not what—”

“You bastard!”

Flutter!

“Ah.”

The bundle of papers smacked me in the face and scattered across the floor. Lee Seogeun spat a glob of phlegm onto them.

Well, look at this asshole.

I wasn’t annoyed. I was simply suspicious.

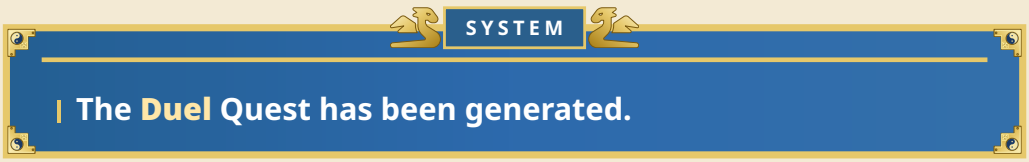
How should I put it? This whole chain of events—especially the witness statements—felt incredibly contrived.

But I had no time to dwell on that unease.

“Come out with me, you bastard! I’ll make you pay for what you’ve done!”

The instant Lee Seogeun shouted—

Ding.



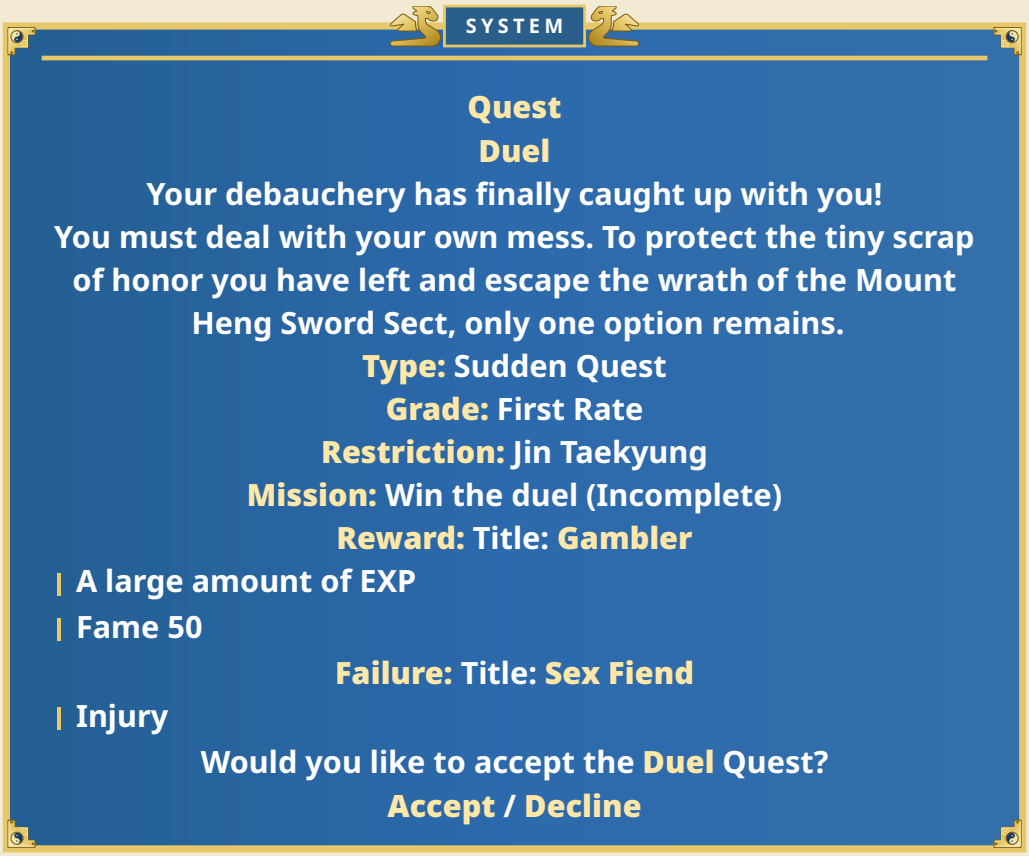
What’s this now?

Chapter 14

“Come out with me, you bastard! I’ll make you pay for what you’ve done!”

The instant Lee Seogeun shouted those words in fury—

Ding.



“…”

Seriously? I hadn’t even dated anyone since high school, and now I had to be called a sex fiend?

I spent half my day running raids and the other half passed out in my goshiwon[63]. Now I had to clean up a mess I hadn’t even made, inside a game.

At least give me a decent Quest.

How was I supposed to fight a Level 30 like Lee Seogeun?

This is insane. His Level is more than twice mine…

This was a fight I absolutely couldn’t take.

I declined the Quest. Or I was going to. But Lee Seogeun beat me to it.

“If you run away from this place… the Jin Family of Taiyuan will pay the appropriate price.”

Ding.

[63] A goshiwon is a low-cost residence in Korea made up of very small private rooms, originally associated with students preparing for exams.

SYSTEM

Quest information has been updated.

If the Quest is declined, the Mount Heng Sword Sect will declare war on the Jin Family of Taiyuan. In addition, Jin Taekyung will be designated a public enemy of the sect.

…I knew it.

I'd wondered why the System was giving me a choice for once.

As I let out a deep sigh, the assembly hall began boiling like a cauldron over hot coals.

"How dare you!"

"That young punk thinks he can say whatever he wants just because he has his family behind him!"

"Even if the Third Young Master did something lower than a dog, how dare he look down on our family!"

"…"

The first two were fine, but who the hell was that last guy?

As the atmosphere turned hostile, Jin Wikyung, the Lesser Family Head, stepped in.

"Everyone, calm yourselves. And you, Young Hero, that is enough. We will consider it a slip of the tongue and let it pass this once."

Seated in the place of honor, he delivered the warning in a low voice. His presence was no joke. He truly had the bearing of the next Family Head of an old and prestigious house.

Perhaps cowed by his aura, Lee Seogeun answered in a noticeably quieter voice.

"Understood. However…"

"However?"

"It was not a slip of the tongue. Do you think I came here today merely as a private individual?"

At those words, Jin Wikyung's expression hardened, along with everyone else's.

Right. Lee Seogeun was an official envoy of the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

"My father—no, the Sect Leader—has entrusted me with full authority."

"…Then what do you want?"

"As I have already said, I want a duel with the Third Young Master."

No. I don't want that.

Judging by how things were unfolding, those bastards from the Mount Heng Sword Sect had come here specifically to pick a fight.

They intended to squeeze everything they could out of this incident, and even if that failed, they were at least going to wreck me. Being targeted so blatantly sent a chill down my spine.

"There must be another way. Tell me what you truly want."

"Withdraw from every commandery and county outside Taiyuan. That should be an appropriate price for ruining my sister's prospects of marriage."

The instant he finished speaking, shouts erupted throughout the assembly hall.

From the bits and pieces I could make out, he was basically demanding they strip us of everything but our underwear. Jin Wikyung's answer was obvious.

"Impossible."

"Then accept the duel—"

"That too, I must refuse."

Jin Wikyung was a complete pushover when it came to his youngest brother. There was no way he would send me into a duel that was obviously dangerous.

At Jin Wikyung's answer, Lee Seogeun smiled triumphantly.

"Then there is only one path left."

War.

I wasn't the only one who thought of that word. The assembly hall fell silent beneath its weight.

Amid that silence, I looked up at the empty air.

SYSTEM

Would you like to accept the Quest?
Accept / Decline
If the Quest is declined, the Mount Heng Sword Sect will declare war on the Jin Family of Taiyuan. In addition, Jin Taekyung will be designated a public enemy of the sect.

I read the System message, looked at the floor, looked at the ceiling, then read it again.

Fuck…

There was no choice. Only one way remained.

"I'll do it."

For once, everyone reacted the same way. Eyes wide. Mouths open. Lee Seogeun, who had proposed the duel. Jin Wikyung, who had refused it. Everyone in the assembly hall looked as though they couldn't believe their ears.

"W-wait. Taekyung?"

Ignoring Jin Wikyung's frantic attempt to stop me, I spoke to Lee Seogeun.

"Come out. Let's have a go."

The corners of Lee Seogeun's mouth curled into a cruel smile.

The winter wind was cold. I looked up at the cloudy sky and took a deep breath.

"Whoo."

Lee Seogeun and I stood facing each other in the Jin Family of Taiyuan's Grand Training Ground. About fifty people sat some distance away, watching us.

The Jin Family people looked like they were wondering what the hell I had eaten, while the Mount Heng Sword Sect's goons looked like they'd come out for a day of entertainment. All they were missing was popcorn.

Ah. Someone was sending me a Sound Transmission, too.

"Youngest. Take deep breaths. Deep breaths. In. Out. In. Out…"

I'm already doing that, man.

Jin Wikyung had a solemn expression, but he kept shifting his hips like a puppy that needed to poop. If Wipeng hadn't been holding him down by the shoulder, he looked ready to charge into the training ground at any moment.

"Don't worry. If it looks dangerous, this eldest brother of yours will jump in. What? If that bastard so much as lays a hand on our youngest brother, I'll—fuck! Got it? Don't get worked up. Take it slow and stay safe. You can do it, Jin Taekyung!"

…I get it, so calm down.

He had radiated such overwhelming authority in the assembly hall, yet Jin Wikyung was once again living up to my expectations.

Still, he's a hundred times better than having no one.

At least someone would save me before I became a half-crippled wreck.

With Jin Wikyung and Wipeng, I had two life insurance policies. Great.

But the moment I looked at Lee Seogeun with a slightly lighter heart, I immediately took that thought back.

What's so great about this? Fuck.

Now I understood why the Mount Heng Sword Sect's people had been so confident.

Lee Seogeun abruptly whipped off his shirt, and my breath caught at the sight of muscles writhing like mollusks.

My hands and feet began to tingle at the sight of the blood-red Level window.

A gap of sixteen Levels. It was overwhelming. As if to drive that fact home, the System chimed.

SYSTEM

You have been afflicted with the Status Effect Intimidation!

I'll die three times before anyone gets here to save me.

Perhaps he noticed my reaction, because Lee Seogeun gave me a cruel smile.

"Do you understand the situation now? Your breath catches, and your hands and feet start tingling, don't they?"

Now he could read minds, too?

But momentum was half the fight.

I deliberately composed my expression before answering.

"Bullshit."

"Your voice is trembling. Of course you're afraid. Fine. Answer my questions honestly, and I'll go easy on you."

...To be honest, I almost wavered.

"Cut the bullshit."

"Oh? Putting on the airs of a martial family's son, are you?"

Lee Seogeun laughed scornfully.

"Let me ask you one thing. What made you accept the duel? Your martial arts are pathetic, and you're notorious for being a coward. I want to hear your reason."

"The reason?"

No matter how much I thought about it, this was the only way.

If war broke out, I would become a public enemy of the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

Hunting? Leveling up? I could forget about it. The moment I stepped outside the protection of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, assassins would catch my scent and come running.

As long as I stay alive, there'll be another chance.

I had magic. The recovery magic of leveling up.

My mind eased slightly.

"I figured I could handle someone like you."

"Pfft! You're just a wet-behind-the-ears pup."

It was a mild provocation, but it didn't work. He was confident in his own abilities, and it showed in his relaxed manner.

"Is it my turn to ask a question?"

"I never said I would answer... but I'll indulge you as if these were your last words."

"This whole incident. You fabricated it, didn't you?"

Perhaps the question caught him off guard, because Lee Seogeun's face stiffened awkwardly.

That expression was answer enough.

So I was right.

I'd suspected as much. No wonder the whole thing had stunk from beginning to end.

"You petty bastards. You should've just declared war."

"…I'll tear that mouth apart."

Lee Seogeun raised his massive greatsword and muttered ominously.

I raised the Sharp Spear I had drawn earlier.

All right. Let's do this.

I had learned martial arts. I also had instincts honed through seven years of real combat.

An F-rank Hunter and a second-rate Murim martial artist. Don't underestimate the skills I'd honed working two jobs!

"Graaah!"

Lee Seogeun was more agile than I had imagined. He closed the distance in an instant, and I caught the greatsword crashing straight down with the shaft of my spear.

Kra-kra-kraang.

"Urgh."

I'd been afraid it might cut me in half, but the Sharp Spear was sturdy, made of solid steel. Even so, the force behind the greatsword began driving both my feet into the ground.

"Die, you insect!"

"Hup!"

Up close, his aura was even more suffocating. Was this what a monster's Fear felt like?

"Kneel and beg forgiveness now! Then I'll let you off with just one arm!"

"Youngest!"

Over Lee Seogeun's shoulder, I saw Jin Wikyung shoot to his feet. The Mount Heng Sword Sect's people watched with snickers, while the Jin Family people turned their heads away as if they couldn't bear to look.

I have to hold out.

At least until Jin Wikyung gets here!

"Graaah!"

Lee Seogeun's greatsword came at me from every direction, one blow after another. The weapons were clearly clashing, iron against iron, but all I could hear was cannon fire.

Boom! Boom! Boom! I blocked them.

“Graaah!”

“Hup!”

Boom! Boom! I blocked them again.

“Graaah!”

“Haaah!”

Boom! I blocked another.

“Graaah…”

“Haaah…”

“…?”

“…?”

The next moment, Lee Seogeun and I locked eyes.

The instant I saw the bewilderment and confusion in his gaze, I knew he was thinking exactly what I was.

What the hell is this?

Lee Seogeun was strong. He possessed the brute strength of a giant monster, moved with surprising agility for someone so muscular, and swung his massive greatsword like a matchstick.

And that wasn’t all. He was a Young Master of the Mount Heng Sword Sect—a sect that could actually throw its weight around. The martial arts he used had to be quite advanced.

And yet…

This is… doable?

Even now, I was blocking every swing of his greatsword. More than twenty attacks, and more than twenty blocks.

I could see them. That was why I could block them.

I cautiously lifted one of my legs, which had sunk into the ground up to the ankle. It slid right out.

Could it be…

No way. Surely not.

Ssshwip!

At that moment, a greatsword swept toward my waist. I deflected it with the shaft of my spear, then reflexively kicked Lee Seogeun in his wide-open chest.

Whack!

“Urgh!”

…Huh?

Clutching his stomach, Lee Seogeun skidded back five or six steps. Then he casually rubbed the bridge of his nose as though nothing had happened.

“You’re not bad. For trash, you have a trick or two.”

“…”

“Heh. But I’m done going easy on you.”

“…Hey.”

“With my next strike, I’ll smash your head—what?”

With a queasy look, I raised a hand and pointed at his mouth.

“You’re bleeding.”

A beat later, a thin line of blood ran down from the corner of Lee Seogeun’s mouth. He had probably bitten his tongue. That had to hurt.

“Ah! Eeng! Eek! Hup!”

Lee Seogeun wiped away the blood with a series of ridiculous yelps.

“Don’t wipe it. Leave it.”

“…?”

“It’ll be easier to wipe it all off at once later.”

Because from now on, I was going to beat the absolute shit out of him.

SYSTEM

The Status Effect Intimidation has been removed!

Chapter 15

Wipeng thought,

What am I looking at?

Something unbelievable was happening before his eyes. The Third Young Master—of all people, that very Third Young Master—was holding his own against Lee Seogeun.

Am I hallucinating?

And who was Lee Seogeun?

He was a blood relative of the Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect, heir to his martial arts, and a first-rate swordsman.

When the Third Young Master first accepted Lee Seogeun's challenge to a duel, Wipeng had sighed inwardly. What kind of nerve did someone who had barely risen above third-rate think he had?

And then what? Come out? Let's have a go?

Crazy bastard. What a load of shit.

Something did seem to have changed about him lately. He had suddenly started speaking politely to everyone. He practiced martial arts until late at night.

Oh, and there was that bullshit about losing his memory.

At the time, Wipeng had wondered if the man had gone insane. But when he heard today that the Third Young Master had laid a hand on the Mount Heng Sword Sect's cherished jewel, everything became clear. The shock had nearly sent him straight to the heavens.

Of course. No one changes overnight.

Wipeng had served the Jin Family of Taiyuan for more than ten years. In his eyes, Jin Taekyung was far beyond a bad seed with yellow sprouts—his were practically gold.[64]

But what could he do? Taekyung was his lord's beloved youngest brother and a direct-line member of the Jin Family. Wipeng had been planning to rescue him before Lee Seogeun turned him into a half-cripple.

And yet…

Whack! Whack! Whack!

Now Taekyung was beating Lee Seogeun without mercy.

Wipeng knew the martial arts he was using: the Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique and Spear Technique.

[64] Ssaksuga norata—"the sprouts are yellow"—means someone shows no promise. Wipeng exaggerates the yellow to gold.

He was fairly skilled at linking the two techniques together, and there was even a seasoned air to his movements—the hard-won experience of a wandering martial artist who had spent around ten years roughing it in back alleys.

What in the world…?

No one could master martial arts in a day or two.

That was the natural order Wipeng believed in, and he knew exactly one person who defied it.

The Second Young Master.

Jin Mukyung, the Second Young Master of the Jin Family of Taiyuan. A genius who had reached the Peak realm before the age of twenty—a true prodigy who defied the natural order.

Could the Third Young Master possibly…?

Wipeng's thoughts went no further. A commotion had broken out around them.

"This duel is invalid!"

"Stop the duel immediately!"

"The Jin Family of Taiyuan used underhanded tricks!"

"That's right! Otherwise, how could our Young Master possibly lose to trash like that—"

The Mount Heng Sword Sect warriors who had been snickering moments ago now had their hands on their sword hilts.

Look at these lunatics.

It was true that the Mount Heng Sword Sect had been riding high lately, but for even its underlings to cause such a scene—

Just as Wipeng could bear it no longer and was about to step forward—

Whoosh—smack!

The wind blew, and more than ten teeth flew through the air.

A Mount Heng Sword Sect warrior, blood pouring from the corner of his mouth, stared blankly up at the enormous shadow looming over him.

"What trash?"

"Buh… buh-buh…"

Jin Wikyung calmly looked down at the warrior, who could no longer form the words. Then he slapped the man across the mouth with a palm as large as a cauldron lid.

Smack! Clatter.

The warrior spat out every tooth he had left, then lost consciousness and collapsed.

Leaving the frozen Mount Heng Sword Sect warriors behind, Jin Wikyung returned to his seat and resumed watching the duel.

Wipeng sighed.

"There could be a problem…"

"Wipeng."

"Yes?"

"Don't say anything."

Jin Wikyung gazed at his youngest brother with shining eyes and added,

"This is the best moment of my life."

This was my first time using martial arts in actual combat. Since learning them, I hadn't had any reason to fight anyone—and I hadn't wanted to, either.

But…

I had always thought about it. If I ever encountered an enemy, if the moment came when I had to use my martial arts in a real fight, how would I respond?

In that respect, my time in the training hall had meant a great deal.

Whack!

"Guh!"

Lee Seogeun doubled over like a shrimp as the shaft of my spear struck him squarely in the abdomen.

He had dropped his greatsword long ago. I kept advancing and swinging the shaft, and each blow tore another scream from him.

Whack! Whack! Whack!

"Gaaaah!"

At first, I had been bewildered. My kick actually worked? On Lee Seogeun? He's Level 30, and I'm only Level 14.

But after we exchanged more than fifty blows, I realized the truth.

I'm stronger.

Lee Seogeun was undoubtedly strong. By real-world standards, he was at least on par with a C-rank Hunter.

But I was stronger. The difference was slight, but undeniable.

Strength, Stamina, Agility.

And experience.

"Graaah!"

Lee Seogeun charged at me with a roar. He was fast. And destructive. Every step he took left the training-ground floor dented and cracked.

But he has no finesse.

Lee Seogeun was young, which meant he lacked experience. Against someone weaker, he could make up for that with sheer strength.

But I was different.

I was stronger, and I had more experience.

I'm going to win. Without a doubt.

It wasn't a resolution. It was certainty.

That was why I discarded my spear without hesitation. Now we were both unarmed.

The moment Lee Seogeun saw me throw away my weapon, fire blazed in his eyes.

"You looked down on me? You dare—how dare you!"

Anger stiffened the body and simplified its movements. I tripped Lee Seogeun's leg as he charged like a bull and sent him tumbling.

Then I climbed onto his chest as he tried to get up.

"What is this…?"

Looking down at his bewildered eyes, I asked,

"Ever heard of full mount?"

Without waiting for an answer, I drove my fist down.

Lee Seogeun desperately shook his head from side to side, but it did him no good.

Bam-bam-bam-bam!

Chin, cheek, forehead, nose… I rained punches down across his entire face. Lee Seogeun twisted and screamed without end until, at last, he went limp.

That should be enough.

My whole reason for accepting the duel had been to avoid a war with the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

It would be a problem if Lee Seogeun suffered a severe injury. I had to stop before I went too far.

Concerned, I shook Lee Seogeun by the shoulder.

"Hey, are you oka—"

Smack!

The world flashed before my eyes.

A little dizziness. Drops of bright-red blood dripped from my stinging chin.

Lee Seogeun's fist had grazed me.

Ah. I let my guard down.

If I hadn't instinctively jerked my head back, I would have been in serious trouble. That blow had been imbued with internal energy.

"You dodged that?"

Lee Seogeun quickly broke free of the mount and scrambled away, his face filled with extreme bewilderment.

Of course. He probably hadn't imagined that a guy like me—no, a guy like Jin Taekyung—would humiliate him like this.

Especially after his decisive strike had been rendered useless.

“This can’t be… This can’t be happening.”

I answered Lee Seogeun, who muttered as if he were bewitched.

“Life’s full of surprises.”

“Why? How? How could this possibly happen? I’m Lee Seogeun! Lee Seogeun of the Mount Heng Sword Sect!”

His eyes bloodshot, Lee Seogeun shouted,

“I honed my skills for ten years! So why? Why am I losing to trash like you? To someone as debauched and lazy as you!”

He might have been nothing more than a game character, but in that moment, I understood how he felt.

The feeling that all his hard work had betrayed him. The futility. The emptiness.

I felt that way, too.

I had felt it for seven years. The sense of deprivation dulled with time, but it never disappeared.

In the end, I had accepted it.

Reality was cruel.

I spoke to Lee Seogeun.

“Give up now. You’re weaker than me.”

Lee Seogeun’s eyes rolled with rage.

“Shut your mouth!”

The air around us crackled.

Gathering every last bit of strength he had, Lee Seogeun shot forward like an arrow.

“I told you clearly. You made your choice.”

“Stop spouting bullshit!”

Whoosh.

His fist split the air and grazed my face by a hair. That alone sliced open my skin and drew blood.

It was faster and stronger than any attack I had seen from him so far.

But the same goes for me.

I channeled internal energy into my right foot and brought it down on top of Lee Seogeun’s foot.

Crack!

With the sound of breaking bone, his foot slammed into the training-ground floor and sank into it.

“Graaah!”

I drove my knuckles into his screaming face. His nose broke, and teeth scattered through the air. With his leg buried up to the calf, he couldn't even pull himself free.

One more.

More.

More.

Whack. Whack. Whack.

Chest. Side. Stomach.

And finally—

The solar plexus.

Thump!

A clean hit.

And it wasn't just an ordinary punch. I had concentrated a tremendous amount of internal energy into that single blow.

Lee Seogeun's eyes flew wide.

"Guh!"

His pupils lost focus. The strength left his body, his back bent, and he began to collapse.

I saw it all as if in slow motion.

Even my right foot shooting toward his abdomen.

Pop!

With a sound like a balloon bursting, Lee Seogeun went flying.

Everyone watched.

Jin Wikyung. Wipeng. The people of the Jin Family of Taiyuan. The warriors of the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

And me.

Thud.

Lee Seogeun flew more than ten meters[65] before landing. Whether he had passed out or not, he did not move.

I released the breath I had been holding and stood tall beneath the dozens of gazes that shifted from Lee Seogeun to me.

"Whoo… Whoo…"

Ding.

[65] More than ten meters is more than about 33 ft.

SYSTEM

The Duel Quest has been successfully completed!
Quest rewards will be distributed!
You have acquired the Title Gambler!
You have gained EXP and Fame!
An additional reward has been granted for your overwhelming performance!
Jin Family's Cultivation Technique has risen to the Fourth Stage!
Qi Sense has risen to the Third Stage. You can now identify targets up to Level 50.
Level up!
Level up!
Level up!

The System notifications rang out like celebratory fireworks.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect left.

Since they had all arrived on horseback, the Jin Family of Taiyuan even had to lend them a carriage to transport the injured.

But Lee Seogeun was one thing. Who was the other guy?

Every tooth in his mouth was gone, and the cloth stuffed between his lips was soaked with blood.

Good Lord. What kind of bastard had…?

Jin Wikyung patted me on the shoulder with a solemn expression.

"Well done. You surpassed my expectations."

"Ah, yes. Thank you—"

"Why are you looking at me like that?"

Because there's blood splattered on your cheek.

I had no idea why, but in that brief span of time, he had somehow turned someone into a cripple.

"So, what do you think?"

"Pardon? About what?"

"About ending your confinement. It is true that your usual conduct has been disgraceful, but after the remarkable performance you showed today, this is a great blessing for our family."

Jin Wikyung looked around as he continued.

"What do the rest of you think?"

The senior members looked displeased, but none seemed particularly inclined to object. Compared to the looks they had given me in the meeting hall earlier, I almost felt that they were favorable.

Is it because they're Murim people?

In the novels, Murim was a place where justice mattered, but strength came first. Maybe defeating Lee Seogeun had influenced them.

"You should answer him. Hahaha."

…Or maybe it was because of Jin Wikyung.

His mouth was smiling, but his eyes were not. With the blood on his cheek, he looked like something out of a horror movie.

"I wholeheartedly agree."

Once Wipeng's manipulation of public opinion was added to the mix, one by one, the others voiced their agreement.

Jin Wikyung watched the blatantly rigged vote unfold under threat of force and smiled in satisfaction.

Damn it. Damn it. Damn it!

Lee Seogeun bit down hard on his lip. Jin Taekyung's face refused to leave his mind.

I lost? To trash like him?

The matter with the Jin Family of Taiyuan had provided more than enough justification.

If the Mount Heng Sword Sect gained something from it, that was good. If the Jin Family refused their demands and the conflict escalated into a full-scale war, that would have been a success as well.

If he had turned Jin Taekyung into a half-cripple, word would have spread throughout Shanxi Province that the Jin Family of Taiyuan had been humiliated by the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

But he had failed.

How could this have happened?

He had taken up the sword as a child. He wasn't a genius, but neither was he ordinary.

The second son of the Mount Heng Sword Sect. A promising young prodigy. A first-rate swordsman.

He had always been an object of admiration…

Damn it!

Everything he had was shattered today. For the first time, Jin Taekyung's merciless violence had brought him to his knees and beaten him unconscious.

When he opened his eyes, he was already inside a carriage.

Even the carriage belonged to the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

Fire blazed in Lee Seogeun's eyes.

I'll kill you. I'll kill you with my own hands, Jin Taekyung!

Unable to contain his mounting fury, he slammed his fist against the carriage wall.

The carriage stopped.

Lee Seogeun shouted harshly,

"What are you doing? Don't dawdle. Get moving again!"

At that moment, his brow prickled.

"We should get moving, yes. But going to the Mount Heng Sword Sect would be a little troublesome."

Sound Transmission?

Who are you?

Lee Seogeun shouted, but no sound escaped his throat.

His chest felt tight, and his throat hurt as if it were on fire. The carriage began moving again.

"Let's do this. Mount Beimang first. We can go to the Mount Heng Sword Sect afterward."[66]

What does that mean—

It took no longer than a few blinks.

His limbs went numb, and pain flared violently through his body. Lee Seogeun turned his trembling head.

Someone in a mask was staring at him.

"Grrk… grrrk…"

Who are you?

Instead of a voice, dark, discolored blood poured from his mouth.

His vision blurred. The sounds around him faded into the distance.

Sa… save me…

That was his final thought.

The next moment, he plunged headfirst into darkness.

"Farewell, Young Hero."

The masked man smiled as he pulled the large blue-black needle from the dead man's brow.

[66] Mount Beimang is traditionally associated with burial grounds; "going to Beimang" means dying.

Chapter 16

"Whew. Finally done."

Jin Wikyung set down his brush as he spoke. Wipeng, who was sitting in a chair beside the door as always, raised his head.

"You're getting faster at handling your work. You must be exhausted toda—"

Wipeng trailed off when he noticed the mountain of documents still piled on the table.

Come to think of it, it was only around noon. There was no way anyone could have finished that much work already.

Did I hear him wrong?

"Good. This should be enough…"

This time, it wasn't a hallucination. Jin Wikyung's face popped up above the pile of documents, proving it.

"Wipeng, come here. This is very important."

His voice was so serious that Wipeng grew slightly concerned.

Did something major happen?

Perhaps the documents had revealed some grave corruption. Or maybe the Council of Elders, ever watchful for an opportunity, had caused some kind of incident.

This is bad. We haven't even finished dealing with the Mount Heng Sword Sect yet.

A moment later, Wipeng accepted the document in question from Jin Wikyung. His face twisted into a strange expression.

"…What is this?"

"You can't tell? It's a drawing."

The troubling document Wipeng had imagined was nowhere to be seen. Instead, Jin Wikyung had handed him a single sheet of rice paper bearing a drawing.

"No, that's not what I meant. Why are you suddenly—"

Jin Wikyung cut him off with a secretive smile.

"Look closely. It isn't an ordinary drawing."

It isn't an ordinary drawing?

Wipeng's eyes lit up.

All kinds of legends from across Murim flashed through his mind.

A Daoist[67] who ascended after gazing upon a single painting. An absolute master who attained enlightenment from a mural in an ancient cave!

Wipeng's gaze roamed across the rice paper for a long while. Then it suddenly began to tremble as if struck by lightning.

[67] A Daoist is a practitioner of Daoism, a Chinese religious and philosophical tradition.

“C-could this be…?”

“You noticed. That’s right.”

Jin Wikyung chuckled.

“I drew yesterday’s duel.”

“…”

“Lee Seogeun lying defeated, and Taekyung standing proudly! The sky spread above the head of the young hero who would one day become the greatest under heaven!”

“…”

“I deliberately drew it from a low angle. What do you think? It’s good, right? Isn’t it?”

Wipeng’s hands trembled around the rice paper. If he had followed his heart, he would have crumpled it up, torn it apart, covered it with a week’s worth of piss and shit, dried it thoroughly, and then burned it.

But—

“…It’s very well drawn.”

Wipeng was a rational man. He summoned the magnificent mental fortitude of a martial artist at the Peak realm.

Of course, he also had the courage to reprimand a lord whose sanity was in serious doubt.

“With all the work you have piled up, how could you spend the entire morning drawing this one picture?”

“Of course not.”

“You know that, and yet—”

“Did you think I spent three shichen[68] working on only one?”

“What?”

“Of course I drew another. I was going to show it to you later, but you really are quick on the uptake.”

With trembling hands, Wipeng accepted the second sheet of rice paper Jin Wikyung offered him. Grinning from ear to ear, Jin Wikyung began explaining the drawing.

“I depicted the scene immediately after the duel. The young hero declares that he won’t rest on his laurels and will return to the training hall! And the people gazing up at him in admiration!”

“Well, I agree with much of that. The Third Young Master really has changed a great deal.”

“Right? I was surprised myself.”

[68] A shichen is a traditional time unit of about two hours; three shichen are about six hours.

After defeating Lee Seogeun in the duel, Jin Taekyung had defied everyone's expectations and returned to the training hall. Jin Wikyung's eyes grew distant as he recalled the previous day.

"I always knew this day would come. My youngest brother is a Heavenly Eagle. Wipeng, can't you hear it? The mighty beating of Taekyung's wings…"

"I don't know about wings, but I can hear you spouting nonsense."

Wipeng lowered the rice paper with a sigh of complete resignation.

Flap.

"Gasp."

"See? You can hear it!"

Wipeng hurriedly turned toward the window. A hawk that had just landed was preening its feathers. A small container hung from its ankle.

"It's a messenger eagle."

These hawks were trained intensively from the time they were fledglings before being put to use as messengers.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan had only two messenger eagles, and they were dispatched solely for matters of extreme urgency.

"We have a problem."

Jin Wikyung muttered in a subdued voice.

And that problem soon made itself known.

"My name is Han Yeop."

"Pardon?"

"It's an honor to meet you."

The introduction came out of nowhere. Of course, I recognized his face.

I had seen him more often than anyone else since entering the training hall.

Should I call him the training hall guard?

Guard. Martial-artist guard. Whatever the proper term was, the NPC in front of me was a Jin Family of Taiyuan martial artist assigned to the training hall. Bringing me meals and herbal decoctions was one of his duties, too.

But why is he introducing himself all of a sudden?

I had never exchanged a single word with this NPC. He didn't seem to bear me any ill will, but he had never been especially friendly, either.

"Ah, yes. Nice to meet you, too."

Despite my lukewarm response, the guard's—or rather, Han Yeop's—face lit up.

What the hell? Why is he suddenly acting like this?

"I was there yesterday, too."

“There? Oh.”

He meant the duel. So many people had gathered that it wasn’t surprising Han Yeop had been among them.

“I watched from beginning to end. I saw how heroically you fought against that vicious Lee Seogeun of the Mount Heng Sword Sect!”

Vicious? Heroic?

That’s how it looked?

Honestly, from a modern man’s perspective, they were both as bad as each other.

No, I almost wanted to take Lee Seogeun’s side. As an older brother myself, no matter how fucking awful my little sister’s personality was, I’d lose my mind if she said she was dating a guy like Jin Taekyung.

Of course, the Mount Heng Sword Sect’s attitude and proposal had been absurd. That was why I had no choice but to fight.

“My heart pounded the entire time. I’m sure everyone else there felt the same way.”

Han Yeop continued, his face flushed with excitement. He seemed to be under a serious misunderstanding, and I had no idea when I was supposed to stop him.

“I once misunderstood you as well, Young Master. But now everyone in the family knows the truth.”

This time, I couldn’t help asking.

“The truth? What truth?”

“Well…”

Han Yeop lowered his voice to a whisper. His hot breath against my ear was bad enough, but what he said gave me goose bumps.

In other words—

“I’m the Jin Family of Taiyuan’s secret weapon?”

“Yes, yes!”

Han Yeop nodded furiously.

“My behavior until now was all an act, and ever since I was young, I’ve undergone bone-shattering training, becoming a man accomplished in both civil and martial arts, with virtue and righteousness, a sl—sl—”

I couldn’t bring myself to say that word. Han Yeop came to my rescue before my hands and feet could curl up from embarrassment.

“The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi! Everyone in the family knows now! You are Shanxi’s Sleeping Dragon, still hiding beneath the water instead of ascending to the heavens!”

Oh, please. Somebody save me. And don’t shout it out loud.

The Sleeping Dragon? Everyone in the family knew?

If I die, the cause of death will be death by embarrassment.

As I writhed in mental agony, Han Yeop asked with shining eyes,

“It’s true, isn’t it? I know it’s rude of me to ask, but just between us…”

This wouldn’t do. I decided to stamp out this ridiculous, cringe-inducing rumor, wherever it had come from, and opened my mouth.

“I don’t know who started such an absurd rumor, but…”

That was when it happened.

Ding.

SYSTEM

A rumor about the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi is spreading throughout the Jin Family of Taiyuan.
Fame has risen by 10 due to the influence of the rumor.
The more people believe the rumor, the more Fame will rise.

I continued with a solemn expression.

“Every word of it is true.”

“I knew it! I believed it with all my heart!”

I watched Han Yeop walk away with rapture on his face and shed a single tear.

Fuck…

Ah, I miss my mom.

My duel with Lee Seogeun had taught me several things.

First.

I’m strong.

Early in the game, I had taken down the Heavenly Axe, the tutorial NPC, with a single strike. What had been a suspicion back then was now a certainty.

I was strong. Strong enough to defeat a Level 30 like Lee Seogeun without much trouble. The difference in combat experience had certainly played a part, but my basic stats were overwhelmingly superior.

Strength, Stamina, Agility. We were about even in all three, or I had a slight edge.

Stats. In other words, the difference in our abilities. In this game, I was a player, and I had continued to grow through the System.

By learning martial arts, training, and completing various Quests, I had raised my stats at remarkable speed. The result had been plain to see in the duel.

And second.

I don’t have enough internal energy.

In internal energy, Lee Seogeun had been ahead of me. Far ahead.

What the hell had he been eating growing up? I smashed him dozens of times with the shaft of my spear and pounded him one-sidedly from the mount, but he held out. He even counterattacked and managed to draw up more internal energy at the very end.

I currently have ten years of internal energy.

Lee Seogeun probably had twenty years—twice as much as I did. That led me to a third realization.

The difference in internal energy determines the stage of one's martial arts.

I had defeated Lee Seogeun, who was First Rate. But the realm displayed by the System still had me at Second Rate.

I thought the reason lay in internal energy. Once I raised the one ability I lacked, wouldn't my realm finally rise as well?

After organizing my thoughts that far, another idea suddenly occurred to me.

This is exactly like Hunter rank classification.

Every newly awakened Hunter had to visit a designated center to have their abilities, occupational aptitude, and mana capacity assessed. No matter how high their physical abilities were, a low mana capacity earned them a cold reception during the rank evaluation.

That was also why mages started at D-rank at the lowest. Because of their profession, mages had plenty of basic mana from the start.

Still, the game is better than reality.

At least you could grow here. Reality had no such thing. Even I had only managed to get lumped in with the E-ranks after working my ass off for seven years. I was still an F-rank Hunter.

Anyway, I had a rough plan now.

My stats are good enough. I'll cycle the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique whenever I have time and focus on Quests that reward EXP.

It had been more than a week since I was trapped in this godforsaken game. I had no idea what the hell was happening in the real world, but clearly no rescue was coming.

I needed to prepare properly and see this through.

"Open Quest window."

Ding.

SYSTEM

Quest
Logout
You must now make your way through this harsh Murim.
Become stronger and more famous.
For the day that will come someday...
Grade: Main Quest
Restriction: Jin Taekyung
Mission: Achieve the First Rate realm (Incomplete)
Reach Level 30 (17 / 30)
Reach Fame 500 (70 / 500)
Reward: Logout

“Ugh. This is brutal.”

I sat cross-legged. Two days remained before my seclusion ended. I intended to accumulate as much internal energy as possible.

SYSTEM

Fame has risen by 3 due to the influence of the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi rumor.

The Fame-increase messages that chimed from time to time offered a small measure of comfort.

Late at night, the lights came on in the main assembly hall. At the request of the Lesser Family Head, a secret meeting of the family council was taking place.

The hour was late and the summons sudden, leaving several senior members wearing sour expressions.

“A sudden summons? What could this be about?”

“Exactly. Calling us here at this hour without even telling us why.”

“That’s what happens when the Lesser Family Head is still young. He doesn’t know procedure or etiquette.”

“He must be feeling rather full of himself after yesterday. Though I suppose his only weakness has disappeared. No one expected the Third Young Master to be so capable.”

“The Council of Elders must be disappointed. They were probably preparing to make a major move over the Third Young Master.”

“Hmph. Even now, the Head Elder should step forward and set the family straight.”

“Careful. Watch your tongue…”

At that moment, every sound abruptly stopped. The doors to the meeting room opened from both sides, and Jin Wikyung entered.

The senior members held widely differing opinions of their Lesser Family Head, but the silence that descended the instant he appeared proved that he possessed the qualities of a leader.

“Thank you all for answering my summons at this late hour.”

Jin Wikyung took the seat of honor and spoke his opening words, but he found it difficult to continue.

What should he say? Where should he begin, and how?

His head throbbed. But this was something he had to tell them.

“The reason I called everyone here today is…”

That was when a strange voice interrupted him.

“It must be because of the Mount Heng Sword Sect.”

It was a bizarre voice. At first it sounded like an old man’s, yet at the same time it seemed young—rough one moment and smooth the next. Beneath it all lay an inexplicable resonance.

Could it be…?

Jin Wikyung’s face twisted.

The doors to the meeting room, which had seemed as though they would never open again, began to part.

Step. Step. Step.

Five old men glided into the room. The moment everyone recognized the man at their head, they hurriedly rose and bowed.

“We pay our respects, Old Master!”

The Head Elder. He had appeared after keeping himself shut away from the world for years.

Chapter 17

Circulating qi.

It was a method of regulating one's energy by steadying one's breathing: drawing qi from outside the body, circulating it within, and accumulating it.

Right now, I was circulating qi using the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique.

This still feels incredible every time.

I had never realized there were so many acupoints in my body.

I had once heard that the human body contained more than three hundred and sixty acupoints, but based on what I could feel while circulating qi through the cultivation technique, there were even more than that.

Is it because I'm a virtual game character?

Whatever.

The ten years of internal energy I drew up from my dantian circulated through my body. If internal energy was a car, then my acupoints were the highway. All I had to do was sit behind the wheel and press the accelerator.

The internal energy raced through the straight and curving pathways connecting the acupoints throughout my body before returning to my dantian.

And this is where the real problem starts.

I took a long, deep breath. Then I felt it.

Another mass of internal energy occupied my dantian like an enormous boulder, refusing to budge no matter how hard I willed it to.

What the hell are you?

It had been a mystery ever since I first circulated my qi—an unidentified energy that had settled in like it owned the place.

I didn't know where it had come from, how it had formed, or why I couldn't use it, but one thing was certain. This unidentified energy contained even more power than the ten years of internal energy I possessed.

Until now, I hadn't even dared touch it.

To be more precise, I hadn't intended to. Until a few days ago, I had been waiting for rescue while doing just enough to stay alive.

But things were different now.

I need more internal energy.

If I wanted to escape on my own, I had to fulfill the Logout Quest's condition: reaching the First Rate realm.

I also knew that I needed about as much internal energy as Lee Seogeun had to become First Rate.

I'll make it mine.

I cautiously began moving my internal energy.

The moment I sent it toward the unidentified energy, half anxious and half expectant, I realized something.

Not even close.

Internal energy was, strictly speaking, qi itself—something without a physical form. And yet the instant the two energies touched, I felt powerful rejection and resistance.

No. It was even pulling my energy in. At this rate, it was going to swallow mine instead.

Hey, hey, hey! Wait a second!

I hurriedly withdrew my internal energy and shook off the unidentified energy, which clung to me until the very end. At the same time, a System notification rang out.

Ding.

SYSTEM

You have trained the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique.
Internal energy has risen slightly.
As a result of repeated training, Sinews and Meridians and Muscles and Bones have each increased by 1.

"What the hell was that?"

I calmed myself after the scare and opened my Status Window.

SYSTEM

Status Window
Lv. 17 Jin Taekyung
Occupation: Second Rate Martial Artist
Fame: 70
Titles: 4 (Title effects active)
Scion of a Prestigious Family — All stats +5, Fame +50
Family's Shame — All stats –5, Fame –50
Novice Trainee — Training speed +10%
Gambler — Combat-related stats +10% in one-on-one contests
Strength: 65 Stamina: 65
Agility: 75 Intelligence: 10
Charm: 10 Internal Energy: 10 years
Remaining Points: 0

The numbers in my Status Window were fairly impressive by now.

I had gained three levels all at once through the Duel Quest, then distributed the thirty points equally among Strength, Stamina, and Agility.

But looking at the Status Window still left a bitter taste in my mouth.

My internal energy is the only thing that hasn't changed.

This damn System kept saying that my internal energy had risen, but the amount displayed in the Status Window remained exactly the same.

Do I need to take a spirit pill, an elixir, or something?

I thought of Jin Wikyung. If I screwed up my courage and said, Hyung, give me one spirit pill,[69] I didn't think he would refuse me outright.

I'd ask him the next time I saw him. I would also ask about the unidentified energy inside my dantian.

Krrrummble.

At that moment, the entrance to the training hall opened, and two people stepped inside.

"Um, Young Master Jin?"

It was Han Yeop. Behind him stood a martial artist I had never seen before. The man spoke in a blunt tone that matched his appearance.

"The Lesser Family Head commands you to attend the family council."

"The Lesser Family Head?"

That worked out perfectly. There was something I wanted to ask him about.

"It is beyond doubt. A few bones were broken, and there was some minor internal damage, but that level of injury could never—"

"Are you sure? Will you stake your name as the Medicine King Hall Master on it?"

"I said it's true! I examined him myself!"

"Then that settles it. Why are you talking down to me? I treat you with respect because you're a fellow Hall Master, and now you think I'm a joke!"

"You were the one who started talking down to me, White Tiger Hall Master!"

I stared blankly at the ceiling of the meeting room. The shouts and curses flying from every direction made my ears ring.

What the hell is this?

This wasn't what I had imagined a family council would be like. I had pictured a quiet, orderly atmosphere where everyone exchanged opinions and searched for common ground…

"You think all Hall Masters are equal? You're nothing but a mere physician!"

[69] Hyung is a term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

“Listen to this young bastard. I ought to shove a large needle straight into your Huiyin Acupoint!”[70]

Two men in their forties or fifties, both with receding, M-shaped hairlines, were grabbing each other by the collars and shaking one another. Just watching them made my head hurt.

The problem was that scenes like this were unfolding all over the room.

Maybe that was why most of the people there didn’t seem to notice me opening the door and taking my seat.

—You’re here?

The voice seemed to enter through my head rather than my ears. It was Sound Transmission.

I turned my head and met Jin Wikyung’s gaze from the seat of honor. He gave me a tired smile.

—It’s a madhouse, isn’t it?

No kidding. Why did you call me into this madhouse, man?

When I shot him a reproachful look, Jin Wikyung sent another message through Sound Transmission, his expression turning sheepish.

—I couldn’t help it. The Council of Elders demanded your attendance. In any case… you are involved in this matter.

The Council of Elders? I’m involved in this matter?

What matter am I involved in…? Oh. The Mount Heng Sword Sect?

I quickly pieced things together amid the shouting and cursing.

If there was one recent incident connected to me, it was the Mount Heng Sword Sect. And because of that incident, this Council of Elders or whatever it was had summoned me.

That had to be it.

Come to think of it, there are some old men here I’ve never seen before.

There were four of them. Every one had a face covered in age spots and hair that had gone completely white.

They watched the men with the M-shaped hairlines grab each other by the collars with cold eyes. Anyone could see it was a nursing home—or rather, the Council of Elders.

—And… the Head Elder is here.

I turned toward Jin Wikyung without thinking, then flinched.

What the hell? Where did that old man come from?

When had he gotten there? I had only just noticed that there were two seats of honor today. An old man was sitting to Jin Wikyung’s right, staring at me. His gaze made my face prickle.

[70] The Huiyin Acupoint is located on the perineum, between the genitals and the anus.

Is that old man the Head Elder?

White hair, a white beard, and white eyebrows. He looked like an immortal who had stepped out of an old painting. His back was straight, his shoulders broad, and his skin so taut that he hardly seemed old at all.

But why is he staring at me so intently?

I narrowed my eyes and started to glare back at the Head Elder…

Then I quietly looked away.

Not because I thought I would lose if we locked eyes. It was respect for my elders. Respect for my elders. Really.

I'll just keep my head down.

Jin Wikyung's Sound Transmission continued in the meantime.

—You may not know this because you lost your memory, but the Head Elder is your great-uncle and the highest-ranking elder in the family. Be especially careful with your words and actions.

I hadn't even seen my father's face, and now I had a great-uncle.

Maybe this place had relatives by marriage, distant cousins, and every kind of obscure uncle, too.

I gave Jin Wikyung a small nod.

—And… you must not be flustered by anything that happens from this point onward. Calmly tell them only the truth. Do you understand?

I didn't know exactly what was going on, but one thing was certain: Jin Wikyung was on my side.

I nodded again, and Jin Wikyung rose with a faint smile.

"Silence, everyone."

His voice, infused with internal energy, swept across the meeting hall.

"This is a family council of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, and we have gathered to discuss a grave matter. Since our witness has arrived, I intend to begin the interrogation."

The meeting hall had gone quiet without me noticing. With everyone's attention focused on him, Jin Wikyung spoke.

"By the authority of the Lesser Family Head and current acting Family Head, I begin this interrogation. Third Young Master Jin Taekyung, step forward."

I felt everyone's eyes on me as I walked forward. I had expected this much. They hadn't summoned me for no reason.

But…

"I ask you this. Were you the one who poisoned Lee Seogeun of the Mount Heng Sword Sect to death?"

That was something I hadn't expected.

“No.”

I barely managed to force the word out. My thoughts were a mess from the sudden question.

Lee Seogeun was dead? Poisoned, at that?

“Tell us the truth. If it turns out to be a lie…”

“I have nothing to do with Lee Seogeun’s poisoning.”

My answer was as sharp as a blade. Jin Wikyung let out a sigh of relief.

—Keep doing exactly this.

The interrogation proceeded quickly. They asked questions, and I answered them.

Starting with Jin Wikyung, they fired one question after another at me.

About half of the questions concerned whether I had been involved in poisoning Lee Seogeun, and I continued to deny it.

Because it was true.

Just in case, I secretly opened my System Window to check. I was certain of it. None of my martial arts or abilities had anything to do with poison. I didn’t have any such Items, either.

That was why I could answer without hesitation.

“No.”

The problem was that, at some point, the atmosphere in the meeting hall began to take a strange turn.

“Do you have any evidence to prove it?”

“Evidence?”

White Tiger Hall Master, was it? The man whose name I didn’t even know stared at me with obvious displeasure.

“That is correct. Evidence. I mean evidence that would prove the Third Young Master’s innocence.”

What the hell is this bastard talking about?

“Why do I have to prove it?”

“What?”

“Don’t talk down to me.”

“Listen here, Third Young Master!”

“You’re free to suspect me, but shouldn’t you be the ones looking for evidence? Am I wrong?”

I’d been letting it slide, and now these bastards thought I was some kind of wrapping cloth?[71]

[71] The Korean line plays on boja (“let’s see”) and bojagi, a traditional wrapping cloth.

Fuming, I glared at the White Tiger Hall Master as he sat down, then noticed something strange.

Well, well. Look at this.

The White Tiger Hall Master kept stealing glances at the old men of the Council of Elders.

Curiously, everyone who had been pressing and interrogating me was doing something similar.

Nearly half the people in attendance were acting this way. It was getting difficult to pretend I hadn't noticed.

So this is a factional struggle.

The Council of Elders and Jin Wikyung.

Even now, a power struggle was taking place between the elders of the family and a Lesser Family Head young enough to be their grandson.

What a family.

Only a few people remained to question me. The problem was who those people were.

Faces covered in age spots. Canny, experienced eyes.

The old men of the Council of Elders.

The oldest and fattest of them opened his mouth.

"Enough of these pointless questions and answers. There is only one thing this old man wishes to ask. Where did this matter begin?"

The senior members allied with the Council of Elders answered as if they had been waiting for the question.

"The Third Young Master."

"Who was it that dragged our family's reputation through the mud with his dissolute words and conduct?"

"The Third Young Master."

The same answer came from several places around the room.

"Then who was it that laid a hand on the treasured jewel the Mount Heng Sword Sect held in its palm and brought us to this crisis?"

"…"

Just kill me already, you bastards.

Chapter 18

The atmosphere grew worse by the second.

“The important thing is that the duel was fair!”

“Fair? Since when is using poison considered fair? What is this, the Sichuan Tang Clan?”

“The man himself said he didn’t do it! And as the Medicine King Hall Master said earlier, Lee Seogeun was perfectly fine—”

“Of course the Third Young Master would deny it. And how can you trust that quack?”

“A quack? You bastard!”

Then one particularly agitated voice pierced my ears.

“If necessary, we should prevent the war even if it means offering up the Third Young Master’s head!”

…What?

“What outrageous nonsense!”

“Am I wrong? Let’s admit it already. The Mount Heng Sword Sect is stronger than our family. If war breaks out, hundreds will be killed or injured, and in the worst case, our family will be wiped out. If we hand over the Third Young Master, who caused all this, won’t that settle everything?”

Was that supposed to be speech or a fart? It had been a while since I’d heard bullshit that impressive. The back of my neck tightened, and my chest began to ache.

But someone else stepped forward before I could.

“What did you just say?”

His voice was quiet, but it carried power. Its very quietness made it all the clearer.

It was Jin Wikyung. He looked around the room, his face expressionless.

“Whose. Head. Did you say we should offer?”

Frost coated every clipped syllable. The atmosphere was so chilling that even I shivered, but the White Tiger Hall Master immediately spoke up.

“Why, obviously the Third Young Master, the chief culprit behind this—ah.”

That bastard was bald, and he couldn’t read the room either. The White Tiger Hall Master let his words trail off, but it was already too late.

“So you intend to offer the Third Young Master’s head to the Mount Heng Sword Sect over something that hasn’t even been confirmed? Is that something a hall master of this family should say?”

“No, that isn’t what I meant…”

Overwhelmed by Jin Wikyung’s aura, the White Tiger Hall Master avoided his gaze. Jin Wikyung stared silently at him.

He wasn’t normally like this, which made him even scarier now that he was angry.

The White Tiger Hall Master’s deathly pale face made me feel as though ten years of indigestion had finally cleared. Jin Wikyung rose from his seat and looked coldly over the gathering.

“You all know the truth already.”

He swept his gaze across the room and spoke with conviction.

“The duel was fair, and Lee Seogeun’s poisoning was a conspiracy. Knowing that, are you suggesting we surrender to them out of fear?”

The members of the Council of Elders faction avoided his gaze. Jin Wikyung’s sneer deepened.

“I don’t know who placed it in their hands, but the Mount Heng Sword Sect now holds the hilt of a sword called justification. Whether they strike today or tomorrow—or whether the sword has already been drawn—it’s too late for us to turn this around. There is only one thing we can do. Fight back.”

“…”

“Do you want to live? Do you want to protect the family? If you truly do, ready the martial artists and prepare for war. Otherwise, cut off my head and my younger brother’s and offer them up. If wealth and glory are all you desire, I suppose that isn’t a bad option.”

A suffocating silence seized the main assembly hall.

If one person hadn’t spoken the next moment, we might have remained crushed beneath that silence for hours.

“Excellent.”

It was the man who had silently watched everything unfold until now.

The Head Elder.

The Head Elder.

Someone I needed to watch. The family’s highest-ranking elder and the head of the Council of Elders.

I recalled Jin Wikyung’s earlier Sound Transmission.

He told me to be careful.

Among all the NPCs, Jin Wikyung was my greatest ally and adviser.

I hadn’t taken his warning lightly. Whenever I had the chance, I kept an eye on the Head Elder.

And I reached one conclusion.

Fuck, I can’t figure him out at all.

If someone asked me to count every NPC I’d encountered since starting this godforsaken game, the number would easily exceed a hundred.

They each had their own expressions and personalities. The servant I met at the pleasure house wore the weary professional smile of someone ground down by life. The coachman who brought me here had a bumbling side, while the senior members of the family were surprisingly simple and hot-tempered.

But the Head Elder…

I can't read his expression.

He merely watched everything with that strange smile of his.

When the interrogation began. When the senior members of the different factions shouted at one another. Even now.

Clap. Clap. Clap.

The Head Elder's vigorous applause rang through the hall.

"I had always thought of you as a mere youngster, but before I knew it, the Lesser Family Head had grown into such a commanding martial artist. Excellent. That is how the Lesser Family Head of our family should conduct himself."

"I can only apologize for showing you such an unseemly side."

"Excessive humility can be mistaken for arrogance. You have nothing to apologize for."

Despite the Head Elder's praise, Jin Wikyung's expression remained stiff.

"May this old man add a word? What do you think, Lesser Family Head?"

"I will take it to heart."

As the Head Elder slowly rose, dozens of pairs of eyes fixed on him.

He was the family's most senior elder. In authority and standing within the family, he might even surpass Jin Wikyung.

The biggest problem was that he led the opposing faction, the Council of Elders.

Fuck. I'm screwed.

I began turning toward the door in preparation for the worst when the Head Elder's first words reached my ears.

"You're rotten to the core."

Huh?

I whipped my head around. The Head Elder still wore his usual strange smile.

Did I hear him wrong?

But I hadn't.

"Even beasts join forces and fight when an enemy enters their den. And yet men who are supposedly senior members of this family offer up the head of a direct-line member as a solution to stop a war. Heh. So men like this sit in our family council."

"N-no, Old Master. You misunderstand. It was merely…"

"White Tiger Hall Master."

At the Head Elder's icy call, the White Tiger Hall Master stiffened.

“Was I away for too long? Or is this what happened because the Family Head was absent?”

“N-no, Old Master.”

Judging by his expression alone, he looked like some ripped old man at the gym asking if you’d eaten. But his words were downright vicious.

What the hell is this?

What was going on? Why was he taking our side?

I darted my eyes around, but everyone else looked just as confused as I was. Both factions were visibly flustered.

“What do you think, Lesser Family Head?”

“I’m not sure what you mean.”

“If war is now inevitable, our first priority should be putting our own house in order. Shouldn’t we begin by cutting off the heads of those men who are little better than traitors?”

In the frozen silence, Jin Wikyung stared at the Head Elder for a long moment before letting out his answer like a sigh.

“That cannot be done.”

Whew. The White Tiger Hall Master breathed a sigh of relief.

Considering that he’d just suggested offering up my head, I was a little disappointed.

Should I suggest killing just him?

“Those men not only framed a direct-line member of the family, but even argued we should hand him over to the enemy. Don’t you think that is too lenient a response?”

“They have served our family faithfully for many years. I will consider their words a thoughtless remark made in the heat of the moment.”

The Head Elder laughed heartily.

“A thoughtless remark. A thoughtless remark, indeed. Yes, the Lesser Family Head’s capacity is greater than I imagined. You are truly worthy of your position. In that case, I will not hold them accountable. I offer my thanks to the Lesser Family Head for magnanimously forgiving the thoughtless words of these old men.”

When the Head Elder bowed, the others frantically waved their hands and bent at the waist in return.

“Oh, Old Master, please. We were the ones who failed to think matters through.”

“Please don’t do this.”

“You’re only making us more ashamed. Please…”

“Old Master…!”

Jin Wikyung was the one who had spared them, yet they were making a huge fuss over the Head Elder.

Go on. Put on a show. What a performance.

I clicked my tongue inwardly as I watched the spectacle.

Wait. A show?

An indescribable sense of wrongness swept over me. I hurriedly examined the people gathered around the Head Elder.

And then I saw it.

The faint smiles flickering across the lips of the Council of Elders members who had hounded me earlier.

No way…

Was this planned? All of it?

What were they trying to accomplish? Why? Countless questions rose and vanished. My thoughts were a complete mess.

Does Jin Wikyung know something?

I didn't even need to turn and look for him. The Head Elder was already raising Jin Wikyung's hand high in the air and shouting.

"With the Family Head absent, the Lesser Family Head is effectively our Family Head. I support him in this matter. If we unite behind him, then no matter how formidable our enemies may be, they will never dare challenge the Jin Family!"

The heated atmosphere. The chanting and cheers.

Where had I seen this before?

It all felt strangely familiar.

And then—

"Thank you."

The moment I saw the corners of Jin Wikyung's mouth tremble and the Head Elder's strange smile, I realized what it reminded me of.

An election campaign.

The Head Elder's figure overlapped with the politicians I'd seen on television.

The whole thing left a bad taste in my mouth, but once the Head Elder raised Jin Wikyung's hand, the meeting proceeded at a rapid pace.

All discussion of the duel, which the Council of Elders faction had so stubbornly dragged out, vanished. Instead, the meeting focused on the assumption that war was coming.

"How many men are currently available?"

"If we recall the martial artists stationed outside… roughly two hundred."

Two hundred?

I was impressed by the unexpectedly large number, but the next question shut me up.

“And if we select only elites of First Rate or higher?”

“Fewer than twenty. Of course, the number would be different if we included everyone present.”

Including the senior members, there were around thirty or forty First Rate masters.

I didn’t know much about how things worked here, but that seemed like a respectable number.

Just what I’d expect from an old, prestigious great family. Two hundred years of accumulated strength didn’t simply vanish.

“What about the Mount Heng Sword Sect?”

“At least three hundred martial artists have been confirmed so far.”

Three hundred. And that was the minimum, which put them more than a hundred men ahead.

But it was fine. Fights came down to numbers anyway—

“And they have more than fifty First Rate martial artists.”

This war was going to be tough.

Still, with masters like Jin Wikyung and Wipeng, we had a chance. They were high-level NPCs beyond the reach of my Qi Sense. The Head Elder probably belonged in the same category.

“Our family has three Peak masters in total: the Lesser Family Head, the Head Elder, and Sir Wipeng. The Mount Heng Sword Sect has five.”

…Fuck this. I couldn’t do it.

What? An old, prestigious great family? Two hundred years of history?

What the hell had these bastards been doing for two hundred years? From what I’d heard, the Mount Heng Sword Sect hadn’t even existed for thirty, yet their forces didn’t merely outmatch ours.

We were being steamrolled. Steamrolled.

Did the Black Death sweep through here last year or something?

Plague or no plague, I felt like I was about to lose my mind. As I stared at the yellowed ceiling of the meeting hall, I made a sudden decision.

I need to run.

Around four in the morning should do. Once everyone was asleep, I’d sneak over the wall and run as far away as possible.

At my current level, I could easily deal with five or six martial artists around the Heavenly Axe’s level.

I could scour every mountain I came across and rack up EXP and Fame—

“M-Mount Heng! A messenger pigeon has arrived from the Mount Heng Sword Sect!”

A martial artist had rushed into the hall and shouted.

Someone took the rolled sheet of paper and unfurled it. Red characters, as though written in blood, came into view.

Even without the System translating them, I could read them.

> Enemies Who Cannot Live Beneath the Same Sky

Irreconcilable enemies beneath heaven.

Jin Wikyung spoke with a grim expression.

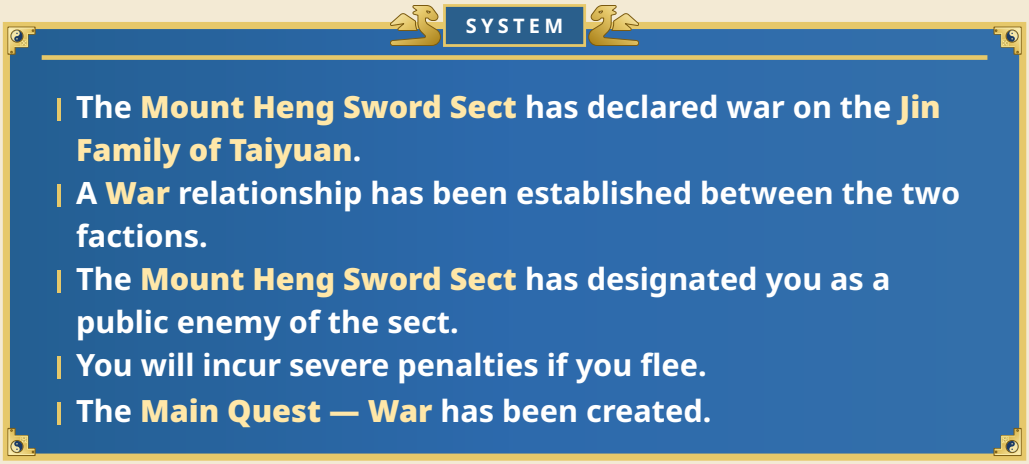
“From this moment onward, our family enters a state of war. Without my seal, no one may enter or leave the family grounds, regardless of rank or position. Maintain the strictest vigilance. Do not let so much as a single ant through. Understood?”

“Yes!”

“…”

With my mind half gone, I heard a System notification ring in my ears.

Ding.



…Heh. Heh heh heh.

Chapter 19

SYSTEM

Quest
War
A war that will decide the fate of two families has begun. In Murim, strength is the only way to prove yourself! Those who survive are strong, and only the strong will survive. May fortune favor you in battle.
Grade: Main Quest
Restriction: Jin Taekyung
Mission: Surrender or destruction of the Mount Heng Sword Sect (Incomplete)
Reward: ???
Failure: ???

Jin Wikyung spoke as I stared fixedly at the Quest Window.

“You look very tired.”

Tired? I was amazed that my current state of mind could be summed up in such a simple word.

Instead of answering, I looked at the steaming teacup.

The water’s already been spilled.

I had done my best, but I hadn’t been able to stop the war. The family council had turned into a war council, and with the Head Elder’s full support, Jin Wikyung had taken command without hesitation.

> Martial artists of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, assemble at the main family residence immediately!

Around daybreak, dozens of messenger pigeons took to the sky and messengers rode hard on horseback. A tight security net spread across the area.

When the family council finally broke up amid that tense atmosphere, Jin Wikyung, Wipeng, and I moved to the Lesser Family Head’s office.

“It was bound to happen someday. This isn’t your fault, Taekyung.”

Jin Wikyung’s warm words almost brought tears to my eyes. Not because I was moved, but because I felt so wronged.

Of course it wasn’t my fault!

And while we were on the subject, why the hell did that “bound to happen someday” have to happen now?

While I fumed inwardly, Wipeng suddenly spoke.

“My lord.”

“What is it?”

“The Head Elder… I simply cannot fathom his intentions.”

The Head Elder. The instant I heard that name, every other thought vanished. Of all the NPCs I had encountered in this game, he was the most unsettling.

At times, he seemed genuinely devoted to the family. At others, he reeked of a politician maneuvering for his own benefit.

I cautiously asked, “What kind of person is the Head Elder?”

“He is a martial artist of a high realm, and his schemes run deep. You could call him one of the most dangerous kinds of people in Murim.”

“He’s that dangerous?”

Jin Wikyung nodded gravely.

“Even the other Elders are little more than the Head Elder’s hands and feet. He rarely reveals himself, yet he has used the Council of Elders to win over influential members and bring them under his command. He has been doing so for decades.”

“Then his supporting us at the family council…”

“We cannot know for certain, but he must have some ulterior motive. Of that, I am sure.”

“We should have killed them all.”

Wipeng cut in abruptly, his voice cold.

“They are disloyal rebels. When the Head Elder proposed killing them, I honestly hoped you would accept.”

I had felt the same way. But that had merely been the Head Elder’s clever way of speaking—a suggestion that perhaps we should back down at this point.

If Jin Wikyung had pretended to be insane and accepted that proposal, the result would have been obvious.

“A bloodbath would have followed.”

“I know. That’s why I held back.”

The Jin Family of Taiyuan’s leadership would have split in two and continued fighting until they killed one another. If we lost, we would die. Even if we won, we would suffer tremendous damage.

Maybe that was exactly what the Head Elder wanted.

The Head Elder. An invisible hand.

The thought sent a chill down my spine. It fit the image I had formed of him perfectly.

A hyena of a politician, stepping back and waiting for his moment.

Jin Wikyung tilted his teacup.

“But that is only a guess. We do not know what the Head Elder truly intends. He is still one of the family’s elders, and a powerful ally. Be wary of him, but do not make an enemy of him. For now, we need to overcome the situation rather than distrust everyone around us.”

He was telling me to see the forest, not the trees.

The problem was, the forest itself wasn’t exactly in good shape.

As if he had read my thoughts, Wipeng brought up that very subject.

“The situation is grim as well. According to our outside sources, rumors that Lee Seogeun was poisoned to death are spreading, and our family’s reputation is plummeting.”

“In only half a day?”

“Yes. All of Shanxi Province is in an uproar.”

Concern clouded Jin Wikyung’s face.

“That is fast. Far too fast. Someone is definitely behind this.”

There was no internet here, and yet rumors had already spread across this vast land. It was certainly strange.

An invisible enemy.

Who could it be? A third faction? A scheme staged by the Mount Heng Sword Sect itself?

I hoped it was the latter if possible. Nothing was more dangerous than an enemy who remained unseen.

“The public still seems unsure what to believe, but the other sects…”

“Still no replies?”

Wipeng lowered his head instead of answering.

As soon as Jin Wikyung learned of Lee Seogeun’s poisoning, he had sent requests for aid to the other small and mid-sized sects in Shanxi Province. Apparently, every last one of them had come to nothing.

This just keeps getting worse.

Do I really need to run?

I was looking out the window, thinking that, when—

Flap, flap.

A pigeon landed on the windowsill with a flutter of wings.

“…Looks like we got a reply.”

The Jin Family of Taiyuan.

As the carriage approached the grand signboard emblazoned with majestic calligraphy and the martial artists guarding the main gate with stern auras, the coachman slackened the reins.

“Stop! State your identity and purpose!”

The gate guard called out loudly and blocked the carriage. Given the circumstances, there was tension in his voice.

And there was something else.

They’re no ordinary visitors.

The coachman holding the reins gave off the unmistakable air of a trained martial artist, while the four-horse carriage was both lavish and dignified.

But why do they look familiar?

The coachman and the carriage alike. Where had he seen them before?

The question vanished the moment he saw the coachman’s sharp eyes. That aura, that gaze. This was certainly no ordinary visitor.

The gate guard swallowed and spoke again.

“Please state your identity and purpose.”

The carriage door opened, and a red silk slipper touched lightly to the ground.

Then a voice as gentle as a spring breeze drifted into the guard’s ear.

“I’m from Honghwaru. My name is a secret.”

Her face appeared along with her voice.

The gate guard’s eyes went glassy. He wasn’t the only one. Everyone who saw the woman reacted the same way.

A vacant voice escaped the gate guard’s mouth.

“Ah, a secret… Then what brings you here?”

The woman—Wolhwa—answered with a bewitching smile.

“Hmm. To collect an unpaid tab?”

“How have you been? Didn’t you miss me?”

I froze halfway to my feet.

A face I could never forget. And one that had no business being here.

“Wolhwa?”

The first NPC I had met in this game. A courtesan at Honghwaru and my—Jin Taekyung’s—pinky.[72] That thing.

Why is noona[73] coming out of there…?

“So you do remember me. Our Young Master Jin.”

---

[72] In Korea, a raised pinky can refer to someone’s girlfriend or mistress.

[73] Noona is a familiar Korean term a man uses for an older woman.

Wolhwa giggled. She was pretty, her laugh was pretty, and when a pretty girl laughed, she looked even prettier…

No, this is not the time for that.

I whispered in a hushed voice.

“What are you doing here? No, forget it. Leave. Get out.”

I nudged Wolhwa repeatedly with my elbow.

This is driving me insane.

Of all times, she had to show up now.

The entire family was on high alert. If word got around that I had summoned a courtesan, I couldn’t even imagine what would happen to my reputation. Just thinking about it made me dizzy.

“Stop poking me. It tickles.”

“Fine, so hurry up and leave. There are other people here. What are you trying to pull, barging in all of a sudden? We’re expecting an important guest, too.”

The timing was goddamn awful. I was in the Lesser Family Head’s office, waiting for a guest from a sect called the Lower District Sect.

Naturally, Jin Wikyung and Wipeng were there with me.

“Taekyung.”

Jin Wikyung called my name. Without even turning around, I hurriedly waved my hands.

“Ah, it’s not what you think. I didn’t call her. She says she’s leaving now. Right?”

Wolhwa’s laughter rose in pitch.

“Our Young Master Jin is as adorable as ever. But you’ve got it wrong. I came here on business.”

“Hey, none of that ‘our Young Master Jin’ stuff. I’m going to live chastely from today onward. I won’t have any business with your side anymore, so hurry up and leave.”

“Hmm. No.”

Then there was no helping it. I would have to move her by force.

In desperation, I wrapped my arms around Wolhwa’s waist and hoisted her up—

“Huh?”

What the hell? Why couldn’t I lift her?

Wolhwa looked slender, but was she so big-boned that she weighed a lot?

That’s bullshit.

How high was my Strength stat? With pure physical strength alone, I could grind a rock into powder. And yet I couldn’t lift one female NPC, which meant—

“Taekyung?”

Ignoring Jin Wikyung’s second call, I furtively let go and heightened my Qi Sense.

“Ahahahahaha! This is driving me insane!”

As Wolhwa laughed herself to death, a Level Window appeared above her head. At the same time, I heard Jin Wikyung call my name for the third time.

“Taekyung, greet her. She is the Branch Leader of the Lower District Sect’s Shanxi branch…”

Ah. Ahhh.

I want to die.

“Greetings. I am Wolhwa, Branch Leader of the Lower District Sect’s Shanxi branch.”

Eun Sowol.

No, for now, let’s just call her Wolhwa.

She was different from how she had acted until now. Every movement carried the grace and elegance of a noblewoman.

“I am Jin Wikyung of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.”

“I’m Wipeng.”

I kept my mouth shut like mute Samryong,[74] and Wolhwa flashed me a grin.

It was an ominous grin.

Don’t. Don’t smile.

Don’t talk to me. Please don’t.

“It seems there is still one person I haven’t been introduced to.”

Her gaze stung. Someone stepped on my foot beneath the table.

Feeling as though I were coughing up blood, I forced myself to speak.

“…I’m Jin Taekyung.”

“Yes. I look forward to getting along with you too, Young Master Jin.”

“Ahem.”

With a cough, Jin Wikyung glanced at me.

“I didn’t realize you were acquainted with my younger brother.”

“He’s a regular at our establishment—the Honghwaru in Taiyuan. It also serves as our sect’s Shanxi branch.”

“Ah. A regular…”

[74] Samryong is the mute protagonist of a well-known Korean short story; his name literally means “Three Dragons.”

I avoided everyone's gaze. Wolhwa let out a burst of laughter, then brought up the real subject.

"Shall we talk business now?"

I had felt it several times before, but she really was a refreshingly direct woman. Jin Wikyung and Wipeng also turned their attention away from me and joined the conversation.

"First, allow me to offer my sincere thanks for the Lower District Sect's assistance."

"Think nothing of it."

"But may I ask why you wish to help our family?"

Wolhwa smiled sweetly at Jin Wikyung's question.

"The reason… I will tell you if necessary. First, we are doing this for our sect's benefit."

"Benefit. What specific compensation do you want?"

"Half of the shops and assets owned by the Mount Heng Sword Sect."

"Good."

"My lord!"

Wipeng hurriedly stepped forward, but Jin Wikyung paid him no heed.

Even Wolhwa looked slightly surprised.

"That was quick."

"I have wagered everything our family has."

"Has this already been agreed upon?"

"I am the Lesser Family Head. With Father absent, I hold the authority of the acting Family Head."

"I hear the opposition within your family is considerable. The Council of Elders, for example?"

"As expected of the Lower District Sect. Your information travels fast."

"It cannot be helped. Information is essential if one hopes to survive in this harsh Murim. We need at least this much savvy to make a living, don't we?"

As I watched Wolhwa smile, a thought suddenly occurred to me.

That information. Did I—or rather, did Jin Taekyung—let it slip?

I had been wondering where I had heard the name Lower District Sect before. It was one of those information-gathering sects that appeared all the time in martial-arts novels. In other words, Wolhwa, its Branch Leader, was a veteran information broker.

On top of that, she was an outstanding Level 50 martial artist. A woman like her had disguised herself as a courtesan to meet a guy like Jin Taekyung?

Even a dog would laugh at that.

I stared at Wolhwa.

She was dazzling enough to make me wonder if a goddess had descended from heaven. Every time she smiled, I thought of a rose. Only now could I see the sharp thorns hidden beneath all that splendor.

Jin Wikyung spoke, his expression stiff.

“Then tell us the second reason.”

Wolhwa answered with her usual radiant smile.

“Because I like Young Master Jin.”

“Excuse me?”

“He’s young, handsome, well-built, and has such a cute personality.”

“…”

“…”

How much of that was sincere, and how much was a joke?

Chapter 20

The hour-long negotiation was finally drawing to a close.

“Half the shops owned by the Mount Heng Sword Sect, plus exclusive rights to the pleasure district. Is that correct?”

“Correct. And your sect?”

“From this moment onward, we will sell no information to any sect in Shanxi Province other than the Jin Family of Taiyuan. We will also devote all our resources to gathering and delivering information about the war.”

These were the terms they had settled on after dozens of rounds of back-and-forth.

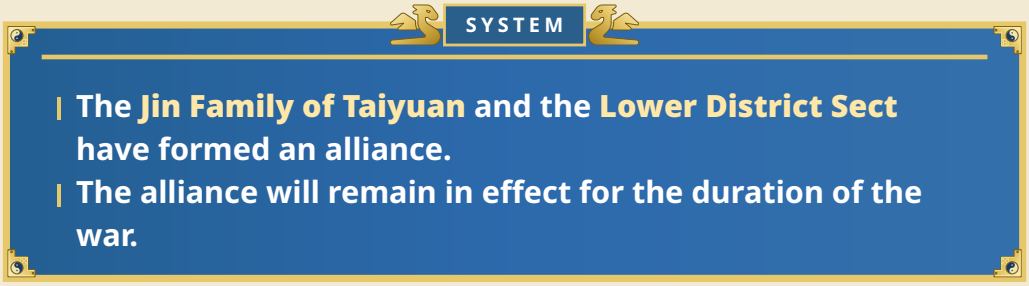
Jin Wikyung and Wolhwa carefully checked everything one last time for loopholes, then drew up and exchanged the document.

“We’re officially in the same boat now. I look forward to working with you, Lesser Family Head.”

“Likewise.”

The moment they shook hands—

Ding.



Even this gets a notification.

Then again, something similar had appeared when the war with the Mount Heng Sword Sect began.

With the Lower District Sect joining us, have our chances of winning gone up a little?

The Lower District Sect specialized in information.

Wolhwa had confidently claimed that all information in Shanxi Province passed through her hands. If that was true, they would be an enormous help.

Nothing is more important than information.

I didn’t know how things worked in Murim, but I knew that much. Depending on how it was used, information could be a sword, a shield, or even a bomb capable of turning the tide all at once.

Hopefully, Wolhwa would bring us something like that.

“Then I’ll be taking my leave.”

“Please understand that I can’t go far while people are watching.”

“Of course.”

It's finally over.

Wipeng bowed with his usual impassive expression, and I offered an awkward half-bow of my own.

"Goodbye."

Wolhwa's eyes curved into crescents as she looked at me.

"Young Master Jin, you have to come with me."

"Huh?"

"Aren't you going to see me off?"

"…Why would I?"

"Because we spent such a hot night together?"

The blunt hit left me stunned for a moment. I'd told this woman to bring us information, so why was the first thing she spread X-rated information?

And in front of everyone, too.

"Oh?"

"A h-hot night? Together?"

Wipeng looked between Wolhwa and me with open interest, while an earthquake shook Jin Wikyung's pupils.

"Taekyung, is that true? Is it really true?"

After a long silence, I answered.

"I'll see her out."

I grabbed Wolhwa by the wrist and dashed out. Behind me, Jin Wikyung's mournful voice echoed.

"My little brother!"

Wolhwa was a rare beauty. With her slender figure and splendid clothing, she couldn't help but draw attention.

"Did our family always have a beauty like that?"

"Of course not. She's an outsider."

"An outsider?"

"Yeah. A friend at the Gate Guard Pavilion says she's a courtesan from Honghwaru."

"Ah, that ridiculously expensive Honghwaru. I know the place. Wait, why would a courtesan come here now?"

"They say she came to collect the Third Young Master's unpaid tab. She probably wants her money before the fighting turns into all-out war."

"…Huh. The Third Young Master really gets up to all kinds of things, doesn't he?"

Their whispers wormed their way into my ears. Wolhwa, who had been walking ahead and humming to herself, suddenly glanced back.

“Young Master Jin, why are you so far behind?”

I answered sullenly.

“If we walk together, people will get the wrong idea. They’re already spreading ridiculous rumors…”

“Oh, you mean the unpaid tab?”

Yeah. That.

“That rumor isn’t false.”

Wolhwa smiled brightly.

“When the gate guards asked why I’d come, I told them I was here to collect an unpaid tab. It isn’t a complete lie.”

“What?”

“Were you planning to announce our alliance to the whole world?”

“…No.”

But why did she have to use my name? My image was already a complete disaster.

If a rumor like this spread in the middle of a war, I’d never be able to deny it. My reputation as a piece of trash would be set in stone.

“You’ve already been falsely accused of poisoning someone. Compared to that, being known as a courtesan’s kept man isn’t so bad. Given your usual behavior, everyone will find it believable.”

That was strangely persuasive. I found myself nodding, only to realize that something in her words felt off.

“Falsely accused?”

Come to think of it, she hadn’t mentioned Lee Seogeun even once. She had negotiated the terms like a meticulous businesswoman, then formed an alliance with us as though it were the most natural thing in the world.

What exactly is she relying on?

Wolhwa smiled faintly at my suspicious look.

“Young Master Jin, have you forgotten who I am?”

“The Lower District Sect’s Shanxi Branch Leader…”

My eyes widened.

Information. She had information.

Information proving I wasn’t the culprit!

I hurried to Wolhwa’s side.

“Can you clear my name? Do you really have information like that?”

Lee Seogeun’s poisoning had started this war. If we could prove that the whole thing was someone else’s conspiracy, we could stop it.

But Wolhwa's next words shattered that hope.

"No. I don't."

What?

"Then why did you form an alliance with us?"

"Because I'm a merchant."

Wolhwa continued in a light, cheerful voice.

"We of the Lower District Sect are merchants at heart. We act according to a strict calculation of profit and loss."

"Then this makes even less sense."

"Oh? Why?"

"The Mount Heng Sword Sect is stronger than we are. If you're weighing profit and loss, shouldn't you side with them?"

"You're honest. Or perhaps I should say naïve."

Wolhwa let out a quiet laugh.

"This is an investment. It's the result of placing both sides on a scale and analyzing them coldly."

"So as long as you profit, nothing else matters? Even if I really did poison Lee Seogeun?"

"Young Master Jin, what do you think it means that the Lower District Sect's Shanxi branch devoted all its resources to this investigation, yet still couldn't uncover the truth?"

I hesitated, but Wolhwa didn't wait for an answer.

"It's simple. Either you're truly innocent, or you covered your tracks so thoroughly that not even we could find them."

"Ah."

"Neither possibility is a loss for me. If it's the former, then your side has legitimacy. If it's the latter, then it proves the Jin Family of Taiyuan is exceptionally capable."

I was more than a little surprised. I hadn't realized you could look at it that way.

Everything came down to a cold calculation of profit and loss. Now I understood exactly what Wolhwa meant when she called herself a merchant.

Knowing that someone like her was on our side was reassuring.

But…

"You're overlooking one important thing. If I'm innocent, who actually poisoned Lee Seogeun?"

That was the heart of the war—the largest piece of the puzzle, and one Wolhwa had failed to find.

If the Lower District Sect had discovered the culprit's identity, she would have brought that information today.

Wolhwa sighed.

“I’m ashamed to say we haven’t uncovered anything yet. But our sect is doing everything it can. Ah, we’re almost there.”

There were still plenty of things I wanted to ask, but I had no choice but to fall silent when I noticed the approaching gate guards.

Our alliance with the Lower District Sect is still a secret.

A four-horse carriage, apparently the one Wolhwa had arrived in, came into view. The gate guards stood in a wide circle around it, and even from here, I could feel the strange tension in the air.

Did something happen?

I channeled internal energy into my eyes and ears. My enhanced senses soon picked up the gate guards’ tense voices.

“He’s a master. No doubt about it. At least Supreme First Rate, perhaps even Peak. See the whip at his waist? He must wield it like a ghost.”

“A master of that caliber volunteering to serve as a coachman? I suppose a peerless beauty really is something else.”

The martial artists speaking to each other sounded fairly experienced, and their voices were deadly serious. A younger martial artist cautiously murmured:

“But if he’s that skilled, doesn’t his posture have too many openings? And he’s so thin…”

The senior martial artists clicked their tongues.

“Kid, this fellow and I have ten years of experience at the gate-watch office. We can tell from a person’s eyes alone. What the hell would a little shit like you know, butting into your elders’ conversation?”

“Tsk. Openings? Those look like openings to you? Can’t you see the composure and natural ease that only true masters possess?”

“Then what about his temples? Masters with profound internal energy have bulging temples.”

“That’s just Returning to Simplicity…”

Unfortunately, the conversation ended there. The gate guards noticed us standing blankly in front of the main gate and scattered.

Thanks to them, I learned the identity of the Peak master who wielded a whip like a ghost—the romantic martial artist who had volunteered to become a coachman after falling for Wolhwa’s beauty.

“Young Master, do you remember me?”

“…”

As if I could forget.

That deep voice. Those sharp eyes, practically radiating the aura of a master.

It was the coachman who had brought me to the Jin Family of Taiyuan a few days ago.

I never expected to see him here. As I stood there speechless, Wolhwa spoke up.

“I hear the two of you are acquainted. Last time, you passed through life and death together and formed a deep friendship that transcended age and status…”

No. That’s not what happened. Please stop.

I tugged at Wolhwa’s sleeve, but it was already too late. The coachman smiled gently and opened his mouth.

“Even now, whenever I close my eyes, the memories of that day remain vivid. The Heavenly Axe… He was truly a formidable bastard.”

The gate guards, who had been listening intently, exclaimed.

“Oh!”

“The Heavenly Axe… Surely he means that Heavenly Axe from the Eighteen Strongholds of Green Forest?”

“Wasn’t he an infamous Peak master of Green Forest? To kill a man like that, this gentleman must be…”

“…”

They seemed to have gotten something seriously wrong.

I had no idea where to begin correcting them—or where to stop.

As I stood there blankly, the coachman suddenly pulled me into a hug.

“If not for you, Young Master, I would have been in serious trouble.”

This man had a strange way of putting things. Without me, he would’ve been drinking a cup of makgeolli[75] at the summit of Mount Beimang[76] by now.

“Could you let go of me first? Then we can talk…”

I was just about to pry him off when someone muttered:

“Yama Whip.[77] The master of the whip arts who vanished without a trace more than ten years ago. It’s him. It has to be.”

A ripple passed through the gate guards.

“Yama Whip? You mean that Peak master who traveled the realm beating down remnants of the Demonic Path?”

“I’ve heard that name too. A master who stood between the orthodox and unorthodox paths, with no known sect or past… Come to think of it, didn’t his trail disappear somewhere near Shanxi?”

“Then the Third Young Master—no, our Young Master—is acquainted with Great Hero Yama Whip.”

“And that’s not all. He must have played a major role in taking down the Heavenly Axe.”

“Oh! Ohhh!”

---

[75] Makgeolli is a cloudy Korean rice wine.

[76] Mount Beimang is traditionally associated with burial grounds and is commonly invoked as a destination for the dead.

[77] Yama is a Buddhist lord of the underworld associated with judgment of the dead.

Hot, admiring gazes poured in from every direction. Perhaps realizing that something was wrong, the coachman tried to pull away, but my hand clamped firmly around his shoulder.

“Young Master?”

I gave him the brightest smile in the world.

“To meet you again like this—Yama. Whip. Great Hero!”

My words were oil thrown onto a fire.

“Woooah!”

The excited gate guards stomped their feet, while Wolhwa doubled over, desperately trying to hold back her laughter.

Ding.

SYSTEM

- Rumors about the Poisoner are dying down!
- Rumors about the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi are gaining credibility!
- Fame increases by 20!
- Passionate supporters have appeared!

As the beautiful System notifications rang out, a famous saying came to mind.

The perfect lie… is a true story.

The young man stared at the ceiling with his eyes wide open. The light had gone out of his once-bright black eyes, and his face was twisted with fear and pain.

“Seogeun. My son.”

A large, rough hand caressed the young man’s face. The intense poisonous energy that had seeped in through the skin was stopped by internal energy that surged up instinctively.

“How did this happen to you?”

The middle-aged man’s voice was thick with grief.

He had grown up a complete orphan and spent decades in Murim.

He had met countless people and watched just as many leave. From his days as a green twenty-year-old wandering martial artist to the moment he became the master of a sect, he had accumulated more memories than he could count.

“Did it hurt? Were you so bitter that you couldn’t even close your eyes?”

He gazed down at his son’s wide-open eyes. Every blood vessel had burst, staining them red.

His son had barely reached twenty. Bloody tears flowed from the eyes of the father standing before his poisoned child.

“My son.”

The poisonous energy that had entered through his hand was spreading throughout his body. Within only a few breaths, his head began to spin and his limbs went numb.

Such a deadly poison.

He could vividly picture his son’s final moments—his entire body locked rigid, unable even to struggle.

“I will remember this pain.”

The next moment, immense internal energy rose like wildfire and drove back the poison. The poison consuming his insides vanished in an instant, as though torn apart by a pack of hundreds of wolves.

“I will repay them a hundredfold. A thousandfold.”

The Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect, Blood Wolf Sword Lee Cheonbaek, left his son’s corpse behind and walked away.

When he opened the pavilion door, he saw the black night sky and the torches flickering beneath it.

Around two hundred fully armed men stood outside. The man at their head bowed.

“Father.”

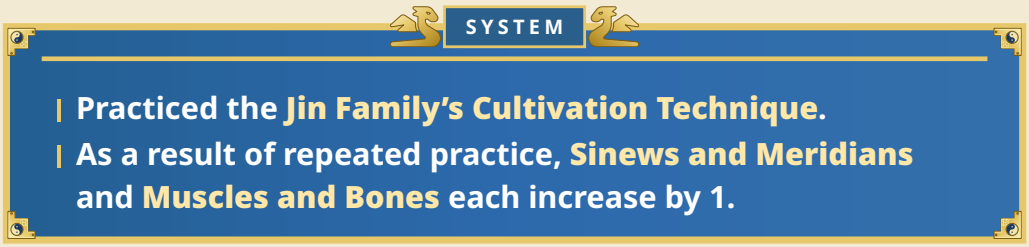
Lee Cheonbaek nodded to his eldest son.

“Go. Tonight… our revenge begins.”

That night, around two hundred martial artists departed the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

Chapter 21

Ding.



"Whew."

I opened my eyes with a deep exhale. In the predawn gloom, the candlelit room shimmered amber.

Failed again.

My fist clenched in the silence.

How many attempts had that been? Twenty? Thirty? The result was what mattered. Once again, I had failed to draw out the hardened mass of internal energy.

Should I take comfort in the fact that I'm getting better?

I was gradually getting used to handling internal energy. If I had been a C-rank Hunter instead of an F-rank—or at least a D-rank—I would have adapted much faster. But reality was cold and unforgiving.

The steady improvement in my Muscles and Bones and Sinews and Meridians must be helping too.

Internal energy flowed through the body's meridians. The more I practiced my cultivation technique and improved those two attributes, the wider and sturdier the pathways became. Compared to when I had started, I could circulate far more internal energy at a much faster speed.

It's all thanks to the Skill Points.

The ten Skill Points awarded with every level-up were doing their job. Nothing nourished my Muscles and Bones and Sinews and Meridians better.

Open Skill Window.

SYSTEM

Skill Window
Lv. 17 Jin Taekyung
Cultivation Technique: Jin Family's Cultivation Technique (Fourth Stage)
Martial Arts: Jin Family's Spear Technique (Fifth Stage) / Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique (Fifth Stage)
Muscles and Bones: 105
Remaining Points: 0

I can see a chance.

The impregnable fortress was gradually shrinking and growing flimsier. If I kept hammering away at it, I felt as though the gate would soon open.

Fortunately, I might lack talent, but I had persistence.

I'll keep trying until it works.

I was about to sit cross-legged again and circulate my qi when my senses, sharpened by the many earlier attempts, picked up an unusual sound.

This is…

A low, droning hum. At first, it sounded like a swarm of bees, but it was actually the murmur of many people.

What's going on?

I channeled internal energy into my ears. Perhaps because of the distance, it still wasn't nearly enough to make out everything clearly.

But it was enough.

One word stood out among the indistinct voices.

Battle!

The Mount Heng Sword Sect. The battle had finally begun.

I hurriedly uncrossed my legs and sprang to my feet. Then I leaped through the half-open window.

I landed like a cat. Before me, lights came on across the pavilions one by one.

So, in the end…

It had begun.

Twenty-five.

That was the number of corpses laid out in orderly rows.

When I saw them lying there like dead trees, every trace of life gone, I was left speechless.

"This is…"

I was a Hunter. I had fought countless battles and witnessed countless deaths.

Poisoned, cut apart, crushed, blown to pieces…

The manner of death varied wildly depending on the monster involved. But all those deaths had one thing in common.

Every victim had been an adult.

Adulthood was one of the basic conditions for awakening. No one knew what the exact standard was or why it existed. It was simply a rule accepted as naturally as the existence of Gates.

That was why none of the countless deaths I had witnessed had ever involved a child.

This is a game. It's just a game.

I kept repeating the words to myself. But the sight before me was too horrific to dismiss so easily.

BLOOD

The character had been carved into their foreheads. Torchlight reflected off the dried blood.

More than ten children had gone cold like that.

The oldest could not have been more than middle-school age. Some looked even younger.

Every single one of them was dead.

"Urgh!"

One of the martial artists holding a torch in a trembling hand doubled over. Soon, the sound of retching rang out from all around us.

Then a hand reached down and picked up the torch he had dropped.

"Somi. Yes, that was her name. On the day I became acting Family Head, the Branch Leader of Eung-hyeon bragged about her until his mouth ran dry, calling her his treasure."

It was Jin Wikyung. His eyes dim and lifeless, he raised the torch and shone it over the children's faces.

One by one.

Each time another face was revealed, he spoke the child's name without fail.

After naming the last child, Jin Wikyung looked at me.

"Do you know who these children are?"

"…No."

"They were members of our family sent to the branches in Eung-hyeon, Saneum, and Sakju."

I didn't know where those places were. But I could guess what fate the children's parents had met.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect's intentions made me sick.

Fucking psychotic bastards.

Look. We can slaughter even children this young. Soon, you'll end up the same way.

I could almost hear the voice of the Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect, a man whose face I had never even seen.

"This is all my fault. Even children who knew no martial arts were slaughtered so cruelly…"

Jin Wikyung was blaming himself in a trembling voice when—

"That is the essence of war, Lesser Family Head."

The Head Elder appeared, stroking his silver beard. His gaze remained calm as it swept over the corpses.

"Victory and defeat—neither comes without death. The Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect… Blood Wolf Sword Lee Cheonbaek, was it? As one would expect of a former wandering martial artist, he understands war well. These children alone make that clear."

The casual way he said it sent a chill through me.

What the hell is wrong with this AI?

This NPC was missing something. That made him seem all the more dangerous.

I kept my mouth shut. Jin Wikyung's face twisted as he spoke.

"…Please choose your words carefully. They are members of our family."

"No. Those children are casualties of war. Countless more will die from now on. Perhaps even at this very moment."

"Head Elder. I told you to watch your words."

Jin Wikyung growled. Had we been alone, he would have been ready to start something right then and there.

But the Head Elder remained calm.

"Did you not anticipate this?"

He had suddenly switched to informal speech, yet it came so naturally that neither Jin Wikyung nor I even registered the change.

"Saneum, Eung-hyeon, Sakju. All three lay within the Mount Heng Sword Sect's reach. When you sent messenger pigeons to each branch the day before, did you truly never consider that something like this might happen?"

"That…"

"You knew harm would come to them. Sending those pigeons was nothing more than a way to ease your conscience."

"Enough. Please, enough."

"It was an excellent decision. If you had tried to save the branches, you would have had to run for seven days and nights without rest, then fight the enemy while utterly exhausted. Isn't that right?"

Jin Wikyung stared at the Head Elder with a pale face. Fresh blood flowed between his tightly clenched fingers.

"I—I…"

"Everything comes with a sacrifice. Look at the bigger picture. You are the Lesser Family Head responsible for the hundreds of family members of the Jin Family of Taiyuan."

Jin Wikyung's body trembled. The anger and sorrow drained from his face, leaving behind a strange emptiness.

"Sacrifice…"

"The war has only just begun. Isn't that so, Lesser Family Head?"

The Head Elder offered a fist-and-palm salute.[78] I bit down hard on my lip.

What an impossible old man to figure out.

The Head Elder was clearly dangerous. His position in the family, his utterly unreadable motives, even the psychopathic way he could look at the corpses of children without twitching an eyebrow…

But…

He's right.

From my perspective, Jin Wikyung was a good Lesser Family Head. He was deeply humane and sharp-minded.

But the moment he saw the corpses, he had been shaken more than anyone. Without the Head Elder's cold rebuke, it would have taken him a long time to regain his composure.

He helped him. The Head Elder, of all people…

Are they enemies in peacetime but united during war?

If so, that's a relief.

I was looking at the Head Elder with a mixture of suspicion and relief when he spoke.

"So the Third Young Master is here as well."

My heart dropped at the sight of those shrewd gray eyes. It was the first time the Head Elder had spoken to me.

"Greetings, Head Elder."

I did my best to hide my surprise, but the Head Elder regarded me with a strange smile.

"I've been hearing an interesting rumor within the family lately. Something about… the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi?"

I never expected to hear that ridiculous nickname from the Head Elder.

[78] A fist-and-palm salute is a traditional martial greeting made by bringing a closed fist and an open palm together.

“I’ve also heard that you are acquainted with Yama Whip.[79] They say you joined forces with him to defeat the Heavenly Axe.”

“Cough. Cough.”

“Are you ill?”

“N-no. I’m just feeling a little chilly.”

“Oh dear. That won’t do for someone who is about to accomplish great things.”

My awkward smile slowly froze.

“What do you mean?”

“Someone capable of helping eliminate a formidable fiend like the Heavenly Axe is a valuable asset in battle. Surely that rumor isn’t false.”

“…”

“Therefore, as a direct-line member of our family, I believe it is only natural that you fight at the forefront. What do you think, Lesser Family Head?”

The Head Elder smiled faintly. Jin Wikyung stared at that smile for a moment, then asked me, “What do you think?”

Checkmate.

The moment the word came to mind, a familiar notification rang out.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Quest
Mission
You have been appointed captain of a White Tiger Hall reconnaissance squad.
From now on, lead the subordinates assigned to you on missions and build merit!
Grade: Repeatable Quest
Restriction: Jin Taekyung
Mission: Earn 100 Merit Points (0 / 100)
Reward: Changes according to the degree of success.
Failure: Changes according to the degree of failure.

I closed the Quest Window. I had already seen it several times, and besides, the White Tiger Hall martial artist who had stepped away earlier had just returned.

“These are the supplies issued to captains.”

A sword.

[79] Yama is the lord of the underworld in Buddhist tradition.

A black martial uniform with a crude white tiger embroidered on it.

And a smooth wooden plaque that smelled strongly of fresh wood.

That was everything.

“The newly assigned members are waiting at the reconnaissance squad’s quarters. The location is…”

Fortunately, I knew the place. A pavilion I had passed several times had been assigned as the reconnaissance squad’s quarters.

After leaving White Tiger Hall, I first ducked into an empty alley.

Open Inventory.

Ten seconds was enough to put on the entire uniform. I changed clothes, shoved the sword deep into my Inventory, then pulled out the Sharp Spear.

Until now, I had thoroughly enjoyed the privileges of being the Third Young Master in a lavish private pavilion.

But things were different from here on out.

It’s communal living, right?

We would eat together and sleep together. I couldn’t exactly perform the magic trick of making a two-meter[80] iron spear pop out of thin air whenever I needed it.

Once I hung the wooden plaque engraved with Captain at my waist, I felt like I’d become Ordinary Martial Artist #1 of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

Not just an ordinary martial artist. I’m a reconnaissance squad captain.

Captain of a White Tiger Hall reconnaissance squad.

I had never expected to receive a position like this.

Of course, there had been some fierce disagreement over it. The Head Elder wanted to place me in a combat unit aligned with the Council of Elders, while Jin Wikyung had vehemently opposed him.

In the end, they compromised.

I would serve as a reconnaissance captain, a position whose duties were not especially difficult—but under the command of the White Tiger Hall Master, who belonged to the Council of Elders’ faction.

Before I knew what was happening, the position was mine.

I never imagined this was how I’d get dragged into the war.

I could have just told them to do whatever the hell they wanted, but I held back. The first reason was the Head Elder’s eyes, which flashed every time Yama Whip was mentioned.

The second reason was…

The children.

It’s a game. It’s all graphics, nothing more than an illusion.

[80] Two meters is about 6.6 ft.

No matter how many times I repeated that to myself, the corpses and the character carved into their foreheads kept flickering before my eyes.

Part of my decision had been emotional.

This wasn't good.

Don't get too invested. I can't confuse reality with the game.

Things like this had been happening more and more often lately. At first, I had treated the NPCs like people for fun. But these days, I was actually thinking of them as real people and forming relationships with them.

Every time I caught myself doing it, I was startled.

Maybe it was a side effect of playing the game for too long.

"Is this it?"

Before I knew it, I had reached the reconnaissance squad's quarters. My mouth fell open.

Cracked wood and a musty smell.

Good lord, there was even a beehive under the eaves. I had never seen one that big before.

Just like a company that treats you like family…

Look at those benefits.

Or maybe this was a mean-spirited prank by the White Tiger Hall Master, who disliked me. Perhaps he couldn't openly give me grief yet, so this was his way of telling me to eat shit.

All right. Let's give it a shot.

I took a deep breath, opened the door, and stepped inside.

Creeeak.

The old floor wailed beneath my foot, the sound especially ominous.

Chapter 22

The smell of mold hit me the moment I stepped into the room. The place reminded me of an army barracks, and the members of the reconnaissance squad were waiting inside.

Ten people.

I activated Qi Sense and looked them over.

As my gaze passed from one unfamiliar face to the next, Level displays popped into view.

Level 14. Level 15. Level 14…

Most of them were around the same level. Then I reached the ninth man.

The number jumped sharply. His face was familiar, too.

Hyuk Mujin?

It was the same Hyuk Mujin who had picked a fight with me when I first arrived at the Jin Family of Taiyuan a few days ago. When our eyes met, his lips curled into a smirk.

“What a pleasure to see you again, Third. Young. Master.”

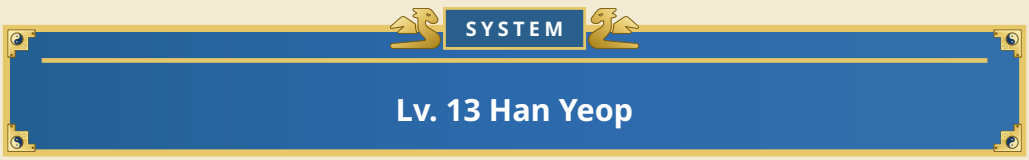
I stared at his openly hostile smile.

“From now on, call me Squad Leader.”

“…As you wish.”

Ignoring Hyuk Mujin’s piercing stare, I turned to the tenth member of the reconnaissance squad. The young man who had been beaming ever since I arrived shot to his feet.

“Young Master—no, Squad Leader! I look forward to serving under you.”



It seemed the war had forced some people into new assignments. The White Tiger Hall clerk I’d met earlier had said the reconnaissance squads were made up of martial artists drawn from several different posts.

Hyuk Mujin originally belonged to the Gate Guard Pavilion, too.

Maybe that was why the atmosphere in the room felt so unsettled.

The squad members watched me with a mixture of awkwardness toward the strangers around them, anxiety about the war, and a hint of anticipation.

I spoke first.

“I’m Jin Taekyung, the newly appointed leader of this White Tiger Hall reconnaissance squad. I look forward to working with you.”

Clap, clap, clap.

Someone’s lonely applause died out within a few seconds, and Han Yeop lowered his hand with an embarrassed expression.

The atmosphere was even stiffer than I’d expected.

But that’s not necessarily a bad thing.

We were at war. It was better for them to stay tense than to laugh and socialize like we were all here to make friends.

Of course, too much tension could become poisonous. Easing it at the right time was also part of my job as squad leader.

That much, I’m used to.

Newbie Hunters froze the moment they entered a Gate for the first time. Real combat was different from practice. Everything they had learned and trained for at the Hunter training center flew off into outer space, and they were overwhelmed by the primal scent of death.

That was why Guild veterans helped the rookies keep their heads together. I’d been one of those veterans.

Though I was assigned exclusively to F-ranks.

The power levels were similar, too. From what I’d seen, a second-rate martial artist in Murim fell somewhere between an E-rank and an F-rank Hunter.

In other words, I was now leading a ten-man F-rank party. I’d never actually been a party leader, but I’d watched other people do the job until I was sick of it.

“Anyone with combat experience, raise your hand.”

At the abrupt question, every member of the reconnaissance squad raised a hand. They all looked confused.

“Keep it raised if you’ve fought at least five times.”

Half the hands went down. Han Yeop’s was among them.

Five people with experience in at least five battles. That wasn’t bad. In fact, it was better than I’d expected.

But the most important question remained.

“Keep it raised if you’ve killed someone.”

Four hands dropped weakly. I looked at the only member of the reconnaissance squad who still had his hand raised.

"How many?"

He snorted.

"Five. It was during last year's bandit suppression campaign. One of them was a Deputy Stronghold Lord. He was a pretty strong bastard—"

I cut him off before he could continue.

"Good. You're the deputy squad leader from now on."

Hyuk Mujin's mouth, which had been preparing to ramble on, snapped shut.

"Deputy squad leader?"

"Yeah. Speak up now if you don't like it."

In a group full of rookies, experience mattered more than anything.

Hyuk Mujin was the only one who could swing a weapon at the enemy without hesitation.

Black cat, white cat.

White cat, black cat, even an ill-mannered cat—it didn't matter as long as it caught mice.

Hyuk Mujin considered it with a conflicted expression before answering.

"…Hmph. If it's an order, I suppose I have no choice."

He sure had a difficult way of saying he wanted to be deputy squad leader.

"Then Hyuk Mujin is the deputy squad leader. From now on, you're Number One."

"Number One? What's that supposed to mean?"

"It's your designation. From now on, everyone in the reconnaissance squad goes by number instead of name. Hyuk Mujin is Number One. Next, you sitting over there. Yes, you. You're Number Two."

I went around the room, assigning everyone a number from One to Ten.

Hyuk Mujin frowned.

"Why are you doing this?"

"Because it's convenient. We might end up fighting today. Do you want to spend the whole day memorizing names?"

"That's—"

"Then do as you're told. It's an order."

Hyuk Mujin glared at me, his expression rigid, but I didn't look away.

Part of me even hoped he would act as insolent as he had the last time. We could end up in battle within a few days, and his current attitude would be a problem.

If he challenged me, I would have to show him the difference in our strength.

Clearly.

"…I'll follow your orders."

"What was that?"

"Number One. I said I'm Number One."

His voice trembled as he answered. He was more perceptive than I'd expected. Maybe it had something to do with the rumors about the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi.

What mattered was that Hyuk Mujin had fallen in line.

Keeping my expression neutral, I continued.

"What I'm about to say may sound strange and unfamiliar. But bear with it. It's better than getting stabbed to death, isn't it? Don't you agree?"

The other squad members weren't as open about their displeasure as Hyuk Mujin, but they still watched me anxiously.

All except one.

"I'll do whatever the Squad Leader says!"

Han Yeop shouted like a fangirl. The only difference was that he had a spear in his hand instead of an idol light stick.

Oh, right.

I grinned at the squad.

"Now, anyone who uses a sword, raise your hand."

The core of party hunting was assigning positions.

Raid tactics in the real world had been standardized into manuals long ago.

Three tanks. Four damage dealers. Two mages and one healer. For a ten-person party, that was the ideal combination.

Obviously, there aren't any mages or healers here.

I had to balance the party as well as I could using only tanks and damage dealers, but—

"…You're telling me no one knows how to use a shield?"

My voice trembled at the horrifying discovery.

Good lord. I had ten damage dealers. Nine used swords, and Han Yeop was the only one with a spear.

What kind of horrifying monoculture is this?

A mixed breed would be better. At least that would have a little of everything.

Hyuk Mujin looked as if he couldn't understand what the problem was.

"A man ought to wield a sword."

The sight of everyone else nodding along left me speechless.

You're too well-fed. Way too well-fed.

Try slamming your head into a pool of blood and see if you still talk like that.

Sword? Spear? There was no such distinction. You bashed people with whatever rock you happened to grab, threw dirt, climbed on top of them, and bit them with your teeth.

When your life was on the line, anything within reach became both a weapon and a lifeline.

These people, who had only ever fought bandits at best, still didn't understand that.

Do I need to start training them tomorrow?

Not for their sake. For my own survival.

Even teaching them a few tricks would make a real difference in a melee.

I worked like a dog for seven years. I'm not dying because of a bunch of rookies.

That was when it happened.

Ding. Ding. Ding.

A large bell tolled three times.

Since individuals here had no way to tell the exact time, bells rang at set hours. The three tolls marked Mi-si, roughly one to three in the afternoon.

And—

"Get ready. This is our first deployment."

They also signaled the reconnaissance squad's first mission.

"He should be doing fine."

Jin Wikyung looked up at Wipeng's abrupt comment. Until that moment, he had been staring blankly at a cooling cup of tea.

"What are you talking about?"

"The Third Young Master."

A full day had passed since the reconnaissance squad led by Jin Taekyung departed from the Jin Family of Taiyuan. Their mission was to scout the nearby county towns.

"They left around noon yesterday, so they should arrive within two days."

"Ah. Taekyung."

Jin Wikyung gave a weary chuckle.

"I wondered what you meant. Never mind."

"Never mind?"

"How long are you going to treat him like a child? He's a grown man now. I'm sure he'll manage on his own."

"…I'm beginning to doubt my ears."

"I did coddle him quite a bit. He was much younger back then."

"I agree, to some extent. He's changed considerably in the past few days."

"Heroes grow by overcoming adversity."

"…"

"Anyway, I can stop worrying about the youngest now. I'll be able to focus more on the main family."

"You should rest for a while. You look exhausted."

"Wipeng. Members of our family have died."

Sorrow and resolve weighed on his voice. Wipeng fell silent, and Jin Wikyung returned to his work.

But the silence lasted only two hours.

"What is that…?"

A black speck in the sky drew closer. Spreading its enormous wings, a messenger eagle landed on the office windowsill.

It belonged to the Lower District Sect.

Jin Wikyung sprang to his feet and opened the tube fastened to the eagle's leg. When he unfolded the letter, he found a message written in tiny characters.

> Jopil, One Question, One Kill, has appeared in Jeongyang with a special detachment of twenty men.

"Jeongyang…!"

Beyond Jeongyang lay Honju. Beyond Honju lay Taiyuan. Special detachment or not, he hadn't expected them to cover hundreds of li[81] in only a few days.

And that wasn't all.

There were still family members from the branches who had not returned to the main family. What if the enemy was tracking them?

Every moment counts.

It didn't take Jin Wikyung long to decide.

"Select fifty martial artists immediately and send them to Jeongyang. One Question, One Kill Jopil is a brutal Peak master. Bring our family members—"

The children came to mind.

Their small limbs. Their faces twisted in pain. Their vacant eyes.

Jin Wikyung clenched his teeth.

"Bring our family members home safely."

"My lord."

[81] A Chinese li is 500 m (0.311 mi).

Wipeng’s expression had hardened. Jin Wikyung stared blankly at him, as though a thought had seized him, before speaking.

“Taekyung. Where did you say Taekyung went?”

His voice came out strained.

“…Jeongyang.”

Chapter 23

The Jin Family of Taiyuan.

As its name suggests, its headquarters were in Taiyuan. But like a conglomerate in the real world, the Jin Family of Taiyuan's influence was not limited to a single city.

The family had been established two hundred years ago and had long since expanded its sphere of influence by setting up branches in county towns throughout Shanxi Province.

Scout the area near Jeongyang and return within five days.

That was the reconnaissance squad's first mission. The squad members' reactions to the order fell into two camps.

"Doesn't sound like much."

Some, like Hyuk Mujin, were disappointed. Others, like Han Yeop, sighed in relief.

Of course, neither reaction pleased me.

Hyuk Mujin was consumed by a pointless hunger for glory, while Han Yeop was afraid to fight.

Still, a safe mission is probably for the best.

The thought of running into the enemy with these guys was horrifying. I'd be safer fighting on the front lines with people I could trust.

Should I apply for a transfer?

Suppressing a sigh, I raised my fist. It was one of the hand signals I had taught them earlier. It meant stop.

Snort.

The eleven horses trotting at a steady pace came to a halt with a chorus of snorts. Hyuk Mujin, riding to my right, spoke irritably.

"Why are we stopping?"

"Rest."

"Again?"

"Two hours of travel, fifteen minutes of rest. Didn't I tell you that already?"

"I can keep going!"

"Then go by yourself."

I jerked my chin toward the rear. The other squad members were breathing hard. Traveling on horseback was faster than going on foot, but it also consumed a considerable amount of stamina.

Hyuk Mujin's much higher Level allowed him to hold up fairly well, but fatigue was building in the others.

"When I tell you to rest, you rest. That's an order."

Ignoring Hyuk Mujin's scowl, I addressed the squad.

"Fifteen minutes of rest."

They had been given fifteen minutes to rest, but the reconnaissance squad members didn't look particularly happy. That was because I immediately pulled out a large leather backpack.

I reached inside and thought,

Open Inventory.

With a clatter, three shields materialized inside the backpack.

They were wooden shields plated with iron, taken from the armory before we left the Jin Family of Taiyuan. Light and sturdy, they were perfectly serviceable.

"Number Seven. Number Eight. Number Nine."

The three designated squad members accepted the shields with doomed expressions.

They were the tanks I had selected by force.

Seven damage dealers. Three tanks. And me.

It was a party composition that would be wiped out the moment it entered a Gate, but for now, I had to make do.

"Everyone to your positions."

Next came formation drills.

"Basic formation."

The three shield bearers formed the front line. Six swordsmen, from Number One Hyuk Mujin through Number Six, made up the second. Han Yeop and I took the rear.

It was a formation focused on threats from the front.

"Spread out. Scatter and assemble. Disperse."

Their faces were still full of complaints, but by now they followed the commands with reasonable skill. They were much better than F-rank Hunters fresh out of a Hunter training center.

These NPCs are better than real people.

The difference probably came down to whether they could use internal energy.

Unlike F-rank Hunters, who couldn't manipulate mana at all, Murim's NPCs could use internal energy, however faintly.

They were simply low-Level and inexperienced.

I moved on to the final stage of formation training.

"All-out retreat."

The reconnaissance squad members hesitated.

"What?"

"What does 'all-out retreat' mean?"

“Exactly what it sounds like. Retreat with everything you’ve got.”

“Then what formation should we—?”

“If it comes to that, formation won’t matter. Just run as fast as you can. Don’t look back, and scatter as widely as possible.”

“Heh. You call that an order?”

The mocking voice belonged, naturally, to Hyuk Mujin.

“I can’t stand this anymore. Third Young Master, do you think war is some children’s game? If you want to make nonsense sound convincing, you should at least read a military strategy manual first.”

“A military strategy manual?”

“Yes, a military strategy manual! Retreating in good order is one of the most basic principles of warfare. What kind of nonsense are you spouting?”

Hyuk Mujin’s open defiance drew hesitant murmurs from the other squad members.

“He’s not wrong.”

“We aren’t government troops. Why are we drilling formations and being forced to carry shields…?”

“I’ve never even heard of an all-out retreat.”

See? Everyone agrees with me.

That was what Hyuk Mujin’s smug face seemed to say.

Then Han Yeop cut in, his voice wavering.

“I-I don’t agree.”

“What?”

“The Third Young Master—I mean, the Captain—must have a reason for doing this… right?”

“A reason?”

Hyuk Mujin glared at him.

“What reason could there be? The Third Young Master spent his youth drinking with women instead of training. He caused every kind of trouble despite being like that. And that’s not all. He was also the one who caused this war—”

“Enough.”

Hyuk Mujin flinched when I cut him off. He seemed to realize that he had misspoken.

But some people were like that. When they needed to back down, they took another step forward instead.

“Wasn’t the Third Young Master the one who caused this war?”

Hyuk Mujin was too proud to stop himself.

Once the words were out, a chilly silence descended.

Gulp.

Someone’s throat bobbed loudly. Nine pairs of eyes turned toward Hyuk Mujin and me.

“D-do you have something to say?”

Something to say? Of course I did.

“Everyone gets another fifteen minutes of rest.”

At the same time, I slapped Hyuk Mujin across the face with an open palm.

Smack!

“One.”

His jaw twisted to the side. It was an ordinary slap, without even a trace of internal energy. His face was still dazed by the sudden turn of events when I struck him a second time.

“What the—!”

He wasn’t completely helpless, at least. He raised an arm to block.

What he had failed to account for was the difference in our strength.

Smack!

“Two.”

Hyuk Mujin’s upper body slammed into the ground. He sprang back up, my palm print stamped on one cheek like a tattoo.

It didn’t take long for his bewilderment to turn into rage.

“You fucking bastard!”

He was properly furious now. As he charged at me, eyes bulging, I hooked his leg and sent him sprawling. At the same time, I put some strength into my left hand and struck him.

Smack.

“Three.”

“Urgh.”

His legs nearly gave out, and he staggered. Three consecutive blows with that much force were bound to rattle his brain.

“What, are you saving your internal energy to make soup?”

That got through to him. Strength returned to his wavering legs, and internal energy surged through his body. He glared at me with venomous eyes.

“You’ll regret this.”

“I doubt it.”

I caught the fist flying toward my face.

Speed, strength, timing.

I could see it all. Compared to Lee Seogeun, Hyuk Mujin was nowhere close.

“Four.”

His head snapped back. Thick droplets of blood sprayed through the air in slow motion. His pupils had lost focus, and his legs hung limp.

Yet somehow, he didn't fall. He couldn't—not unless I let go of his fist.

"Five."

Smack!

That was his limit. Hyuk Mujin finally lost consciousness. As he sprawled on the ground in a bizarre pose, something landed on his body with a soft patter.

Snow?

I looked up. The winter sky was showering us with tiny white scraps of garbage.

"Break's over. We're leaving."

I tossed out the words and turned away. Behind me, the reconnaissance squad members finally released the breaths they had been holding.

When Hyuk Mujin woke two hours later, the first thing he did was charge at me.

"You fucking—!"

Smack. Thud.

"Move him."

"Y-yes, sir!"

Another crisp slap knocked him out again, and the other squad members dragged him into a corner of the cabin.

A cabin. We got lucky.

According to one squad member who knew the surrounding area well, we should have reached Jeongyang before sunset at the latest.

But there was nothing we could do about the sudden blizzard, and this cabin was the only shelter we had managed to find.

Apparently, it was a hunters' shelter known only to people familiar with the area.

It's ridiculously small, but I'll take it.

The mission might be delayed, but this was a hundred times better than trudging through the snow all night, collapsing from exhaustion, and then running into the enemy.

That was when—

"C-Captain."

It was Han Yeop. Behind him, the other squad members stole glances at me, gauging my mood.

"What should we do now?"

"Hm? Sleep."

"N-no, that's not what I meant…"

Watching them fidget, a thought struck me.

Don't tell me…

"Do you want to train?"

Nod, nod.

Look at those heads bobbing furiously. Look at those eyes burning with enthusiasm.

Seeing is believing, my ass. One beating beats a hundred explanations.

Beating them once really was better than explaining something a hundred times.

It was around noon.

Sunlight flashed off a sword blade. That was all the martial artist saw.

"Urgh."

Thud.

His knees buckled, and his face slammed into the frozen ground.

Blood poured from the gaping wound running from his shoulder to his chest. It was beyond recovery. The martial artist knew he was going to die.

"The others… Please, let them live."

His fading voice cut off abruptly. A middle-aged man clicked his tongue as he stared into the martial artist's wide-open eyes.

"Good grief, you poor fool."

How could he charge in like that without warning? The words that followed never reached the dead man. The fifty-odd wandering martial artists surrounding them snickered.

"Of all people, he had to run into the boss. Rotten luck."

"Only an orthodox-faction bastard would keep playing the hero to the bitter end. What should we do, Boss?"

Their gleaming eyes turned toward the survivors, a group of six or seven women and children.

"Great Hero, please spare the children."

At the plea from the oldest-looking woman, the middle-aged man—Jopil, One Question, One Kill—smiled gently.

"I'm sorry, but what can I do? I'm no Great Hero."

"But you're still human. How can you kill children who can't even tell right from wrong?"

"Hah. You have quite a bit of spirit for a woman. Wait. I heard the Sakju Branch Leader's family survived. Could you be…?"

"He is my husband."

“Ah, I thought so. I never imagined such a pathetic man could have such a virtuous wife.”

Jopil smiled, and the woman’s expression hardened.

“You never intended to spare us.”

“Rest easy. Raping women before I kill them isn’t one of my hobbies.”

“The children…”

“This is a harsh world. How are little ones supposed to survive without their mother?”

“You’re worse than a beast.”

“Last words noted.”

That was the signal.

Swordlight flashed, and screams rang out.

A short while later, the blood-soaked wandering martial artists tossed the corpses into the mountain thickets.

“Only the wild animals will feast tonight.”

The man with the tiny birdlike eyes muttered. He was Jopil’s right-hand man, a first-rate wandering martial artist known by the nickname Black Mountain Blade.

“We should feast, too. If we finish this job properly, what’s a mere thousand pieces of gold?”

Jopil laughed in delight. The payment for this job would be enormous, but more than that, he was enjoying the situation itself.

“I never imagined the day would come when we’d hunt the Jin Family of Taiyuan.”

His filthy leather shoe came down on the fallen martial artist’s corpse.

The martial artist had belonged to the Sakju Branch, one of the ten or so branches of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

“Was that the last one?”

“No, Boss.”

“They slip away like rats. How many?”

“Three in total. One martial artist and two children. They passed through Jeongyang only a few hours ago and are headed for Honju.”

“That’s troublesome. It’ll take half a day.”

“There’s no need for you to go yourself. I’ll take care of it.”

“Will you?”

A pleased smile spread across Jopil’s lips.

“Good. Take half the men. You have half a day. How does that sound?”

There was only one possible answer. Black Mountain Blade bowed deeply.

Chapter 24

He ran. It was the only thing he could do.

Even as his father and the people of the Sakju Branch—people who had been like family to him—died one after another, there was only one thing a fourteen-year-old boy could do.

Run.

"Oppa,[82] I'm cold."

His little sister whimpered in his arms. The boy, Socheon, blew warm breath over her hands, stiff with cold.

"We're almost there. Just hold on a little longer, okay?"

"When are we going home? Soyul wants to see Mom…"

"She came yesterday, too."

"You're lying. Did you see her?"

"Of course I did."

In my dream.

Socheon swallowed the rest of the sentence.

His mother had appeared in his dream the night before, exactly as she had three days earlier. She had spent a long time stroking and gazing at Soyul, who had fallen asleep from exhaustion, before speaking.

"Survive. You must survive."

Her voice still rang in his ears, and the sight of her back as she led the others away still hovered before his eyes.

What happened to Mother? Could she have…? No. That can't be.

It was then, as he struggled to suppress his ominous feelings, that he heard something.

Rustle.

"Who's there?"

The motion came naturally. He pulled his little sister close and drew the dagger concealed inside his clothes.

After the night his home had burned and he had witnessed countless deaths, the once-cheerful boy had acquired the eyes of a wild beast.

"I'll count to three. One, two…"

"It's me."

The dagger slowly lowered when a face suddenly appeared from the darkness.

"Uncle Gong?"

"Shh. Keep your voice down."

---

[82] Oppa is a Korean term a girl or woman uses to address an older brother or an older man close to her.

Uncle Gong was a weary-looking middle-aged man. An old friend of Socheon's father, the Branch Leader of the Sakju Branch, he was now the young siblings' guide and protector.

"I was worried. You were gone for more than half a shichen.[83]"

"I should have been more careful. We have a tail."

"Already?"

"Yes. Every moment counts."

Socheon rose without hesitation. Uncle Gong hoisted the bewildered Soyul onto his back and led the way through the brush.

"Where are we going?"

"Honju. No matter how vicious those bastards are, they won't pursue us that far."

Is that really true?

Socheon had his doubts.

The Sakju Branch had already fallen. The building had burned, and everyone was dead. He did not know who the attackers were, but their purpose was clear.

Extermination.

He blew the word away with his breath and started walking again.

How long had they been walking?

The white snow that had fluttered down like sleet was already up to their calves when—

"Quiet."

Uncle Gong stopped. Socheon held his breath.

The howling wind. Bare branches clattering against one another…

Nothing else.

Yet Socheon knew instinctively.

"Is it them?"

Uncle Gong's face went rigid.

"At least ten of them. They'll catch up soon."

The situation was bleak. Yet strangely, Socheon's heart settled into a calm stillness.

"This is my fault. I should have hurried before the snow began… I curse the heavens."

"You did everything you could, Uncle."

Socheon drew the dagger from inside his clothes. It had been handed down to him by his father a year ago—the only trace his father had left behind.

"I've learned a little martial arts myself. I'll fight and die like a martial artist."

"…It's too soon to give up."

---

[83] A shichen is a traditional Chinese unit of time equal to roughly two hours; half a shichen is about one hour.

That was all Uncle Gong could say. They drew on what little strength they had left and set off again.

But their stamina, pushed to its limit by days and nights of nonstop flight, dragged at their feet. Their steps grew slower, and their breathing became labored.

“There they are!”

“We’ve almost caught them!”

Now Socheon could hear them, too. The pursuers’ voices and the glow of their torches were drawing closer.

At that moment, Uncle Gong handed the soundly sleeping Soyul to Socheon.

“I’ll follow behind you.”

“Uncle!”

“Don’t worry. I, Gong Yacheong, am not so easily dealt with.”

“But how can you…”

“Go!”

Socheon left Gong Yacheong behind and started up the mountain again. His stamina was at its limit, but he did not stop.

When he reached a hill on the snow-covered mountain, the clash of weapons and someone’s scream rang out.

Uncle Gong.

Socheon gritted his teeth. He wanted to draw his dagger and throw himself down the slope that very instant.

But…

Hold on. I have to hold on.

He had repeated those words hundreds, thousands of times over the past five days. He had sworn to survive, protect the little sister in his arms, and take revenge on the murderers.

From the hilltop, Socheon stared at the flickering torches with fire blazing in his eyes.

I will survive.

Then he turned and climbed over the hill.

The next moment, his body shook as if struck by lightning.

“A-ah…”

Ten men in navy martial uniforms stood in the broad clearing atop the hill, staring at him.

A single character had been embroidered prominently across each man’s chest in silk thread.

□.

Jin.

I sensed something strange just as we were about to begin training.

A sound carried faintly through the howling wind. When I drew up my internal energy, it became clearer.

A human voice?

There had to be more than ten people. They were so close, I couldn't believe I had only just noticed them.

That many people in this weather…

All right. Decision made.

"Pack your things."

"Huh?"

The squad members had been standing ready with their weapons, but now they stared at me in confusion.

"Pack up, quickly. One of you, go inside and get Hyuk Mujin—"

"Captain. There's a kid over there."

Damn it. There really was one.

A little boy carrying an even smaller child on his back was staring blankly at us.

"Who's that?"

"No idea. Does he own this cabin?"

Please let that be it.

But why did I find it so hard to believe that the men following him were members of one big, happy family?

"He's crying."

As someone had pointed out, the boy was crying. Sobbing his heart out as he ran.

The problem was the direction he was running in.

"Uh, he's coming this way… Captain, where are you going?"

Suspicious gazes turned toward me. I had already backed well away from them.

"I'm going to ride a horse. We should be leaving soon."

"In this weather? The horses won't even be able to move."

"Really? Then we'll leave them behind."

"What?"

"That's how missions work. Snow or rain, we still have a job to do. Shut up and pack your things."

"But still…"

"Pack your things! Wake Hyuk Mujin!"

The admiring looks they had given me barely fifteen minutes ago had turned into the sort reserved for a lunatic.

“What’s gotten into you all of a sudden?”

What’s gotten into me?

I had a really bad feeling about this.

By now, I knew the signs. The closer the kid came, the stronger the stench of a giant fuck-you grew.

I could already see exactly how this would play out. There was only one way out.

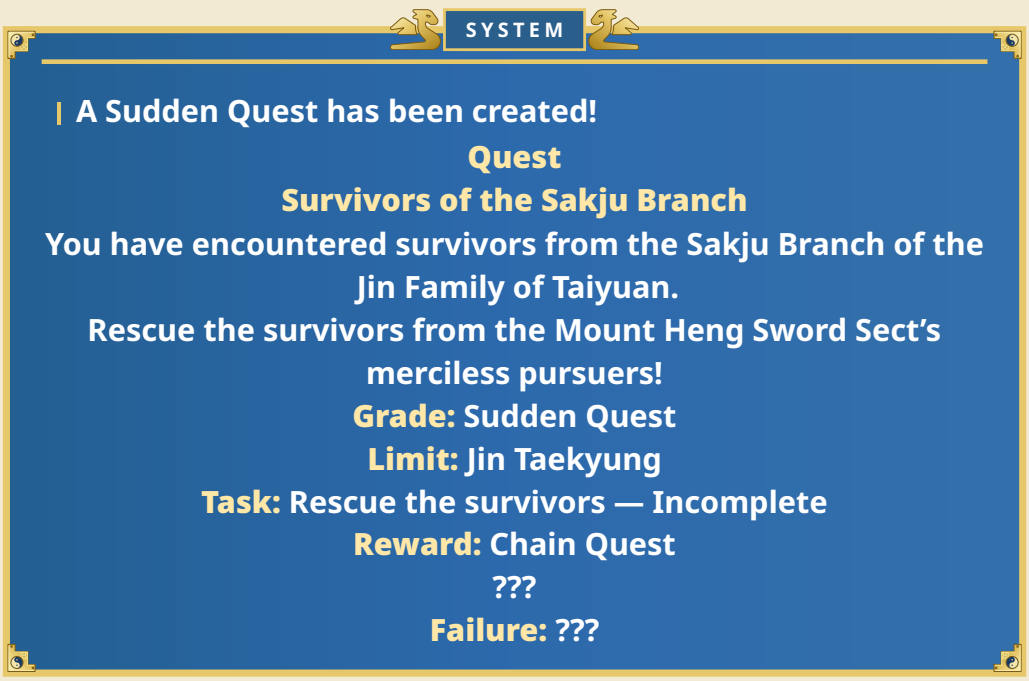
“Then I’ll head down first by my—”

At that moment, our uninvited guests appeared over the hill amid a chorus of shouts.

More than twenty men.

Oh, fuck.

Ding.



“…”

“…”

We stared at them. They stared at us.

A deathly silence settled over the frozen clearing.

I knew it. I knew this was going to happen.

But it was too late for regrets. What could I do about my shitty luck?

I heaved a deep sigh and shouted.

“Attack formation! Form up!”

Clack-clack-clack.

Caught off guard, the squad members nevertheless moved as they had been taught. By the time they had formed up, the enemy had realized who we were and started shouting.

“They’re brats from the Jin Family of Taiyuan!”

“There aren’t many of them! Wipe them out!”

Brats. Outnumbered.

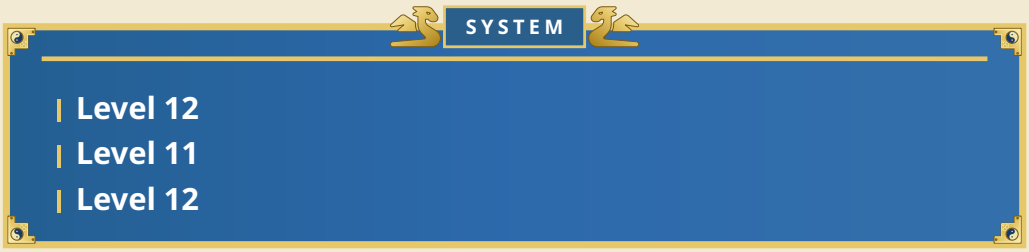
Those two facts hit me right in the chest.

I hadn’t even finished teaching these guys. Their martial arts were weak, they had no real combat experience, and they were complete rookies…

If this goes bad, should I run for it by myself?

With a growing sense of dread, I used Qi Sense. Blue waves of qi, visible only to me, swept over the enemies charging toward us with wild shrieks.

Ding. Ding. Ding.



“…Huh?”

The reconnaissance squad members shouted, their faces deathly pale.

“What do we do?”

“They’re coming! They’re coming!”

“Captaaaain!”

Thirty meters[84]. Twenty…[85]

I watched the enemy close in at terrifying speed and opened my mouth.

“Don’t worry. The enemy is nothing but EXP… I mean, a rabble. But!”

“But?”

“Stop them with everything you have. Just hold them back.”

“What? What do you mean?”

What do I mean?

Don’t take the last hit.

“Defensive formation! Form up!”

Yep. All the EXP was mine.

[84]Thirty meters is about 98 ft.

[85]Twenty meters is about 66 ft.

"Captain!"

"No! Captaaaain!"

"The Captain's trying to kill himself!"

That wasn't what I was doing, you lunatics.

Leaving the reconnaissance squad members' screams behind, I charged straight at the enemy.

Internal energy surged from my dantian and spread through my limbs and bones.

"You crazy bastard."

The man at the front grinned, baring yellow teeth.

I grinned back.

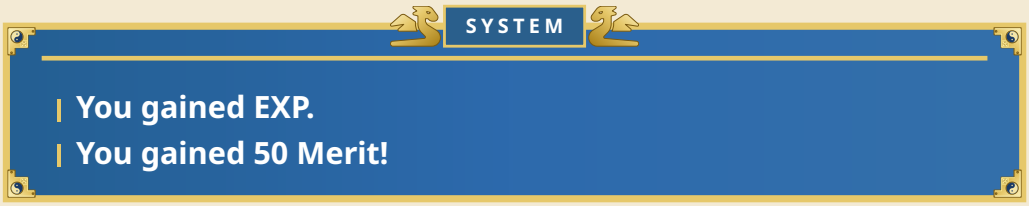
"Pretty boy."

"What?"

Slash.

He clutched his throat and collapsed. As I swept past him, the voice I had been waiting for rang out.

Ding.



"What the—!"

"How dare this fucking bastard…"

The enemy was a magnificent sight. Facial scars came standard, and their hygiene was so atrocious that the stench stabbed at my nose.

And yet…

"Ah, this is great."

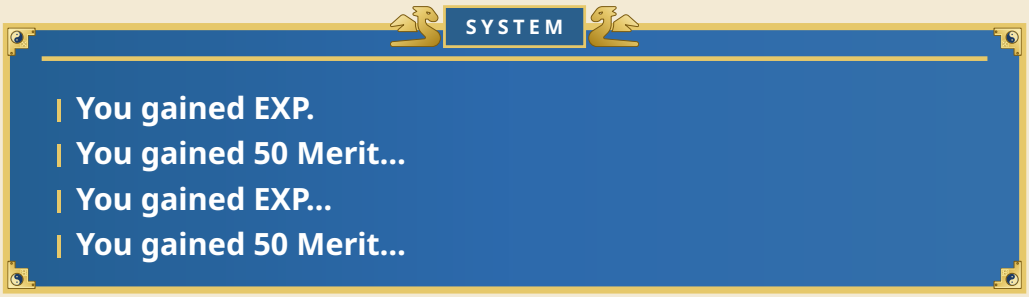
I felt like I was standing in a flower garden.

Twenty flowers, each brimming with the sweet honey of EXP.

I charged into them with a blissful expression and sucked out the honey.

Stab. Stab. Stab.

Ding. Ding. Ding.



I tore through their ranks without pause.

Their front line collapsed in the blink of an eye, and the others instinctively faltered.

That works for me.

The Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique and Spear Technique were martial arts built around advancing.

I stepped forward with the Manoeuvre Technique, drove into their center, and swung my spear.

"Gaaah!"

"Aaaargh!"

A razor-sharp spear with crushing weight behind it, wielded with an overwhelmingly aggressive technique. Better yet, the enemy was steadily retreating.

It was time for the Jin Family's Spear Technique to show its true worth.

First form.

I began swinging the spear in step with my footwork. Every swing and thrust brought forth someone's scream and a burst of blood.

"Ghk."

"Grrrgh."

Second form. Third form. Fourth form.

At some point, I surrendered myself to the flow.

The ripples became waves, and the enemies were swept away by them. Every nerve in my body stood on end.

More. More. More...

"You fucking bastard!"

Stab. Stab-stab.

Throat. Chest. Abdomen.

I stabbed and cut them down one after another. The System alerts confirmed the fatalities for me.

How much time had passed?

Only one man remained standing.

"O-our boss will find you no matter—"

I didn’t wait.

A wave was all about flow.

And the final wave erupted from the tip of my spear.

The last form of the Jin Family’s Spear Technique.

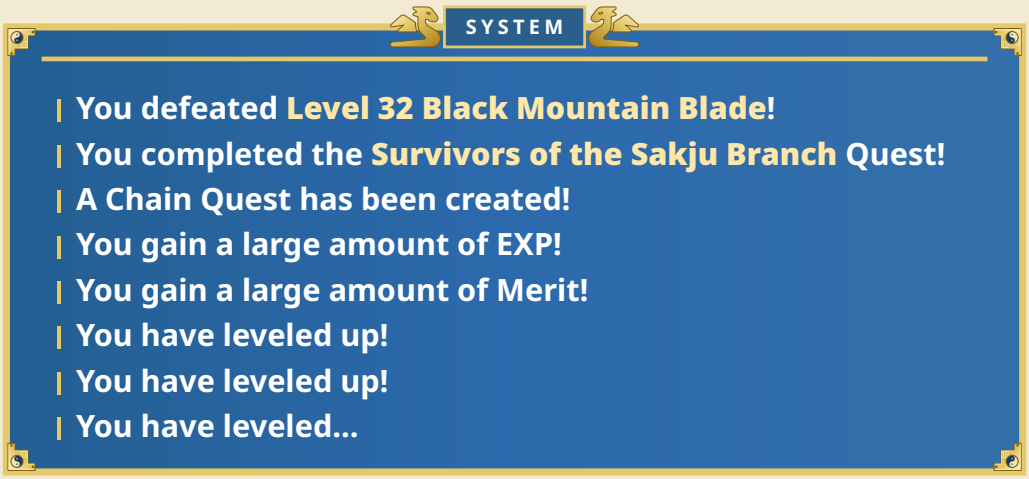
Sky-Piercing Strike.

Splurt!

The last man—the one with the narrow, birdlike eyes—stared at the shattered pieces of his sword before dropping to his knees.

The center of his chest had burst open as if struck by a cannonball.

Ding.



As the System alerts continued without pause, I rubbed my stomach.

“Buuurp.”

Ah, I’m stuffed.

Chapter 25

"Is this the afterlife?"

That was the first thing the middle-aged man said when he woke up.

Before I could answer, a small figure sprang forward and threw himself into the man's arms.

The boy cried out, his eyes brimming with tears.

"Uncle Gong!"

"Socheon! You're safe. But what in the world...?"

Socheon explained through his sobs that he had met us on the hill and that I had killed all their enemies. The middle-aged man's eyes widened.

"Are you from the main family?"

"Yes, I am."

"Ah, Heaven has helped us!"

"..."

I helped you, you old man.

"I was sure I'd fallen down the mountain... I thought that was the end of me."

"You nearly did. You were lucky."

I pointed below the ridge. Two corpses that appeared to belong to the enemy lay with their heads embedded in trees.

If the slope he had tumbled down hadn't been covered in thick undergrowth, he would have ended up just like them.

I didn't notice him at first, either.

I had only realized the middle-aged man was there because of the Quest Window.

Even after I defeated all the enemies, the Survivors of the Sakju Branch Quest had not been completed. That meant there were more survivors.

The question was whether there were any more besides him...

The last trace of unease vanished as soon as I helped the exhausted man to his feet.

Ding.

SYSTEM

You completed the Survivors of the Sakju Branch Quest!
A Chain Quest has been created!
You leveled up!
You leveled up!
Merit and Fame increase!

“Whew.”

The middle-aged man exhaled. Though he had only circulated his qi briefly, his complexion had improved noticeably.

He rose and respectfully clasped his hands in salute.

“Benefactor, you saved us all.”

“Not at all. I only did what anyone should have done.”

These days, lies came pouring out whenever I opened my mouth. Then again, it wasn’t entirely untrue. I had to clear the Quest somehow.

If anything, I should be the one bowing and thanking them.

Still, Santa Claus—or rather, the survivors—seemed deeply moved by my attitude.

“Such outstanding martial arts, and such chivalry as well. I, Gong Yacheong, sincerely admire you.”

“Socheon and Soyul owe you a tremendous debt, Great Hero.”

That was how I learned their names. The middle-aged man was Gong Yacheong, and the young siblings were Socheon and Soyul.

“If it isn’t too impertinent, may I ask your name, Benefactor?”

“My name is…”

Then a thought struck me.

Wait. If I tell them my name, won’t they come at me with swords?

Whatever conspiracy lay behind it, the person who had lit the fuse on this war was none other than me, Jin Taekyung. I doubted two people who had lost their home and family would feel kindly toward me.

Right. This calls for a well-intentioned lie.

“Hong Gil-dong. My name is Hong Gil-dong.”[86]

“Hong Gil-dong…[87] I’ve never heard the name before, but it has the air of a hero.”

Socheon chimed in from beside him.

“Here one moment, there the next. It sounds like the name of someone who could appear and disappear like a ghost.”

…How did that kid know?

Before he could bring up the part about calling one’s father Father and one’s elder brother Brother,[88] I hurriedly changed the subject.

“More importantly, what happened?”

Dark shadows fell across their faces.

---

[86] Hong Gil-dong is a legendary Korean outlaw and folk hero.

[87] Hong Gil-dong is a legendary Korean outlaw and folk hero.

[88] In the Hong Gil-dong tale, he demands the right to address his father as “Father” and his elder brother as “Brother.”

Gong Yacheong spoke first.

“It happened only a few days ago.”

By the time the messenger pigeon arrived with news of the war, the Sakju Branch had already been surrounded so tightly that not even a drop of water could escape. The wandering martial artists hired by the Mount Heng Sword Sect slaughtered the people inside and set fire to the buildings.

“There were no fewer than a hundred of them. The Branch Leader and his martial artists bought us enough time to escape through a secret passage. Most of those who got out were women and children who knew no martial arts.”

I didn’t need to ask what had happened to the others.

The System was absolute and factual. According to the Quest Window, these three were the only survivors of the Sakju Branch.

“I want to know about the enemy.”

“They’re wandering martial artists.”

“Wandering martial artists?”

“As you know, they’re bastards who’ll do anything for money. The Mount Heng Sword Sect hired the worst of them to attack us.”

“They seemed pretty weak for such vile bastards.”

“What do good and evil have to do with strength? The ones they hired were ordinary wandering martial artists, common as dirt. Their leader was the problem.”

Gong Yacheong gritted his teeth.

“Jopil, One Question, One Kill. That was the man. The Branch Leader knew we were doomed the moment he saw him and entrusted his dependents to me.”

Socheon’s small fists trembled.

“I’ll tear him limb from limb and kill him with my own hands.”

That was an unusual choice of words for a child, but considering the grudge carved into his bones, it was understandable.

I patted Socheon on the head.

“And you will. I’ll help you.”

“Really?”

“A man’s word is worth a thousand pieces of gold. Do you think I’d say one thing and do another? I’ll definitely catch that bastard and level u—”

“Huh?”

“No, I mean I’ll kill him and avenge your grudge.”

“Ah… Thank you. Thank you so much, Great Hero Hong!”

“Thank you. Truly, thank you!”

The two of them repeatedly expressed their gratitude. I felt like a real scumbag, and a sharp stab tore through one corner of my chest.

No, this is fine. They'll be happy when their enemy dies, and I'll be happy when I level up. It's mutually beneficial. Mutually beneficial.

Having forced myself to accept that logic, I asked, "How many are there?"

"While scouting their position, I overheard them talking. They said there were about thirty, including Jopil."

"Thirty? Thirty men?"

"That's right. So we must flee at once…"

Gong Yacheong's voice faded into the distance. In its place, I heard a faint sound drawing closer.

Ding. Ding. Ding.

I could hear it—the sound of leveling up. The sound of logging out!

Struggling to keep the corners of my mouth from rising, I said, "Let's wait here for the rest of them."

"Wait? What do you mean?"

"We'll wipe them all out! We can't let such vile bastards live!"

"No, Great Hero Hong, listen to me…"

"A master like you can do it! Thank you, Benefactor!"

Socheon ran into my arms with tears in his eyes. I spread my arms and pulled him into a hug.

"That's right. Let's kill them all!"

"Let's kill them!"

"Jopil, you son of a bitch!"

"Son of a bitch!"

That was when Gong Yacheong spoke.

"Jopil is a Peak master."

"Jopil is a fucking bast—huh?"

"Jopil, One Question, One Kill. He's one of the few Peak masters in all of Shanxi. What do you think is the reason he has survived until now, despite being tangled up in all kinds of gratitude and grudges?"

"Don't tell me…"

"Everyone who challenged him died. That's the kind of man Jopil is. Cruel—and every bit as strong."

"Ah."

Sensing that something was wrong, Socheon looked up at me.

"Socheon."

"Yes, Great Hero."

"Now that I think about it, this probably isn't the right time."

"Huh?"

“I was being foolish. Our first priority should be getting you and your sister safely back to our family. Right?”

“…”

“I was injured during the fight, and my men are exhausted. It would probably be a difficult battle.”

Socheon looked me up and down. My clothes were soaked in the enemies’ blood, but they were perfectly intact, without a single tear. There was no way I could have been injured.

“I suffered an internal injury.”

“…”

This time, he turned to the reconnaissance squad. They hadn’t even swung their swords during the fight and were practically overflowing with energy.

“Things aren’t always what they seem.”

“…Great Hero.”

I gently pulled Socheon away and shouted, “We’re returning to the main family. Everyone, prepare to leave!”

I hurried back toward the squad, but Socheon’s hand clutched my collar tightly and refused to let go. Tears glimmered in his round eyes.

“Great Hero.”

“Hey, why aren’t you moving? Move, move! Socheon, I’m a little busy right now, so let’s talk later. Okay?”

“Great Heeero.”

“Mister Gong Yacheong. No, Great Hero Gong, what are you doing? Every second counts.”

“…Socheon, come here.”

Gong Yacheong looked at me as if I were a complete idiot and pulled Socheon away. It was the protective gesture of a guardian keeping a criminal away from his child.

Socheon practically wailed.

“Great Hero Hong Gil-dooong!”

That was the signal.

Boom!

The cabin door shattered, and someone burst through it.

SYSTEM

Level 22 Hyuk Mujin

“Jin Taekyung, you fucking bastard!”

Hyuk Mujin stood there panting, his furious eyes fixed squarely on me. Gong Yacheong and Socheon stared at me blankly.

“Great Hero Hong?”

“Great Hero Hong Gil-dong?”[89]

“Ah. Well, you see…”

…Fuck.

“Hmm.”

Jopil stared silently down at the corpse. Its face was twisted, its eyes bulging. Frozen beneath blood and snow, the man had once been known as Black Mountain Blade.

“Tsk, tsk. How did you end up like this, my friend?”

He had been fairly loyal and sharp. Jopil had never imagined he would meet such a pointless end.

“See? Haven’t I told you time and again to keep your eyes wide open?”

Jopil grabbed Black Mountain Blade’s bulging eyelids and pried them farther apart.

The frozen flesh tore with a hideous sound.

Rip. Riiip.

The others watched without daring to breathe.

His expression and tone were no different from usual, but they could feel in their bones that Jopil was furious.

The killing intent radiating from the Peak master left them struggling for breath, cold sweat trickling down their backs.

And no wonder.

More than twenty men had been wiped out while carrying out a simple mission to dispose of the remnants of the Sakju Branch.

Jopil was called One Question, One Kill because of his bizarre habit of asking any enemy who caught his interest exactly one question before killing them.

The wandering martial artists were relieved that Black Mountain Blade was dead. If he had survived, he would have suffered an even more horrifying fate.

“That’s better.”

Jopil wiped the blood on the front of his trousers and rose.

“So, what does everyone think? Speak freely.”

“We should follow our orders, of course.”

[89] Hong Gil-dong is a legendary Korean outlaw and folk hero.

One man stepped forward. The neatly dressed, dignified middle-aged man and the dozen or so martial artists standing at attention behind him were the overseers and guides the Mount Heng Sword Sect had sent to keep the wandering martial artists under control.

Jopil smiled faintly.

“Ah, yes. I’d forgotten the Hall Master of the great Mount Heng Sword Sect was here. But what’s this about an order?”

“Erase the Sakju Branch and rejoin the main force. Have you already forgotten the Young Sect Leader’s order?”

“An order? I remember accepting a commission.”

“Isn’t that the same thing?”

The middle-aged man glared at Jopil, displeased.

“Coming this far was your own unilateral decision. And what came of it? You lost more than twenty subordinates to the remnants of a single branch!”

“Which is why we should pursue them. We can finish them off in half a day.”

“Jeongyang might be one thing, but if we pursue them as far as Honju, we risk a counterattack. I won’t permit any more unilateral decisions.”

“Permission. Permission…”

After mulling it over, Jopil spoke.

“No. That won’t do. I don’t like it.”

“What do you mea—”

Crunch.

The middle-aged man’s neck shattered, killing him before he could finish. Jopil had snapped it with blinding speed. He licked his lips.

“I like war. No matter who dies, they’re forgotten.”

“You bastard!”

The Mount Heng Sword Sect’s martial artists realized what had happened and drew their weapons, but Jopil had already plunged into their midst.

Crunch! Slash!

Warm blood poured across the snow. Every time Jopil rampaged like a wild beast, someone’s neck, arm, or leg was torn free and sent flying.

“Gaaah…”

The groan of an unnamed martial artist was the last sound.

Standing atop the heap of corpses, Jopil spoke into the crushing silence.

“We’re pursuing them.”

This time, no one said a word. As his subordinates hurried to prepare as though fleeing for their lives, Jopil continued to stare at the bodies.

What kind of man was it?

He was a Peak master. From the wounds on the corpses and the footprints left behind, he could reconstruct his opponent.

Only one man. A highly skilled spearman had been here. He was the one who had slaughtered the other twenty-odd men.

If he killed Black Mountain Blade in one strike, he must be something else.

The final strike that pierced through Black Mountain Blade's chest had been particularly interesting.

This should be a fun fight.

Who was he? A master from the Jin Family of Taiyuan? Or someone unknown?

It didn't matter. Jopil let out a pleased laugh.

"Let's meet soon, friend."

"What news has come in?"

"None. All we can do is move as quickly as possible…"

"Damn it! Damn it!"

Wipeng vented his frustration, but there was nothing he could do. As his subordinate had said, their only option was to find the Third Young Master as quickly as possible and protect him.

Jopil, One Question, One Kill…

Wipeng knew the man's reputation well. If the Third Young Master fell into his hands, death would be the only possible outcome.

If that happens, I won't be able to face my lord.

Jin Wikyung had endured with superhuman patience.

He currently stood at the head and center of the Jin Family of Taiyuan. He had weighed his beloved younger brother against the lives of hundreds of family members and, after long deliberation, sent his most trusted subordinate, Wipeng, to protect him.

But if I fail…

I won't be able to face my lord.

His grip tightened around the reins. Wipeng spurred his horse onward, with more than twenty mounted riders racing in a long line behind him.

Chapter 26

"So…"

Gong Yacheong gave me a strange look.

"So you're that Young Master Jin Taekyung."

The moment had finally come. I let go of Hyuk Mujin's collar—he'd passed out for the third time—and smiled awkwardly.

"Yes. I'm Jin Taekyung."

The reconnaissance squad members preparing camp pricked up their ears. We were on our way back to the family estate.

We had ridden for more than five hours without a break since leaving the cabin where the fight had taken place. Gong Yacheong had remained silent the entire way. Only now did he finally speak.

If it weren't for that bastard.

I glared at Hyuk Mujin as one of the quicker-witted squad members dragged him away. I should've hit him one more time before letting go.

While I was regretting that missed opportunity, Gong Yacheong continued.

"I've heard plenty about you, Young Master."

"…I see."

"Even a three-year-old knows who you are. You must be the main family's biggest celebrity."

At this point, it would probably be faster to find someone who hadn't heard of me.

"Lazy by nature and arrogant beyond belief. Addicted to wine and women, without even bothering to learn martial arts… But it seems the rumors of the martial world truly can't be trusted. The prowess you displayed today was remarkable."

"…"

If there were such a thing as the Martial World Daily, collecting all the latest rumors from across Murim, I'd subscribe immediately. It seemed surprisingly reliable.

More importantly…

Did Gong Yacheong really not know?

Whatever bullshit the Mount Heng Sword Sect had pulled, I was at the center of this entire mess.

It was an undeniable fact that countless people had died along the way.

It wouldn't have been strange for Gong Yacheong and Socheon to hold a grudge against me. That was why I had hidden my name.

If he really doesn't know, that's a relief.

We were being chased by a ruthless Peak master. I had no interest in stirring up extra trouble.

“How long until we reach the main family?”

Gong Yacheong’s question snapped me back to reality.

“We should arrive in two or three days.”

“Of all times, it had to snow now…”

Gong Yacheong sighed and glared resentfully at the sky, which was still dumping snow on us.

“Young Master, we should prepare for the worst.”

“The worst?”

The blizzard had us stuck, but it had our enemies stuck too. There was even a chance they had given up the chase.

But Gong Yacheong shook his head.

“Don’t underestimate wandering martial artists. Their internal energy may be less refined, and the martial arts they’ve learned may be inferior, but their greatest weapon lies elsewhere.”

I gave him the answer.

“Experience.”

“Exactly. Experience gained through a hundred battles. The ones chasing us aren’t merely martial artists. They’re wandering martial artists. The two may seem alike, but they’re entirely different creatures.”

Alike, yet different. I thought I understood what he meant.

In short, they were well-trained hunting dogs. And the man holding their leash was Jopil, One Question, One Kill.

“What makes Jopil truly frightening isn’t simply that he’s a Peak master. It’s his persistence. His viciousness. He has never once failed a commission or allowed a target to escape.”

I answered with a sigh.

“This time won’t be any different, then.”

“Probably.”

Gong Yacheong stared into the darkness ahead as though something might leap out and swallow us whole.

“That is the sort of man pursuing us.”

Whoosh.

The snow-laden wind vanished into the darkness.

We finished making camp. We had dug several small hollows and covered their entrances with branches, fallen leaves, and whatever else we could find. The shelters were crude, but this was no time to be choosy.

“Have a restful night.”

Gong Yacheong disappeared into one of them, carrying the siblings, who had already fallen fast asleep. I couldn’t stop thinking about the weary smile hanging from the corner of his mouth.

He really is an adult.

If he had wanted to live, he could have run away long ago. Gong Yacheong was a trained master, a seasoned man of the martial world.

But he hadn’t.

He had risked his life fighting for two children who didn’t share a drop of his blood.

That was why Gong Yacheong was a good adult.

Could I do the same?

I shook off the question as soon as it arose. This was a game. It wasn’t wise to think too deeply about an illusion that would soon disappear.

That was right. An illusion that would soon disappear.

Open Quest Window.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Quest
Logout
You must now make your way through this harsh Murim.
Become stronger. Become famous.
For the day that will come someday…
Grade: Main Quest
Limit: Jin Taekyung
Task: Reach the First Rate realm — Incomplete
Reach Lv. 30 — 24/30
Reach Fame 500 — 250/500
Reward: Logout

The EXP and Fame I had gained from dealing with the enemies, plus the Quest reward.

I could finally see the summit of this treacherous mountain.

I opened my Status Window and distributed all my remaining points. Vitality flowed back into my exhausted body.

I’m almost there.

I just had to get past this final hurdle. If I could avoid Jopil, One Question, One Kill—the bastard whose face I didn't even know—I could finally bring this miserable journey to an end.

But there was another problem.

Let's say I somehow fill up my Level and Fame. How the hell am I supposed to raise my realm?

Back when I first started clearing the tutorial Quests, distributing my stats had raised my realm from Third Rate to Second Rate. Since then, nothing.

What the hell am I missing?

I was an absurd existence in Murim. I could learn martial arts and raise my stats faster than anyone else. The System had helped me grow stronger in all kinds of ways.

That was why I could literally wipe the floor with ordinary First Rate martial artists despite being a dime-a-dozen Second Rate.

And yet I wasn't First Rate!

I should've asked Jin Wikyung.

At first, I had assumed I just needed to keep raising my stats or internal energy. Lately, though, I had begun to suspect I was barking up the wrong tree.

Level? Stats? Internal energy?

What was it? What final piece did I need to complete the puzzle?

The answer came quickly.

If I don't know, I have to find out.

Just as I always had. If I kept walking, I would eventually find the exit.

I sat cross-legged and steadied my breathing. The internal energy coiled within my dantian answered my call.

"We lost them."

Jopil muttered as his black, viper-like eyes swept across the surroundings.

They had lost the fugitives. But traces remained, faint signs that would serve as new guideposts.

"About twenty people. They left this place roughly two shichen ago."[90]

Jopil nodded at his subordinate's report. The man's martial arts were only Third Rate, but his tracking skills had reached the Peak. Jopil had countless hunting dogs like him under his command.

Two shichen.[91]

[90] A shichen is a traditional Chinese unit of time equal to roughly two hours.
[91] A shichen is a traditional Chinese unit of time equal to roughly two hours.

The gap had already narrowed to two shichen.[92] How much longer would it take them to catch the fugitives?

Half a day at most.

They should have run with everything they had. Without looking back. They should have cast off every burden, abandoned anyone who fell behind, and run for their lives.

If they had done that, the distance would not have narrowed. But they had let their guard down. They must have thought the blizzard had them trapped.

That misjudgment had brought them to this point.

But I'm a little different.

The previous night had been long. Even among his subordinates, men well accustomed to pursuit, some had fallen behind.

In the mountains during a blizzard, falling behind was no different from death.

The only difference from dying on a battlefield was that it took a little longer.

That was why Jopil had given the order.

Kill them.

They said a tiger left its hide when it died, while a person left their name.

But Jopil thought differently. What kind of name could a Third Rate nobody who'd spent his whole life drifting through back alleys leave behind?

They should at least leave a hide.

Leaving twenty stripped corpses behind, the group had pressed onward. When the long night finally ended, they discovered the fugitives' trail shortly before dawn.

We'll meet soon, friend.

The corners of Jopil's mouth curled upward. This mysterious master was the first person in a long time to pique his interest.

His heart, stiff for so long, began to pound.

I shuddered.

"Ugh. What the hell?"

A sudden chill ran through me. I raised my arm and found it covered in goose bumps.

If this had been a scene in a novel, the protagonist would have muttered that something felt wrong, then continued on his way.

But I was different. I had a solid hunch, and I acted on it.

"Hey. Get over here, quick."

[92] A shichen is a traditional Chinese unit of time equal to roughly two hours.

I couldn’t see him, but I could sense him. The footsteps of someone trudging along behind me faltered.

“W-why?”

“I’m counting to three. One, two… three.”

The moment I reached three, Hyuk Mujin hurried over and stuck to my side.

“It was you, wasn’t it?”

“What?”

“You were the one. Tell me the truth and I’ll let it slide.”

“What are you talking about? It wasn’t me!”

I silently stared at his face, swollen like a steamed bun.

“You were cursing me behind my back just now, weren’t you?”

“Gasp.”

“You were, weren’t you?”

“I-I was…”

So it really had been this bastard. When I raised my hand, Hyuk Mujin squeezed his eyes shut.

After getting beaten about three times, he had lost all his fighting spirit. On top of that, he had learned a valuable life lesson:

Dodging only meant getting hit more.

“Fine. Since you told the truth, I’ll let it slide this once.”

Hyuk Mujin’s head shot up.

“Really?”

I gave him a warm smile.

“Of course. But don’t even think about deceiving me from now on. I’ll be watching you with mind-reading.”[93]

Hyuk Mujin stared at me with eyes full of demonic rage, then darted back to his place. If only we’d had more time, I could have smashed his head in with a mace.

Swallowing my regret, I kept walking.

“What’s mind-reading?”[94]

The chirping voice tickled my ear. It belonged to Soyul, Socheon’s little sister. Had they said she was five?

She was small enough to fit right inside my backpack.

“Is it martial arts?”

“Something like that.”

[93] Gwansimbeop, rendered here as “mind-reading,” evokes a supposed ability associated with the one-eyed Gung Ye in a Korean historical television drama.

[94] Gwansimbeop, rendered here as “mind-reading,” evokes a supposed ability associated with the one-eyed Gung Ye in a Korean historical television drama.

"Is mind-reading strong?"[95]

"Very strong."

"Wow! Soyul wants to learn mind-reading too!"[96]

"But you have to be one-eyed."

"Gasp!"

I glanced back and saw Soyul staring at me in shock, her eyes enormous. She was ridiculously cute.

Hayeon used to be like that too.

These days she was a creepy little sister, but when she was little she had been a baby angel. She had even gotten offers to be a child model…

Having her around felt exactly like piggybacking Hayeon at that age.

"Want me to teach you?"

"…Soyul doesn't like martial arts. I want to become a proper young lady."

"That's good too."

"Mm. Mister, do you like martial arts?"

"Me?"

"My brother says you're really strong. Dad said only people who work hard can become strong."

"Your dad said that?"

"Yes. My dad is really strong too. That's because…"

Soyul chattered excitedly for a long while before sticking out her lower lip.

"Soyul wants to see Dad. But I guess Dad doesn't want to see us. Oppa[97] says he went out to play with Mom, leaving me and Oppa[98] behind."

My heart dropped with a thud.

An old memory filled my vision. In a funeral hall draped in black and white, little Hayeon had searched for our father, and I had been forced to tell her an obvious lie.

Just as Socheon had done for Soyul.

It was the only thing I could say.

"…I see."

What else could I say?

I looked at Socheon, who was following in the middle of the formation. He was breathing hard, drenched in sweat.

He must be exhausted.

---

[95] Gwansimbeop, rendered here as "mind-reading," evokes a supposed ability associated with the one-eyed Gung Ye in a Korean historical television drama.

[96] Gwansimbeop, rendered here as "mind-reading," evokes a supposed ability associated with the one-eyed Gung Ye in a Korean historical television drama.

[97] Oppa is a Korean term a girl or woman uses for an older brother or an older man close to her.

[98] Oppa is a Korean term a girl or woman uses for an older brother or an older man close to her.

His willpower was far beyond his years. The saying that pain made people mature was fucking bullshit, but it was true.

Socheon had never fallen behind even once, and the other reconnaissance squad members marveled at him for it.

But the real problem is somewhere else.

Gong Yacheong.

His face was deathly pale; he still hadn't shaken off his injuries. If not for the remarkable effects of the fasting pills I had given him, and the qi he had circulated last night, he might have collapsed long ago.

At this rate, they'll catch us.

Even after sunrise, the deep snow showed no sign of melting. I was leading the way and breaking a path through it, but everyone was exhausted, and our pace kept slowing.

Worse, we had an injured man and two children with us.

Should I run away on my own?

The thought came to me in an instant.

It was a game. So what?

Gong Yacheong, the young siblings, every member of the reconnaissance squad—they were all artificially created intelligences. Nothing more than NPCs.

But me?

I was alive. I was the only real person among them. The only one who truly existed.

But…

Fuck. It's such a simple problem… So why am I like this?

An inexplicable aversion surged up. It was strong enough to startle me—strong enough to throw me off.

Why?

I didn't know.

For hours afterward, I failed to find the answer.

And then night fell.

Chapter 27

"Fifteen-minute break."

The reconnaissance squad collapsed with a collective hiss, like the air going out of them.

They looked exhausted, but I wasn't particularly worried about those guys. As I'd observed, they had solid basic stamina, and during the battle they had done nothing but stand around and watch.

The other two were the problem…

"Are you all right?"

"Huff. I'm fine. I'm fine."

Socheon answered between ragged breaths. He didn't look ready to collapse just yet, but if he kept going like this, he would reach his limit before long.

Stubborn little brat.

Earlier, I had offered to carry both him and his sister. He had flatly refused.

"If it gets too hard, tell me. I can handle the two of you."

"Huff. I'm fine as I am. This is enough."

Doesn't look like it.

"I'm saying this for everyone's sake. Don't answer so quickly."

"Understood."

His eyes hardened with resolve. I handed the sleeping Soyul to him and turned away.

"Great Hero Gong."

The pale-faced man raised his head.

"…Young Master Jin."

His voice sounded ready to give out at any moment. His condition was worse than I'd thought. Are you all right? rose to the tip of my tongue, then faded away.

"How much longer can you hold out?"

"I don't know."

His answer was honest—and serious.

"What about the fasting pills?"

I had given him several of the fasting pills I had left. But Gong Yacheong shook his head.

"They weren't much help. Some quack must have made them. All they did was ruin my appetite. Hahaha."

"…Was that supposed to make me laugh?"

"It wasn't funny?"

"No. Not at all."

“What a shame… Cough!”

A sudden cough.

Drops of blood fell onto the white snow.

Damn it.

Worried that someone might see, I hurriedly stepped in front of Gong Yacheong.

“What’s going on? You weren’t this bad before.”

His condition had deteriorated rapidly in half a day. Gong Yacheong no longer looked merely exhausted. He looked unmistakably ill.

“It was inevitable.”

The calm look in his eyes made it even more ominous. I brushed aside the hand trying to stop me and pulled up the front of his robe.

“Ah.”

His body was covered in all kinds of wounds. But what shocked me were the blue veins spreading outward from his lower abdomen.

“What is this…? Don’t tell me…”

Gong Yacheong weakly fastened his robe again. He seemed worried that someone else—especially Socheon and Soyul—might see.

“Those wolf-like bastards coated their weapons with poison.”

Now I understood why Gong Yacheong hadn’t recovered even after taking the fasting pills. They could only stave off hunger and restore stamina. They had no detoxifying effect whatsoever.

“You should’ve told me sooner!”

“Those bastards must have been short on money. They used cheap poison. It was so weak that I didn’t notice until last night. By then, it was too late.”

Gong Yacheong’s stamina had already been at rock bottom when he was poisoned. Then he had continued forcing himself through this weather…

“Is there anything we can do?”

“There is.”

“Tell me.”

“But time won’t allow it. I can’t waste such precious time on one person.”

He was right.

But still…

“We have to try.”

“Young Master.”

“Everyone’s exhausted. If we rest for one shichen[99]—no, just half a shichen[100]—and try the method, that should be enough.”

---

[99] A shichen is a traditional Chinese unit of time equal to roughly two hours.

[100] A shichen is a traditional Chinese unit of time equal to roughly two hours.

“Hahaha.”

“Please don’t laugh. I was planning to stop and rest around here anyway…”

I didn’t even know what I was saying anymore. As Gong Yacheong watched me ramble, a faint smile touched his lips.

“Go.”

“…”

“You know it too, don’t you? If we waste time here, we’ll be held back.”

I fell silent.

He was right. I had been considering this possibility since I saw his precarious complexion and the blood he coughed up. Perhaps I had been thinking about it since last night.

So this is how it ends?

I had to leave Gong Yacheong behind. If we took him with us, he might survive for now, but everyone’s pace would slow.

What if I carried him myself?

Even with the System’s help, I was still human. I had spent two days at the head of the group, breaking a path through the snow, and the fatigue had built up.

Two fasting pills left.

The thirty or so fasting pills I’d started with were almost gone. Could I escape their clutches while carrying Gong Yacheong with only two pills left?

And if we still ended up running into them, would I be able to fight them while exhausted? Would I be able to face Jopil, One Question, One Kill, a Peak master?

The answer had been clear for a long time.

We both knew it.

“Please take care of the children.”

The moment Gong Yacheong spoke, a System notification chimed.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Quest
Gong Yacheong’s Last Request
He wants only one thing now. See that the surviving children make it back safely.
Grade: None
Limit: Jin Taekyung
Task: Socheon and Soyul’s safe return (Incomplete)
Reward: None
Would you like to accept the Quest?

No reward.

It was the most shameless Quest I had ever received.

I'm busy trying to stay alive myself, old man.

But I nodded. If accepting it could ease the nagging discomfort in the corner of my heart, I would gladly do it.

"Let's do that."

Gong Yacheong smiled in satisfaction.

"You're saying we're leaving Great Hero Gong behind?"

Han Yeop muttered with a shocked expression. Hyuk Mujin said nothing, as though he was lost in thought, while the other reconnaissance squad members were busy watching one another's faces.

"Yes."

"That makes no sense!"

"Keep your voice down."

Nothing good would come of Socheon finding out. He was exactly the sort of kid who would insist on staying behind with Gong Yacheong.

"B-but this…"

"It was Great Hero Gong's decision. I agree with him."

That was when Hyuk Mujin abruptly spoke up.

"Why?"

Has this bastard not been beaten enough?

I glared at him, but Hyuk Mujin neither flinched nor backed down. My clenched fist slowly relaxed.

"His condition is serious. If we keep taking him with us, the rest of us will be in danger too."

"Is that all?"

"Yes."

Han Yeop cut in, his face flushed.

"No."

"It's an order."

"Then I'll disobey."

Everyone stared at Han Yeop in surprise.

I hadn't expected the boy who had declared himself my ardent follower from the very first time we met to use the word disobey, either.

"That won't change anything."

"We can't leave him behind like this."

“And if we can’t leave him behind?”

A wave of exhaustion suddenly washed over me. I rubbed my gritty eyes.

“If we can’t leave him behind, will you carry him?”

“Yes. I’ll carry him.”

“And you’ll get tired soon.”

If Han Yeop got tired, someone else would step forward to help him. Then they would grow tired one by one, our pace would slow, and the enemy would catch up.

“We’re up against battle-hardened wandering martial artists led by a Peak master. Do you think we’ll survive?”

Han Yeop lowered his head without answering. The other reconnaissance squad members avoided my gaze as well.

Only one person kept looking me in the eye.

“Number One. Do you still have something to say?”

After a long silence, Hyuk Mujin bowed his head.

“I’ll follow your orders, Captain.”

We began moving again.

Just before we left, Gong Yacheong gently stroked Socheon and Soyul’s heads with a peaceful expression.

“I’ll see you soon.”

Socheon nodded bravely. Still half-asleep, Soyul whimpered and nestled into my arms.

Every time I heard her soft breathing, something twisted uncomfortably in my chest.

Has he left by now?

Gong Yacheong hadn’t wanted the children to know he was gone. He had told me he would quietly slip away while we were moving.

Socheon was in the middle of the formation, so the reconnaissance squad members would block his view. He wouldn’t see Gong Yacheong leave.

How long has it been since we set out?

A sikyeong[101]? Half a shichen[102]?

I didn’t know. In the dead of night, with darkness swallowing everything around us, I couldn’t even feel the passage of time.

With every step I took, one thought refused to leave my mind.

He must have left by now.

[101] A sikyeong is the time it takes to eat a meal, roughly thirty minutes.

[102] A shichen is a traditional Chinese unit of time equal to roughly two hours.

It was only natural. Gong Yacheong and I both knew it, and everyone in the reconnaissance squad except Han Yeop had accepted it.

Most importantly…

I had a family waiting for me. I had a real world out there that I still had to face.

Then why does this feel so damn awful?

My feet felt heavy.

It wasn't just the snow piled up to my calves. It wasn't the grass and branches blocking the path ahead.

A mere NPC named Gong Yacheong kept weighing on my mind.

I remembered his final smile. The cheap Quest with no reward.

I remembered Han Yeop's defiance, and Hyuk Mujin's calm gaze pricked the corner of my heart like a thorn.

It's only natural. So why?

Because it was a game.

Because it was only a game.

If I didn't leave him behind, everyone would die. I'd die too! You fucking bastards!

"Fuuuck…"

The curse lodged in my throat finally spilled out.

Soyul stirred from her light sleep, mumbled something, and wrapped her arms around my neck.

Her tiny hands were cold. So real that goose bumps rose across my skin. Too real for me to believe this was only a game.

Real enough to make me feel guilty for abandoning a single NPC.

"…What a fucked-up game."

I turned around.

"Where are you going?"

I strode back the way we had come. I couldn't see Socheon's face or the faces of the reconnaissance squad members.

That was why I didn't notice the fleeting smile on Hyuk Mujin's face as he asked where I was going.

Or that Han Yeop, who should have been at the very rear, was nowhere to be seen.

"Huff. Huuuff."

I raced across the snow like the wind.

And then I found him.

Below the hill, Han Yeop was gritting his teeth and forcing one foot in front of the other, even as he gasped for breath.

The unconscious Gong Yacheong was on his back.

"You…"

I didn't know what to say. With a sigh, I grabbed Han Yeop's hand and pulled him up.

"Th-thank you."

Shit…

I don't know anymore, either.

This was a hidden retreat meant for one person alone.

Since becoming its owner thirty years ago, he had forbidden anyone else from entering. As the years passed, that prohibition had hardened into an unbreakable rule, and everyone else regarded it as such.

"How are things going?"

The air trembled faintly as the two shadows conversed through Sound Transmission.

"Smoothly. And on your end?"

"Do you even need to ask?"

"I wouldn't expect otherwise."

"The Blood Wolf Sword. For someone with that epithet, he's surprisingly fond of his family."

"Even a wolf cares for its own flesh and blood. So?"

"The vanguard alone numbers two hundred. A madman named Jopil is running wild as he pleases, but… it should be fine."

"Jopil, One Question, One Kill? The Blood Wolf Sword chose well."

"The wastrel young master is being chased for his life. It wasn't part of the plan, but it isn't a bad development."

"Hahahaha."

"Could it be…?"

"That's right. I sent him. Once the Lesser Family Head sees the head of his beloved youngest brother, he'll change his mind."

"Whew. A heart as cold as poison, without blood or tears. Impressive."

"Is that something you should be saying?"

"I only took one hopeless life."

"And thanks to that, a bloody storm will sweep through Shanxi Province?"

"Isn't that what you wanted?"

"I can't deny it. Yes. I've waited far too long."

"The fruit will taste all the sweeter."

"I hope so."

"Ah, right. The Lower District Sect has gotten involved."

“The Lower District Sect? How?”

“The new Branch Leader has a keen nose. Once this matter is settled, I intend to drive them out.”

“Be careful. No matter how formidable Heaven may be, you must never let your guard down…”

At that moment, the wind stopped.

The air quivered.

“…I misspoke.”

A long silence passed before another Sound Transmission came.

“You would do well to mind your words and actions.”

The voice was as soft as a cat’s paw.

But the listener could feel the cold, razor-sharp blade beneath it.

“Let me apologize once more.”

“Let’s end things here for today. If a problem arises, I’ll come see you again soon.”

The conversation ended there.

The other person vanished without a sound or trace.

They’re like ghosts.

Sometimes, he wondered what their true identities were. How strong were they? Who were their members?

But he soon shook his head.

Such curiosity would only shorten my life.

He had endured years of hardship to reap the fruit. He couldn’t let mere curiosity ruin his plans.

It truly has been a long time.

The shadow reached toward the moon. Faint moonlight slipped between his fingers, illuminating his silver beard.

Soon… everything will return to its rightful place.

The Head Elder smiled with delight.

Chapter 28

Hoo.

I sat cross-legged and evened out my breathing. The breath I exhaled still carried qi I hadn't managed to gather.

What a waste.

Circulating qi meant drawing in energy from outside, cycling it together with my internal energy, and accumulating it. But only a small amount remained in my body.

Most of it returned to nature.

In novels, you could shoot up just by doing a little of this.

The greatest martial arts under heaven? An elixir of the ages?

Not here. The Jin Family's Cultivation Technique was Peak-grade, but it was hopeless at accumulating internal energy. And elixirs? Bullshit. I hadn't even gotten a look at one. All I'd done was suffer like hell.

Is that my only hope?

Another mass of internal energy crouched in a corner of my dantian. If I could make all of it mine, it would be a huge help in the fights ahead.

The problem was that no matter how many times I tried, it wouldn't budge.

Move. Move!

As if the thing that had sat there like a boulder this whole time was going to start moving. I tried drawing up my internal energy, but it gave me nothing. I sighed and got to my feet.

"Are we leaving?"

Hyuk Mujin had been watching our surroundings.

"Yeah."

"Understood."

Then he briskly got the reconnaissance squad ready and scooped Soyul into his arms. I stared at him in disbelief.

What the hell did this bastard eat?

Why had he suddenly gotten so efficient?

This was the guy who used to move only when I shoved a fist in his face. Somehow, he seemed like a different person.

Not that I'm complaining.

I shoved the stray thoughts aside and slung Gong Yacheong onto my back. As the poisoning worsened, his face had turned a dark blue.

Hyuk Mujin asked worriedly, "Will he be all right?"

"He has to be."

I'd already done everything I could. All that remained was to hope Gong Yacheong held on. I muttered to the unconscious man.

"Not much farther. Just hold on a little longer."

Sunlight squeezed through the dim dawn. I took a long stride toward it.

No—I started to.

• Awoooooo!

At first, I thought it was the wind. But those were the cries of living beasts. Hyuk Mujin muttered,

"The wolves must be hungry."

"Wolves?"

"Of course. It's hardly strange for there to be wild animals in the mountains."

This was a game set in ancient China. It wouldn't be strange for wolves or tigers to leap out from anywhere. I'd heard wild animals crying more than once over the past few days.

But…

Something feels off.

This wasn't like the others. Just hearing those howls made my chest tighten and my fingertips tingle.

The gut I'd honed over seven years seemed to whisper. Something was beyond that forest, where the sunlight hadn't reached yet.

"Prepare for battle."

"Then we're leaving now… Huh?"

"Form a defensive formation."

Hyuk Mujin quickly recovered and relayed my order. Three reconnaissance squad members carrying shields clad in thin iron blocked the snow-covered path.

A narrow trail and the high ground atop a hill. We had the advantage.

• Awoooooo!

A second howl rang out. Closer—and all the more ominous for it. Hyuk Mujin spoke carefully.

"It sounds like nothing more than a pack of wolves…"

"Then that's even better."

"Won't this delay us too long?"

I shook my head. We'd been fleeing for two full days. If this brief pause was what got us caught, then it was fate.

"Hold. We'll wait a little longer."

The beasts seemed to understand me. For the next fifteen minutes, the howls continued without pause, drawing ever closer. Snapping branches and paws racing over the snow shattered the stillness of the mountain at dawn.

"Doesn't sound like one or two."

Hyuk Mujin glanced at my face.

“From the sound, there must be dozens… Wolves are pack animals, but this is strange.”

No sooner had he finished than the pack emerged. Maybe they hadn’t been able to find prey in winter; most of them were so gaunt that their ribs showed. But they were still predators. We couldn’t let our guard down.

Hungry predators, at that. The kids could get hurt.

And yet, contrary to my thoughts, I felt oddly relieved. The place might be crawling with martial artists, but surely even the beasts hadn’t learned martial arts.

Forget gut feelings—these were easy opponents.

I skip a few raids and my touch is completely gone.

I clicked my tongue and stepped forward. The dozens of wolves charging toward us already looked like chunks of EXP.

“Let’s wrap this up. Yeah?”

I crooked a finger at the wolf leading the pack in the distance. Judging by its size, that one had to be the leader.

- Grrrraaaah!

Since when did a wolf roar like a lion? Don’t tell me it was some kind of spiritual creature? Was I seriously going to lose to an animal?

Not happening.

I swallowed and raised my spear. I couldn’t afford to lose the battle of wills, so I glared hard and lowered my voice.

“Come.”

The effect was incredible!

- Grrrrr…

The charging wolf suddenly veered aside and plunged into the forest. Its dozens of subordinate wolves poured after it.

No—they had fled. A cold wind swept across the countless pawprints stamped into the snow.

What the hell?

They came running like they were going to eat me alive. Why run away?

Then a certain famous comic popped into my head. The one about a rubber man with hyperactivity disorder smashing the maritime authorities.

“D-don’t tell me it’s that?”

That ability that could terrify enemies—and even knock them unconscious—with qi alone.

This game was insane enough for it to be entirely possible. In which case, the System ought to ping me right about now…

Ding.

There it was! Buzzing with anticipation, I waited for the System voice.

Ignoring the reconnaissance squad members' bizarre expressions, I muttered over and over.

"Come on, come on, come on!"

It appeared.

The Quest Window.

SYSTEM

A Quest has been created.

Quest

Jopil, One Question, One Kill

The relentless chase has come to an end. You have come face-to-face with these cruel and tenacious pursuers, and you must confront Jopil, One Question, One Kill.

May you rest in peace... No, may fortune favor you in battle.

Grade: Peak

Limit: Jin Taekyung

Task: Survive — Incomplete

Reward: ???

Failure: Death

You do not have the authority to choose this Quest.

The Quest has been forcibly accepted!

"...Huh?"

What was happening? Where was I, and who was I?

Countless questions flashed through my mind and vanished. Then I heard someone's voice.

"We finally meet."

A man stood beside a gaunt tree, more than twenty zhang away.[103] Far if you called it far, close if you called it close. The problem was that none of us had known he was there.

Not even me.

When the hell did he...?

The higher my Level and martial realm rose, the sharper my five senses became. And yet I still hadn't detected that man. I hadn't even heard his footsteps.

If he hadn't spoken first—if the Quest Window hadn't appeared—I would have turned around without ever knowing he was there.

[103] A zhang is a traditional Chinese unit of length, approximately 3.03 m or 9.94 ft. Twenty zhang is about 60.6 m or 199 ft.

The wolves.

Those beasts had fled. Not from me, but from that man.

The unease that had plagued me since earlier finally took shape. I didn't even need to use Qi Sense.

I already knew his name.

"Jopil?"

The man—Jopil, One Question, One Kill—smiled broadly and nodded.

I had met three Peak masters so far.

Jin Wikyung, Wipeng, and the Head Elder. All three looked the part. Jopil, One Question, One Kill, did not.

He looks ordinary.

He wasn't a giant like Jin Wikyung, didn't have sharp eyes like Wipeng, and hadn't grown a silver beard like the Head Elder.

Jopil was of average height with an unremarkable face—and that made him look even more dangerous.

"Nice to meet you."

The instant Jopil smiled brightly and stepped forward, I sprang back without a second thought.

"Nimble. Good reactions, too. I like you."

My heart hammered. Maybe it was the tension, but my voice came out hoarse.

"Don't come any closer."

"Sorry about that. I was so happy to see you that I got carried away."

I wasn't happy at all.

"Don't be so tense. I only want to talk."

"Talk?"

"Yes. I've been wanting to meet you."

From Jopil's perspective, he probably had. He'd lost twenty men just a few days ago.

Fuck. I'm fucked.

The thought of a master like that chasing me day and night for two days just to tear me apart made my stomach turn.

"Don't give me that bullshit, Jopil!"

When I shouted, I felt the air freeze behind me. Jopil smiled as though he already knew what I was doing.

"What difference will telling them who I am make? Second Rate, Third Rate. They're all idiots and trash."

He'd read the reconnaissance squad's level exactly. I almost wondered if he was using the System too.

"Why don't we have a brief conversation? There's a great deal I want to ask you."

"A conversation? You're not just buying time?"

"Buying time? What do you mean?"

"You know what I mean. You're waiting for your men."

As if I'd hit the mark, the bridge of Jopil's nose twitched. Right. I didn't know why, but he was alone. If I was willing to take a few losses, it might be enough to…

"Waiting? Me? For those pathetic weaklings?"

"…What?"

"Didn't I already tell you? They're all idiots and trash. Hopeless lives without effort or talent."

"…"

"Black Mountain Blade was decent enough, but he had no eye for people, so he deserved to die. I ripped his eyes open before I left. Punishment for failing to recognize a master."

Correction. Jopil, One Question, One Kill, didn't merely look dangerous.

He was one fucking dangerous bastard.

This guy's completely insane.

I'd never met anyone like Jopil, either in real life or in a game. That utterly nonchalant tone and manner. He treated people like tools. A psychopath.

"Anyway, what you're worried about won't happen. They're painfully slow. It'll take them half a shichen to catch up.[104] By then, everything will be over."

One thing was certain. In the ending Jopil had in mind, his own death wasn't part of it.

"Well?"

"And if I refuse?"

Jopil smiled softly.

"I'll be disappointed in you. Very disappointed."

I could more or less picture what would happen if he was disappointed.

"Junior, I bear you no grudge. No—if anything, I'm rather fond of you. Answer a few questions truthfully, and I may even let you go."

"Wait. Let me go?"

"Yes. I won't harm you in any way. I'll send you back in one piece."

"…Really?"

"I'll stake my neck on it. Is that enough?"

[104] A shichen is a traditional time period of approximately two hours; half a shichen is about one hour.

Sincerity showed on Jopil's face. Unpredictable psychopath or not, maybe there was a chance we could all make it out alive.

"All right."

Even if the worst came, all I could do was fight. I'd buy a little time and try to read his openings.

"Good. A friend who listens to reason, hahaha."

Jopil clapped and laughed. The scabbard hanging at his left hip swayed.

Right-handed. Swordsman.

I continued filing away information in my head.

"First, I'd like to ask your age."

"Twenty."

Jopil's eyes widened.

"My. That realm at twenty. Impressive."

I'd spent seven years as a Hunter without ever escaping F-rank, yet here in the game, I was treated like a martial arts genius. It was a strange feeling.

"Judging by your clothes, you seem to be from the Jin Family of Taiyuan."

I nodded readily.

"Supreme First Rate at twenty. You wouldn't be that famous Heaven Shaking Sword, so… your name?"

"Jin Taekyung."

"Jin Taekyung. Jin Taekyung. I've heard that name somewhere. Ah!"

After mulling it over, Jopil exclaimed.

"The wastrel Third Young Master! That's you?"

"Not a wastrel. These days, they call me the Hidden Dragon."

"Puhahaha! I knew it. The straitlaced Jin Family of Taiyuan, resorting to poison? As if. I don't know who set all this up, but things are getting interesting."

Jopil regarded me with satisfaction.

"I'd already heard plenty of rumors about you. Was all of that a disguise?"

"…Something like that."

"Good. A hidden blade, then. I like it. When did you begin learning martial arts?"

"Seven years ago."

It wasn't entirely a lie. By Murim standards, a Hunter's combat methods were a kind of martial art too.

"Seven years. And your master?"

"Don't have one."

"No master?"

He studied me for a while, then said,

"Doesn't seem like a lie."

"You promised to spare me if I answered honestly. That was your promise, wasn't it?"

"Yes, it was. What an absurd yet fascinating story. A direct descendant of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, with no master, reaching that realm at twenty… My, my."

My mouth was bone-dry. I gripped the spear and scanned Jopil's body. The openings on him right now were unbelievable. But was what I was seeing really all there was?

He could be baiting me into attacking first.

The thought went no further. Jopil suddenly burst out laughing.

"Hahaha! Good. I like it. I'll keep my promise."

He'd keep his promise?

The thing I'd thought impossible was actually happening. I stared at him blankly.

"No need to look at me like that. Truthfully, I wanted very badly to kill you at first… But now that we've met, I find myself wanting to watch you a little longer."

Jopil continued, his voice brimming with goodwill.

"It would be a shame to kill such outstanding talent. Especially under the current circumstances."

"What circumstances?"

"Ah, you may not know yet. You'll find out once you return. Go on, then. I hope you'll have grown a little more by the next time we meet."

I could go? He meant it?

I backed away without lowering my guard. Jopil merely watched me with a smile.

He looked like a fisherman releasing a minnow.

They say even if you enter a tiger's den, you'll survive as long as you keep your wits about you.

Who would have thought Jopil's unpredictability would become my way out?

Once I'd put a safe distance between us, the breath I'd been holding rushed out. But there was no time to catch it. I had to get out of there even one second sooner.

"We're moving. Hurry!"

Then—

"Hold on, Junior."

Jopil looked at me in puzzlement.

"What are you doing?"

"What do you mean? Going back, like you promised…"

"I only gave you permission to leave. Alone."

"…What?"

"I may not look it, but I'm in someone's employ. I have to complete the mission I was given."

The mission. Don’t tell me…

“The three survivors of the Sakju Branch. And those pieces of trash you call your subordinates. Leave them behind. I should be paid for two days’ work, don’t you think?”

His eyes, clear as a child’s, flashed. The next instant, they became the eyes of a predator.

“I’ll warn you now. If you refuse, I’ll be very disappointed.”

I stared blankly at Jopil, the reconnaissance squad, the young siblings, and the dying Gong Yacheong. There was little time, but my mind churned through the decision dozens of times before one answer finally burst out.

“Then be disappointed, you fucking bastard.”

Jopil laughed savagely.

Chapter 29

Some people never hesitate once they've made a decision. Jopil was one of them.

"Let's see what you've got."

With that casual remark, Jopil kicked off the ground. More than ten zhang vanished in two steps.[105] A flash burst from his waist.

Whoosh!

What the…?

My body moved before I could think. The instant my outstretched spear shaft met that flash—

Boom!

The impact hurled me backward with a thunderous crash. I flew toward the reconnaissance squad like a cannonball. Shields be damned—the three or four men at the front went down in a heap.

"Argh!"

"Captain! Are you all right?"

…Would I be all right?

Holy shit.

I gripped the spear shaft, which was still trembling from the impact.

The flash had been Jopil's sword. It was the fastest, strongest attack I had faced in all twenty-seven years of my life.

It hit that hard even though I blocked it?

If I'd reacted even a moment later, I would have been hiking up Mount Beimang by now.[106] I steadied my pounding heart and rose to my feet.

Jopil was smiling.

"I'm disappointed. Is that all you've got?"

The only reason I had been able to block it was because it was merely "that much." If I hadn't leveled up after mowing down those twenty men, I might already have been dead.

Fuck. Wrong opponent.

My realm was Second Rate. Even so, I had easily beaten two First Rate masters so far—with the martial arts and stats I'd gained through the System, and with the combat experience I'd accumulated.

But I could tell from that one attack.

This guy is different.

---

[105] A zhang is a traditional Chinese unit of length, approximately 3.03 meters (9.94 ft). More than ten zhang is more than about 30 meters (99 ft).

[106] Mount Beimang is traditionally associated with burial grounds; hiking up it means being dead.

I felt outmatched in every way. Jopil was on a completely different level from Lee Seogeun or Black Mountain Blade.

So different that the word death came to mind.

“You’re afraid.”

Afraid? Me?

I looked at my hand. The spear had stopped vibrating, but the hand gripping it was shaking like an aspen leaf. My heartbeat was so loud it felt as though everyone could hear it.

“How do you expect to survive the storms of the martial world with such a timid heart?”

Jopil clicked his tongue.

“This won’t do. Let me give you a little encouragement.”

“What?”

“Anger always overcomes fear.”

Before I could understand what he meant, Jopil flicked his sleeve. Several streaks of light shot out at once.

Danger!

The instant a red alert blared in my head, I swung my spear.

Clang!

Several throwing knives ricocheted away with a sharp ring.

But I couldn’t stop them all.

“Guh.”

One of the reconnaissance squad clutched his throat. Blood fountained between his fingers, and I saw a throwing knife buried there.

“Grrk. Cap… Captain. Grrk.”

He dropped to his knees, gurgling on blood. His still-boyish face was twisted with the terror of dying.

“P-please, save me…”

Whoosh! Thunk!

No one survived throwing knives to the throat and between the eyes.

Neither did he.

Splat.

He fell face-first onto the ground, which had only just begun to thaw, and never rose again.

It had all happened in an instant.

“I chose him because he looked the youngest… Was he a cherished subordinate?”

I shook my head.

“No.”

“That’s a shame.”

“I don’t even know his name.”

“And you call him your subordinate?”

“He’s an NPC. I don’t need to know his name or his age.”

“What?”

I rolled the corpse onto his back. After brushing the dirt and snow from his face, I closed his staring eyes.

Then, as if making a confession, I told the still-bewildered Jopil the truth.

“We only met three days ago.”

“Is that so?”

“Yeah.”

“Then…”

Jopil smiled as he continued.

“Why are you angry?”

He was right. Something was boiling up from the pit of my stomach. My head and chest burned so hot that I had to say something.

What was that kid’s name again?

He was Number Seven in the reconnaissance squad. I’d forced him to carry a shield even though he hadn’t wanted to, and I’d trained him whenever I got the chance. He was young enough that a few words of praise always made him grin from ear to ear.

What was his name?

I couldn’t remember.

I didn’t even know the names of everyone who lived in my goshiwon.[107] Why would I remember some NPC I’d only known for a few days? I had no reason to. No need.

But…

I was annoyed.

I was furious.

I’d thought things would be different in a game, but even here, I had failed to protect one of my teammates.

The whole reason I had trained him so hard, all the effort of the past few days—it had vanished like foam. I opened my mouth and breathed out hot air.

“You son of a bitch. You’re dead.”

I chewed and swallowed my last fasting pill.

A System message announced that my energy had recovered.

Boom!

[107] A goshiwon is a small, inexpensive rented room, typically in a building of similar rooms.

I kicked off the ground and launched myself forward.

Jopil knocked aside the spearhead surging up from his blind spot.

Clang! Skrrratch!

Fast and powerful. His fundamentals were solid, and he had a keen sense for combat.

He was beyond the likes of that brat from the Mount Heng Sword Sect or a rootless wandering martial artist like Black Mountain Blade.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan… Even rotten, a Chinese herring is still a Chinese herring, is that it?

Jopil leisurely slipped past the spearhead as he considered the young man before him.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan's decline was nothing new. The prestige that had once dominated Shanxi Province had long since faded. All that remained was the dim glory of the past and the rare talent that appeared once in a blue moon.

Someone like Jin Taekyung.

They've raised an interesting one.

Such skill at twenty. He was not yet a match for the Heaven Shaking Sword, who was already hailed as the greatest master in Shanxi Province, but he was certainly intriguing.

Age aside, his internal energy and martial arts were both middling… but he knew how to fight. He knew exactly when to retreat and when to advance, and whenever an opportunity appeared, he charged in like a fighting demon.

Just as he was doing now.

"Ha!"

Whoosh—Boom!

The spearhead flashed toward Jopil's face and pierced empty air. The explosive crack sent his hair flying.

Well, look at this.

Every motion from gripping the spear to thrusting it was compact and flowed seamlessly into the next. More striking still was the way Jin Taekyung smoothly twisted his entire body before releasing an explosive burst of force.

Silk-reeling force.[108]

It was still clumsy, but there was no mistaking it.

Silk-reeling force at twenty?

[108] Silk-reeling force is a method of twisting the body in a continuous, coiling motion to release power.

An innate feel for combat. Experience reminiscent of an old veteran of the martial world. And talent.

His potential was frightening.

Just as Jopil reached that conclusion, Jin Taekyung muttered with a stiff expression,

“Fuck, what the hell is this?”

“…”

Jopil stumbled over his own feet.

The instant he thought ah, shit, Jin Taekyung’s spear slid in like a snake. He hopped back and opened the distance, but the internal energy on that spear was no joke.

Riiip!

It was the first attack Jopil had allowed through. His robe split open in a long gash, baring his chest.

“Ah, so close. I could’ve finished it.”

“…”

So close? Finished it? Against me—Jopil, One Question, One Kill?

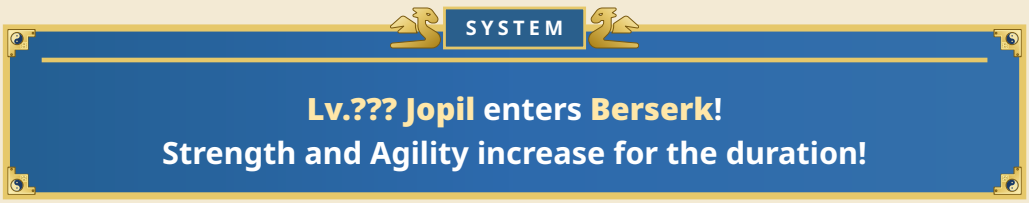
As Jin Taekyung smacked his lips in disappointment, Jopil felt rage surge through him.

“Youuu bastard!”

His shout, laden with internal energy, shook the forest. His eyes rolled back as he charged at Jin Taekyung.

The instant I sliced open Jopil’s robe, a System notification rang.

Ding.



Damn it. Even more?

“Graaaaah!”

Boom! Boom!

Blow after blow crashed down with a thunderous roar. The ground erupted, and trees were torn out by the roots.

With his eyes rolled completely white, Jopil rampaged like a madman.

The problem is, he’s no ordinary madman.

He was a madman who also happened to be a Peak master. If not for the Gambler Title, which increased my combat stats by ten percent in a one-on-one fight, I wouldn't have lasted this long.

Boom!

That wasn't martial arts.

It was a bombardment.

But Jopil's attacks had lost all precision. His movements were normally compact and fast, but the excessive strength from Berserk made them wider and left him full of openings.

I only need him to show me one…

The problem was, I couldn't find it.

He had completely lost his mind and was laying waste to everything around him. Dodging was all I could manage. Blocking was out of the question.

Step into range and I would be shredded. That much was obvious.

"Captain!"

"We're coming!"

I hurriedly waved off the reconnaissance squad members charging toward me.

"Hey, don't come over here! Don't come! Fall back!"

Had they lost their minds? Coming here?

We had already lost one man for nothing. I didn't want the entire reconnaissance squad wiped out.

Besides…

If those guys come over here, the Gambler Title's effect disappears!

Gambler only worked in a one-on-one fight.

I was barely hanging on as it was. If I lost the Title's effect too, I had no idea how much longer I could last.

"Get back, you bastards!"

I shouted and hurled myself sideways. Right on cue, Jopil's sword smashed the ground apart.

Crunch!

"Captain!"

Hyuk Mujin's shout came a beat too late. Despite my warning, he was already charging in. Behind him, I saw Han Yeop's grim, determined face.

"Hey, don't—!"

"Jopil, you vicious bastard!"

"Get away from the Captain!"

But they were already too late. Hyuk Mujin and Han Yeop, who had sprinted over with everything they had, thrust their weapons at Jopil while his attention was still on me.

"Die!"

Sword and spear. Spear and sword.

Their timing was excellent, and their attacks worked together as if they had practiced them beforehand.

There was only one problem.

They had the wrong opponent.

"How dare you, you rats!"

Jopil reacted instantly. He planted his sword in the ground, spun around, and struck both weapons with his bare hands.

Facing a sword and spear empty-handed was suicide.

But this was Murim.

More precisely, Jopil was a Peak master.

Crack—Crunch!

His palm merely brushed the side of Hyuk Mujin's blade, yet the sword shattered before it could even reach him. Han Yeop stared in horror at his own spear, its head sliced clean off.

That was the result of Jopil's rigid knife-hand.

"What the…"

"That's impossi—"

Before they could finish, Jopil slammed both hands into their chests.

They smashed into trees, spraying fountains of blood.

"I'll kill you."

The whites of his eyes had vanished from his chillingly smiling face.

Berserk had worn off. He had regained his senses.

"Fuck…"

One disaster after another. Mountains beyond mountains. Enemies on every side.

Jopil, you son of a bitch.

The situation kept spiraling toward the worst possible outcome. If anyone was going to stop him, it had to be me.

"Jopil—!"

The internal energy I drew up with all my strength raced through my body. I kicked off the ground and shot toward him.

Jopil grinned broadly.

"Right. I'll kill you first."

But I had one thing to count on.

He's empty-handed right now.

That was the mistake he'd made while Berserk. And I was certain I could end this before he pulled the sword from behind him and swung it.

In the next instant, I dragged up every last bit of internal energy in my dantian. I focused all of it into a single point—the tip of my spear—and thrust.

"Die!"

The final form of the Jin Family's Spear Technique.

Sky-Piercing Strike.

If it could pierce the heavens, why couldn't it pierce Jopil's heart?

I was certain.

This is… the end.

The world slowed, and I saw Jopil's face.

He was smiling.

The instant I saw that smile, I realized it.

Something was wrong.

Skrrrng!

Jopil's sword was faster than my spear.

The blood-soaked crimson blade shoved the spear shaft aside and drove inward.

The instant my spearhead, laden with internal energy, pierced empty air—

Slash!

A chilling sound rang out, and my chest suddenly felt cool.

Then came the searing pain and a burst of blood.

Fortunately, I had jerked back at the last instant and avoided a fatal wound.

Damn it.

What the hell had just happened?

As I staggered backward, Jopil rushed me.

Whoosh-whoosh-whoosh!

Crimson sword-light poured down. Every flash was so fast and strong I could barely see it.

I gritted my teeth and swung my spear, but Jopil surpassed me in both momentum and martial arts.

Slash! Thunk! Splurt!

Lightning tore across my body. The blade stabbed my shoulder, slashed my knee, and pierced my side before pulling free in a spray of blood.

"Guh."

"You still haven't dropped your weapon. I'll give you that."

Jopil added,

"If you survive this too."

The next instant, his hand slammed into my chest.

Chapter 30

Whoosh.

The instant Jopil's red-hot palm struck my chest, lava-hot qi swept through me. My breath caught, and my internal energy surged backward.

What is this?

The question crossed my mind as I went flying. I bounced and rolled for more than ten zhang[109] before finally coming to a stop.

"Cough."

Blood trickled down my chin. Every so often, unidentified chunks came up with it. They were… fuck. Pieces of my organs.

He got me good.

Through my blurred vision, I saw Jopil walking toward me. His unhurried stride carried the ease of a victor.

I have to get up.

I groped beside me until my hand closed around a cool spear shaft. Using the spear as a cane, I barely managed to stand—and found Jopil staring at me with narrowed eyes.

"You can still stand after taking a Flame Divine Palm at seventy percent power… What a troublesome junior."

Wham!

Another palm strike slammed into me.

The Flame Divine Palm was every bit as powerful as its name. My shirt burned away, and my flesh melted and sloughed off. The heat that invaded my body tore through my meridians one after another.

"Guh."

Horrific pain crashed over me. Instead of writhing in agony, I thrust my spear at Jopil's vital point.

Thunk.

"You're like a fighting dog."

Jopil snatched the spear shaft and clicked his tongue.

"Someone at your level can't do anything to me."

"Go… fuck yourself!"

The next instant, I let go of the spear and threw myself into his chest.

This was my last chance. I focused every bit of internal energy into a single point. If I could strike one of his vital points, I could turn the tables.

But…

[109] A zhang is a traditional Chinese unit of length, approximately 3.33 meters (10.9 ft).

"Gasp."

The result was disastrous.

I had forced up my internal energy without regard for my internal injuries. I collapsed on the spot, trembling as if I'd been struck by lightning.

Drool ran from the corner of my mouth.

"Pfft. Puhahaha! Have you ever seen such a stupid bastard!"

Jopil howled with laughter and snapped off the spearhead.

"Well? What now? Huh? Youngest Young Master of the Jin Family of Taiyuan?"

Now I didn't even have a weapon. Despair darkened my vision.

Am I going to die like this?

In the past seven years, death had never felt this close. I had fought more than a thousand times and survived. Was I really going to die here, of all places?

This pointlessly?

No. I can't die like this…

I reached out, but that was as far as I got.

"Captain!"

A shout crackling with static was the last thing I heard before all light vanished.

When I opened my eyes again, I was in neither heaven nor hell. I was drenched in sweat and panting, my whole body as heavy as waterlogged cotton.

A dream? Or my life flashing before my eyes?

Whatever it was, one thing was certain. This was the past—a memory from seven years ago. The familiar face of the training instructor was proof enough.

"You… What did you…"

The instructor couldn't finish. He was staring at a steel training dummy modeled after a monster.

Now it looked more like scrap metal, bent and split all over.

"Was that a skill just now?"

My younger self answered in an exhausted voice.

"Thrust with All My Might."

"Thrust with All My Might?"

"Yes. I just thrust as hard as I could."

"You don't know how you're doing it, but you started using it naturally after you Awakened?"

"Uh, yes. That's right."

"That's a skill, you idiot."

Looking dumbfounded, the instructor turned to the file in his hand.

“Jin Taekyung. Twenty years old. Lives in Goyang, Gyeonggi Province. F-rank Awakened. Is this you?”

“Yes. So, my full-power thrust—no, my skill. It’s good, right?”

“You’re asking if it’s good?”

The instructor let out a hollow laugh.

“I’ve been at this training center for fifteen years, and I’ve never seen anything like it. That kind of destructive power shouldn’t appear below D-rank.”

“Fuck, I knew it. Instructor, I’m leaving.”

“What?”

“I’m going to get reassessed. Honestly, that should be enough for E-rank, at least.”

“No. I think they assessed you correctly.”

“What?”

“The skill itself is incredible. It’s far beyond anything an F-rank should be capable of. But…”

The instructor scratched the back of his head.

“You can’t use it.”

“Why? Why not?”

“Your body can’t keep up. That skill is beyond what F-rank mana and physical ability can handle. That’s why you collapse after using it once.”

“But I’m fine.”

“Are you?”

Before I could even nod, the instructor’s hand shot out like lightning and tapped me on the chest.

Literally just a tap. But I’d used up all my strength, so I toppled flat onto my back.

My whole body throbbed. I could barely move a finger.

“You’re already putting out more power than your body can handle. Eventually, it won’t end with a little soreness.”

“…Is there another way?”

“Solid fundamentals. Excellent technique. And your own combat sense. If you want to live a long life, don’t use that skill. Ah, except under special circumstances.”

“Special circumstances?”

The instructor grinned and added,

“When your life is in danger. That skill might save you once.”

The next instant, I opened my eyes on the cold snowfield.

“Captain!”

The last shout I'd heard now rang clear. So did the sharp pain from my mangled body.

I'm still alive.

My life had flashed before my eyes in a mere instant. Jopil had turned to look behind him, close enough for me to touch if I reached out.

"They're certainly loyal. Their skills are pathetic, though."

The reconnaissance squad was charging toward us in a cluster.

"I'm thinking of tearing them apart. What do you say?"

"…been fighting…"

"What?"

"Like an idiot… fighting…"

I mumbled again. Jopil bent down, irritation on his face.

"Can't you even speak properly?"

"I said I've been fighting like an idiot this whole time."

Ptoo!

The moment I'd been waiting for.

I spat the blood I'd gathered into his face. At the same time, my hand—already moving half a beat ahead—slammed down toward his foot.

Inventory Open.

Jopil didn't know.

I was a Hunter, a man of Murim, and a player who could use the System!

Equip Dagger.

A solid weight filled my empty hand. His face covered in blood, Jopil tried to jerk back, but the dagger had already punched through the top of his foot.

Shunk!

"Guh."

Even a Peak master was still human.

His body froze at the sudden pain. I released the dagger and reached for his ankle.

Equip Dagger.

My Inventory was piled with weapons taken from the enemies I'd killed since the Tutorial. Swords, spears, axes, daggers… more than twenty in all.

Jopil's men had been walking armories.

Slice.

"Gaaah!"

His Achilles tendon.

The instant I severed the tendon at his ankle, a scream burst from him. As his stance collapsed, I rolled aside, slashing and stabbing until his remaining left leg was soaked in blood as well.

Slice. Thrust. Thrust. Stab-stab-stab!

Jopil's mouth opened wide in rage and pain.

"Gaaaaah! You son of a bitch!"

Both his legs were useless, but Jopil was still a Peak master. He spun like lightning, slipped past my dagger, caught my wrist, and twisted.

Crack.

"Gah!"

His attack didn't end there.

A red-hot palm.

The Flame Divine Palm.

Boom.

My chest caved in. My vision went white as powerful fire qi tore through my body.

Boom.

The strength drained from me.

I heard the bones in my neck grind out of place under Jopil's grip. His chilling voice slid into my ear.

"Now you understand, don't you? Who you dared lay a hand on."

"…Cough."

"If King Yama[110] asks, tell him I sent you."

As I hung limp as a corpse, Jopil declared with rapture written across his face,

"Die."

His final Flame Divine Palm shot toward my chest. Lava-hot power capable of swallowing my life whole burned within that crimson palm.

And at last…

Tap.

The world stopped.

There was no lava. No heat of any kind.

Only his battered, callused palm resting against my chest.

A ripple ran through Jopil's eyes.

"You…"

The grip around my throat went slack. As Jopil staggered backward, I saw the dagger below his navel, buried deep in his dantian.

"What… What the hell is this?"

The next instant, blood ran down his chin.

That was only the beginning.

Blood began pouring from his eyes, nose, and ears as well—a waterfall streaming from all seven orifices.

[110] King Yama is a judge of the dead in East Asian Buddhist tradition.

The reconnaissance squad stopped in their tracks at the horrifying sight. Someone muttered as if groaning.

"Qi deviation…"

Internal energy was a double-edged sword.

I had waited for the moment Jopil drew his internal energy to its peak, then driven a dagger summoned from my Inventory into his dantian.

The result was a violent reversal of internal energy.

Qi deviation.

"You were definitely empty-handed."

I answered wearily.

"Live long enough, and all sorts of things happen."

"I can't die like this. This makes no sense."

Jopil muttered like a man who had lost his mind, stumbling forward one step at a time.

Pools of blood formed wherever he passed.

"I am Jopil. Jopil, One Question, One Kill. The nineteenth-generation successor of the Fire Gate Clan. I am not someone who should die at the hands of a nobody like you!"

A chilling, ghostly aura radiated from him as he screamed, drenched in blood. Even the reconnaissance squad members who had charged in ready to die trembled in fear.

"Then why? Why, at the likes of you, would I—!"

That was when the ember I'd thought extinguished burst into flame.

The change began in Jopil's body. His bleeding stopped, and blue veins bulged all over him. He looked as if he could no longer feel the pain of his severed tendons—or even the qi deviation.

Terrible heat poured from every breath.

What is this?

A literal resurrection?

No. This was Jopil's last desperate struggle.

Everyone around me screamed in terror, but I could see it clearly. His hair was turning white by the second. His skin was shriveling.

Right now, he was…

Burning away his life.

He means to kill me, at least, before he goes.

This was power gained by sacrificing the most precious thing he had, and every bit of it was aimed at me. I knew instinctively that I couldn't dodge.

Can I do this? Me?

I picked up the fallen spear.

The Sharp Spear I'd used ever since the Tutorial.

Its spearhead had been broken off. Now it was nothing more than a pointed iron rod.

I'll end up looking like this soon enough.

I had only one option left.

Even if it worked, there was no guarantee I'd survive. But I had no time to hesitate.

"Jin Taekyung!"

"Yeah. Let's finish this."

Me and Jopil.

Jopil and me.

We shot toward each other. The heat pouring off him melted the piled snow and dried my lips. I drew a long breath.

Sss. Hoo.

The noise around me receded. My heartbeat and breathing thundered in my ears.

Thump. Thump-thump. Thump-thump-thump.

My heartbeat reached its peak. My breathing fell into place with mechanical precision.

I knew.

Now.

At that instant, I awakened the internal energy in my dantian. Inside my body, where my qi and blood pathways lay twisted and ruined, only one source of internal energy remained.

The third, hardened like rock.

My only option—and the last piece that would fill my Skill.

Run wild as you please.

The awakened energy went berserk. It forced its way through my ruined pathways and surged throughout my body. Mind-numbing pain struck me.

But the new strength flooding through me soon made me forget it.

Go!

Every muscle in my body pulled taut. From my calves and thighs, through my waist and along my thrusting arm, every last bit of my strength and internal energy surged forward.

Condensed air burst from the broken spear tip.

Matching it, Jopil thrust out his Flame Divine Palm.

"Dieeeee!"

Whoooosh.

A mound of snow erupted with the wind. Through the flakes drifting gently back down, Jopil came into view.

His right arm, the one that had unleashed the Flame Divine Palm, was gone. So were his shoulder and side.

Half his upper body had evaporated.

“What kind of martial art…?”

I dropped the spear and answered.

“Thrust with All My Might.”

The next instant, heaven and earth flipped.

Beyond my blurring vision, Jopil’s already lifeless head shot high into the sky.

Socheon was crying out loud, holding a sword as tall as he was.

Chapter 31

“Well, look at you. Must be nice.”

I slowly opened my eyes to a familiar face.

“Did you come here for a picnic? Who sleeps in the middle of a Gate?”

I must have dozed off. I shamelessly denied it.

“I wasn’t sleeping. Who says I was?”

“Wipe the drool off your mouth before you start lying.”

“Tch.”

“Oh, you little—”

He shook a fist at me, but a smile tugged at the corners of his mouth. I rubbed my stiff neck.

“Ugh, I’m tired.”

“Did you meet a woman yesterday? Why are you nodding off like a sick chicken even in the middle of a raid?”

“When would I have time to meet a woman? You know my situation.”

“True enough.”

We’d been through thick and thin together for five years, ever since our first battle. He knew me as well as I knew him.

“Then what’s wrong?”

“What do you think? Money.”

“Money? Don’t tell me you’re moonlighting.”

His voice dropped. I looked past his shoulder at the team members resting nearby and nodded.

“Well, well. This bastard gets a little experience under his belt and starts lining his pockets on the side. And you call yourself the vice team leader.”

“Raids have been scarce lately, and I’m strapped. Really strapped. You’ve done it yourself, hyung[111], so don’t give me that.”

Hunters with professional licenses were legally barred from taking second jobs. A D-rank Hunter probably wouldn’t have to live like this, but F-ranks like us had no choice. The Guild knew how things were, so they looked the other way even when they found out.

“True, but… be careful. If someone files a complaint with the Management Agency, you’ll have a real mess on your hands.”

“It’s a trustworthy place. They pay cash the same day, so there’s no problem. You think I’d risk it otherwise?”

---

[111] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

"Really?"

Judging by his expression, he was tempted.

"Do you need money too, hyung[112]?"

"I've got three kids. I need an oil well to spring up in my yard."

Misery filled his eyes as the words poured out. I'd already heard this routine dozens of times. After railing against the hardships of raising children, the rising price of formula, and the shamelessness of merchants, he patted me on the shoulder.

"Don't get married."

"I won't."

More precisely, I couldn't.

I had no woman and no money. My goal in life was to buy a house in a safe zone within five years, so deep down, I envied him.

A spouse I loved. Children. A happy family.

I had no idea when I'd ever have something like that.

"Marriage is a swamp."

For all his talk, he was famous for being a devoted husband and a good father. I knew he sometimes took out his family photos and smiled fondly at them.

"It sucks your whole life in. By the time you come to your senses, you're buried up to your chest and can barely breathe."

"…"

Maybe I'd had the wrong idea about him.

"So don't spend all your time working. Take breaks. Dating, hobbies—stuff like that's good for you."

"I don't know. I still need the money."

I scratched my head as I answered. He gave me a concerned look.

"I saw you sleeping earlier. You were drenched in cold sweat. Keep that up and you'll drop dead from overwork."

"Was I?"

Now that he mentioned it, my back was damp with cold sweat. I must have had a bad dream…

Can't remember.

Probably just some stupid dream anyway.

A Gate.

[112] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

These days, Gates provided a living for Hunters like me, but their true purpose was to serve as invasion routes for the armies of the Demon Realm.

When Demon King Asmodeus fell, his mighty army was routed with him. But even decades later, the Gates remained.

“Defensive formation!”

At his command, three Hunters carrying enormous tower shields blocked the path ahead. In a narrow cave, that alone was enough to stop most attacks.

Clang! Clang-clang!

“Giiiiik!”

Some twenty goblins hurled poison needles, axes, and spears, but every last one bounced off those big, beautiful tower shields.

“Archers!”

The tanks blocked every attack from the front while the archers rained arrows from the rear. As we pressed forward and took down nearly half of them, the goblins let out panicked shrieks.

“Gyaaaah!”

“Kieek!”

He gave the next order at exactly the right moment.

“Attack formation!”

The tanks dropped their tower shields and burst forward at the same time. I was faster.

“Hah!”

I swept the iron spear through a wide arc. Green blood burst into the air, and the front rank collapsed. I plunged into the gap, stabbing and slashing at everything within reach, and their formation crumbled.

“Charge!”

The damage dealers and tanks piled in. In moments, the goblin pack had become a heap of corpses.

“Pretty easy today, huh?”

“Honestly, the vice team leader did half the work. He was flying around out there. When did he get that good…? Shh. The Team Leader’s pissed.”

The team members chatting among themselves fell silent the moment he appeared.

“Hey, Jin Taekyung!”

That made me jump.

I’d been staring into space, lost in thought, and jerked in surprise.

“What?”

“Who told you to go off on your own? Are you a tank? Did you forget the attack order? And you still call yourself the vice team leader?”

"That's not—"

"If you're going to pull this kind of shit, transfer teams. You're putting everyone else in danger."

I looked at his grim face and sighed.

"I'm sorry. I don't know why I did that. They just… suddenly didn't seem like a big deal. I must have lost it for a second."

It was a strange feeling. The instant I saw the goblin pack, I thought I could wipe them all out by myself.

No, it hadn't been a thought.

It had been certainty.

"You…"

He swallowed whatever he had been about to say. We'd had each other's backs for five years, and this was the first time I'd ever done anything so reckless.

"Don't do it again. If something's bothering you, tell me."

He patted my shoulder and walked away. As I watched him go, something in my chest throbbed.

Should I see a doctor?

But it wasn't long before I stopped thinking about the pain altogether.

"Magic Gem!"

"Got one here!"

"Another!"

"It dropped! It dropped! It dropped!"

"Mom! Hayeon!"

Ah, that last shout was mine.

His face was flushed with excitement too as he muttered, "What the hell is all this…?"

Twenty Magic Gems of various sizes lay neatly arranged on the ground.

Magic Gems. They looked like red pebbles, but they were known as the flower of the Gate. These concentrations of magical power found inside monsters were a form of higher-dimensional energy—and the most valuable of all monster byproducts.

"At this rate, each one's got to be worth over a million won.[113]"

That came from the Team Leader, an E-rank Hunter who had survived ten years in this business. Everyone's eyes went glassy at the intoxicating sight.

"Is it normally like this?"

[113] One million won is about $710 or €650.

At the new recruit's question, everyone shook their heads emphatically.

"Absolutely not."

An F-rank Gate yielded one or two on average. Even with incredible luck, you wouldn't find five.

I was busy doing the math.

Twenty million won[114] from the Magic Gems alone, another five million won[115] for the byproducts and Equipment. Add all the various allowances and…

Fuck. How much is all this?

It was the biggest jackpot I'd hit since becoming a Hunter.

And the raid wasn't even over yet.

"How far have we come?"

"We're almost there. Turn right and the boss zone is just ahead."

The words boss zone made everyone's eyes light up.

It went without saying, but a boss zone contained a boss. The boss monster was the strongest monster in the Gate—and the one with the most expensive byproducts, Equipment, and Magic Gems.

What if we take down the boss monster too?

It would be a literal jackpot. The opportunity of a lifetime for an F-rank Hunter.

Everyone was beaming at the thought when he spoke.

"Wait. Let me think."

What the hell was he saying?

"What do you mean?"

"Think about it. Every monster we've encountered has been an ordinary goblin, but we've found this many Magic Gems? Something's wrong."

He sighed. His face was still flushed with excitement, but now uncertainty clouded it.

"I know how you feel. I do… but we've already made a fortune. Let's be satisfied with this and turn back."

Satisfied?

Now? After coming this far, he wanted to turn back?

I looked at the other team members. Some of them had fought alongside me for two or three years. Others were new.

Every one of them wore the same expression I did.

"I'm against—"

My breath caught.

Damn it. The chest pain again.

---

[114] Twenty million won is about $14,000 or €13,000.

[115] Five million won is about $3,600 or €3,200.

I tried to continue, but no sound came out. Now my ears had started ringing too.

What is this?

The pain and the ringing grew worse. I dropped to my knees, gasping for breath.

Someone. Please, help me.

I grabbed someone's pant leg and clung to it.

It was him. The man who had looked after me like a brother—and like a father—for the past five years.

Hyung.[116] Please save me.

He looked down at me without emotion.

"Me? After you ran away and left everyone behind?"

What?

"I wanted to live too."

I forgot the pain and stared up at him. His clothes and skin melted away, exposing bone.

Everyone but me had become skeletons, sprawled across the ground.

Ah. That's right.

They had all died.

That day two years ago. In the boss zone I had insisted we enter, every one of them had died.

I was the only one who survived.

I floundered, drowning in the memories.

The ominous darkness hanging over the boss zone. The foul stench. The damp floor. That thing's enormous wings.

Bodies ripped to pieces in midair.

Terrified screams.

People running for their lives.

You fucking bastard!

But even the Skill I poured everything into wasn't enough to kill it. As I waited for death, he hauled me to my feet.

"Taekyung!"

"Hyung,[117] I'm sorry. It was all my fault."

If it hadn't been for me—if I hadn't gotten greedy—everyone could have survived.

They could have gone home to their families.

As I sobbed like a child, he forced himself to smile.

---

[116] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

[117] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

“How is that your fault? Look at this kid. Now you’re even trying to play Team Leader.”

The massive body drifted through the cave. Stalactites rained down, and the last member of the team let out a death cry. In the darkness, its red eyes turned toward us.

“That arrogant bastard. Taekyung, go on ahead.”

“Hyung.[118] Cheonsu hyung!”

My chest hurt.

Pain surged through me, fierce enough to blot out my vision. It felt as though I had swallowed lava, as though everything inside me was burning away.

The ringing in my ears became a monster’s roar.

Kyaaaaau!

“Hyung[119]—!”

I woke with a scream.

But I wasn’t inside a Gate. There were no monsters and no team members.

Someone rose from beside the window, where sunlight streamed into the room.

“Were you dreaming about my lord? He’ll be pleased when I tell him.”

Coldness dripped from his face.

Wipeng, Jin Wikyung’s right-hand man.

The sight of him drove home the fact that I was still inside the game.

“Are you all right?”

“No. It was a nightmare.”

“Then I’ll leave that part out when I tell him.”

“Suit yourself.”

My entire body was drenched in sweat. Through the gaps between the bandages wrapped tightly around me, I could see skin crusted with scabs.

“How long was I out?”

“You were unconscious for five days. Your condition was so critical that the Medicine King Hall Master concluded you wouldn’t last the day.”

“Really?”

“Yes. When my lord heard, he flew into a rage. If I hadn’t stopped him, he would have beaten the Medicine King Hall Master to death.”

“Ah.”

---

[118] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

[119] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

I remembered the old man from the meeting a few days ago—the one who had threatened to drive a giant needle into the White Tiger Hall Leader's anus.

So he'd practically been praying for me to die.

"Did anything else happen?"

"A great deal. Among it all, there is good news and even better news. Which would you like to hear first?"

"The good news."

"First, the reconnaissance squad and the survivors of the Sakju Branch returned safely. Two of them suffered fairly serious injuries, but neither is in danger of dying."

Survivors.

The word made my heart drop.

Number Seven.

I remembered his face as he gasped out his final breath, one dagger lodged in his throat and another between his brows.

He couldn't have been more than twenty.

Far too young to die.

"Are you thinking about the dead?"

"The body—did they recover the body?"

"We recovered and buried him properly. He was an orphan with no family in the world, so there were no relatives to notify."

"…"

"May I say something?"

Wipeng didn't wait for my answer. He took a step toward me and continued.

"Third Young Master, do not turn your subordinate's death into a dog's death."

"What does that…"

"Martial artists are not beings meant to be protected. They are people who fight their enemies and prove themselves. He died facing an enemy too strong to do anything about, but that was not mere death—it was death in battle."

The notion that dying on a battlefield somehow made it an honorable death was the biggest load of bullshit I had ever heard.

There was no such thing as an honorable death.

Even now, I could vividly hear the screams of my comrades who had died two years ago. I could still see Number Seven's wide-open eyes as he breathed his last.

"The fact that he's dead hasn't changed."

"I have seen people obsess over facts that can never be changed. I won't name anyone."

"…"

"Do you regret it?"

“Of course.”

“Then live enough for him as well.”

Wipeng continued in a gentler voice than I had ever heard from him.

“I am not telling you to forget the dead. Bury them in your heart and carve them into your mind. Use that regret as your foothold, then soar to the place they dreamed of reaching. That is the path you must walk, Young Master.”

The path I must walk…

Just hearing those words made something in my chest lurch. I turned them over for a while, then let out a sudden laugh.

“Damn. I’ll break a leg before I get there.”

“It will take a lifetime.”

“If I devote my whole life to it, will I make it?”

“I don’t know. I don’t even know where my own path will end, so how could I know yours?”

“What’s waiting at the end of your path, Great Hero Wipeng?”

“The greatest under heaven.”

A joke?

No. Wipeng was more serious and resolute than I had ever seen him.

“That’s a hard one.”

“Because it is a dream.”

He was right. Dreams were always difficult to achieve.

All the more so when you carried the dreams of those you had lost.

“Great Hero Wipeng. May I ask you one thing?”

“Anything.”

“That guy. What was his name?”

“His name was…”

The moment Wipeng’s lips parted, a cold winter wind rattled the window.

Whoooosh.

Beyond the chill howl of the wind, I heard Number Seven’s name.

“That’s a great name.”

“I heard he chose it himself. His dream was every bit as grand.”

“What was it?”

“To become the greatest of all time.”

“…”

“You’ve got your work cut out for you.”

“Tell me about it. That’s ridiculous.”

A laugh escaped me. Only then did I feel the weight in my heart lift.

It was all thanks to Wipeng.

“You’re finally back to your old self.”
“Thank you.”
“Don’t mention it.”
Wipeng tipped his head and spoke.
“Now, there is still the even better news.”
Ah. Right.
Good news and even better news.
I waited eagerly to hear what he would say next.

Chapter 32

"There was a major battle two days ago. One hundred elite fighters from our family clashed with two hundred vanguard troops from the Mount Heng Sword Sect in Honju."

"There was a battle?"

And a major one, no less—hundreds of people thrown in. My heart lurched for a moment, but then I remembered what Wipeng had said earlier.

Good news and even better news. He'd already given away the outcome.

"We won."

"It was a great victory. Fewer than thirty of them escaped alive. That's about the same as our family's total casualties."

Judging by the scar running from Wipeng's forehead to his chin, it must have been a fierce battle.

Well, of course. They outnumbered us two to one.

Still, it was a relief we'd won. From the Jin Family of Taiyuan's perspective, we'd poured in nearly half our strength. If we'd lost, the damage would have been enormous.

"It's unfortunate that we let the Mount Heng Sword Sect's Lesser Family Head escape, but taking down the Mount Heng Twin Devils was a major gain."

"The Mount Heng Fucking Devils?"

"The Mount Heng Twin Devils. They were Peak masters under the Mount Heng Sword Sect, and their loyalty was something else… They kept throwing themselves at us without regard for their lives, so we had no choice but to kill them."

Wipeng tapped the fresh scar on his face.

"If we'd captured them alive, we could have extracted valuable information."

"Did you—I mean, did Great Hero Wipeng kill them?"

"My lord and I took one each. They were pretty good."

"…"

I was left speechless as Wipeng slurped his tea.

For fuck's sake… Are Peak masters a joke to him?

That had been the fiercest fight of my twenty-seven years. I'd suffered every kind of internal injury and been carved up like a steak. Then I'd been unconscious for five days, so I'd practically taken a half-bath in the River Jordan.[120]

And after taking down Peak masters of that caliber, all he had to say was that they were pretty good?

This guy's a complete monster.

[120] In Korean, "crossing the River Jordan" is a euphemism for dying; Taekyung twists it into taking a half-bath.

I learned something for certain this time: even Peak masters came in different levels. It was a huge relief that people of that caliber were on my side.

"That aside…"

Clink.

Wipeng set down his teacup and regarded me with an unreadable look.

"You were remarkable."

"Pardon?"

"I'm talking about Jopil, One Question, One Kill. Even calling it remarkable doesn't do justice to what you accomplished by defeating him."

"…"

You people seem a lot more remarkable to me.

It felt like being praised by an A-rank Hunter for being good at killing goblins.

"Ah. Right. Thanks, I guess."

I wanted to end the discussion about Jopil there. I was in lousy shape, my mood wasn't much better, and I wanted to check all the System Rewards waiting for me.

Let me rest already. I'm still a patient, damn it.

I tried to convey that with a wink. Wipeng frowned.

"Does your eye hurt? Shall I call a physician?"

"…No. I'm fine."

"Your eye just spasmed."

"That wasn't a spasm."

"It was. I saw it clearly."

"No, what I just did was…"

Then Wipeng rolled his eyes back until only the whites showed and started to tremble.

The table shook, and tea sloshed over the rim of his cup. I cried out in alarm.

"My God, Great Hero Wipeng!"

This guy has epilepsy. No—how does a Peak master even get epilepsy?

Just as I hurriedly tried to stand, the convulsions stopped. Wipeng returned to normal and spoke with perfect calm.

"That's what you did."

"Are you all ri—wait, what?"

"That's what you did just now, Third Young Master. Your eye spasmed."

"So you were imitating me?"

"Yes."

What kind of lunatic is this…?

I tried to explain the difference between a wink and an epileptic fit, but the words stuck. Wipeng was glaring at me like a pissed-off dictator.

"…Why don't we just finish talking about Jopil?"

"Let's."

Wipeng nodded in satisfaction.

Crazy bastard.

In the end, I had to tell him everything about my fight with Jopil from beginning to end.

How Jopil had moved. What martial arts he'd used. Wipeng's incisive questions had me tensing up more than once.

"You severed the sinews and meridians in Jopil's legs with a dagger?"

"Yes. I'd hidden it beforehand."

"There's no way Jopil would have failed to notice it… Continue."

When the long story finally ended, Wipeng released the breath he'd been holding. The complicated look in his eyes said more than words could.

"Third Young Master, you have accomplished a truly great deed."

"Ah, thank you…"

"I hate to admit it, but I mean that."

"…Ah. Right."

"When I think of all the trouble you've caused until now, my blood boils, but I was genuinely impressed. I mean that."

"…"

"Who could have imagined that the Third Young Master who stole family funds day after day and poured them into pleasure houses, then paraded through the streets dead drunk and smeared shit all over the family's reputation, would become such a great man? I, Wipeng, am genuinely in awe."

Just curse me out, you bastard…

I barely held back the torrent of abuse threatening to burst out.

"I got lucky. Jopil let his guard down too."

Wipeng shook his head.

"No. It was all skill. It makes no difference who let their guard down or who hid a dagger in advance. If that alone had been enough to kill Jopil, he would never have been Jopil, One Question, One Kill. Murim is a place where only the strong survive."

"Only the strong survive."

I quietly rolled the words over my tongue. They tasted somehow bitter and sweet at once.

Murim—this game—had been that kind of place from the beginning. I had survived there, and I had grown stronger.

“Jopil used every martial art at his disposal to its fullest. In the end, he even drew upon his innate qi. A Peak master threw away his own life in an attempt to kill you. But what was the result?”

“I won.”

“Yes. Exactly.”

“Then I was stronger than Jopil.”

Wipeng, who had looked vaguely displeased all this time, suddenly turned dead serious.

“What are you talking about? Jopil was stronger. Do Peak masters look like a joke to you?”

“…”

“You were only strong enough to kill Jopil with a surprise attack.”

Enough already. Seriously.

While I was debating whether to pull a weapon from my Inventory, Wipeng let out a short chuckle. It was the first time I had ever seen him laugh.

“Well done.”

I looked at Wipeng suspiciously.

“What are you going to add this time?”

His smile deepened.

“I mean it. It’s true I disliked you quite a lot, but… this time, I have no choice but to acknowledge you.”

When he put it that way, I had nothing to say. For some reason, I felt embarrassed and cleared my throat.

“Ahem. Well, I nearly died, but all I really did was take down Jopil and a few wandering martial artists. Ahem.”

“How many Peak masters do you think there are in a single city? Even across all of Shanxi, where our family is based, there are fewer than twenty.”

Twenty. Far fewer than I’d expected.

“The Mount Heng Sword Sect must have taken serious losses. They lost three Peak masters like that.”

“But the greatest blow lies elsewhere.”

“What is it?”

“That would be…”

The instant Wipeng opened his mouth, a trembling voice came from the doorway.

“Their pretext. They’ve lost the pretext they used to start this war. The Third Young Master of the Jin Family of Taiyuan is more than strong enough without resorting to poison. Yes, indeed.”

The enormous Jin Wikyung stood in the doorway, teary-eyed and holding both arms wide open.

“My youngest!”

“…”

Please, just leave me alone.

In the end, I had to replay the chase of the past several days and my battle with Jopil all over again.

“The wandering martial artists who pursued the survivors…”

“Those bastards! I’ll tear them apart!”

Boom!

“Jopil’s Flame Divine Palm left me with internal injuries…”

“I’ll kill him! How dare that vicious wandering martial artist bastard! Even if I ripped out his guts and chewed them to a pulp, it wouldn’t be enough!”

Boom! Boom! Boom!

“…”

I stared blankly at the ruins of my bedroom. This was what Jin Wikyung’s excessive immersion in the story had wrought.

Wipeng had already backed far away and was mouthing something.

—It would be best not to bring that story up again.

For the first time, the two of us were in complete agreement.

Jin Wikyung huffed and puffed for a long while before finally calming dow—

“If that bastard had still been alive, he wouldn’t have died peacefully.”

Crunch.

I watched with sad eyes as the corner of the bed crumbled into powder. Wipeng shook his head.

“My lord. Please calm down. The Young Master seems anxious.”

That one actually worked. Seeing me sitting there sadly, wrapped in bandages from head to toe, Jin Wikyung’s eyes reddened.

“Just look at my youngest. How much must this poor child have suffered to be sitting there so completely out of it?”

Grab!

A hand the size of a cauldron lid clamped onto my shoulder and pulled me in. I was a fairly big guy myself, but this man was practically a small ogre. Trapped against his broad chest, I trembled in fear.

“There, little brother. It’s all right now. It’s all right.”

After a heartfelt hug that only he found moving, Jin Wikyung sniffed.

“I thought you’d be a child forever… but you’ve grown up now. Wipeng, did you know?”

Wipeng answered without even pausing to breathe.

“Yes. You don’t need to tell me.”

Of course, Jin Wikyung pretended not to hear him.

“Rumors have spread throughout our family and even through the streets. The tale of the hero who led a death squad in a raid on the enemy camp, defeated Jopil, One Question, One Kill, and one hundred wandering martial artists, and rescued the Sakju Branch’s household.”

“Wow. That’s amaz—wait, what?”

I blinked.

Hold on. That was my story?

“Um, I think there’s been some kind of misunderstanding.”

“That’s right, my lord. There seems to have been some misunder—”

Jin Wikyung smiled with satisfaction.

“Our little brother is modest, too. Wipeng, you shut your mouth.”

“No, it isn’t modesty. I think the rumor has been distorted a little.”

“That’s right. I know you care for the Young Master, my lord, but this is going too far. If the rumor gets too far-fetched, people won’t beli—”

“Rumor? Outlandish?”

BOOM!

Wipeng’s voice vanished beneath a thunderous crash. My mouth fell open as I stared at the gaping hole in my bedroom wall.

What the hell are you doing, you lunatic?

Jin Wikyung threw another punch. With a sound like compressed air bursting, what was left of the wall came down.

Wood and bricks poured from the two-story pavilion, sending the people outside into an uproar.

“It’s the Third Young Master! The Third Young Master’s residence is collapsing!”

“Get people over here! Hurry!”

While everyone was still reeling in shock, Jin Wikyung hoisted me into the air.

Put me down. Put me down, you crazy bastard!

I struggled with all my strength, but there was no fighting him off. One step. One step. Every step toward the gaping wall sent terror through me.

He’s going to drop me!

More than fifty people had gathered below. They called it a two-story building, but the pavilion was so large that we had to be a good ten meters[121] up. The wind gusting through the hole made me dizzy.

If I fall, that’s a fracture at the very least.

[121] Ten meters is about 33 ft.

Even as a chill ran down my spine, more people kept crowding in. Over fifty of them craned their necks to stare up at us.

“Who’s that? Wasn’t there an accident?”

“Isn’t that the Lesser Family Head? Who’s he holding?”

“The Third Young Master! It’s the Third Young Master!”

Someone’s shout sent a stir through the crowd.

“The Third Young Master—no, the Third Young Master, sir?”

“The Third Young Master who defeated Jopil, One Question, One Kill, has awakened!”

What is this situation?

While my eyes and ears were still whipping around, a solemn voice rang out clearly.

“Can you see?”

“Ah, yes. I can see them. Could you put me down—”

“Can you hear?”

“I can hear them too, but first, could you—”

“What do you feel?”

“Embarrassment. And shame.”

“They believe in you. They’re calling your name!”

“No, you fucking bastard.”

My final curse vanished beneath the crowd’s shouts.

“Third Young Master! Third Young Master!”

Dozens more people had appeared in that brief span of time. Countless gazes flew toward me and pinned me in place.

No, what is this?

Then Jin Wikyung, his expression grave, slid his hands beneath my armpits and lifted me high.

Right on cue, a thunderous cheer erupted.

“Woooooo!”

“Third Young Master! Jin Taekyung!”

“Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi! Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi!”

And then…

Fuck. What is this, a baby lion?

The theme music from an old cartoon began playing in my head.

Chapter 33

“Please kill me.”

A young man with disheveled hair, covered in blood and dust, dropped to his knees. His name was Lee Seogwang—the elder brother of the late Lee Seogeun and the Young Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

“Report. Tell me yourself.”

The cold voice froze everyone inside the tent. Every last one of them was a senior of the Mount Heng Sword Sect, a master who had spent long years roaming the martial world.

Yet even they had to bow their heads before one man.

“Father…”

“That isn’t the answer I want.”

The Blood Wolf Sword, Lee Cheonbaek, did not even turn around. Lee Seogwang forced the words out in a trembling voice.

“There are only twenty-three survivors, including me. We don’t know whether the rest are alive or dead.”

A heavy silence settled over the gathering.

Some two hundred troops had been killed or captured, and they had lost three Peak masters. That alone would have made it difficult to escape punishment, but there was an even greater problem.

“What orders were you given?”

“…To wipe out the Jin Family of Taiyuan’s branch and advance as far as Jeongyang.”

“And after that?”

“To blockade the road and wait for the main force to join us.”

“Why did you push as far as Honju?”

“I received… intelligence.”

“Intelligence?”

“Yes. I was told that Jopil, One Question, One Kill, had pursued Jin Taekyung all the way to Honju and captured him. But…”

“He must have said the Jin Family of Taiyuan’s pursuit party was on his heels and asked you to help him.”

Lee Seogwang lowered his head, and Lee Cheonbaek let out a hollow laugh.

“Who delivered that information?”

“A wandering martial artist under Jopil.”

“Do you still believe it?”

“…No.”

Smack!

Lee Seogwang's head snapped to the side. Lee Cheonbaek glared down at him, his eyes blazing.

"Be grateful you were born my son."

In the end, Lee Seogwang was ordered to return to the Mount Heng Sword Sect. Once he withdrew, the matter was settled for the time being.

Now it was time to assess the situation with a cool head.

"What is our current position?"

"We lost two hundred men, but more than half were wandering martial artists we scraped together in a hurry. The damage isn't as severe as it sounds. The problem is…"

"We lost three Peak masters."

The thought left a bitter taste in Lee Cheonbaek's mouth. The Mount Heng Twin Devils had stood beside him for twenty years, and Jopil, whom he had paid a fortune to hire, was dead as well.

A Peak master could change the course of a battle. Somehow, they had to fill the void.

"Gather more. Buy wandering martial artists from the black market, hire mounted bandits—use whatever means necessary."

"Our expenses are already too high. By now, word of what happened in Honju will have spread, and they'll try to raise their prices."

"They aren't trustworthy men, either. Especially the mounted bandits. Aren't they human butchers? If we hire people like that, our sect's reputation will suffer afterward…"

Lee Cheonbaek did not even blink.

"All the better. Hire every last one."

"Sect Leader!"

"There are no fewer than five hundred men gathered here. We have more than twice their numbers, and we aren't outmatched in Peak masters either."

"My son thought the same thing. Then he got utterly crushed in Honju."

"That was…"

"I don't care whether they're human butchers or anything else. Throw everything we have into this. If we lose this war, it won't be our reputation we lose—it'll be our lives!"

At Lee Cheonbaek's thunderous command, the seniors realized there was no point trying to persuade him. But the discussion was not yet over.

"The martial artists' morale is in shambles."

"The defeat at Honju is bad enough, but the news that Jin Taekyung killed Jopil, One Question, One Kill, has shaken them."

Jin Taekyung.

Hearing his enemy's name made Lee Cheonbaek's stomach churn.

Are there really people stupid enough to believe such an absurd rumor?

As if it weren't enough that the pathetic fool Jin Taekyung had poisoned his son, now he had supposedly killed a Peak master as well. The scheme was obvious. Lee Cheonbaek ground his teeth at the Jin Family of Taiyuan's despicable tactics.

"Root out everyone spreading that nonsense. Don't let a single one escape!"

Taking a few heads as examples might lower morale even further, but it would keep the army from collapsing. Now was the time to clamp down and press forward.

"Three days. In three days, we march on Taiyuan!"

That was the nature of gratitude and grudges in Murim. The cycle would not end until one side fell.

I'll take everything from you. Just as you did.

"What an incredible recovery."

The physician clicked his tongue in amazement. It was my second day since waking up, and overnight, the scabs had fallen away to reveal smooth new skin beneath them.

"In ten years as a physician, I've never seen anything like this."

Even to me, the speed of my recovery was astonishing. The flesh melted by the heat of the Flame Divine Palm, the fractured bones, the deep sword wounds—there was no trace of any of them left.

Oh, and the internal injuries too.

Must be the effect of leveling up.

There was only one way to produce a similar result in the real world: the healing magic used by the tiny handful of Hunters known as healers.

Is complete healing too much to ask?

I was a little disappointed, but it was probably for the best. If a single level-up had healed every injury on my body, avoiding suspicion would have been difficult.

Even now, the physician kept glancing at me as though I were a monster.

"Heavens. How strange. This is far too much to attribute to the Hundred-Year-Old Snow Ginseng…"

"Hundred-Year-Old Snow Ginseng?"

I remembered seeing something like that in martial arts novels. Ginseng that had grown for a hundred years, or whatever.

Why is that suddenly coming up?

Seeing my confusion, the physician explained. He was one of the few NPCs who knew I had lost my memory.

“Around this time last year, the Medicine King Hall’s storeroom was robbed.”

Ah. The moment he said it, I knew where this was going.

The stolen medicinals must have included the Hundred-Year-Old Snow Ginseng, and the culprit was obviously…

“The Medicine King Hall Master was absolutely furious.”

The physician gave me an awkward smile.

“After all, it isn’t something you can obtain merely by having money. You stole and consumed an elixir capable of granting twenty years of internal energy in a single dose.”

“Twenty years of internal energy?”

Something clicked. That third reserve of internal energy that had refused to obey me.

So that was it.

At the same time, a pang of regret hit me. When I used the Skill at the last moment, most of the twenty years of internal energy from the Hundred-Year-Old Snow Ginseng had vanished.

It had been a complete disaster caused by the energy running wild instead of obeying my control.

I blew the whole thing like a one-use item.

The physician misread my grimace and hurriedly added, “Of course, Young Master, you must have had some grand purpose in making such a decision.”

Grand purpose, my ass. I probably ate it as a tonic.

The snow ginseng’s internal energy had kept me alive, but it still felt like a terrible waste.

Such a waste I could die.

“You’ve almost completely recovered, so you shouldn’t have any trouble moving around. Then I’ll be on my way.”

The moment the physician hurried out, I opened the System window.

Open Status Window.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Status Window
Lv. 30 Jin Taekyung
Class: Second Rate Martial Artist
Fame: 410
Titles: 4 (Title effects active)
— Scion of a Prestigious Family (All stats +5, Fame +50)
— Family Shame (All stats −5, Fame −50)
— Novice Trainee (Training speed +10%)
— Gambler (Combat-related stats increased by 10% in a one-on-one fight)
Strength: 115 Stamina: 120
Agility: 116 Intelligence: 15
Charm: 15 Internal Energy: 15 years
Remaining Points: 0

Pride welled up the moment I saw it.

I've come a long way.

It felt like only yesterday I'd been shaking in front of a few two-bit bandits. Now I was a master in my own right. My Level had shot up after I took down Jopil, and I'd gained a massive amount of Fame.

That wasn't all. By absorbing some of the Hundred-Year-Old Snow Ginseng's remaining energy, I had gained another four years of internal energy. And on top of that…

SYSTEM

Skill Window
One Annihilation
Grade: Peak
Realm: Second Stage
Restriction: Jin Taekyung
Effect: Consumes Stamina and internal energy to deliver a powerful strike. Depending on the amount used, the user enters a helpless state for a certain period of time.

I had gained a new martial art—or rather, a new Skill.

But it differed greatly from my Skills in the real world.

I can control how much it consumes and how much power it releases.

Thrust with All My Might. The Skill now named One Annihilation couldn't be used recklessly. It could unleash destructive power several stages above my usual level for an instant, but that single attack consumed all my strength.

No. Maybe the Skill could always be controlled like this.

In the real world, I was an F-rank Hunter. My physical abilities were pathetic, and so was the amount of mana in my body. But here in this game—in Murim—I was different.

Here, I was a martial artist with fifteen years of internal energy and physical abilities superior to NPCs twenty or thirty Levels above me. With a better vessel to contain the power, I could finally use the Skill the way it had always been meant to be used.

I've gotten stronger again.

It felt like only yesterday Hyuk Mujin had been wiping the floor with me while I struggled to learn martial arts. Now I had taken down a Peak master.

Outside the window, people chanted my name several times a day.

Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi. Hero of the family. That sort of thing.

A hero.

I never thought I'd hear anyone call me that. I was a two-bit F-rank Hunter whose motto was safety first. The word had never had anything to do with me.

I lay still and fidgeted with my hands. Palms that had once been a young master's —white and soft—were now packed tight with calluses.

I took down Jopil with these hands.

All told, the people I'd taken down numbered more than a few dozen. Bandits, wandering martial artists, even people rated as First Rate—and I had survived. I'd even taken down a Peak master I thought I could never beat: Jopil, One Question, One Kill.

Something Wipeng had said suddenly came back to me.

The one who survives is strong.

If he was right, then I was undeniably strong. I had survived every enemy I had faced so far, and now people were calling me a hero.

Yeah. If I was being honest…

It doesn't feel bad.

The real-world me was pitiful.

I ate and slept in a goshiwon[122] room barely ten square meters in size,[123] the breadwinner responsible for supporting my family. I couldn't become a hero, and I didn't want to.

---

[122] A goshiwon is a building that rents out small, inexpensive rooms, often with shared facilities.

[123] Ten square meters is about 108 square feet.

I was just Jin Taekyung, a bottom-rung Hunter who fought every day while praying he would survive.

That was me.

But in this game, I'm different.

I had accomplished many things that F-rank Hunter Jin Taekyung never could. At the very least… I could protect the people who trusted and followed me from their enemies. People acknowledged me. They called me a hero.

Even if everything here was nothing but virtual, even if the people I saw were NPCs, that fact didn't change.

Thinking that, I suddenly laughed.

This is why games are scary.

Was this what game addiction felt like?

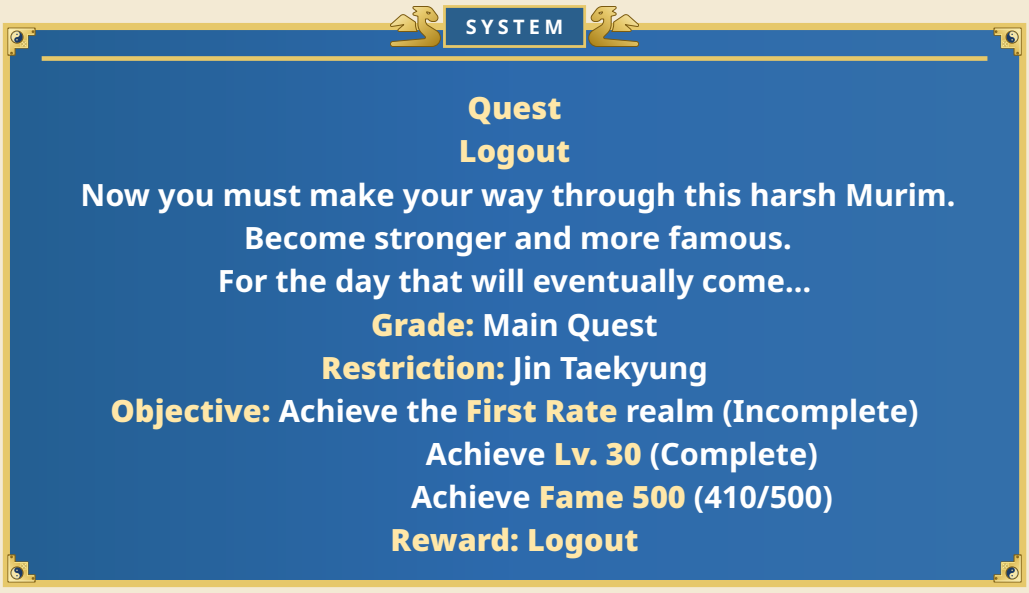
Before I knew it, I had started enjoying life as Jin Taekyung, a martial artist of Murim. This place was a game. It could turn every impossibility into a possibility.

But now it was time to leave.

Back to that place filled with impossibilities—the real world. My family was there. The real me was there.

Check Quest Window.

Ding.



Logout.

The moment I saw those four glittering characters, my breath caught.

Only two conditions left before I could log out. Time could take care of Fame. The more rumors about me spread, the more it would keep climbing.

The problem lay elsewhere.

"First Rate."

What did I even need to become First Rate?
If it wasn’t Level, stats, or Fame, then…
Internal energy? Or do I need to raise the realm of my martial arts further?
Just then, a polite voice came from outside the door.
“Young Master. The Lesser Family Head is looking for you.”
“Ah.”
Right. When you don’t know something, the best thing to do is ask.
And in that respect, Peak master Jin Wikyung was the best private tutor I could ask for.

Chapter 34

Once, while Jinho hyung[124] and I were watching TV, we had a conversation like this.

“That’s him, right? Han Seongjin.”

“You know Han Seongjin?”

“Wouldn’t it be weirder if I didn’t? His face is everywhere whenever I turn on the TV. I’ve seen him so often, he feels like family.”

“Watch your mouth. That’s defamation.”

“Son of a bitch.”

On the screen, a handsome man with a lanky build was smiling brightly. Dozens of cameras and a huge crowd reacted to his every move. Flashes and screams kept going off without a pause.

“He’s got everything. An A-rank Hunter is basically a walking mid-sized company, isn’t he? And he gets a model’s proportions and a celebrity’s face on top of that? That’s just cheating. How old did you say he was?”

“I think he’s the same age as me.”

“…Hang in there.”

No matter the profession, some people made good money and others didn’t. And no profession had a wider gap between the two than Hunters.

“Don’t worry, man. If you wait a little longer, your day will come.”

“How long do I have to wait?”

“Try waiting another hundred years. It’ll be possible in your next life.”

I wished I could show Jinho hyung[125], who had cackled as he mocked me back then, what I looked like now.

I wonder what kind of face he’d make if he saw this.

With every step I took, dozens of people swarmed after me. NPCs from the Jin Family of Taiyuan, men and women of all ages, were looking at me with shining eyes.

Is this how famous people feel all the time?

All that attention, all those admiring looks—it was a burden, but it also felt kind of good.

For the first time, I understood that clichéd line from game ads: A new hero awaits!

Yeah. It’s almost over. I might as well enjoy it.

I smiled and waved, and a roar went up. With the ever-growing crowd trailing behind me, I arrived at the main hall used for meetings.

“They’re waiting for you.”

---

[124] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

[125] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

The martial artist at the door looked familiar. He was the same man who had stared at me with contempt when Lee Seogeun came to visit.

Has it been about fifteen days?

Just as I was no longer the person I had been then, neither was he. He gave me an extremely respectful fist-and-palm salute and opened the door wide.

The main hall looked exactly as I remembered it. A large table stood in the center, and the chairs scattered on either side showed that a meeting had just ended.

"You're here?"

Seated at the head of the table, Jin Wikyung gave me a weary smile. He was alone in the spacious hall.

"Where's Wipeng?"

"He'll be back shortly."

Once I sat down, Jin Wikyung got straight to the point.

"The Lower District Sect has contacted us. The Mount Heng Sword Sect is gathering every last fighter it can."

They must be shitting bricks over there.

I didn't know war, but I knew fighting. And war was made up of battles. The enemy had already lost many martial artists and suffered a crushing blow to its morale. They would throw everything they had into the next battle.

"It'll be a difficult fight."

"They've poured their sect's entire wealth into it. If the reinforcements join the main force led by the Blood Wolf Sword, they'll number around a thousand."

"A thousand…"

That was an insane number. I had never fought in a battle on that scale, and I had no desire to.

Jin Wikyung continued grimly.

"We'll march north with all our forces and strike the enemy's main force before it can join the reinforcements."

"When?"

"In two days."

Goddammit. That's fucking fast.

The race against time wasn't only between the Jin Family of Taiyuan and the Mount Heng Sword Sect. I was in one too.

Can I log out by then?

If I reached First Rate within two days, I could log out. But if I didn't, I would have to fight my ass off all over again.

Then I'd be completely screwed.

Jin Wikyung spoke again.

"I'd like you to take charge of the rear guard."

Can't. Won't.

I barely swallowed the words that tried to leap out on reflex.

Jin Wikyung looked more serious than I had ever seen him.

"This is a fight our family is staking everything on. Your presence alone will greatly raise morale."

"…"

I was still debating whether to accept when he continued.

"Fortunately, the Five Gates of Shanxi have agreed to help us. I want you to move with some of their people in the rear guard."

"The Five Gates of Shanxi?"

"An alliance of five small and mid-sized sects. They've always been on good terms with our family."

"…I see."

"Then will you take charge of the rear guard?"

Ding.

SYSTEM

Quest
Rear Guard Defense
Jin Wikyung has proposed that you take charge of the rear guard.
If you accept this mission, the martial artists will praise your will and courage.
Type: Short-Term Quest
Grade: Second Rate
Restriction: Jin Taekyung
Objective: Accept the proposal (Incomplete)
Reward: Fame +10
Failure: Fame −10

I answered without another thought.

"I will."

A message appeared announcing the Quest's completion and the increase in my Fame.

My Fame drops if I refuse?

The Quest Window had made me an offer I couldn't refuse. It was ridiculous, yet a strange sense of relief spread through me all the same.

Relief? Have I actually lost my mind?

As I berated myself for being a game addict, Jin Wikyung smiled broadly.

"I'm glad you're here."

He was smiling, but an invisible shadow hung over his face.

As if spending all day buried under stacks of paperwork wasn't enough, now there was a war. Leading a vast clan like the Jin Family of Taiyuan had to be a heavy burden even for him.

He said two days.

Two powers that divided an entire region between them were about to collide. The Jin Family of Taiyuan was short on martial artists, so even if we threw everything we had into the fight, we would still be at a disadvantage.

Can we win?

I forced the thought aside. What did I care whether they lived or died? The march was in two days, and it would take several more days for the battle to begin. No matter who won, I would be gone by the time a victor was decided.

Now it was time to hear what I needed to know.

"Um, there's something I wanted to ask."

"Go ahead."

"I'm still stuck at the Second Rate realm…"

After hearing me out, Jin Wikyung tilted his head.

"You're Second Rate?"

His tone said he couldn't understand what I was talking about. I had utterly crushed Lee Seogeun and even brought down Jopil. Jin Wikyung had assumed I was First Rate long ago, and so had Jopil.

"Yes. My realm just won't rise, so I was hoping you could give me some advice."

"Advice…"

Jin Wikyung thought for a moment before speaking.

"You're already First Rate."

"But I'm Second Rate."

"I'm telling you, you're First Rate. More than that, you're a Supreme First Rate martial artist standing at the wall of the Peak realm."

"No, I really am Second Rate…"

"Who told you that?"

Ugh, this is driving me crazy.

I wished I could show him the System Window. It plainly said Second Rate, but I was the only one who could see it, and the frustration was killing me.

I sighed.

“No one told me I was Second Rate.”

“Then?”

“It’s just… I’m Second Rate. I don’t really know how to explain it.”

“Do you believe you’re Second Rate?”

“Yes.”

“Then it’s simple.”

“Wh-what is?”

Is he finally going to reveal the secret to advancing realms?

I stared at Jin Wikyung, my eyes full of anticipation, but he said nothing. Instead, he dipped a finger into his cold tea and brought it to the table.

Scritch.

A single character appeared.

□

□? The character for “belief”?

Jin Wikyung took one look at my face and let out a short laugh.

“You look like you’ve just been slapped.”

“…You must be seeing things.”

More like I look like I want to slap you.

“What is this?”

“Exactly what it says. Believe in yourself.”

“What does that have to do with advancing realms?”

“Because martial arts begin with belief.”

Martial arts begin with belief? It sounded like airy nonsense. Yet the moment I heard those words, my heart began to pound.

They begin with belief…

For some reason, that one sentence kept circling through my mind, spinning around and around until I felt dizzy.

What had I believed in all this time?

The first word that came to mind—and the only one—was the System.

The thing that had helped me most in this game, the thing that had always told me nothing but absolute facts.

I had believed I was Second Rate because the System said I was Second Rate.

Because I believed in the System.

I had already overwhelmed Lee Seogeun, a First Rate master. I had taken down more than twenty wandering martial artists by myself and even defeated Jopil, a Peak master.

Everyone hailed me as a First Rate master and a hero, yet I had remained Second Rate.

Because I had believed in the System instead of myself.

But now I understood.

I'm already First Rate.

Already. Maybe I had been for a long time.

I was First Rate.

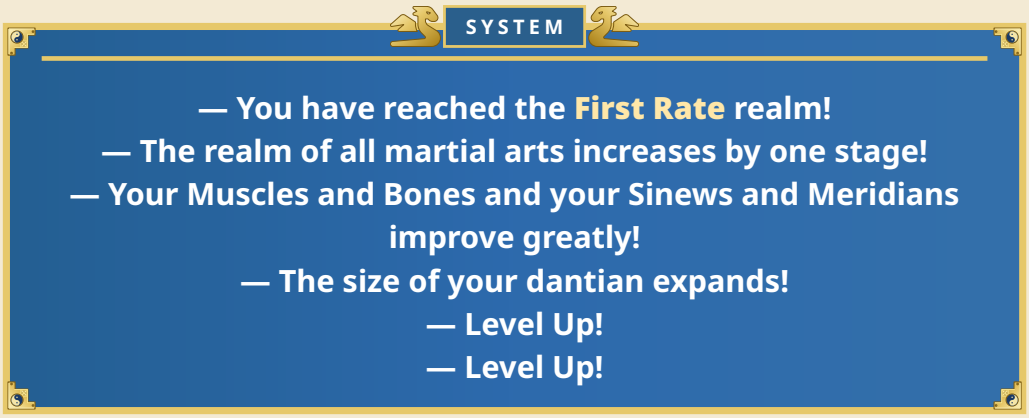
"You look like you've just been slapped."

This time, Jin Wikyung was right. I slumped against the back of my chair, stunned.

What a dumbass.

If I couldn't even believe in myself, I was Second Rate. No. I had been Second Rate.

Ding.



From Third Rate to Second Rate. Then from Second Rate to First Rate.

I felt power surge from deep within me, and Jin Wikyung burst out laughing.

"What happened?"

Wipeng showed up late and asked, looking bewildered.

It felt like a blocked nose had suddenly cleared. Reaching First Rate had brought a tremendous leap in every way—my senses, my martial arts, everything.

I left the main hall and started walking. The wind felt cool and refreshing.

"It's the Third Young Master."

"Has he fully recovered?"

Sure enough, people's gazes gathered on me. I changed course toward an even more crowded area.

Anyone watching would think I was desperate for attention.

But everything happens for a reason.

Ding.

SYSTEM

— Someone gazes at you with awe.
— Fame increases by 1.
— Someone is impressed after hearing rumors about you.
— Fame increases by 1.

As I walked, people gathered around me like clouds. Among them were plenty of NPCs wearing clothes I had never seen before.

Who are they?

I made eye contact with one of them. The young man looked to be in his early twenties. He flinched in surprise, then hurried over and gave me a fist-and-palm salute.

“Gwak of the Samdo Sect presents his respects.”

“Ah, yes.”

By now, the fist-and-palm salute came out on reflex and looked fairly convincing. But where was the Samdo Sect?

Oh. Could it be…?

“Are you with the Five Gates of Shanxi?”

Gwak Whatsisname nodded enthusiastically.

“That is correct. Our Samdo Sect has agreed to lend its strength to the Jin Family of Taiyuan. I, Gwak, could not be more delighted to offer what little help I can.”

In a situation like this, he was a reinforcement worth his weight in gold. I took Gwak Whatsisname by the hand, hoping he would fight hard enough for both of us.

“Thank you for coming.”

“Please, think nothing of it. It is an honor simply to take part in the Young Master’s tale of martial valor.”

SYSTEM

— Someone is impressed after hearing rumors about you.
— Fame increases by 1.

A total stranger had come all this way to fight for us, and he was even making my Fame shoot up. I offered the endlessly generous Gwak Whatsisname my warmest thanks.

“God bless you.”

“Pardon?”

"It means I hope the Jade Emperor's[126] blessing will be with you."

"Ahh. Thank you. God bleshyoo."

"Ah. Yes."

I put on a fake smile and kept walking. Maybe because everyone who needed to know about me already did, the Jin Family of Taiyuan's people no longer raised my Fame.

Still, I've built up quite a bit.

I opened the Status Window and saw that I was about fifty points short of the target. If I grinded hard for two more days, maybe I could log out.

"Um, Young Hero Jin."

I turned around. It was the fellow from the Samdo Sect. He looked ready to follow me to the ends of the earth.

"If you aren't busy, perhaps we could have some tea together…"

"I'm sorry. I have somewhere to be."

It sounded like a lie, but it was the truth. My destination had been decided from the start.

I pointed to a building as disappointment crossed his face. A faded signboard hung above it, and the heavy smell of medicinal decoctions wafted from within.

Medicine King Hall.

Beneath the signboard hung a small wooden plaque.

Authorized Personnel Only.

The people surrounding me let out pitying sighs.

[126]The Jade Emperor is a deity in Daoist tradition.

Chapter 35

A hospital room in Medicine King Hall.

Hyuk Mujin, wound tight in bandages from head to toe, let out a groan.

“I’m dying.”

Han Yeop, lying beside him in much the same state, replied,

“It’s a miracle we didn’t die.”

“Right?”

“That’s right.”

A brief silence followed. Both of them were remembering that day.

Jopil’s palm strike. An attack they couldn’t have blocked even if they had known it was coming. Whenever Hyuk Mujin closed his eyes, he saw that bastard’s red-hot palm. It might haunt his nightmares for the rest of his life.

“That monster. How is something like that even possible?”

“He’s a Peak master.”

Unlike the dejected Hyuk Mujin, Han Yeop sounded calm.

“Hey, punk. Doesn’t any of that bother you?”

“What?”

“That…”

Hyuk Mujin found himself at a loss for words. Right. Maybe Han Yeop really was fine.

“No, that’s not what I meant…”

“I know.”

“Huh?”

“I know what you’re thinking, Deputy Squad Leader. I know what you want to say.”

“…”

“When I first came to, all kinds of things went through my mind. The relief of being alive. The helplessness I felt that day. The despair over my own martial arts.”

Hyuk Mujin fell silent. Han Yeop had it exactly right. Jopil’s Flame Divine Palm had broken his bones and torn his heart meridian, but his real wound lay elsewhere.

One question had been circling through his mind ever since that day.

Can I ever reach that realm?

Even “overwhelming” didn’t begin to describe it. All his hard work, all the pride he had taken in his martial arts, had been ripped up by the roots.

“You’ve shaken all that off?”

Han Yeop shook his head.

“Then?”

"I accepted that I'm weak. It wasn't even that hard. I've always known it. But…"

"…"

"I'll get stronger. As strong as Jopil. No—much stronger."

Han Yeop continued, his voice firm.

"Once I started thinking that way, I felt happy. If I become a Peak master, I can be that strong too. That sort of thing."

"A Peak master…"

The Peak realm was open to only a rare few. Coming from Han Yeop, who was barely second- or third-rate, the declaration was almost laughable.

But Hyuk Mujin didn't sneer.

You've changed too.

So much had changed. Their circumstances. The people around him.

Even that timid second-rate martial artist had been swept up in the current before anyone noticed. Hyuk Mujin felt his heart swell, and the next words burst out before he could stop them.

"I'll get even stronger."

Han Yeop's eyes widened, then he broke into a grin.

"You will. First, though, we have to catch up to one person."

They both thought of the same man.

Jin Taekyung.

He was already running far ahead of them. What was he doing now?

Behind the two men, lost in thought, the door that had been left slightly ajar quietly slid shut.

I closed the door, turned away, and shuddered from head to toe.

"Ugh, shit."

These idiots were shooting a teenage coming-of-age drama in a hospital room. I'd stood there listening to see what they were talking about, and what a sight it had been. Seriously.

If I'd gone in, I might've ended up swearing brotherhood with them.

Still, I have to admit it was kind of admirable.

We'd been through life and death together, after all. Besides, those two had risked their lives to help me. I'd be lying if I said I didn't feel even a shred of affection for them.

Could this be the last time I see them?

In two days, I would set out in command of the main force's rear guard, while those two and the rest of the injured reconnaissance squad stayed behind with the family. And probably…

By then, I'll have logged out.

I was close to meeting the final condition of the Logout Quest: 500 Fame. Today's visit to Medicine King Hall was a farewell of sorts.

You could call it the nostalgia filter of a sergeant in his last stretch before discharge.

Well, there's no need to tell them. Seeing their faces is enough.

I'd already looked in on the other reconnaissance squad members. Now that I'd seen Han Yeop and Hyuk Mujin too, there was only one more place to visit…

Huh?

"Oh!"

A rag doll in one hand. Snacks in the other.

A little girl with her hair tied in a cute ribbon stared at me with round eyes and shouted,

"It's the mind-reading mister!"[127]

"…"

Couldn't you call me Big Brother? I gave Soyul a sad little wave.

"Young Master Jin."

"Benefactor!"

The moment I entered the room, they both reacted. I stopped the still-pale Gong Yacheong from rising, then hauled Socheon back to his feet after he dropped into a full bow.

"Stay lying down. And you, get up, punk. Am I old enough to have you bowing to me?"

"You have shown me a kindness a hundred bows could never repay."

Tears were already welling in both their eyes. Soyul, who didn't understand what was happening, hugged her rag doll tight and scampered over to cling to her brother.

"Big brother, did you put on the Benefactor's kindness? Show me too. Is it pretty?"

Uh. That's clothes, isn't it?

Leaving the chattering Soyul behind, I turned to Gong Yacheong.

"How are you feeling?"

[127] Gwansimbeop, the "mind-reading" Soyul refers to, is associated in Korean popular culture with Gung Ye, a ruler portrayed in the television drama Taejo Wang Geon.

"Couldn't be better. Though I'll need to recuperate for a while."

A faint smile spread across Gong Yacheong's lips.

"It is all thanks to you, Young Master."

"I didn't do it for praise. I even left you behind once."

"That was my choice. And you came back."

I remembered that night Jopil had been chasing us. Gong Yacheong had been badly poisoned and had wanted to stay behind. Just as he had, I'd had to make a choice.

After a long struggle with myself, I had decided to go back for him.

And I regretted it like crazy.

It had been insane. Gambling my life for a mere NPC in a game. But now I thought I understood why I had made that choice.

What had I seen in those young siblings who had lost their parents? Who had Gong Yacheong and the reconnaissance squad reminded me of...?

"Young Master Jin?"

Gong Yacheong's voice pulled me back.

"It's nothing. I just—just had something on my mind."

"Ah, I heard the news as well. Is that what this is about?"

"What news?"

"They say there will soon be a major battle."

Wasn't that military intelligence?

If Gong Yacheong, who never left his hospital room, knew about it, then everyone in the Jin Family of Taiyuan with eyes and ears must know.

If there was even one spy among us, we might as well have installed a loudspeaker aimed at North Korea.[128]

Is this war really going to be all right like this?

I shook off the thought. What did it matter to me? Soon enough, none of this would have anything to do with me anyway.

The System alerts ringing even now were proof.

Ding.

SYSTEM

— Rumors about you continue to spread.
— Fame increases by 1.

[128] South Korea has used loudspeakers along its border to broadcast messages into North Korea. Taekyung is joking that news of the battle is spreading just as openly.

As the saying went, words without feet could travel a thousand li.[129] Ever since I'd taken Jopil down, my name seemed to have started spreading in earnest.

I opened the Quest Window for a quick look. I had only about fifty Fame left to go.

Logout was practically a foregone conclusion.

"It will be a battle with our family's fate at stake."

Of course, neither of them had any way of knowing my situation. I listened quietly to Gong Yacheong and Socheon for a while, then rose from my seat.

"I should get going."

"Benefactor."

Socheon looked disappointed, but Gong Yacheong stopped him.

"Let him go."

"But…"

"That is enough."

Socheon lowered his head glumly. Soyul, who had been playing alone with her doll, looked up at me with huge eyes.

"You're leaving already, mister?"

"I said Big Brother."

"Okay. Mister."

I gave her chubby cheek a light pinch and was about to turn away when Gong Yacheong called out to me.

"Young Master Jin. Even if you must leave, should you not take what you left behind?"

"What I left behind?"

I thought about it for a moment, but there was no way I'd forgotten anything. Thanks to the cheat feature known as Inventory, I always traveled light.

"I didn't leave anyth—what is this?"

Gong Yacheong was holding a long bundle.

"You were in no state to collect it at the time. Now that its owner has come, it is only right that I return it."

What is it?

Still bewildered, I took the bundle. It was fairly heavy. Just as I was about to check what was inside, Gong Yacheong spoke.

"Unwrap it in your quarters. Do not let anyone else see."

Did he put a golden calf in here?

[129] A thousand Korean ri is about 393 km (244 mi). The distance is figurative here.

I unwrapped the bundle the moment I reached my quarters. Then I understood what Gong Yacheong's last words had meant.

These really are the sort of things people would covet if they saw them.

An old booklet. A small box. And a familiar sword.

To someone in Murim, these were beyond comparison to any golden calf. And I had the ability to judge that value more accurately than anyone.

Check Item.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Item Window
Flame Divine Palm
Type: Martial Arts Manual
Grade: Supreme Peak
Restriction: Holder of Scorching Yang Qi
Description: One of the Fire Gate Clan's secret techniques. A martial art based on powerful fire qi.
Effect: Acquired Flame Divine Palm
Item Window
Blazing Flame Divine Pill
Type: Spiritual Elixir
Grade: Peak
Restriction: None
Description: A spiritual elixir made according to the Fire Gate Clan's secret formula.
Effect: Grants thirty years of internal energy when consumed. However, if the user cannot control the powerful fire qi contained within the elixir, they may meet a horrific end.
Item Window
Unnamed Sword
Type: Sword
Grade: None
Restriction: None
Description: Made of Ten-Thousand-Year Cold Iron, this sword is exceptionally sharp and durable. After drinking a great deal of blood over many years, it transformed on its own. Special conditions are required to draw out the sword's power.
Effect: Unknown

"This is insane."

It really was insane. A Supreme Peak martial arts manual. A spiritual elixir that granted thirty years of internal energy. And a sword I didn't fully understand, but that looked ridiculously good.

They said a tiger left its pelt behind when it died, but Jopil had left three treasures behind.

Shit. It always gives me the good stuff after everything's over.

Damn shitty game. If it was going to give me something, it should've done it sooner. Waiting until everything was finished to play catch-up just made my blood pressure spike.

Still, these items are seriously good.

Reading the descriptions, I couldn't help feeling tempted. What if I took the elixir and learned Flame Divine Palm? If fire started shooting from my hands like Jopil's…

That would be fucking cool.

But the thought lasted only a moment. They said a soldier nearing the end of his service had to watch out even for falling leaves. I had no intention of swallowing the elixir wrong and staging my own self-immolation ceremony.

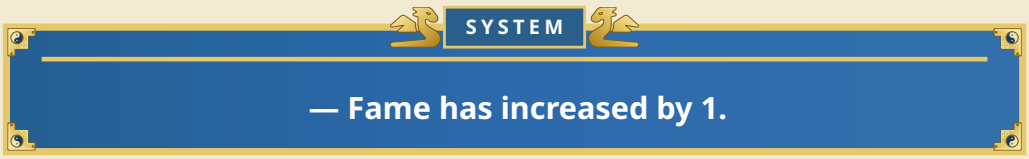
Remember. Safety first. Safety first.

Talking about safety after everything I'd done was pretty funny, but I wasn't stupid enough to gulp it down without thinking.

It's almost over.

One wrong step and I was finished. I stuffed all the items into my Inventory. Somewhere in the dead of night, someone must have been talking about me over drinks, because a System alert rang out.

Ding.



At that hour, the Head Elder was strolling through the garden.

This was the agreed-upon date and place. The man waiting in the darkness was never late.

"The moon is very bright tonight."

"So it is."

As he had said, the full moon shone exceptionally brightly.

"When I was young, I loved the moon… but the older I got, the more I found myself thinking."

"Thinking what?"

"That I wished the moon didn't exist. Something like that."

"A world without charm."

"What's wrong with a little less charm? I make my living at night, so I'd be delighted if the moon disappeared."

Night life, huh.

The man prattled on in the flippant, cheerful tone of a kept man, but the Head Elder knew the truth. He possessed formidable martial arts and was a superb assassin.

The wind seemed to carry the smell of blood.

"Ah, right. How is the work progressing?"

"Smoothly. Even the troop deployments are complete."

"Do not overdo it. If the clever Lesser Family Head catches the scent, everything will fall apart."

"Do not worry. I did not even need to make a move."

"Heaven is helping us."

"And your side?"

"You are asking the obvious."

The mild reproach in his voice silenced the Head Elder.

As if it could be otherwise.

They were like sea fog. Their identities lay hidden within the mist, and no matter how one reached out and stirred it, there was nothing solid to grasp. All that remained was a damp palm and an unpleasant feeling.

But they have power.

The power to make him Family Head of the Jin Family of Taiyuan and the sole hegemon of Shanxi Province.

It was an ambition he had harbored for half his life. The Head Elder was prepared to do anything.

"All preparations are complete."

"Mine as well."

On the day the two great sects that divided Shanxi between them clashed…

Everything would end, and everything would begin anew.

Chapter 36

SYSTEM

Quest
Logout
You must now make your way through this harsh Murim.
Become even stronger, and become famous.
For the day that will one day come…
Grade: Main Quest
Restriction: Jin Taekyung
Objective: Reach the First Rate realm (Complete)
Reach Lv. 30 (Complete)
Reach Fame 500 (475/500)
Reward: Logout

I closed the Quest Window. It was the middle of winter, but I felt a cold sweat coming on.

If this keeps up, I'm completely screwed.

My Fame had been creeping upward little by little, only to stop dead half a day ago. I'd bolted out of my quarters and gone around shaking hands like a presidential candidate until my hands nearly fell off, but the notification I was waiting for never came.

No, I did get a notification.

Beep!

SYSTEM

— There is no one in the Jin Family of Taiyuan who does not know of your Fame.

It was the System's way of telling me I'd already milked this place for all the Fame it was worth, so I should knock it off. Even the System seemed to find me pitiful.

And so an entire day slipped helplessly away. Today was the long-awaited departure ceremony.

"Fuck…"

As I muttered the curse under my breath, Jin Wikyung was climbing onto the platform.

Hundreds of pairs of eyes followed him. The martial artists of the Jin Family of Taiyuan and those from the small and mid-sized sects that had recently joined us stood in formation across the Grand Training Ground, more than five hundred strong.

Boom. Boom. Boom.

A tremendous rumble began to spread. Some stamped their feet; others struck their weapons. When five hundred martial artists with internal energy moved as one, the earth shook and a deafening roar filled heaven and earth.

What the…?

I had never seen anything like it. No longer individuals, they had become a single army, waiting for one man's command.

At last, Jin Wikyung spoke.

"I will not deny it. The enemy surpasses us both in troop numbers and in the number of Peak masters."

Silence descended in an instant. But Jin Wikyung wasn't foolish enough to crush morale with his opening words. The force of his presence was proof of that.

"However."

His usual good-natured smile was nowhere to be seen. The Jin Wikyung standing before us was both a Peak martial artist and the head of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

"They are nothing but jackals with numbers on their side. That man's rabble—wandering martial artists blinded by gold, and a pack of mounted bandits who have plundered the common people!"

The air crackled beneath his fiery shout. For that moment, even I felt my blood begin to boil.

"They have neither cause nor justice."

Cause. Justice.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect had lost the two most important things in any war.

That was why the small and mid-sized sects of Shanxi Province, which had only watched from the sidelines while the two great powers fought, had sent reinforcements.

"This war will be over within three days."

Fifteen hundred martial artists would clash at the same hour on the same day.

It would be a hellish battle of killing and being killed.

"No one here can be certain whether they will live or die. However…"

Jin Wikyung's flashing gaze swept across them all.

"We will prevail."

The next moment, a roar erupted loud enough to leave my ears ringing. With the crowd's fervor at its peak, Jin Wikyung towered over them like a giant.

"Survival of the fittest! Put your lives on the line, fight, and survive!"

The cheering continued for a long time afterward.

Our five hundred troops were divided into the vanguard, center, and rear guard. Most of our core fighting strength had been assigned to the vanguard and center, so the rear guard under my command consisted of only a few dozen martial artists.

Among them were several familiar faces.

“Captain!”

They were members of the reconnaissance squad. Both pleased and puzzled, I asked, “Why are you guys here? Weren’t you at Medicine King Hall?”

“This battle will decide the fate of our family. We can’t sit it out just because we’re a little injured.”

When I’d secretly visited them last time, some of them had still had cracked bones in their arms and legs. Murim people really were tough as hell.

“We asked to be placed under your command, and the higher-ups readily approved it. We’ve been able to walk around with our chests puffed out ever since that day. Haha.”

“Well, look at you.”

A quiet laugh escaped me.

I’d spent several days with them during the reconnaissance mission, but I still didn’t know some of their names. Even so, I felt close to them. We had been through life and death together.

They say three raids are enough to make sworn brothers.

I smiled at the eight members of the reconnaissance squad. Then something occurred to me.

No, wait.

Eight? Had I counted wrong?

I started counting again from the end, one person at a time. There had originally been nine, not including me. Hyuk Mujin and Han Yeop had both been severely injured, so naturally neither of them should have been here. That meant there should have been seven, but…

“…What are you doing here?”

Even as I stared at him, I couldn’t be sure it was really the same guy. His face was puffed up like a steamed bun, and the skin showing beyond his clothes was red and blotchy.

“Can’t you tell by looking?”

Right. There was only one bastard on the reconnaissance squad rude enough to answer like that.

“Hyuk Mujin?”

“Yes. Why? What?”

“Are you really Hyuk Mujin?”

"You can't even recognize my face anymore?"

Looking like that, even your parents wouldn't recognize you…

More importantly, why the hell was he here?

"Did you volunteer too?"

"I did."

Then he added, "They wouldn't take me, though."

"Huh?"

"I told the physician, and he got angry and asked if I was out of my mind and trying to get myself killed. So I snuck out."

I spoke seriously.

"Are you out of your mind and trying to get yourself killed?"

"I want to live."

Hyuk Mujin answered with a sour expression.

"Then why did you come?"

"I know my own condition. I can fight well enough."

"Your face looks ready to burst."

"The swelling is going down. My internal injuries are completely healed, so there's no problem."

"What about your external injuries?"

"They'll heal on the way."

"…"

"A few bones are cracked, but I can handle—urk!"

Hyuk Mujin suddenly doubled over. Startled, I shouted, "Hey! What's wrong?"

"Sometimes my chest hurts when I breathe… Ah, it's fine now."

"…"

Was this guy completely insane?

As I stood there speechless, Hyuk Mujin continued.

"Ah, Han Yeop couldn't come. His internal injuries still haven't healed, so he would've only been a burden. Captain? Captain, you are listening to me, right?"

There was only one thought in my head.

Logout. I need to log out, now.

Night came early in winter. The sun set, and after we had walked for who knew how long, we finally entered a broad basin and received the order to make camp.

"Ugh, every bone in my body hurts."

Hyuk Mujin groaned. He clearly hadn't fully recovered, and the march seemed to be taking its toll.

"It's not too late. Want to turn back?"

"Are you saying that again?"

"I'm saying it because you look like you're struggling."

"You're imagining things. Does Hyuk Mujin the man look like someone who'd be exhausted after walking for a mere half day?"

I nodded without the slightest hesitation.

"Yep."

"Absolutely not!"

"Hmm. You're really not tired? You're fine?"

"Yes."

"Then go help the others set up camp."

At that moment, Hyuk Mujin the man's eyes widened, and he sank to the ground.

"Ugh, the internal injuries Jopil gave me…"

"…"

You said your internal injuries were completely healed, you bastard.

I was wondering whether I should give him a good smack when a voice interrupted us.

"Is he injured?"

A huge shadow stretched beneath the moonlight. Hyuk Mujin cautiously raised his head to see who it was, and his eyes flew open.

"Gasp! Lesser Family Head!"

If Jin Wikyung was a division commander, Hyuk Mujin was a private.

The next moment, Hyuk Mujin sprang up like lightning and stood at attention. Jin Wikyung burst out laughing.

"You still don't look fully recovered. Go ahead and lie down. Ah, but your internal injuries certainly seem to have healed. I'll vouch for that."

"Ah, I… That isn't…"

Jin Wikyung lightly patted the flustered Hyuk Mujin on the shoulder, then turned to me.

"Shall we walk for a bit?"

I followed Jin Wikyung to a secluded corner. He spoke first.

"How are you feeling?"

"Good."

I'd gotten full use out of the level-up. My body had recovered at a terrifying speed, and distributing my points had made it even stronger.

The problem lay elsewhere.

My Fame isn't going up.

No, it was going up. By a rat dropping's worth. Little by little. Very, very little.

At this rate, there was no guarantee I'd be able to log out before the fighting started.

At least, not if things stayed like this.

Jin Wikyung's arrival was perfect timing. I brought up the idea I'd been mulling over.

"I want a mission."

His eyes widened at my blunt request.

"Hm? A mission?"

"Now that I've recovered, I want to distinguish myself for our family."

I was proud of myself. To think I could deliver a line like that—a lie like that—with a straight face.

"I-is that truly what you think?"

"Yes."

The corners of Jin Wikyung's eyes trembled. He seemed overcome with emotion.

This is actually making me feel a little guilty.

The only reason I was putting on this ridiculous act was to gain Fame. If I went out on a reconnaissance mission and accomplished something, the Fame would come rolling in.

Even better if I ran into a reconnaissance unit from the Mount Heng Sword Sect. They would provide excellent EXP and enough Fame to fill the rest of the bar.

Once the real battle starts, I'm screwed.

I had to log out before then, and fast. I spoke with firm resolve.

"Just leave it to me."

"What made you think of doing something so admirable? Thank you, my youngest."

Jin Wikyung wiped the damp corners of his eyes with his sleeve and continued.

"But no."

"Then give me a reconnaissance mission—what?"

"I appreciate the thought. Continue guarding the rear."

What the hell is he talking about?

I barely suppressed the urge to grab him by the collar and shake him.

"I-I really want to distinguish myself."

"You've already done more than enough."

"No, that's not what I mean."

"The merits you've earned so far have already been a tremendous help to our family. So don't trouble yourself over it."

"I'd like you to give me at least one reconnaissance mission. There might be enemies lying in ambush ahead…"

Jin Wikyung chuckled.

“This battle will decide our family’s fate. Do you think I wouldn’t have accounted for something like that?”

“Couldn’t there be a one-in-ten-thousand chance that something was overlooked?”

“That is quite literally a one-in-ten-thousand chance.”

Damn it.

Nothing was going my way. What if I really failed to reach the required Fame? Then I would have to fight in a massive battle involving fifteen hundred people.

I’m fucked.

Something large and warm settled on my dejected shoulder. Jin Wikyung’s hand.

“Youngest.”

His voice was heavy and lonely. At the sudden shift in mood, I fell silent and listened.

“Your mission is more important than anyone else’s.”

“What is my mission?”

After a long pause, he forced out a single word.

“Survive.”

“What?”

“Survive, no matter what. If our family loses, run without looking back.”

“…”

“If the roots survive, the tree will grow again. Second Brother and you could become better roots than I ever could.”

I was speechless. For a long time, all I could do was stare at his face.

Survive. Become roots.

His voice and gaze carried a gravity that struck me more deeply than ever before.

“That is your mission.”

The palm resting on my shoulder slid slowly down. I stared after Jin Wikyung’s departing back, unable to look away.

Chapter 37

The march went smoothly. The heavy snow that had fallen during our last reconnaissance mission had melted long ago, and command set a pace that conserved as much of the troops' strength as possible.

"At this rate, we'll reach Jeongyang by tomorrow at the latest."

I blinked at the oddly familiar man's words.

"Who are you?"

Judging by his clothes, he wasn't from the Jin Family of Taiyuan. Aside from the reconnaissance squad, most of the rear guard consisted of martial artists from the newly allied small and mid-sized sects, so that made sense.

"I'm Gwak Jun of the Samdo Sect. We met once before… We even shook hands."

Gwak Jun of the Samdo Sect? It felt like I should remember him.

It wasn't as if I'd shaken only one or two hands trying to raise my Fame.

He was probably one of them.

"Sorry. My memory isn't very good."

"I wasn't expecting you to remember, honestly. Haha."

Gwak Jun gave me a friendly smile and continued.

"To be honest, I was disappointed at first when I found out we'd been assigned to the rear guard."

"Why?"

"Because there'd be fewer chances to distinguish ourselves. Isn't this the perfect opportunity for an unknown grunt like me to make a name for himself?"

"Ah. Right."

There were two possibilities in cases like this. Either he'd fought in so many battles that he'd developed nerves of steel, or he simply had no fear.

I raised my Qi Sense.

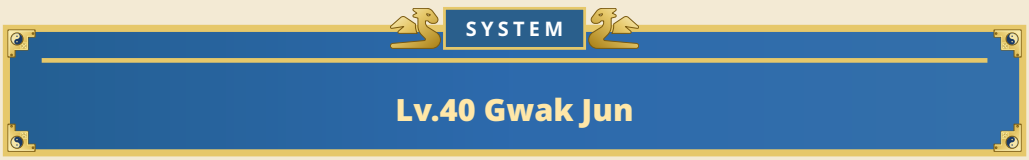
Ding.



Oh. He's pretty good.

At Level 40, he was at least First Rate. He couldn't exactly go around bragging that he was a master, but he was good enough to resent being stuck in the rear.

"Half of the enemy troops were recruited in a hurry. They've dragged in every kind of deadweight, and they must have force-marched to join the main force.

They won't stand a chance against the elites of the Jin Family of Taiyuan and the Samdo Sect."

His argument sounded plausible enough.

If you leave out the part about the Samdo Sect being elite.

I nodded halfheartedly.

"I see."

"And our Peak masters are superior to theirs. There's the Lesser Family Head and Great Hero Wipeng, of course, but the fame of the Blade of Flowers has spread throughout the Central Plains, hasn't it?"

The Blade of Flowers. It was the first time I'd heard the title, but I could guess who he meant.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan had three Peak masters. Excluding Jin Wikyung and Wipeng, only one person remained.

The Head Elder.

Was that old man really that strong?

Everything Gwak Jun said next was praise. Title after title, name after name of masters the Head Elder had cut down in his youth decades ago came spilling out.

"He was a hero born of the Great Faction War."

A war hero from the past. Listening to Gwak Jun, he sounded like the noblest of chivalrous heroes—a man who loved justice and couldn't stand to see injustice go unpunished…

Then why do I feel uneasy every time I see him?

Maybe it was because of my first impression, but I didn't like the Head Elder.

That peculiar air of his. The strange gaze that seemed to bore straight through people. The fact that he had formed a political faction in opposition to Jin Wikyung.

Since then, however, the Head Elder had thrown his full support behind Jin Wikyung, allowing the Jin Family of Taiyuan to present a united front both inside and out.

Well, when an outside enemy invades, even family feuds have to stop.

The Head Elder was currently leading the vanguard alongside Jin Wikyung. If he truly was as skilled as the rumors claimed, tomorrow's battle would be that much easier.

"Just thinking of Great Hero Blade of Flowers sweeping the battlefield tomorrow already has my heart racing."

Gwak Jun shuddered like a man finally taking a piss after holding it for three days.

Does this bastard not know what tension is?

And where was he getting all this confidence that we were going to win?

"You sound certain we'll win."

"If we lose, we'll be in big trouble."

"Excuse me?"

Not big trouble. We'd be finished.

Judging by everything the Mount Heng Sword Sect had done so far, they would raze not only the Jin Family of Taiyuan but every small and mid-sized sect allied with us.

"What do you mean by—"

"I'm joking."

This bastard's a lunatic too.

As I stared at him in disbelief, Gwak Jun flashed me a grin.

"We'll win. We will."

The words rang with absolute conviction.

After Gwak Jun walked away, Hyuk Mujin came over and asked,

"Who was that?"

"Level 40."

"What?"

"Just some guy overflowing with confidence."

I didn't like him for several reasons.

Well, it wasn't as though I'd ever have to talk to him again.

Time passed quickly. On the second night of the march, we reached Honju, and Jin Wikyung gathered the command staff for a meeting. He held a small slip of paper in one hand.

"A letter from the Lower District Sect. The enemy reinforcements crossed Mount Otae two days ago."

"Then…"

"They're likely to join the main force around now, or sometime tomorrow."

What?

I didn't understand. If we had attacked the main force before the reinforcements joined them, the battle would have been much easier.

He must have something in mind.

Sure enough, Jin Wikyung continued.

"The enemy reinforcements are exhausted, and their food supplies are nearly gone. If we seize the advantageous ground at Jeongyang first tomorrow, the Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect will face a choice. Retreat or clash with us."

The next moment, Jin Wikyung looked at me.

"What choice do you think he'll make?"

The sudden question caught me off guard, but the answer was obvious. If he were the kind of man to retreat at this point, he would have done so long ago.

“I think he’ll clash with us.”

They had nearly twice our numbers, and they weren’t behind us in Peak masters either. From the enemy’s perspective, the best option was to end the battle quickly and decisively.

“Exactly.”

Jin Wikyung smiled in satisfaction and traced a finger across the topographic map spread over the table.

“There are four routes the enemy can take into Jeongyang. But with their food situation as it is, they’ll choose the fastest one.”

His finger stopped on a place labeled Eight Spring Gorge. The Head Elder, who had been sitting quietly until then, spoke for the first time.

“Eight Spring Gorge. Jar-shaped, with a narrow, steep entrance. The mounted bandits will have to abandon their prized horses.”

“They’ll have to abandon their lives as well.”

“The enemy will fight with their lives on the line. This alone will not be enough.”

“I’ve hidden some hundred horn bows on the cliffs above the gorge.”

“Hoh.”

A stir ran through the tent. I stared at Jin Wikyung with my mouth open.

When the hell did he hide those there?

“Right after our victory at Honju. Thanks to a resourceful helper.”

Jin Wikyung looked straight at me as he spoke.

The Lower District Sect. Wolhwa.

She had been helping us constantly from places we couldn’t see. Of course, Jin Wikyung was impressive too, for putting together a plan this big.

That’s fucking cool.

A body like a human meat grinder and a brilliant mind to go with it. Suddenly I wanted to call him hyung.[130]

“Oh!”

“Lesser Family Head…!”

The tent grew hot beneath the burning gazes of all those rough-looking men.

Jin Wikyung swept his solemn gaze over everyone assembled.

“Let’s settle this.”

No one objected. The Head Elder was the first to rise and give Jin Wikyung a fist-in-palm salute.[131]

“By your command.”

---

[130] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or a close older man.

[131] A fist-in-palm salute is a traditional martial greeting used to show respect.

That brought the meeting to an end. As I left the tent, a familiar voice pierced my ear.

“Do not forget what I told you yesterday.”

I stiffened for a moment, then gave a small nod.

At dawn, three hundred martial artists from the Jin Family of Taiyuan and one hundred fifty reinforcements from the small and mid-sized sects—four hundred fifty in all—departed for the gorge.

Even though this was goodbye, I never got to say it properly.

I climbed a hill and stared for a long time at the winding line of torches.

The next morning, Hyuk Mujin flinched when he saw me and stepped back.

“You startled me. What happened?”

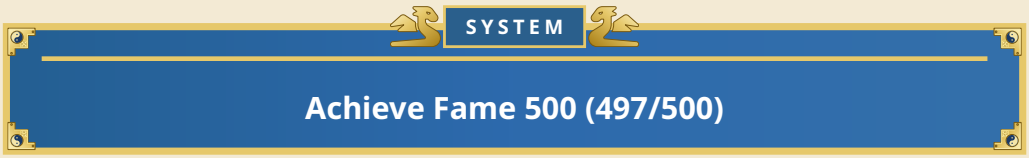
“What?”

“What do you mean, what? You look like a walking corpse. Didn’t you sleep?”

“Nah. I slept a little.”

That was a lie. I hadn’t slept a wink. I had spent the entire night perched on a rock, staring at the System Window.

Eagerly awaiting the moment that had finally drawn near.



I never knew the number one could feel so precious.

In a voice that seemed to have aged overnight, I muttered,

“I’m going, I’m going, now I’m going home…”

“Now you’re even talking to yourself. Have you lost your mind?”

Hyuk Mujin clicked his tongue, then his eyes widened.

“What are those? I’ve never seen them before.”

“These?”

I pointed in turn at the old book and the small box resting on the rock.

“One’s a martial arts manual. The other’s an elixir.”

“Gasp. Really?”

I listlessly explained to the guy whose eyes were halfway out of their sockets.

“The manual contains a Supreme Peak martial art, and if you absorb the elixir properly, it’ll give you half a jiazi.[132]”

[132] A jiazi is a traditional sixty-year cycle; half a jiazi is thirty years.

“What?”

“But if you take the elixir wrong, apparently you’ll burn to death. Want it?”

“Ah. Sure…”

Judging by his unimpressed face and the way his lips were sticking out a mile, he didn’t believe a damn word I was saying.

Well, if someone suddenly came at me with a Supreme Peak martial art and a thirty-year Fireball elixir, I’d assume it was a joke too.

“You really won’t eat it? It’s good stuff.”

“Oh, I’m fine. Learn plenty of that Supreme Peak martial art, and make sure you chew your elixir thoroughly.”

“I don’t need this kind of thing anymore.”

“Of course not. You’re the Hidden Dragon.”

Normally, I would have smacked him in the back of the head. Right now, I didn’t feel much of anything.

Is this how a short-timer sergeant feels?[133]

At the same time, I felt strangely wistful. Maybe it was an aftereffect of everything I’d been through. I had only been here for a little over a month, yet it felt as though a whole year had passed.

I began tracing back through my memories.

I first opened my eyes at Honghwaru.

That was where I met Wolhwa for the first time and realized I was trapped in this game. Even now, thinking about that moment gave me goose bumps.

I really thought I was going to lose my mind.

It had taken me three days just to decide to go to the Jin Family of Taiyuan. And the guy I met there was this one—Hyuk Mujin.

Smack!

“Argh! Why did you hit me?”

“Hmm. Just thinking about the old days.”

“What old days?”

“Nope. Not telling. Now hurry back.”

“What are you, some back-alley thug? Just because your martial arts are a bit stronger, you think you can bully people like this?”

As Hyuk Mujin threw a fit, everyone turned to look at us. Even the reconnaissance-squad members who had been watching from the sidelines joined in.

“What are you two talking about?”

“Dunno. The deputy captain must have done something wrong.”

“Hey, I didn’t do anything!”

[133] A conscript sergeant in the last stretch of mandatory service, coasting toward discharge.

“This is Murim. Being weak is a crime.”

“But should we really be acting like this?”

At someone’s words, silence fell for a moment.

“True. Waiting here is our mission, but…”

The tension and fear they had been suppressing with forced smiles rose to the surface. Even I, who would soon be returning to the real world, felt uneasy whenever Jin Wikyung’s face came to mind. How much worse must it be for these guys?

There was only one thing I could say.

“I trust my hyung.[134]”

Hyung.[135]

This time, I put my heart into the word.

Jin Wikyung had been my greatest source of strength in this place. Maybe I simply wanted to shake off that unease, even if only by saying it aloud.

The tension eased from everyone’s faces.

“We feel the same.”

Hyuk Mujin slipped in as well.

“I trust the Captain more.”

“Wow. Deputy Captain, you’re awfully quick to switch sides.”

“You little bastards. Is there anyone here who doesn’t owe the Captain their life?”

“Well, when you put it that way, what can we say?”

“I trust the Captain too. Honestly, I knew all along, even when you were pretending to be a thug. I thought, Ah, that man is the Hidden Dragon. I could tell right away.”

It felt strange.

Even dried squid gives up water if you squeeze it hard enough. Who knew I’d feel something like this toward NPCs in a game?

Well, honestly… it doesn’t feel bad.

Suddenly, I found myself wondering about Jin Wikyung, somewhere beyond those mountains. Had the battle started? If so, which side was winning?

And I wasn’t the only one thinking about it.

“By now, the battle must have started.”

It was Gwak Jun of the Samdo Sect. Unlike before, he was dressed in black martial robes.

Was that what he was wearing before?

When he noticed me looking, Gwak Jun shrugged.

---

[134] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or a close older man.

[135] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or a close older man.

“I like this sort of thing. It’s easy to move in, and even if a little blood splatters on it, no one can tell. You agree, don’t you?”

The last question wasn’t directed at us. It was meant for the Samdo Sect martial artists under his command. Every last one of them had changed into black, and they nodded without a word.

“Apparently they do.”

Gwak Jun smiled in satisfaction, then turned to me.

“Well, shall we set out too?”

What the fuck is this bastard talking about right now?

Chapter 38

The first thing I felt was confusion.

“Set out?”

Gwak Jun answered.

“Yes. Our side needs to get moving too, or we won’t make it in time.”

At those cryptic words, Hyuk Mujin stepped forward.

“You there, from the Samdo Sect. You seem to have the wrong idea. Our mission is to wait here in the rear with the Young Master.”

“Oh, is that so?”

Gwak Jun’s eyes went round. At his reaction, the reconnaissance-squad members nodded with looks that said, That figures.

“Looks like I had it wrong.”

“It happens. Sure it does.”

But I thought otherwise.

What do you mean, it happens?

There were twenty Samdo Sect martial artists left in the rear. Gwak Jun was their leader.

Would a guy like that mix up his orders?

He was unpleasant, no question, but he didn’t look that stupid.

Dread crept over me.

“That’s a problem. The mission I received is a little different.”

“How is it different?”

As I spoke, I pressed down firmly on Hyuk Mujin’s foot. He horsed around dozens of times a day, but he wasn’t an idiot. His eyes widened as he caught my signal.

“Captain, please move your foot. It hurts.”

“…”

For fuck’s sake.

Gwak Jun’s mouth curled as he watched me stare in disbelief.

“You catch on fast. Or are your subordinates just idiots? Well, anyway. I’ll tell you exactly what that person said.”

The smile vanished from Gwak Jun’s face. With the cold, emotionless gaze of a killer, he continued.

“Eliminate everyone and join the main force.”

Clang-clang-clang!

The instant the words left his mouth, dozens of sword flashes shot into the air. Killing intent and tension hung between the twenty martial artists Gwak Jun led and the reconnaissance-squad members, who drew their swords half a beat later.

“Have you bastards lost your minds…?”

Hyuk Mujin ground his teeth and glared at them.

“You dare betray our family? Are you that desperate to die?”

“Betray? Die? You’re badly mistaken.”

A sneer tugged at Gwak Jun’s mouth.

“We never betrayed anyone, and we aren’t going to die. Least of all to trash like you.”

“You son of a—!”

Hyuk Mujin’s eyes went wild as he threw himself at Gwak Jun.

Or tried to.

“Stay put.”

“Captain?”

Hyuk Mujin’s eyes flew wide.

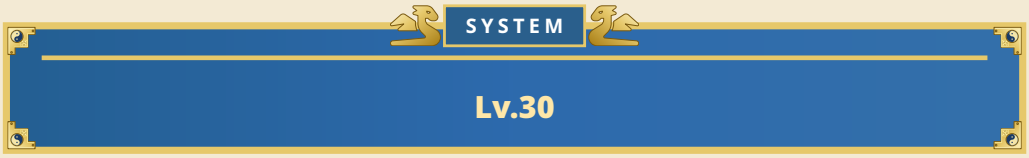
“They’re the Samdo Sect! They’re nothing but Second Rate sect husks! Let us smash them right now and—”

“No.”

“What?”

“They’re not dregs.”

Their sharp aura and murderous eyes were nothing like those of the ordinary martial artists I’d seen from small and mid-sized sects. The System turned my suspicion into certainty.



That was their average Level according to Qi Sense.

Every last one of them was a First Rate martial artist. Damn it. I’d spent three days with these people and hadn’t noticed a thing.

I’d been too fixated on Logout.

That was what I got for letting my guard down. I bit my lip and looked at them—or, more precisely, at the thick grass behind them.

The movement had been extremely faint, but it couldn’t escape my eyes.

Someone’s hiding there.

They were outside the range of Qi Sense, so I couldn’t confirm it, but my instincts told me I was right. Spies, and an ambush on top of that. Thorough bastards.

“You lot. Who are you really?”

“What is that supposed to mean?”

“Where is the real Samdo Sect?”

The Samdo Sect was only a small or mid-sized sect. As Hyuk Mujin had said, they were Second Rate husks. People like these couldn't have been whipped up overnight.

Don't tell me.

"Did you come from the Mount Heng Sword Sect?"

Gwak Jun let out a short laugh.

"The Mount Heng Sword Sect? Well, I suppose you could think that."

Damn it. A third faction.

Logout was right in front of me, and this had to happen now…

Shit. Just my fucking luck.

I was scared shitless. The more I shrank back, the more triumphant Gwak Jun became.

"It's too late for regrets. The grand plan was set in motion long ago."

"Urgh."

Gwak Jun declared in a voice brimming with delight,

"Today… Shanxi Murim will welcome a new master."

Ding.

SYSTEM

— A Quest has been created.

Quest

Slay the Assassins

Someone who has long awaited the right moment has made their move. First, defeat the assassins sent by the traitor!

Grade: Peak

Restriction: Jin Taekyung

Objective: Slay the Assassins (0/20)

Reward: EXP and Fame

Chain Quest

Failure: Death

I blinked. Had I misread the Quest Window?

Twenty?

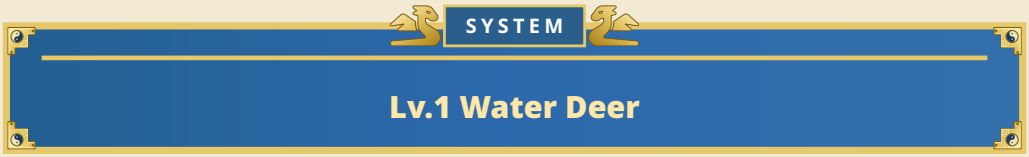
Why twenty? There were enemies lying in ambush back there too.

Just as the question occurred to me, the grass shook. The ambushers charged toward us with a battle cry.

"Kweeeek!"

That was a strange battle cry. No, wait. Wasn't that an animal?

As I stood there blankly, an alert rang in my ears to announce that Qi Sense had activated.



What the hell?

“Water deer?”

A herd of water deer brushed past us and vanished beyond the hill. A sudden appearance. A quick exit.

Gwak Jun drew his sword with an oddly deflated look on his face.

“Attack!”

The twenty enemies approached slowly. Still reeling from the water deer, I called to Hyuk Mujin.

“Hey.”

“What?”

“They’re all First Rate, you know?”

“What? Really?”

Hyuk Mujin jumped.

“Yeah. You know Lee Seogeun, the second son of the Mount Heng Sword Sect? Imagine twenty of him.”

“Twenty Lee Seogeuns?”

His reaction was strange. Hyuk Mujin thought it over for a moment, then tossed out a single remark.

“They’re all going to die, aren’t they?”

Gwak Jun thought,

This isn’t how it was supposed to go.

His gaze was locked on one man. Jin Taekyung, the Third Young Master of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, known as a Supreme First Rate martial artist.

Every time his spear moved, blood spurted and Gwak Jun’s men fell.

Even if they weathered one blow, the second or third always finished them. Every one of them was a First Rate martial artist trained for at least ten years.

What the hell is he?

He was clearly a spearman, but he didn’t care whether the gap closed or not. Whenever it looked like there wasn’t even room to swing the spear, daggers and axes popped out from somewhere and stabbed and jabbed at anything in reach.

It put an acrobat troupe's tricks to shame.

Where the hell are all those weapons coming from?

He hadn't even seen them appear. He had no idea what kind of technique it was. This wasn't a matter of martial arts or internal energy.

Jin Taekyung himself was simply strong.

The information was wrong.

Twenty men weren't nearly enough. They should have brought twice that number. According to the information Gwak Jun had received, Jin Taekyung was nothing more and nothing less than a lucky greenhorn.

And what the hell are those men?

The nine said to be Jin Taekyung's subordinates advanced slowly with their backs to one another, paying no attention to what their leader was doing up ahead. Individually, their skills were sorely lacking, but together, they formed an iron wall.

Thud. Crack!

"Gaaah!"

"Stab them! Stab them!"

"Come in! Come in!"

Gwak Jun's lips trembled.

They had no honor as martial artists. In the middle of this melee they piled on three or four at a time and hacked away, and even his First Rate subordinates couldn't avoid ending up as meat on a skewer.

"You bastards…!"

Anger drove out his fear of Jin Taekyung. Just as Gwak Jun, beside himself with fury, was about to hurl himself into the fight—

Whoooosh—

A violent gale erupted at the center of the battlefield.

Jin Taekyung's spear tore through the wind and shattered the swords. Hundreds of sword fragments rode the gale and swept forward, tearing into the owners of those swords and anyone else who failed to react in time.

Pupupupupup!

"…Urk."

Thud.

A martial artist with sword fragments buried all over his body pitched forward. Of the ten or so men caught in One Annihilation, he was the only one who managed even that much of a sound.

"…!"

Someone swallowed hard, their throat bobbing.

For that moment, friend and foe alike fell silent. No one dared even think of raising a sword to fight.

One person was the exception, of course.

“One Annihilation. This thing is awesome.”

The instant Gwak Jun heard that mutter, he gave up on everything.

It’s all over.

Even if the grand plan succeeded, he had failed. All that remained was the meaningless choice between dying to Jin Taekyung and dying to that person.

I have to run. Far away, somewhere no one can find me.

But Gwak Jun never got the chance to leave in search of a second life. Just as he turned, a savage voice stopped him.

“Stay right there if you don’t want to die very painfully.”

Jin Taekyung added in a slightly gentler voice,

“If you answer well, I’ll kill you gently.”

Gwak Jun’s face went white.

Crunch!

“Ghk.”

I felt it.

Two or three ribs had probably broken, and the wind had been knocked clean out of him.

He held up pretty well for a Level 40, but that was his limit.

“I told you not to run.”

“If I were him, I would’ve run too.”

Covered in blood and dust, Hyuk Mujin stared at me like I was some kind of beast.

“If you’re going to tell him you’ll kill him gently, you might as well say you’ll coat your spearhead with Golden Sore Medicine[136] before you stab him.”

“Want me to stab you?”

“Now that I think about it, you’re right. A blade hurts less if it hits you gently, doesn’t it? So I suppose you can die gently. Heh heh. Heh heh heh.”

I smacked him once on the back of the head, then hauled Gwak Jun to his feet.

“Let’s try this again. Who are you?”

Ptooey.

I easily dodged the bloody phlegm. With a high Agility stat, you could even avoid spit flying at you from point-blank range.

That was a useful life hack.

[136] Golden Sore Medicine is a salve for blade wounds.

Of course, I had a useful life hack for Gwak Jun too. For example:

“If you get hit in the solar plexus while your ribs are broken, it hurts a lot.”

Thump.

“Gaaaaah!”

“So? Your answer?”

“S-Samdo Sect.”

When I raised my fist again, Gwak Jun shouted,

“The Samdo Sect! We really are the Samdo Sect! I’m telling you the truth!”

Hyuk Mujin frowned.

“He’s lying. The Samdo Sect was founded thirty years ago. In truth, it’s closer to a martial arts school than a sect. They’re highly respected for taking in wandering orphans and teaching them.”

“So?”

“Couldn’t these bastards have killed all the Samdo Sect’s disciples and taken their places?”

“Taken their places? Pfft.”

A deflating sound escaped Gwak Jun’s mouth. He was laughing.

“You still don’t understand? The Samdo Sect was founded according to that person’s will. As if any of you could have guessed at a grand plan thirty years in the making. Heh heh.”

“Thirty years?”

It was an unimaginably long time. Only a handful of people could have lain low for that many years while plotting to seize Shanxi Province.

Only one person came to mind.

The Head Elder?

Why would he do such a thing?

The Head Elder was the one who had pulled Jin Wikyung to his feet while he blamed himself before the children’s bodies. He was also the one who had halted every political maneuver and actively cooperated.

Thanks to him, the Jin Family of Taiyuan had united and made it this far…

Wait.

My head spun.

Could it be?

“Hyuk Mujin. How many martial artists are there from the small and mid-sized sects that recently joined us?”

“If you add the Samdo Sect and the Gunggui Sect together, well over a hundred.”

“And under the Head Elder?”

“If you mean the Head Elder’s faction, probably close to half the main force… Ah!”

Hyuk Mujin and the reconnaissance-squad members gaped as they grasped the situation.

If my guess was right and the Head Elder was a traitor, everything fit.

Helping Jin Wikyung had been nothing more than preparation for today.

So he could take everything in a single battle.

He had helped Jin Wikyung and united the family's strength for this very day.

Suddenly, I remembered what Gwak Jun had said before the fight.

That one line about Shanxi Province getting a new master. It no longer sounded like nonsense.

The main force is in danger.

I had to tell Jin Wikyung.

"We're moving out. Right now!"

I shouted and was about to turn.

"Already too late."

Gwak Jun grinned, baring his bloodstained teeth.

"Too late for me, too late for you bastards, and too late for the Jin Family of Taiyuan and the Mount Heng Sword Sect. The grand plan has already begun."

At the same time, blood gushed out. From his eyes, nose, and mouth—from every opening.

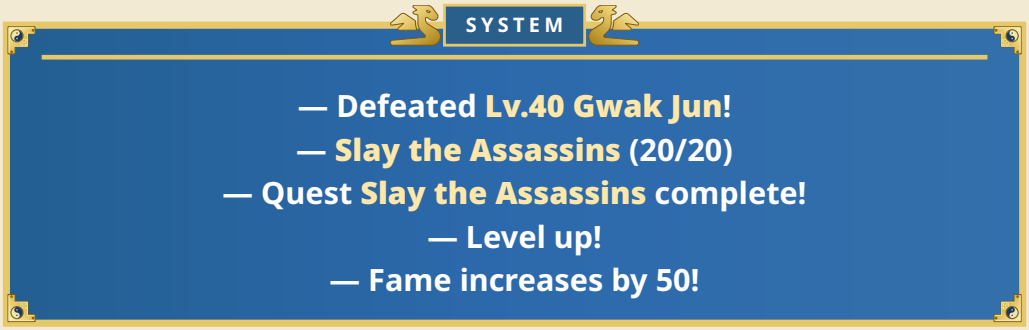
Gwak Jun's head slowly drooped.

Hyuk Mujin spoke with a sickened look on his face.

"He severed his own heart meridian.[137]"

Gwak Jun's death meant one thing.

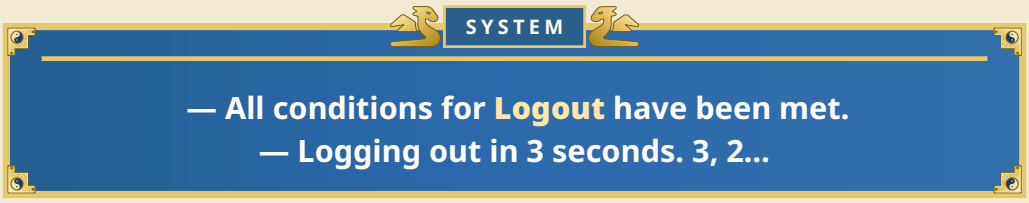
Ding. Ding. Ding.



Quest complete, a level-up, and a Fame increase.

After all those notifications, a single message appeared.

[137] In traditional East Asian medicine, the heart meridian is a pathway associated with the heart.



Strength drained from my whole body. It felt as if I were floating.

Hyuk Mujin caught me, his face filled with alarm.

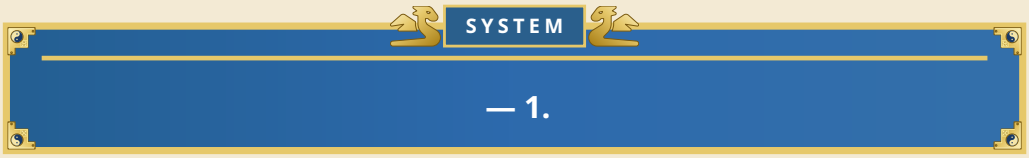
“Captain!”

His voice crackled with static. My vision blurred, and my body slipped beyond my control.

Not now. Not like this...

Of all times.

And then—



Darkness crashed in.

Chapter 39

"Ah."

I blinked. It was hot and humid. When I exhaled, my breath fogged my vision. I felt around my head and touched something hard.

The VR helmet.

I pulled it off, revealing the dusty interior of the capsule.

I sat in the old capsule chair with its worn-flat cushions and waited for my pounding heart to calm down.

Reality? Is this really reality?

Logout after exactly thirty days. Fear surged through me.

Was this really the real world? When I pressed that button and the capsule opened, would I find that too much had changed?

Heart trembling, I opened my mouth.

"Open Status Window."

Silence.

Neither the familiar notification nor the System Window answered.

Only then did it finally sink in.

I had successfully logged out.

"Huuup."

I drew a deep breath and pressed the button. The capsule door opened with a click, and stale air greeted me.

"…Huh."

A dark, cramped room. A small TV on the desk. A single bed. And one person asleep on it, reeking of alcohol.

"Khrrr. Khrrooo."

Who would've thought those bizarre snores could sound so welcome?

I'm back. Back in reality.

Everything was exactly as I remembered it. The last thirty days felt like a dream.

After staring blankly around the room for a while, I walked over to Jinho hyung.[138] Then I slammed the edge of my hand into his uvula.

Whack!

"Khrrr… gack!"

If it hadn't been for this guy's snoring, I never would have crawled into that capsule. I grabbed Jinho tight as he thrashed around.

"Take one more. No, two."

Whack! Whack!

[138] Hyung is how a Korean man addresses an older man he is close to.

“Gack! Grrrgh!”

“You’re both old enough to know better. Especially you, when you’re supposed to be the goshiwon[139] manager.”

“…Sorry.”

“Let’s not have any more embarrassing scenes, all right?”

Bang.

The door closed. Jinho turned around with a sigh.

“Are you insane?”

Before he could say anything worse, I beat him to the punch.

“For the record, it was self-defense.”

“What the fuck are you talking about? Have you lost your mind?”

“I’m perfectly sane.”

“Then why the hell did you hit someone in the throat while he was sleeping—!”

Thump, thump, thump.

The man next door pounded on the wall. Judging by the rhythm and force, the message was clear: I want to kill you.

Jinho lowered his voice.

“Why the hell did you pull that shit? In the middle of the night, too.”

“The middle of the night?”

“Yeah, you lunatic. It’s only three in the morning.”

Jinho held out his phone, looking utterly dumbfounded.

July 25. 3:02 a.m.

I checked the date and time, and my mouth fell open.

Only three hours have passed?

I’d spent a whole month in Murim. Exactly thirty days. Yet only three hours had passed in reality.

“…Hyung.[140]”

“Don’t talk to me. My throat hurts.”

“What’s the usual time ratio for a game capsule?”

“You’re like Hong Gil-dong, you bastard—popping up in the east one moment and the west the next.[141] Even your conversation topics are all over the place.”

“What’s the ratio?”

---

[139] A goshiwon is a building of small, inexpensive rented rooms, usually with shared facilities.

[140] Hyung is how a Korean man addresses an older man he is close to.

[141] Hong Gil-dong is a legendary Korean outlaw known for appearing in different places to punish corrupt officials.

“Huh?”

When I asked with a stiff face, Jinho hyung[142] looked briefly flustered, then answered.

“The latest capsule that came out last month can do five to one, I think.”

“What exactly does five to one mean?”

“What do you think? Five hours pass in the game for every hour in reality.”

This was driving me crazy.

“What about anything beyond that?”

“There isn’t anything. Five to one is the limit of current technology… But why are you asking?”

Because something impossible had happened.

How am I supposed to make sense of this?

Even at a second glance, the capsule was ancient. That piece of junk, made more than twenty years ago, had left modern technology in the dust.

Thirty days in only three hours. What kind of time ratio was that? My head was too scrambled even to calculate it.

“That’s insane.”

“What is?”

There was no way I could understand this on my own. Maybe Jinho could come up with some kind of answer.

After a moment’s hesitation, I spoke.

“A month ago—no, three hours ago—I went into that capsule…”

I’d been through so much that there was a lot to tell. Even after hearing the whole story, Jinho remained silent for a long time.

Then he said one thing.

“That’s insane.”

“Exactly. How does any of this make sense? Could that be some illegally modified capsule or something?”

“No. Not the capsule. You.”

“Huh?”

Jinho hyung[143] spoke with a serious face.

“Just own it and apologize. Say, ‘I’m sorry. Your snoring was so loud I hit you.‘ Be cool about it, you bastard.”

“…”

“What, you couldn’t log out and spent a month risking your life in a game? Go write a novel.”

---

[142] Hyung is how a Korean man addresses an older man he is close to.

[143] Hyung is how a Korean man addresses an older man he is close to.

Right. I knew that was going too well.

I sighed.

“I’m telling you, it’s true.”

“Come on, Taekyung. Let’s think about this rationally.”

Jinho put on a solemn tone.

“Some guy smacks a sleeping person in the uvula to wake him up, then says he was trapped in a game for a month. But he checks the clock, and only three hours have passed? And the capsule is an antique that belongs in a museum?”

“I know it sounds insane. I get it. But…”

“Then try to get me, too. My head hurts from the hangover, my uvula hurts, and looking at you hurts.”

“No, just listen to me!”

Thump, thump, thump, thump.

Before the man next door could smash through the wall, I lowered my voice.

“Then try it yourself.”

“What?”

“If you try it, you’ll believe me.”

Nothing was faster than experiencing it firsthand. If I pulled him out after about ten minutes, he’d have no choice but to believe me.

Jinho stared hard at me before answering.

“Fine. Let’s try it, then.”

He climbed into the capsule and even put on the VR helmet. As he grumbled about the sour smell inside it, I said,

“I’ll pull you out soon. Stay holed up at Honghwaru.”

“Honghwaru, my ass. Just close the capsule door.”

I was curious to see his face when he came back out. I closed the capsule door, took out my phone, and opened the stopwatch.

The instant I pressed start, the numbers began racing upward.

One second, two seconds… ten seconds.

Ten seconds in reality had to mean minutes, maybe even hours, in the game.

By now, he must be scrambling to figure out what’s going on at Honghwaru…

Clunk.

“Huh?”

The door opened.

What? Why is he already out? No, how did he get out?

Jinho sighed at my bewildered expression.

“What are you doing?”

“Uh… Huh?”

"The power isn't even on. What game were you playing?"

What was that supposed to mean?

"The power isn't on?"

"Move."

While I was still stammering, Jinho climbed out of the capsule, bent down, and picked something up from underneath it.

"What does this look like to you?"

A cord.

An unplugged power cord.

I scrubbed furiously at my eyes, but nothing changed.

Was I seeing things?

"Why is this…"

"Taekyung. Jin Taekyung. You poor, pathetic soul."

Jinho gazed at me with sorrowful eyes.

"Go to a mental hospital as soon as the sun comes up. I'm going back to my room."

He tossed the power cord aside and walked away. I stared blankly after him.

The power cord hadn't even been plugged in.

Then what was the game I played?

I felt as though I'd been bewitched by a ghost. Goose bumps rose all over my body.

I lay on the bed and thought.

Am I crazy?

I'd played a game for thirty days in a capsule that hadn't even been plugged in.

I could understand Jinho's reaction. But everything that had happened there…

It was all real.

Jin Wikyung, Wolhwa, Hyuk Mujin, and the Head Elder. I remembered every NPC's face, their way of speaking, their mannerisms. It hadn't been a delusion I'd cooked up on my own.

Then what was the problem?

There was only one answer.

The problem was the game capsule itself. It had been made twenty-seven years ago—a piece of junk that should have been retired long ago and put in a museum.

Even its date of manufacture was suspicious.

January 1, 2020.

The day the Demon King Asmodeus fell at humanity's hands.

Who the hell was making game capsules back then?

Hundreds of millions had died during the five-year Great War, and monsters had roamed through city centers.

In my opinion, the bastards who heard the breaking news that the Demon King had fallen and fired up a factory going, All right, let's make game capsules now! belonged in court.

Back then, I thought it was a misprint.

I froze.

A misprint?

The product manual!

How could I have forgotten something that important? What an idiot.

I shot to my feet and began turning the room upside down. At last, I found the familiar little booklet under the bed.

> Product User Manual
> Product Name: Virtual Reality Access Device
> Model Name: Ark - 2020
> Manufacturer: H Soft
> Date of Manufacture: January 1, 2020

Then the next page.

> Precautions
>
> - The player cannot log out at will.
> - If the player dies during play, resurrection is impossible.

A month ago—no, three hours ago—I had thrown the booklet aside at this point.

This time was different.

With trembling hands, I turned to the last page.

> Key Features
>
> - A custom capsule made for one person only! Once a user is registered, the capsule is permanently bound to that user until death.
> - Time-ratio adjustment for comfortable play! Upon login, time in reality passes very slowly. The reverse is also true.
> - Character Synchronization System! By synchronizing with their character, the user experiences a greater sense of unity.

"What the hell is this?"

I could read the words, but my brain refused to process them. I started again from the beginning.

First, permanent binding.

It meant exactly what it said. The capsule was mine until I died. Once I got some answers, I was going to smash the goddamn thing to pieces.

Next, the time ratio.

That was the part I'd been most curious about. But instead of an exact figure, all it gave me was the vague phrase passes very slowly.

It said the reverse was also true, so time in the game must be passing very slowly now.

Then is the war still going on?

Jin Wikyung came to mind. The Head Elder's betrayal was already a given, and he would try to stab Wikyung in the back at the critical moment. Had Hyuk Mujin and the reconnaissance squad gotten that news to him?

Right. That's still a long way off. The time ratio reversed.

More importantly, I had immediate problems of my own. I examined the final key feature, but unlike the others, this one made no sense no matter how many times I read it.

Synchronize with a character?

Just to be sure, I even looked it up in a Korean dictionary. It meant exactly what I thought it meant, which only made it sound even crazier.

How the hell do you synchronize with a game character?

I couldn't make any sense of it. In the end, all I'd done was add another question to the pile.

One thing was certain.

I wasn't crazy.

I flopped onto the bed and read the front of the booklet again.

"Manufacturer: H Soft."

In the end, every road led to the same place. If I investigated these bastards, something was bound to turn up.

I searched the internet for H Soft, but aside from a porn studio with the same name, I didn't find a thing.

"…"

First, I needed to lock the door and think.

Chapter 40

I was flying through the sky. With my enormous wings spread wide, I cut through the wind.

Far below lay a high, steep gorge shaped like a bottle gourd. Hundreds of people stood within it.

A man standing at the center shouted at the top of his lungs.

“Don’t fight for the Jin Family of Taiyuan!”

Then the ground shook. Trees trembled, and mountain birds took flight.

I glanced behind me. A massive cloud of dust was sweeping through the gorge toward us.

“Fight for yourselves! Fight for your families and the ones you love, before the enemy tramples them!”

He drew his sword and roared.

“Stand and face them like martial artists! I will do the same!”

Hundreds of weapons were drawn in unison. The man strode forward and took the lead. The cloud of dust crossing the gorge scattered, revealing countless people.

“Waaaaah!”

“Wipe out those Jin Family bastards!”

The man suddenly looked up. When he spotted me, he grinned.

“I’ve got a good feeling about this.”

The moment I saw his face, the strength drained from my wings. I plummeted into the depths of my consciousness.

“Pwah! Pwah-pwah!”

I desperately flapped my wings—or rather, my arms—before realizing what had happened.

It was a dream.

Thank god. I thought I was a goner. Only after catching my breath did the situation in the room come into focus.

“This is a breaking news report. A new Gate has appeared at Exit 3 of Hapjeong Station. Magical power measurements have confirmed it as a Grade C Gate, and…”

A small TV sat on the desk, showing an announcer. And then there was—

“What the hell was that?”

[144] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

Jinho hyung[144] stood there with a pot lid in one hand and chopsticks in the other, staring at me like I was out of my mind.

“Some kind of performance art?”

“Shut up. I was dreaming.”

“About swimming?”

“About falling.”

“Good for you. You’ll grow taller.”

He delivered the line without a shred of interest and slurped up his noodles, looking completely at home. For a moment, I wondered if this was even my room.

“This is my room, right?”

“Probably.”

“Then why are you here?”

“Is this anything new?”

That actually sounded plausible. I almost bought it.

“Turn off the TV or something. People are trying to sleep.”

“Some inconsiderate bastard even hits people in the uvula while they’re sleeping.”

“…”

Anyway, that bastard had one hell of a mouth on him.

“If you’ve got nothing to say, eat some ramen. I cooked five packs because I thought you might wake up.”

Talk about foresight. I took the chopsticks from him, overcome with emotion.

This wasn’t just ordinary ramen. It was my first ramen in a month.

The smell that pulled at my appetite. Noodles cooked just right. Broth boiled spicy with separately sliced Cheongyang peppers.

This is insane. Absolutely insane.

Slurp.

By the time I came to my senses, it was all over. Jinho stared blankly as I licked the pot clean.

“I thought you were filming a commercial. Have you never eaten ramen in your life?”

“It’s my first ramen since I came back.”

“Are you still on that?”

“Try eating nothing but Chinese food for a month, then have some ramen. Michelin’s got nothing on this.”

“Stop. It’s not funny anymore.”

He looked thoroughly fed up. This time, though, I had something to back up my story.

“Look this over, then we’ll talk.”

“What’s this?”

“What do you think? A product user manual.”

“…Don’t tell me.”

“Yeah. It was inside that capsule. Read it.”

“Someone left this inside when they threw out a piece of junk more than twenty years old?”

Jinho tilted his head, then started reading. A few seconds later, he looked up.

“This is a misprint. The date of manufacture says January 1, 2020.”

I’d thought the same thing at first.

At first.

“That might not be a printing error.”

“Huh?”

“No, forget it. That’s still just a guess. What about the rest? Have you heard of the model or the manufacturer listed there?”

Jinho was crazy about electronics, especially capsules.

He was a well-known user on all the relevant sites and had even run an IT blog.

But his immediate answer sent my expectations crashing down.

“No.”

Well, that was only natural. Even an internet search hadn’t turned anything up. Still, I couldn’t help feeling a little disappointed.

“You really don’t know? You know this field inside out.”

“Yeah. But I don’t know this.”

Jinho scratched his head.

“An illegally modified capsule? Or maybe a custom job? Honestly, I’ve never seen a design like that.”

The more he talked, the bleaker it sounded.

“Fine, forget the design. But I know every model from the very first to the latest—everything that’s ever been released in Korea.”

“And?”

“The model name written here. The manufacturer. I’ve never seen either of them in my life.”

“Couldn’t it be an overseas manufacturer?”

“Oh, you hopeless idiot. You dumbass. You moron.”

Looking thoroughly exasperated, Jinho thrust the manual at me.

“Read the first line.”

“Product User Manual?”

“Exactly. It’s in Korean. Korean!”

“Oh.”

"Whether H Soft is a domestic company or a foreign one, if they went to the trouble of producing a Korean manual, there's no way I wouldn't know them. It's not like there are hundreds or thousands of capsule manufacturers out there."

I felt like a complete idiot. Not that I knew anything about capsules in the first place.

Then Jinho spoke up.

"Wait a second."

He pulled out his smartphone and started tapping the screen. He seemed to be searching, but the result was obvious.

"Fuck. All I'm getting is porn sites."

Yeah, that one was pretty good.

"It's not even a ghost company. Why is there nothing about it?"

"Read the rest too."

By the time he reached the last page, he'd really feel like he'd been haunted. Jinho turned the pages with a serious expression.

Once.

Then again.

"Isn't it incredible?"

"Yeah. Incredible."

His voice was hollow.

"You told me to look at blank pages. That's incredible."

"Huh?"

"No wonder I thought this manual was so half-assed. No explanation of the capsule's components, no operating instructions, and even the model name, manufacturer, and date of manufacture are a mess."

"Blank pages? What are you talking about?"

"Well, well. Look at this humanities-major bastard playing innocent."

I snatched the manual from him and hurriedly read it.

The contents I'd seen before falling asleep were still there. Precautions on the second page. Key features on the last.

"You can't see this?"

"Knock it off. This is starting to scare me."

That expression. That tone.

He meant it.

The writing I could see was invisible to Jinho.

Or maybe…

Only I can see it.

I remained frozen for a long time.

Pshhh—

I climbed out of the capsule on shaky legs.

Its glossy exterior made it look like a giant egg. This was the latest model, released only last month.

“Oh, you’re out already. Did you try the game I recommended?”

Still half out of my mind, I answered the capsule café owner sitting behind the counter.

“Yes.”

The virtual-reality game he’d recommended was a megahit with ten million concurrent users. He’d said it had incredible graphics, outstanding freedom, and more than seventy percent of the market.

“The graphics are insane, right?”

I logged into the game, saw the graphics, and thought:

Am I the one who’s insane?

This is the most popular virtual-reality game out there?

The graphics were good. I could give it that.

But that was as far as it went.

The NPCs’ faces and movements. Their dialogue patterns. All five senses as I experienced them through my character. All of it felt unnatural.

It was a game. It never felt like reality.

“Do you have any wuxia[145] games?”

“Ah, so that’s what you’re into? There are quite a few. What’s the title you’re looking for?”

“Murim.”

“Murim Online?”

“No. It’s an open-world game. Single-player.”

“Is there a wuxia game like that?”

Figures.

There was nothing more to hear. I staggered out the door, and the owner called after me.

“Come again!”

I wouldn’t.

Not ever again.

[145] Wuxia is a Chinese genre of stories about martial heroes.

Hope Goshiwon.[146]

I sat beneath the old, rusted sign and pulled out my smartphone. The other end picked up almost before it could ring.

Click.

“Yeah. What?”

My one and only nemesis—no, my younger sister, Hayeon.

The moment I heard that uniquely bratty voice of hers, my throat closed up.

“Hello?”

“…Yeah.”

“Why’d you call?”

“Just because. I wanted to hear your voice.”

A deathly silence followed.

“I’m hanging up.”

“No, wait. Wait!”

“You have three seconds. What do you want?”

That damn girl…

Right. This was Jin Hayeon.

Thanks to her, my tear ducts, which had gotten a little moist, dried out like the sand around the pyramids.

“What’s Mom doing?”

“She went out on an errand. Call her if you’re curious.”

I deliberately hadn’t called her. Hearing this brat’s voice was already enough to choke me up. If I heard Mom’s, I might start bawling like a little kid.

I quickly changed the subject.

“What about you?”

“What do you think a high-school senior with a hundred and twenty days left until the college entrance exam is doing? Studying.”

Her tone was sharper than usual. Exam stress must have been getting to her.

“How’s studying going?”

“I bombed the July mock exam. I didn’t manage my condition right and missed even the easy questions. God, the more I think about it, the more annoyed I get.”

“It’s fine. Just do well on the real thing. How many did you miss?”

“Two.”

“That’s still Grade 1.[147] What about the other subjects?”

“Two across all subjects.”

---

[146] A goshiwon is a low-cost Korean boarding house consisting of extremely small private rooms with shared facilities.

[147] Korean exam grades use a 1–9 scale, with Grade 1 the highest.

"Huh?"

"One in Korean history and one in math."

"…Two total? Across every subject? Are you serious?"

"Obviously that's what I meant."

Smart little brat…

I knew she was good at studying, but I hadn't realized she was this good. Thinking back on my own school grades, it really seemed like there was such a thing as dumping all the genes into one kid.

"You're pretty good at this studying thing, huh?"

"From your perspective, aren't I amazing?"

"W-what kind of nonsense is that? I was pretty good at studying too, you know. You just don't remember because you were in elementary school…"

"Last week during a deep clean, I found your report card. There were so many Grade 7s[148] I thought it was a slot machine that had hit the jackpot."

"You need some allowance, right? How much does makeup cost these days?"

"That's pathetic. Seriously."

Cruel girl…

The call lasted more than ten minutes. I mostly listened.

Hayeon rattled on about studying, school, and a boy she was interested in. Her voice had grown much brighter than when we first started talking.

I found myself getting oddly sentimental.

I really did come back.

Had I been dreaming? Or had I lost myself in some delusion?

Only a day had passed in reality, yet utterly incomprehensible, inexplicable things had happened.

But I decided not to try to understand them anymore.

I'm back in reality now.

And this was where I had to live.

My family was here. I was here. That was enough.

I'd simply had a strange dream for a little while. The kind of dream that would naturally fade with time.

"So I…"

"Yeah."

Listening to my little sister chatter, I got to my feet.

It was time to leave the old, rusted sign behind and return to my room.

[148] Korean exam grades use a 1–9 scale, with Grade 1 the highest.

Bzzzt. Bzzzt.

Seong Jinho cracked open his bleary eyes. The smartphone beside his pillow was ringing.

Six in the morning.

The signal that his day had begun.

“Oh, I’m dying.”

It had been five years since he left home. By now, the moldy smell that crept into his nose every morning had become thoroughly familiar.

Eyes half closed, Seong Jinho shoved his cigarettes and lighter into his pocket and left the room.

Nothing wakes you up like a cigarette.

He shuffled up to the rooftop in his slippers. Just as he put a cigarette between his lips—

Thud.

“Huh?”

What was that?

He leaned over the railing and spotted a hunk of metal in the recycling area directly below.

He also saw the well-built young man standing there, staring at it.

“Hey! Jin Taekyung!”

At Seong Jinho’s shout, Jin Taekyung looked up.

“What?”

“You throwing that away?”

The hunk of metal was the junk capsule Taekyung had picked up the day before. After pulling that ridiculous prank with it, he seemed to be taking it right back out to the trash.

He was awfully serious for a prank, though… Ah, whatever. It was all nonsense.

Seong Jinho let out a short laugh.

“Why throw it away? Aren’t you going back to Murim?”

“You believed that?”

Jin Taekyung smiled back. But to Seong Jinho, who had watched him for a long time, the smile looked somehow awkward.

What’s with him?

Something felt off.

Jin Taekyung waved to the uneasy Seong Jinho and started down the hill.

“Where are you going, you punk? Aren’t we having breakfast together later?”

“I have to work!”

Jin Taekyung left without looking back. Seong Jinho took a drag from his half-smoked cigarette.

“That bastard really works hard…”

Soon, Jin Taekyung disappeared from sight.

Seong Jinho stubbed out his cigarette in a flowerpot and was about to leave when the junk capsule caught his eye.

He said the manufacturer was H Soft, right?

It was probably just some half-assed prank, but there was no harm in looking into it.

Chapter 41

The Hunter Manpower Office.

They called it an office, but it occupied an entire six-story building on prime real estate right by the station. Hundreds of Hunters passed through its doors every day.

It's been a while.

Even at dawn, the lobby was packed.

After waiting through the long line, I reached the counter. The woman behind it asked in a businesslike tone,

"Is this your first time at the manpower office?"

"No. I'm already registered."

"Your name?"

"Jin Taekyung."

Back when I was a rookie, I'd graduated from the Hunter Training Center with excellent scores. But hardly anyone needed an F-rank Hunter like me, and the contracts a few small and midsize Guilds offered as if they were doing me a favor were highway robbery.

So I'd come here instead. To a different branch, though.

"There's a record at the Ilsan branch. I've put you on the list, so please wait in the hall on the first floor."

"Yes."

This six-story building was a pyramid unto itself. The first floor took E- and F-ranks. You needed to be at least D-rank to set foot on the second.

Some people got angry and asked if that wasn't blatant discrimination.

It was.

Not like this was the first or second time.

I'd lasted seven years in this business and seen every ugly side of it. I'd long since passed the point where I could afford to be picky.

I had just started walking when—

"Hey, look who it is!"

I turned toward the gravelly voice. Some hairy guy was grinning at me.

"Taekyung. You're Jin Taekyung, right?"

"Uncle Kkeokjeong?"

This guy's still alive?

His surname was Im. I'd forgotten his given name. I was pretty sure I'd heard it once, when he introduced himself seven years ago, but I couldn't remember it.

He looked so much like a bandit that everyone called him Im Kkeokjeong.[149]

"How've you been all this time?"

"Life as an F-rank Hunter is pretty much the same for all of us. How about you?"

"Don't call me uncle."

Im Kkeokjeong gave me an easy smile.

"Call me hyung.[150] We're not even that far apart in age."

How many years apart were we again? I couldn't quite remember.

"Hyung,[151] how old are you?"

"Forty-five."

"…"

What's with that confidence?

But the social skills I'd honed over the years came through for me. I somehow managed to force a smile.

"You're right. I'll just call you hyung.[152]"

"That's it, little brother. Hahahaha!"

His hearty laughter rang through the hall. Nearly a hundred people looked over, then turned away.

I should've just pretended I didn't hear him and kept walking.

Ours wasn't exactly a deep connection. We'd seen each other almost every day for about half a year at the Ilsan office and worked together a few times. That was about it.

He's a good guy, but…

Sometimes it was embarrassing to be around him.

Like now.

"The yulmu tea[153] here is incredible. The chairs in the hall are nice and soft too."

Im Kkeokjeong tossed back his yulmu tea[154] in one gulp and leaned his chair as far back as it would go.

Judging by how comfortable he looked, this clearly wasn't his first or second visit.

"You come here often?"

"Not every day. I drop by now and then. Once I got married and had kids, I started being more careful. Heh heh."

---

[149] Im Kkeokjeong was a famous Joseon-era bandit and folk hero; the nickname comes from the man's bandit-like appearance.

[150] Hyung is a familiar form of address used by a man for an older brother or an older man close to him.

[151] Hyung is a familiar form of address used by a man for an older brother or an older man close to him.

[152] Hyung is a familiar form of address used by a man for an older brother or an older man close to him.

[153] Yulmu tea is a Korean grain drink made from Job's tears.

[154] Yulmu tea is a Korean grain drink made from Job's tears.

Apparently, he'd started a family while we were out of touch. When I congratulated him, Im Kkeokjeong scratched his head.

"What's so special about that?"

He was being modest, but a big deal was a big deal. He'd worked as a Hunter—an F-rank Hunter—for more than twenty years and still managed to build a family.

I wondered if the Im Kkeokjeong in front of me might be my future self.

Assuming I live to that age.

Being a Hunter wasn't a career you could keep up for long. Plenty of people retired the moment they completed the ten years needed to qualify for a pension.

"Anyway, you're starting to look the part. When I first met you, you were so nervous you could barely talk."

"Of course. I've got seven years under my belt now."

"So you've been bouncing around manpower offices ever since? Didn't you sign a fairly decent contract with some small or midsize Guild? So, So… what was it called again?"

"Sopung Guild. They fired me the day before yesterday."

Im Kkeokjeong forced a laugh.

"Hahaha! Good for you. The Guild's name was lousy anyway. Sopung? What kind of name is that? It's not like you're going on a picnic to a Gate."

"No, not that kind of sopung. It's a place name. They're near Bucheon Sopung Terminal, so they're called Sopung Guild."

"Oh…"

The conversation that followed was surprisingly useful. Im Kkeokjeong was a regular at the manpower office, after all, and a veteran Hunter with good information and plenty of hard-earned tricks of the trade.

"The office takes a ten percent commission. That's standard. But this branch has a pretty good batting average."

Batting average was industry slang for your odds of getting hired. For someone whose immediate goal was a day's pay, that was good news.

"Even for F-rank Hunters like us?"

"Huh? Yeah. That's right."

What's with that awkward look?

Before I could ask anything else, a voice came through the speakers in the hall.

"E-rank Hunter Im Hyeokjun. Im Hyeokjun, please come to the lobby."

Six thirty in the morning.

At last, the first batter was up. My turn would come only after all the E-rank Hunters had gone.

"E-ranks first, as expected… Hyung,[155] where are you going?"

"I'll go on ahead."

Im Kkeokjeong—or rather, Im Hyeokjun—slung a large bag of armor and weapons over his shoulder and chuckled.

No wonder his expression looked off.

He must have worked himself to the bone while we were out of touch.

It was only a single step up, but advancing beyond F-rank despite an F-rank's potential was no easy feat.

"See you around."

"Yeah. See you."

His departure from the hall opened the floodgates. The speakers began rattling off names one after another.

E-rank so-and-so, E-rank somebody else, E-rank…

Goddamn it, am I the only F-rank here?

Just as I was starting to get anxious—

"F-rank Hunter Jin Taekyung. Jin Taekyung, please come to the lobby."

There it is!

"Mr. Jin Taekyung?"

A man in a white linen shirt was waiting in the lobby. Without so much as a greeting, he held out a contract, his expression flat.

"I'm from the Peace Guild. Read it and sign."

This guy's tone is seriously irritating.

I glared from the contract to the man's face and back.

"The settlement split is eight to two."

"After the raid, the proceeds will be distributed fairly according to contribution. We'll take twenty percent of your share."

"And the base pay?"

"Thirty."

"Thir…ty?"

Did this guy lose half his tongue?

"Gate rank?"

"E-rank."

"Rejected."

"The combat positions are full. You'll be a porter."

[155] Hyung is a familiar form of address used by a man for an older brother or an older man close to him.

The corner of my eye twitched.

What the hell did this guy just say?

“A por-ter?”

“Is there a problem?”

“Obviously.”

The man in the linen shirt glared down his nose at me.

“What is it?”

“I don’t have a pen.”

“…”

After a brief silence, I took the pen he handed me and scrawled my signature. The base pay was 300,000 won,[156] and the settlement split was generous too.

I’d flinched when I heard it was an E-rank Gate, but I was only going as a porter, so it didn’t matter. I’d skin a few monsters, haul a pack around, then part ways with everyone in a good mood.

Peace Guild. I like the name already.

I’d been itching to sign so badly my fingers had almost cramped.

“All done.”

“…”

“So where are we going? Are we taking a van?”

“There’s one waiting outside.”

“Oh, that one? Looks nice. Bet the AC works great too.”

“…”

“Guess I was the last one. There are already a few people here… Huh? Kkeokjeong hyung![157]”

“Huh? Taekyung!”

Im Kkeokjeong was waiting to load his bags into the bus’s trunk. He grinned wide.

“You’re coming too. That’s great!”

“Looks like you and I really do have a connection, hyung.[158]”

“Hahahaha!”

“Ahahaha!”

“…Let’s get going.”

Maybe it was the heat, but the man in the linen shirt suddenly looked years older.

[156] 300,000 Korean won is about $210 or €190 at the project rates.

[157] Hyung is a familiar form of address used by a man for an older brother or an older man close to him.

[158] Hyung is a familiar form of address used by a man for an older brother or an older man close to him.

The bus pulled out. From the passenger seat, the shirt guy said we'd arrive within twenty minutes, then closed his eyes.

Im Kkeokjeong introduced me to the others who'd been hired with us.

"All right, everyone, say hello. This is a younger friend of mine."

Now that I looked, they all knew each other. I dipped my head.

"Hello. I'm Jin Taekyung."

"Oh, nice to meet you."

"Tall, handsome young fellow. Looks like he can fight."

There were three new faces, all men in their late thirties or early forties. As the warm introductions continued, Im Kkeokjeong explained.

"These guys are all E-rank. I've known them for a long time. More than ten years now."

"Yeah, about that long. Time sure flies."

That meant every one of them had at least ten years of experience. I'd been around long enough that nobody would call me a rookie, but these guys were on another level.

A whole party of old-timers.

People like them pulled their weight wherever they went. In an emergency, they were far more dependable than some half-baked D-rank.

"So what rank are you, young man?"

Here it came. The rank check.

I answered carefully.

"F-rank."

"Ah. That so? How long have you been at it?"

"Seven years."

"Hmm. That so?"

The mood went lukewarm. If my first raid started like this, that would be a problem.

I ran my mouth before it could settle.

"I won't be taking part in combat. I'm joining as a porter, so you don't need to worry…"

The three men stared blankly at me.

"Why the long explanation? You think we're going to eat you?"

"Drop it. If he's been knocking around for seven years, he knows enough."

"If Kkeokjeong hyung[159] recommended him, that's good enough. Team Leader Choi must've thought he was all right too, or he wouldn't have agreed."

Recommended? Team Leader Choi?

[159] Hyung is a familiar form of address used by a man for an older brother or an older man close to him.

I didn't know the exact details, but I could more or less piece together what had happened.

Im Kkeokjeong had recommended me to the man in the linen shirt—Team Leader Choi.

"W-what are you talking about?"

Im Kkeokjeong waved his hands, his face turning bright red.

The three men snickered.

"It's written all over your face. How did this hyung[160] ever manage to get married?"

"Good deeds are supposed to come to light. Why hide them?"

"Exactly. You think so too, don't you?"

I nodded at once.

"Of course. Thank you for looking out for me."

"Ahem. I just put in a word. Team Leader Choi made the decision."

Well, then…

I'd thought of Im Kkeokjeong as one of the countless people I'd briefly crossed paths with and then moved on from. Meeting him again, I realized he was far more guileless and warmhearted than I'd expected.

So that's why the terms were so generous.

Judging by the way they kept mentioning Team Leader Choi, I figured their friendship had played a part in my contract too.

"I'll work hard."

"I told you, Team Leader Choi made the decision!"

The man in question answered Im Kkeokjeong's awkward excuse.

"Then let's say I made the decision."

The man in the linen shirt had opened his eyes at some point. No—Team Leader Choi. He addressed us.

"We're here."

I turned my head. A four-meter-high[161] Gate loomed closer. At its center, a vortex of magical power churned, ready to suck us in.

An E-rank Gate.

My first raid since coming back.

---

[160] Hyung is a familiar form of address used by a man for an older brother or an older man close to him.

[161] Four meters is about 13 ft.

Chapter 42

A Gate.

The greatest mark left by the Great Cataclysm.

More than thirty years ago, Demon King Asmodeus had used Gates as invasion routes. They had long since become a means for Hunters to make a living and excavation sites for Magic Gems, a higher-dimensional energy resource.

“You’re with the Peace Guild, correct?”

A middle-aged man in work clothes approached us from the entrance.

He was a civil servant with the Gate Management Office, which stationed officials at every Gate.

“Yes.”

The official nodded at Team Leader Choi’s curt reply.

“You’re right on time. When will you be entering?”

“We’ll gear up and go straight in.”

“There’s a waiting room on the second floor. Come back down once you’re ready. Well, then.”

We followed Team Leader Choi inside. The two-story building housing the Management Office was as run-down as they came, and the waiting room wasn’t much better.

Holy shit. That smell.

The moment we opened the door, the stench of sweat hit me. Rusty cabinets and an overflowing trash can jumped out at me too.

“This place is awful. Don’t they ever air it out?”

“That’s Gate officials for you. There’s a reason everyone calls this a cushy posting.”

I left the grumbling behind and started changing into my raid gear. Leather armor and lightweight combat boots. Last, I drew a spear from its long case and gripped it.

It’s been a while.

The way it fit snugly in my hand felt both familiar and strange.

It was definitely different from the weapon I’d used for the past month…

No. Never mind. I shouldn’t think about that anymore.

I have to forget all of it now.

I was tightening the perfectly fine laces on my combat boots for no reason when Im Kkeokjeong came over.

Clad in full-body armor and carrying an enormous tower shield, he looked every bit the main tank.

“All ready?”

"Yeah. Pretty much."

Im Kkeokjeong looked me up and down, then clicked his tongue.

"Look at this guy. How old is that equipment, even?"

"Who knows? I bought it when I first started, so at least seven years?"

Back when I was a rookie, I'd taken the plunge and bought it from an underground shop in Dongdaemun.[162] I still remembered the exact price.

1.98 million won.[163]

I could barely sleep for days after buying it.

Hunters earned a lot, but they spent a lot too, and most of those expenses went toward equipment. It was all because of the unique nature of Gates.

Equipment that isn't imbued with mana or magical power breaks down in no time.

So the most common method was to craft equipment from Magic Gems taken from Gate monsters.

The higher the Grade of the Magic Gem, the more the price shot through the roof.

"Seven years? Good grief. Saving money is all well and good, but you've got to spend it when it counts. You really want to pinch pennies when your life's on the line?"

"Hmm. I had my reasons."

Reasons I didn't particularly want to discuss. Im Kkeokjeong spoke in a concerned voice.

"You're in a noncombat position today, so you should be fine… but be careful."

"I will."

His words left me with a strange feeling. They reminded me of someone who, until recently, had constantly been telling me to be careful.

But the sentimentality didn't last.

"Is everyone ready?"

Team Leader Choi appeared, and my jaw dropped.

No way.

"Is that a Red Drake leather set?"

"Hmm."

Team Leader Choi's face stiffened. I'd only ever seen gear like that in luxury catalogs, and the words had slipped out before I could stop them.

"Ah, sorry…"

"It's nothing special. It was merely crafted using five types of magic and B-grade Magic Gems."

"…"

---

[162] Dongdaemun is Seoul's major wholesale-market district.

[163] 1.98 million won is about $1,400 or €1,300.

“Not that I’m emphasizing the point, but its materials include five types of magic and B-grade Magic Gems.”

“Ah. Right.”

“Red Drake leather is popular for its distinctive sheen, but it only looks impressive. It isn’t particularly useful.”

Team Leader Choi moved, his face still stiff. A faint red glow flashed across him.

“But it is exceptionally beautiful.”

“…”

“Let’s head downstairs.”

Team Leader Choi left the waiting room first. Im Kkeokjeong sidled over to me.

“That guy loves it when someone recognizes his equipment.”

“I mean, I get that, but… what’s with him?”

“No idea. He’s an equipment nut. There’s even a rumor that he blew his entire fortune on that set and sleeps in it every night.”

So that bastard’s a nutjob too.

I sighed inwardly and prayed that today’s raid would end without incident.

“This isn’t the same number of people you registered.”

The civil servant looked uncomfortable. Fair enough. We were supposed to enter soon, and the party still wasn’t all there.

How much longer are we supposed to wait?

Only six people had gathered in front of the Gate. Excluding me, the porter, that left just five combatants.

Since this was an E-rank Gate, we needed at least five more Hunters of the same rank… but those Peace Guild bastards were nowhere in sight. No wonder the official was annoyed.

“You should’ve notified us in advance if you were adding personnel.”

Huh? What did he just say?

Adding personnel?

“I’m sorry.”

At Team Leader Choi’s curt apology, the official picked up his pen and drew several lines through the paperwork.

“It’s not a major problem since we can amend it… but please be more careful next time.”

“Yes.”

Not a major problem, my ass. There aren’t any people!

I poked Im Kkeokjeong in the ribs.

"Hyung.[164] When are the others getting here?"

"What others?"

"The Peace Guild members."

"Team Leader Choi's right there."

"What?"

"Oh, did I forget to tell you? The Peace Guild is new, so it doesn't have many people. There are only three of us, including the Guild Master. Hahaha!"

…You're laughing?

"Come on, hyung.[165]"

"I know, punk. But you don't need to worry."

Im Kkeokjeong patted my shoulder and pointed at Team Leader Choi, who was signing the paperwork.

"That man's a C-rank Hunter."

"Oh. C-rank…"

I shut my mouth.

If Team Leader Choi was a C-rank Hunter, there was no problem. No, he was far better than ten E-rank Hunters. He was a mid-rank Hunter, in a completely different league from a low-rank Hunter like me.

I should've realized the moment I saw him wearing that luxury gear.

The man was walking around with a high-end apartment wrapped around his body. Most low-rank Hunters couldn't afford armor like that even if they cleaned out their entire fortunes ten times over.

A faint halo seemed to shine around Team Leader Choi's back.

"Please verify the signature."

Even the way he handed the pen back to the official looked elegant.

Every little movement seemed to ooze wealth.

So this is the dignity of a C-rank Hunter.

That's fucking cool.

I wanted to become sworn brothers with him. To pledge brotherhood beneath the Gate—a gay oath, no, a Gate oath.

"All right, then. Let's go in… What is it?"

Team Leader Choi looked at me, startled.

"No. I just thought you looked cool."

"Excuse me?"

"Your equipment. I said it looks cool."

At that moment, the corner of Team Leader Choi's mouth twitched.

---

[164] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man he is close to.

[165] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man he is close to.

“It’s nothing special. It was merely crafted using five types of magic and B-grade Magic Gems…”

A nutjob I wanted to befriend.

I stepped toward the Gate.

Whoosh—

A familiar sensation enveloped me. The cool, viscous energy unique to magical power.

Then the scenery changed.

“It’s a cave.”

Just as Team Leader Choi said, the raid site was a cave. The moisture-laden walls were damp, and a faint darkness shrouded our surroundings.

“Mr. Taekyung. Take out a flashlight.”

“Yes.”

I quickly set down my backpack. It was a porter’s bag Team Leader Choi had handed me just before we entered the Gate. It looked ordinary on the outside, but it was an expensive item enchanted with both space expansion and weight-reduction magic.

“Here’s the flashlight.”

I handed it over as requested, though in my experience, flashlights weren’t the best option. They were convenient, but if the light suddenly went out, your eyes wouldn’t be adjusted to the darkness.

It was much better to wait a little and let your eyes get used to the darkness…

Click.

“Let there be light. Light.”

Whoosh. A ball of light the size of a soccer ball shot from the flashlight and plastered itself against the cave ceiling.

“…Magic?”

“It has a built-in spell that activates as soon as the incantation is spoken. It lasts quite a while, so it should be good for another three or four hours. It’s a limited-edition item I purchased from Company M…”

Im Kkeokjeong summed it up.

“It’s crazy expensive.”

Was it my imagination, or had Team Leader Choi’s face darkened slightly? Maybe it was just the shadows.

Either way, the raid had become much easier thanks to him.

Money really is the best.

Capital ruled the world, and Gates were no exception. People with money fought in comfort using enchanted equipment. People without it carried torches.

"Take your positions."

At Team Leader Choi's command, everyone moved at once. Im Kkeokjeong and another E-rank Hunter took the lead as tanks, with Team Leader Choi behind them. I, the porter, and the two ranged dealers stood at the very back.

"Move."

We began advancing slowly.

The bright magical light illuminated the path ahead.

"…"

I want one.

"Kiiiieet!"

The creatures crouching in the darkness emerged with shrill cries. Green skin, squat bodies, and grotesque limbs.

They were Hobgoblins, an evolved form of ordinary goblin.

About thirty of them.

With only five combatants, this would be a difficult fight.

But having a C-rank Hunter changes everything.

On top of that, the other four were veteran E-rank Hunters with at least ten-odd years of experience each.

I hung well back and watched the battle.

"Ranged!"

Arrows flew the instant Team Leader Choi gave the order.

One shot, one kill.

The arrows buried themselves in vital points, dropping the unshielded Hobgoblins one after another.

"Kiit!"

"Oh, look. Shield-bearers. What do we do?"

"Hold."

Team Leader Choi issued his next command.

"Tanks, advance."

The tanks moved forward in thick full-body armor, tower shields raised. Im Kkeokjeong and the other man were both hulking giants over 190 centimeters[166] tall. The sight of them alone was intimidating.

"Kiiiieet!"

[166] 190 centimeters is about 6 ft 3 in.

But monsters were monsters for a reason. Trusting in their numbers, the Hobgoblins charged like a swarm of bees.

But—

"Well, look at you."

Bam!

The big, beautiful tower shields sent them flying back as bloody pulp. Seizing the momentum, Im Kkeokjeong swung his mace like a flyswatter, shattering limbs and crushing skulls with every blow.

"You punk! You punk!"

…What was this, whack-a-mole?

Veterans, all right.

All four of them stayed within their roles without overextending themselves, steadily whittling down the enemy numbers.

Knowing when to fall back and when to push in was combat intelligence born of plenty of experience.

"Everyone, hold your positions."

And then one man.

The man who had been directing the flow of battle until now moved.

"I'll take care of the rest."

A red streak flashed across his armor as he plunged into the twenty remaining Hobgoblins.

Slash—

A head soared into the air along a clean arc. It happened so quickly that the monsters couldn't even react.

"Kiiie?"

Slash. Slash. Slash.

The blade never stopped. Merciless and efficient, it pierced and severed one vital point after another.

This was no longer a battle.

It was a massacre—one man slaughtering more than twenty monsters.

So this is a C-rank Hunter.

His speed. His strength.

I could see it all. And I could feel it.

He really is strong.

As a mere F-rank, I couldn't even dream of matching him. He was a mid-rank Hunter, three full ranks above me. A broad river and a towering wall that effort alone could never overcome.

Yet at the same time, a question arose.

What if this were Murim?

Team Leader Choi was unquestionably strong. He had the abilities befitting a C-rank Hunter and plenty of experience.

But if this were Murim… if he were a martial artist…

I'd be stronger.

His movements were fast and powerful, but that was all. He hadn't learned martial arts, nor did he use his mana efficiently.

At best, he was First Rate. In Murim, that was exactly where he would stand.

But this is reality.

I bit my lip without realizing it.

A mid-rank Hunter and a bottom-rank Hunter.

While the mid-rank Hunter wore expensive equipment and slaughtered monsters, the lowest-rank Hunter could only stare blankly.

As a porter.

"Kiiieet…"

The last Hobgoblin fell. Team Leader Choi pulled his sword from its chest, and our eyes met.

"Mr. Taekyung. Please handle the byproducts."

"…"

"Mr. Taekyung?"

I wanted to tell him that I was stronger than him.

But in the end, I couldn't. Because this was my reality.

"…Thank you for your hard work."

I used to be stronger than you.

Chapter 43

Slice.

A razor-sharp dagger sank into a Hobgoblin corpse.

Fluids splattered and a foul stench filled the air, but I didn't stop. I discarded the heads, neatly cut the hides from their backs and bellies, and stacked them in a pile.

"You're quite skilled."

"…Thank you."

It was Team Leader Choi. The kindness in his voice made me feel guilty. How childish was I, getting jealous of someone like him?

Especially when I'd dragged up an illusion I'd already decided to forget.

What am I, going through puberty?

I finished the job with my face burning red.

A little over ten minutes, so about twenty seconds per corpse? Even Im Kkeokjeong sidled over, drawn by the speed, and his mouth fell open.

"Damn, have you been doing nothing but this?"

"Plenty of people can do this much."

"Plenty, my ass. You're a total professional."

Hmm. That made me a little proud.

I'd played modest a second ago, but Im Kkeokjeong was right. There weren't many Hunters who could butcher this cleanly at this speed.

"I'm just fast with my hands."

I'd worked factory jobs back in school. I'd even glued eyes onto dolls. In a way, I'd started doing this kind of work before I ever became a Hunter.

"I kept it up during raids, too."

"You switched over to doing this full-time?"

"No. I did both. It was a side job."

"A side job?"

Team Leader Choi, who'd been listening quietly, cut in.

"Uh, yes."

"What exactly did you do?"

"I'd use the breaks after each fight to process the corpses."

"Do you receive additional pay?"

"Of course. It's still work."

"How long have you been doing it?"

"The whole time. From the beginning until now."

Im Kkeokjeong was floored.

"You relentless bastard. I couldn't do it."

“You get used to it. It helps build stamina, too.”

“Your life’s on the line, and you’re building stamina? Hahaha. Team Leader Choi, didn’t I tell you? There’s nobody who works as relentlessly as this kid.”

You told him that?

“Hmm.”

Instead of answering, Team Leader Choi studied me for a moment, then turned away.

“Now that the work is done, shall we get moving again?”

What was that reaction supposed to mean? As I stood there bewildered, Im Kkeokjeong gave me an unreadable smile.

“Keep working hard.”

No, seriously. What’s going on?

The raid went smoothly. The E-rank Hunters had fought together for so long that they moved as one. Once they thinned out the monsters, Team Leader Choi took over.

Slash—

Every swing of his sword sent up a fountain of blood.

I watched every second of the battle unfolding before me.

He really can fight.

Of course, I couldn’t help thinking about Murim.

I’d seen real martial arts with my own eyes—and even learned them. Not the dance-like moves I practiced in the city park at dawn.

…Wait.

No way. But what if?

It was ridiculous. There was no way it would work, but I could at least try.

It won’t work. It won’t… but it would be nice if it did.

Just as I was about to cautiously take a step—

“Mr. Taekyung. Please handle the cleanup.”

Team Leader Choi’s voice snapped me back to my senses.

I’ve completely lost it.

I’d let myself get distracted in the middle of a raid.

Get a grip.

Whatever I wanted to try later, the raid came first for now.

That was the least courtesy I owed my teammates—and the principle that would keep me alive.

“Yes. Coming!”

I ran over like the wind and started taking the corpses apart.

Team Leader Choi and Im Kkeokjeong hovered nearby throughout the entire break, as if they weren't tired at all.

This is seriously getting on my nerves.

Im Kkeokjeong came over again at the next break, right on cue.

"Taekyung. How long have you been using a spear?"

"Seven years."

"Wow. That practically makes you a master. A real master."

"…?"

He came back during the break after that, too.

"Taekyung. You said you graduated top of your training class, right?"

"Yes. But I was only first among the F-ranks, so it doesn't mean much."

"You punk. That's still impressive. I graduated dead last."

"You're impressive too, hyung.[167] But I need to get back to work."

"Oh, right."

Then he came back during the next break, and the next, and the one after that.

"Taekyung. Taekyung. Taekyung."

"Hyung,[168] I think my cochlea just ruptured."

"How many years did you say you worked at your old Guild?"

"Ah."

I wanted to switch classes and become a mage right then and there, just so I could cast a silence spell on the man's mouth.

This is driving me crazy.

There was only one way out: finish the work before blood actually started pouring from my ears. I clenched my teeth and kept my hands moving.

Slice. Slice. Slice.

"Taekyung."

Save me.

I sent a distress signal to Team Leader Choi, who was sitting nearby, but he answered by quietly slipping away.

"The work's done."

[167] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older man he is close to.

[168] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older man he is close to.

I stood and shouldered the bag, now noticeably heavier than before. Hobgoblins were generous monsters. Poison-resistant hides, a few usable weapons—and they had even dropped two E-grade Magic Gems.

The hides are in good condition, and there are two Magic Gems. This could be worth a decent amount.

Team Leader Choi had contributed the most, so he'd probably take about half. But with so few people, it was still a profitable deal for the other team members.

Not me, of course. According to the contract, the 300,000-won[169] base pay was all I would get.

If he's in a good mood, maybe he'll throw in a little extra.

Team Leader Choi was a fairly generous employer. He was a C-rank Hunter far beyond my level, yet he always spoke to me politely. His personality was a little unusual, but by the standards of this industry, he was practically a saint.

And he's skilled enough to trust.

Thanks to him, we'd made it this far at a steady, rapid pace.

Only the final section of the Gate remained.

The Boss Zone.

If we opened the stone gate in front of us, the Gate's boss monster and the mana field that would send us outside should be waiting beyond it.

"Man, all that work made me hungry."

"Let's finish this quick and go get some gukbap.[170] Taekyung, you're coming too, right? You too, Team Leader Choi."

"No, thank you. I'll order sushi separately."

"…"

Talking about food with the Boss Zone right in front of us. And then there was the guy planning to order sushi by himself.

Should we really be this relaxed?

Of course, I had no room to talk. I'd already earned a full day's pay just by carrying luggage and butchering monsters between fights.

Until I found a job with a new Guild, I couldn't ask for anything more than Team Leader Choi calling me regularly. A sweet gig like this? I'd do it a hundred times over.

"Well, shall we head in?"

"Yes."

At Team Leader Choi's answer, Im Kkeokjeong slammed his tower shield into the stone gate.

Boom!

---

[169] 300,000 Korean won is about $210 or €190.

[170] Gukbap is a Korean dish of rice served in hot soup.

The gate blew apart, and stone dust and dirt poured down. I followed the others into the Boss Zone.

And there…

—Keuruk.

It stood.

A shaman?

That was the first word that came to mind.

An old Hobgoblin wearing a robe covered in strange patterns. It held a withered staff in one hand and a sharp dagger in the other.

—Karruk. Chwi. Akto.

Despite the deafening crash of the doors breaking apart, it continued muttering without so much as a glance our way. With each syllable, black energy rose from the corpses scattered around it.

Wait. Corpses?

I hadn't imagined it. Nearly a hundred dead Hobgoblins lay sprawled across the altar. Looking closer, they were the monsters we should have been fighting in the Boss Zone.

What the hell is going on?

Everyone, myself included, froze at the unfamiliar sight.

Team Leader Choi's voice cracked like thunder.

"Get outside! Now!"

At that moment, the unknown old Hobgoblin turned its head.

Clink.

Its staff shook lightly.

—Mita. Allo.

The air shuddered.

Magic was taking form.

"Behind the shields!"

The tanks hurriedly raised their tower shields.

But that was the wrong call.

It hadn't cast an attack spell.

Boom. Boom. Boom!

"It's behind us! The passage is being blocked!"

"Run! Hurry!"

Damn it. Too late.

As if the clock had been turned back, the shattered stone gate stood intact again.

And it didn't stop there.

The rubble on the floor rose into two, then three layers of walls, and vines from the cave walls wrapped around them, binding them tight.

"Everyone, out of the way!"

It was Im Kkeokjeong. His muscles had swollen like they were about to burst—probably a Strength Enhancement Skill. Tower shield in hand, he charged the stone gate.

"Haaah!"

Bang! Crack!

"…Goddamn it."

Im Kkeokjeong dropped his heavily cracked tower shield, his face blank with disbelief. An E-rank Hunter had used a Skill and still failed to break through. All he had managed to do was wreck his shield.

Enhancement magic?

Whatever it was, one thing was certain.

An old Hobgoblin capable of magic this powerful had to be at least one or two tiers above the monsters we had faced so far.

And…

Whoosh!

There was someone among us who could fight it.

When did he—?

Team Leader Choi was already rushing toward the creature, as if he'd known from the start that we wouldn't be able to reopen the passage.

"The wind takes hold. Haste."

His body slid forward. More than a hundred meters[171] vanished in an instant. With five paces left, the sword came free from Team Leader Choi's waist.

Whoosh!

A full-power attack from a C-rank Hunter.

But the old Hobgoblin merely gave him a sinister grin.

—Karruk. Chwi. Akto.

The change happened in an instant.

Whoosh—

The hundred-odd corpses scattered across the altar shriveled, then dispersed like sand. The black energy, fully pulled out of them, gathered into one mass and smashed into Team Leader Choi's side.

Thud!

"Ghk."

Team Leader Choi bounced back fast. With a twisted face, he said,

[171] 100 meters is about 328 ft.

“We have to stop it. Right now.”

“…That thing?”

It was already too late.

Only a few seconds ago, it had been nothing more than energy given form. Now it was rapidly taking shape.

A hulking body nearly three meters[172] tall. Muscles swollen to the point of bursting. A monster wielding an enormous greatsword.

“What the hell is that…?”

Someone muttered in a daze. Like me, they had clearly never seen anything like it.

Only Team Leader Choi knew what the creatures were.

“A Hobgoblin Great Warrior. A C-rank Rare Monster.”

The fact that something so huge was a Hobgoblin was shocking enough, but it was nothing compared to what came next.

A C-rank Rare Monster?

Fuck, why is that thing showing up here?

Rare Monsters were creatures that appeared only infrequently within a given Gate. And since that Great Warrior was C-rank, it was something neither I nor the other team members should ever have encountered in our lives.

…Of course, not anymore.

“You want us to fight that thing?”

“Those things.”

Team Leader Choi pointed at the old Hobgoblin.

“A Hobgoblin Priest. Also a C-rank Rare Monster.”

“Ah, fuck…”

The curse slipped out before I could stop it. Im Kkeokjeong asked, his face rigid,

“What are our chances? Give it to me straight.”

“If we take out the Priest first, we have a chance. But to do that…”

Boom. Boom.

Team Leader Choi trailed off.

The Great Warrior was coming toward us.

One step. Then another.

The cave floor shook.

“We need to hold that thing back for a little while.”

Who?

“Us?”

“No. All of you.”

“Kuwooooh!”

[172] 3 meters is about 9.8 ft.

The Great Warrior’s roar sent a stalactite dropping from the cave ceiling.
Team Leader Choi turned with a resolute look I’d never seen on him before.
“The wind takes hold. Haste.”
Hey, you bastard.

Chapter 44

"Just hold out for five minutes."

With that, Team Leader Choi shot off like the wind. For better or worse, the Hobgoblin Great Warrior didn't give him so much as a glance.

"He's coming this way."

At my words, everyone nodded blankly.

"He is."

Boom, boom, boom!

"He's running this way."

"Defensive formation—!"

The team snapped into formation. I gripped my spear and moved as ordered. Between the tanks and the ranged dealers. Dead center—that was my spot.

No, for fuck's sake. I'm a porter…

Even if my life was going to go sideways, did it have to go this sideways?

They say an unlucky bastard can fall over backward and still break his nose. For 300,000 won,[173] I'd run into two mid-grade Rare Monsters. This wasn't just a broken nose. This was a broken nose and a cracked skull.

—Kuwaaaaah!

The Hobgoblin Great Warrior charged with a roar. Nearly three meters[174] of muscle and green hide—overwhelming all by itself.

Why is that greatsword so damn huge?

The thought of that thing swinging at me made me swallow hard.

"Can we stop it?"

"We'll have to try."

Im Kkeokjeong planted his tower shield in the ground and shouted.

"Archers! Don't hold back on mana! Pour it on!"

Swish, swish, swish!

Mana-charged arrows shot straight at the Great Warrior. They had enough force to punch through most shields, but…

Thunk, thunk.

The Hobgoblin Great Warrior gave its greatsword a casual swing and chopped every one of them in half. Even if they'd hit, I doubted they could have pierced that thick hide.

"Aim for the vitals! Keep shooting and slow it down!"

---

[173] 300,000 Korean won is about $210 or €190 at the project rates.

[174] Nearly three meters is nearly 9.8 ft.

Then the Great Warrior's eyes burned red. Once it drew up its magical power, its strength and speed were on a whole different level.

"Kuwooooooh!"

With a booming roar, the green giant leaped into the air.

Im Kkeokjeong screamed.

"Scatter!"

Before anyone had time to think, we threw ourselves aside.

Boom!

The greatsword smashed the ground to pieces. A blast of air sent dust whipping around us like a tornado.

"Ghh."

"Cough, cough."

Groans and coughing broke out beyond the curtain of dust. I crouched as low as I could and thought,

What kind of monster is that?

It couldn't compare to that guy from two years ago, but a chill still ran down my spine. In a fight like this, an F-rank Hunter like me was nothing but baggage.

I have to get as far away as I can while I have the chance.

Everything was lost in the haze. Nobody could tell friend from foe. This was my opening.

I stayed low and moved slowly, spear in one hand while the other felt through empty air.

Then—

Tap.

My fingertips hit something solid. Very hard, and wet.

It had to be the cave wall.

Already?

I'd thought I was farther away, but I must have been closer than I expected.

Fine by me. If I followed the wall, I could—

Squish.

"…?"

What was this now? I carefully probed the unpleasantly squishy thing.

There's fur, too. A person?

Maybe it was the head of someone who'd passed out. I held my breath and whispered,

"Kkeokjeong hyung?[175]"

No answer.

[175] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older man he is close to.

“Who is it?”

This time, I got a reply.

Right above me.

“Grrr.”

A gust of wind swept through from somewhere and cleared the dust. I slowly looked up and saw a pair of gleaming red eyes.

“Grrk.”

“…”

I looked back down. Between thighs as thick as pillars and hard as stone, my dainty little hand was clamped around something.

I groaned under my breath.

“Ah, fuck…”

It was male instinct. Unbearable nausea. Disgust at myself. The next moment, my fingers loosened of their own accord.

Slide.

My limp hand slid down as the greatsword rose with force.

“Grrk.”

“I let go! I let go, so why are you doing this?!”

“Kuwoooooooh!”

Goddammit.

I wrung out every last bit of strength I had and ran.

Boom! Boom! Boom!

The Hobgoblin Great Warrior had completely lost it. It chased me like a lunatic, hacking in every direction with its greatsword.

Whoosh—

“Aaaaah!”

That one was actually close. I ducked at the last second, and the greatsword skimmed over my head and wrecked the cave wall.

“Taekyung!”

“Shoot!”

The team poured on arrows and throwing weapons, but…

“Kuwaaaaargh!”

It wasn’t enough to pull the Great Warrior’s attention. Its eyes had already rolled back.

I rolled, then rolled again, and cursed my luck.

I should’ve just popped it.

Instinct had beaten reason. A man's need to get his hand off that even one second sooner.

Whoosh!

The greatsword barely missed. It had been one close call after another, yet I still hadn't let the C-rank Rare Monster land a single clean hit.

Maybe it's because I've seen so much hell in Murim.

It sounded insane, but it was true. I could see its attacks. Moving half a beat ahead was what kept me alive.

Boom!

Of course, one hit from that thing and I'd be a goner.

"Taekyung, this way!"

I turned toward the voice. The team was waiting there in a defensive formation again.

"Fall back!"

Im Kkeokjeong charged the Great Warrior chasing me. Blue mana sheathed the tower shield, packed with enough force to smash most low-grade monsters to pieces.

"Hah!"

With a short shout, Im Kkeokjeong brushed past me. And then—

Crunch. Thud.

Something broke, and he shot backward at a vicious speed.

He flew a good ten meters,[176] slammed into the wall, and vomited a gush of blood.

"Gweeehk."

"…"

Was this for real?

I was stunned. The rest of the team, on the other hand, looked grimly determined.

"No! Kkeokjeong hyung![177]"

"We'll buy time! Take hyung[178] and get out!"

Then the greatsword sent another tank flying, tower shield and all.

Boom!

"Agh!"

"Jongmin!"

"We'll buy time! Take Jongmin and hyung[179] and get out!"

Thud!

"Aaargh!"

---

[176] Ten meters is about 33 ft.

[177] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older man he is close to.

[178] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older man he is close to.

[179] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older man he is close to.

“Seokho!”

“…”

Smack!

That was the sound of the team being wiped out. The last member had charged in with a dagger, taken a knuckle to the skull, and gone flying. He twitched, then passed out.

At least they were all still breathing. Small mercies.

—Grrr…

Scratch that.

I kept my eyes on the monster and shouted,

“Team Leader!”

A fierce battle was still raging at the altar in the distance.

A tired voice came through the explosions.

“What?!”

“Are you still not done? It feels like it’s been more than five minutes!”

Boom! Boom! Fwoosh!

Lightning struck, and flames surged. Team Leader Choi screamed,

“Three more minutes!”

Anyone who didn’t know better might have taken him for a soccer referee. His bold call for extra time left me speechless.

—Karruk, karruk.

The Hobgoblin Great Warrior came toward me slowly. A cruel smile hung on its wide-split mouth. I eased back in time with its steps.

“That’s right. Come on. Come on.”

No choice. Same as before: run like hell and stall.

—Grrk.

But the Great Warrior didn’t play along.

“Huh?”

Its bulging eyes rolled toward the teammates sprawled unconscious on the ground. I had a very bad feeling about this.

“Don’t tell me…”

That was exactly it.

My heart dropped as I watched its back heading for Im Kkeokjeong.

“Hey! Hey, you!”

It ignored me completely.

Now I was the one in a panic.

If I leave it like this, they’re all dead.

I had to get its attention somehow. I grabbed one of the rocks scattered around me and threw it at the monster's head.

Thwack!

Direct hit.

The Hobgoblin Great Warrior turned and glared at me.

"Yeah. Come here."

—Grrr.

Its narrowed eyes flicked between me and Im Kkeokjeong. Then it started running at Im Kkeokjeong.

Boom, boom, boom!

"You crazy bastard!"

At this rate, Im Kkeokjeong and the rest of the team would all be wiped out. I was the only one who could stop it.

Stop that thing? Me?

A one-on-one fight against a C-rank Rare Monster.

A fight I could never win. But…

Ah, fuck.

I was already charging at it. Sometimes you had to fight even when you had no chance.

This was one of those times.

"You son of a bitch!"

Whoosh—!

The instant I thrust my spear at its broad back—

—Kururuk.

The green giant turned like it had been waiting for me. A smug smile curled its lips. The greatsword swept horizontally, shooting toward my side like a streak of light.

That's what you were after.

My mind went white. Could I even block that? Had I made the wrong call out of some pathetic sense of guilt and heroism?

But the die was already cast.

I have to hold.

There are times you have to fight with your life on the line. This was one of them.

Please!

I clenched my teeth and wrenched the iron spear around to intercept it. At the same time, the greatsword smashed into the shaft.

Rrrrk—

A roar of impact. Then enormous pressure. The greatsword cleaved straight through the iron spear and my waist—

"…Huh?"

The iron spear was fine. So was my waist. All that had happened was my feet had been pushed back a little.

A very, very little.

"…?"

What was this?

—G-Grrk?

The Hobgoblin Great Warrior's face flushed bright red. It pulled the greatsword back and hammered the iron spear again. Even through the confusion, I tightened my grip and blocked.

Boom!

My body slid back.

Maybe thirty centimeters?[180]

"…Huh."

—…Grrk.

The Hobgoblin Great Warrior's eyes met mine in the air between us. I'd been through this somewhere before.

That's right. The duel with Lee Seogeun. It was exactly like this.

I'd freaked out at his Level and thought I was dead, only to find out he was a total pushover. How was I supposed to forget a moment that absurd?

But I had the System backing me there.

This was reality. I was an F-rank Hunter with nothing. No System, not a damn thing.

How is this even…

Ding.

"Huh?"

I froze. For that instant, I couldn't see or hear a thing.

This can't be. This is actually insane.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Synchronization complete.
All systems are inherited.

And yet, it actually happened.

[180]Thirty centimeters is about 12 in.

“Ha… hahaha.”

A laugh slipped out of me like I’d lost my mind. The Hobgoblin Great Warrior stared at me like I was the crazy one.

Right. So that was how it was.

“I don’t know what the hell just happened…”

I grinned at the monster.

“But you’re fucking dead.”

Gurgle.

A wrinkled hand clutched at a throat. But the old goblin had neither the strength to stop the blood pouring out like a waterfall nor the time to spit out the spell still sitting on the tip of its tongue.

“What a nuisance.”

With that from Team Leader Choi, the light went out of the Hobgoblin Priest’s eyes.

I’m tired.

But he turned around at once. He still had work to do. Who knew how brutal a fight it would take to bring down another C-rank Rare Monster—

Slash—

“Kwaaaaargh!”

Team Leader Choi thought he was seeing things. That same Hobgoblin Great Warrior was screaming. With one arm severed, it staggered backward.

Who did that?

He watched the fight, forgetting that he was supposed to help. Ghostlike movement. A spearhead flowing like water as it carved the green giant to pieces.

Wait. A spear?

Of everyone here today, only one person used a spear.

The porter—no, Jin Taekyung?

That was him.

The F-rank Hunter who’d been hauling a backpack and skinning hides!

“What on earth…”

Team Leader Choi’s mouth slowly fell open.

“What’s going on?”

Chapter 45

Slash.

The red eyes blinked, almost docile. So even a C-rank Rare Monster—the terrifying Hobgoblin Great Warrior—could make a face like that.

Why hadn't I noticed before?

With that passing thought, I shook the blood from my spearhead. At the same moment—

Thud.

Something heavy hit the ground. The Great Warrior saw what it was and instinctively shuffled backward.

Well, fair enough. Its right arm had been severed cleanly below the elbow.

I thought you'd be a little different.

The Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique. Yeah, I'd used it to slip inside the creature's reach. The Great Warrior reflexively swung its right arm, but there was nothing left to swing.

"Forgot already?"

I pressed the spearhead against the Great Warrior's side and ripped it upward. The blade, charged with internal energy, split its tough hide and muscle.

Slash—

Its left arm fell away in a spray of green blood.

Both arms gone in an instant, the Hobgoblin Great Warrior let out a roar of rage and pain.

—Kuwaaaaaargh!

But I couldn't let my guard down. Even without arms, it was still more than dangerous enough with its body alone.

"Yeah. Come at me."

Before I'd even finished speaking, its massive frame charged.

Clang! Clang! Clang!

As expected, this thing's entire body was a weapon. Like the monster it was, it possessed primal senses and strength that far surpassed a human's.

Swish. Slash.

A hooked claw grazed my forearm. A chunk of flesh tore away, and blood poured out. Without flinching, I blocked the heel descending toward the crown of my head.

Thud. Crunch.

The ground beneath my feet began to sink.

Incredible strength. At this rate, I might be buried standing up.

If I didn't have internal energy, that is.

I drew up every last bit of internal energy in my dantian. Power flooded through every limb. As my spear shaft slowly rose, the Great Warrior's eyes wavered.

Too late.

It might have been different if the creature had been whole, but after losing both arms, the Hobgoblin Great Warrior was no longer a match for me.

—Grrr.

In the end, it was the first to back off. By then, the fight was as good as over.

I pressed forward and thrust my spear.

Jin Family's Spear Technique. First form.

The movements engraved into my body and mind unfolded in rapid succession.

Thrust. Cut. Block and strike with the shaft. Simple on their own, but the order and the angles made countless combinations.

That was my definition of martial arts.

Clang! Clang!

Swish. Swish-swish-swish!

Second form. Third form. Fourth…

The hooked claws, once as hard as steel, were sliced away. With every step the creature retreated, another wound opened and more blood spilled.

Before long, the Hobgoblin Great Warrior's back struck the wall.

"Grrrk…"

A C-rank Rare Monster. A creature that had once seemed impossible to fight. But the will to resist had long since vanished from its red eyes.

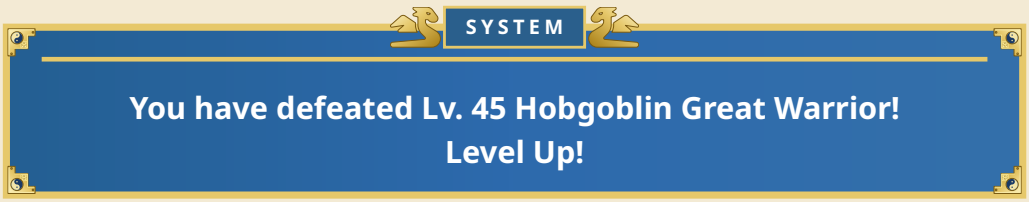
"Time to go."

Shunk.

Ghk. With a final death rattle, the hulking green body slid down the wall.

And then—

Ding.



The System notification rang out. I'd thought I would never hear or see one again…

The System, out of nowhere?

But I wasn't the only one confused.

"…Mr. Jin Taekyung?"

Team Leader Choi had already dealt with the Priest. His pupils shook as if an earthquake had struck while he looked back and forth between me and the Great Warrior's corpse.

"What… are you?"

Good question. I wanted to know too.

Heh heh. Heh heh heh.

"A Rare Monster?"

The cigarette dropped from the government official's mouth.

He looked like a born civil servant, so this couldn't have been welcome news. Sure enough, his gaze darted anxiously over us.

"W-what rank?"

Team Leader Choi wearily shook the Priest's staff.

Clank.

"C-rank Rare. Hobgoblin Priest."

"C-rank?! For fuck's—"

Hey, save the swearing. There's one more.

I kicked the Hobgoblin Great Warrior's greatsword, which I'd been using as a walking stick. The official turned at the dull clang.

"And that?"

"Buy one, get one more. C-rank Rare. Hobgoblin Great Warrior."

"Two mid-grade Rare Monsters? In an E-rank Gate?"

I got the reaction. This had to at least make some kind of sense.

The official spent a while looking back and forth between us and the equipment before finally nodding with a miserable expression.

"I'll contact my superiors first."

"Hey, mister. Hold on."

Im Kkeokjeong had regained consciousness at some point. I was supporting him, and he'd suffered severe injuries, including at least five broken bones.

"Call a healer. A pretty unnie.[181]"

The E-rank trio dropped onto the ground as well.

"And potions! Potions! Give us the good stuff!"

"For fuck's sake, how did you people even manage this Gate?!"

"All our gear's smashed too! Huh? What are you going to do about this?!"

[181] Unnie is a Korean term for an older sister or an older woman addressed familiarly by a woman. It can also be used playfully, as Kkeokjeong uses it here.

What did they think he was going to do? The government would compensate them for everything.

There was an actual law requiring it to cover every item consumed inside the Gate, along with medical expenses and compensation.

In other words, this was all a show to squeeze out a little more.

Tsk, tsk. Even so, people are watching.

That was when I felt a piercing stare from beside me.

"…Mr. Taekyung."

It was Team Leader Choi.

"What are you doing?"

He stared at me in confusion. More precisely, at the hand holding my dagger.

Grrrk.

The dagger, charged with internal energy, carved long gashes through my seven-year-old leather armor until it was too badly damaged to use.

"…"

"…"

"Team Leader Choi."

I heaved a sigh deep enough to sink the ground.

"That Hobgoblin Great Warrior was incredibly strong. I escaped with my life, but every piece of equipment I owned was destroyed."

"…"

"The armor that protected me for seven years. Now even my spear…"

"The spear looks perfectly—"

At that moment, I planted one foot on the middle of the spear and slowly pressed down.

Before the majesty of my three-digit Strength stat, the iron spear bent like taffy.

"Looks perfectly fine? This?"

"…"

Team Leader Choi shut his mouth.

Team Leader Choi was called away by the officials dispatched to take charge, and the other four were moved to an ambulance for treatment.

Instead of the musty break room, I was left alone in a spacious, comfortable office.

Now that the moment had finally arrived, my heart began to pound.

St-Status Window?

At that half-doubtful call, the System answered.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Status Window
Lv. 33 Jin Taekyung
Job: First Rate Martial Artist
Fame: 0
Titles: 2 (Title effects active)
- Novice Trainee (Training speed +10%)
- Gambler (Combat-related stats +10% in one-on-one matches)

Strength: 120 Stamina: 125
Agility: 121 Intelligence: 20
Charm: 20 Internal Energy: 15 years
Remaining Points: 30
Synchronization is complete. Titles and Fame have changed.

“Fuck. It really appeared.”

I stared blankly at the Status Window for a moment before noticing something strange.

The Status Window… changed?

Two things jumped out first: my Fame had been reset to zero, and a Title was missing. The final line gave me a rough idea why.

Because this isn’t Murim?

All five hundred Fame I’d accumulated had been earned as a martial artist in Murim. The missing Title, Scion of a Prestigious Family, made sense for the same reason.

Well, I’m not the son of some prestigious family here. And I’m sure as hell no Hidden Dragon.

If I earned a Title here, it would probably be something like Scion of the Common Folk. Or Earthworm instead of Hidden Dragon.

“How much else changed?”

For about ten minutes I turned every System function on and off and tested them. The only thing that had changed was the Status Window.

No. There was one more.

The Quest Window.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Quest
Traitor
You have discovered the traitor's identity. Rejoin the main force, warn them of the traitor, and lead the battle to victory!
Grade: Peak
Restriction: Jin Taekyung
Mission: Eliminate the traitor (Incomplete)
Win the battle (Incomplete)
Reward: Vast EXP and Fame
Valuable iron chest
Failure: Death

It was the Chain Quest I'd received after defeating Gwak Jun and the assassins. My thoughts grew tangled.

Does it want me to go back? To Murim?

I knew now. The Murim I'd experienced wasn't an illusion or a game. As wildly unrealistic as it sounded, Murim was probably…

Creak.

I turned at the sudden sound. Team Leader Choi stood in the doorway.

"Let's go, Mr. Taekyung."

It seemed the discussion had wrapped up. I put the thought aside and rose.

"The others…?"

"They should be on their way to the hospital by now. They'll need to stay there for about a week. You don't need to worry."

I wasn't particularly worried. Combat-type Hunters had sturdy bodies, and they'd received potions and healing magic. They would be back on their feet soon enough.

And…

"How did it go?"

"They'll contact us again within a few days. An investigator will probably visit you as well."

An investigator.

Not the sort of person I ever wanted to deal with again. But that wasn't the answer I wanted, so I asked once more.

"What about the other matter?"

"Hmm."

Team Leader Choi regarded me with a strange expression, like he was examining some fascinating animal.

Did he tell them the truth?

I didn't want my strength exposed. Especially not now, when I still had no idea why the System had appeared in reality or how any of this was connected to Murim.

An F-rank Hunter single-handedly killing a C-rank Rare Monster was unprecedented. A needle in a bag would eventually poke through, but I'd spent my whole life being the opposite of that—never standing out at all. I couldn't help being cautious.

So I had asked him:

"Could you keep what concerns me a secret?"

It must have been a difficult request from Team Leader Choi's perspective. I was asking him to give a false statement for someone he'd only just met.

"Mr. Jin Taekyung."

"Yes."

His grave voice made my heart sink.

Then he said, "Let's get something to eat."

"What?"

"Look."

Team Leader Choi held out his wrist. A gleaming Magic Gem digital watch showed two in the afternoon.

"It's an N Company model carved from a solid C-rank Magic Gem. It's enchanted with reinforcement magic, so in an emergency, you can even use it as a shield—"

So that's what he meant.

"…Let's go."

The man was impossible to read.

"Let's get some meat. Do you like Hanwoo?[182]"

"Hanwoo?"

"Yes. Highest grade."

And he was rich too.

"I never get to eat it."

This wasn't just any beef. It was Hanwoo. Top-grade Hanwoo, at that.

System or whatever—first, I needed to fill my empty stomach.

[182] Hanwoo is beef from Korean native cattle, prized as premium meat.

Chapter 46

Sizzle.

The meat hit the grill. Thick, red, and marbled with white streaks like snowflakes—it was the finest Hanwoo beef.

The shape, the sound, the smell. All of it was intoxicating. The only thing I didn't like was the price…

"Will this be enough? Let's order more after we eat. Some special cuts, too."

A rich C-rank Hunter was paying, so whatever.

How long had it been since I'd last had Hanwoo?

Food in Murim was spicy, salty, and bland. And even then, more days than not, I couldn't eat properly. For thirty days, my stomach had been abused with beef jerky, fasting pills, and rice balls.

Chomp. Chomp-chomp.

The best thing about beef was how quickly you could eat it. As soon as it looked more or less done, it went straight into my mouth.

Every chew felt like walking on clouds. This piece, that piece, that one too—every last one tasted like heaven.

"Hnnngh."

Team Leader Choi watched me with that peculiar look of his.

"Would you like some more?"

"No. I should hold back on overeating."

"We're on our twenty-fifth serving…"

"Twelve servings each isn't all that much."

"I've only eaten three."

"Oh, can we order some yukhoe?[183]"

"…Yes."

"Rice, too."

"…"

And so the storm of a meal finally came to an end. At last, Team Leader Choi spoke.

"I told them I killed both the Priest and the Great Warrior."

"Oh. Thank you."

"Don't mention it. Let's call it a fair deal. If anything, I have something to thank you for as well."

A fair deal.

[183] Yukhoe is seasoned Korean raw beef.

He wasn't wrong. I'd bought myself time to think, and he would gain a reputation. After all, he had led five low-rank Hunters and killed two mid-grade Rare Monsters.

The fact that no one had died in the process would be a huge boost to the Guild's publicity, too.

What if Synchronization hadn't restored my strength?

Who knew? Someone probably would have died. Maybe none of us would have made it out alive.

"You were already thinking along those lines."

He wasn't just some eccentric. Not with instincts that sharp.

I smiled awkwardly.

"It works out well for both of us."

"Good for both of us. Both of us…"

Team Leader Choi muttered to himself, then abruptly asked,

"Would you like to join the Guild?"

"Pffft!"

Team Leader Choi lifted the tablecloth and blocked the water, then smoothly produced a business card with practiced elegance.

> Peace Guild, Team 1 Leader Choi Minwoo

What the hell was this? For a second I was completely thrown.

"Y-you're making me a recruitment offer? Right now?"

"That's right. We're always looking for talent."

I took the card and found myself strangely moved.

It seemed like only yesterday that I'd been bowing like a shrimp at job interviews…

Live long enough and you really do see everything.

An actual recruitment offer—and he was even treating me like talent. F-rank Hunter Jin Taekyung, you'd come a long way.

"Our Guild is still new, and we don't have many members, but we're excellent where it counts. For example…"

Team Leader Choi elegantly swirled his wineglass. When had he even ordered that?

"Our finances are extremely solid."

"Ooh, finances!"

"Which means our employee benefits are excellent."

"Ooh, benefits backed by solid finances!"

"Our Guild Master is a B-rank Hunter."

"Ooh, a high-ranking Hunter—the source of those solid finances!"

"And there's no need to worry about restructuring."

"Ooh, job security!"

Team Leader Choi asked with an affluent smile,

"Will you join us?"

I scratched my head.

"No. That's a little…"

"…Pardon?"

"I have circumstances that make it difficult at the moment. I need some time."

If I followed my heart, I'd sign the contract right away—signature, seal, thumbprint, even a kiss mark.

But what if the System disappears tomorrow?

I'd be dead broke.

Overnight, I'd go from being called talent to being called a human disaster.[184]

"Is it a money problem?"

Money was always a problem.

But this was more important. I couldn't let the wad of cash dangling in front of me blind me into making a snap decision.

"It's difficult to explain. I'm sorry, but this isn't something I can decide right now…"

"One hundred million won.[185]"

"A hundred million?"

"Just the signing bonus. The rest will match the minimum terms for a C-rank Hunter."

That was dangerous. This time, it was really dangerous.

But I resisted with superhuman patience. Hadn't I learned long ago that life was never that easy?

That money might come back to choke me.

"I'm sorry."

Team Leader Choi looked at me quietly, then nodded.

"I'll wait to hear from you."

One person left, and one remained.

Team Leader Choi—no, Choi Minwoo—silently stared at the seat Jin Taekyung had vacated, then took out his phone.

---

[184] In Korean, injae can mean "talent" (□□) or "human disaster" (□□), depending on the characters.

[185] One hundred million won is about $71,000 or €65,000.

Beep. Beep. Click.

“—You bastard, are you psychic? I was just about to call you.”

“How did that thing I asked about turn out?”

“—I looked into it because you asked, but… is there something about this Jin Taekyung guy?”

“That’s what I called you to find out. So? What did you learn?”

“—It’s a dime-a-dozen case. Awakened at twenty, seven years ago, and assessed as F-rank. There’s a record of him graduating at the top of his class from the Hunter training center…”

Jin Taekyung’s past seven years spilled from the other end of the phone. Then, at one point, Choi Minwoo’s eyebrows twitched.

“What? The Sangdong Station Mutated Gate?”

“—Yeah. You know about that incident, right?”

How could he not? It had happened only two years ago, so Choi Minwoo remembered it clearly.

“—He was the only survivor. I checked that part myself, and it surprised me, too.”

Choi Minwoo tipped his glass of water. Thinking he’d grabbed a lead on how an F-rank Hunter had killed a mid-grade Rare Monster alone made his throat burn.

“And?”

“—He took six months off. The Hunter Administration kept sending investigators, and I guess he spent the time trying to pull himself together. You know how serious the incident was.”

“And then?”

“—That’s it. He went back to his Guild, ran Gates his ass off for a year and a half, then got fired. That was exactly three days ago.”

“Why was he fired?”

“—Technically, restructuring, but what kind of restructuring does a tiny little Guild like that need? The incident probably had a lot to do with it. They kept looking over their shoulders at the Administration, then finally pushed him out. He must’ve been uncomfortable for them to keep around.”

“That’s all?”

“—As far as I can tell. Want me to send you the file separately?”

“Send it now. I’m hanging up.”

“—Hey, hey!”

Click.

Choi Minwoo tapped his long fingers against the table.

Jin Taekyung. F-rank Hunter. The sole survivor of the Sangdong Station Mutated Gate.

And…

At least a C-rank Hunter.

That was the absolute minimum. The image of Taekyung driving a C-rank Rare Monster into a corner alone, with overwhelming strength and skill, kept flickering before his eyes.

And yet he's F-rank.

There were only two possibilities. Either he had been hiding his strength, or he had recently reawakened.

Choi Minwoo suspected the latter, but even that defied common sense.

Countless Hunters retired without ever rising a single rank.

A reawakening that took someone from F-rank to C-rank was, without question, extraordinarily rare.

This isn't some game. What the hell is he?

Choi Minwoo shook his head. He felt as if he'd been bewitched by a ghost.

I'll have to look into him some more.

As he rose from his seat, the restaurant owner approached and held out the bill.

"That will be 1,937,000 won.[186]"

"…"

Now he really felt as if he'd been bewitched by a ghost.

"Fuck. I'm screwed."

I dropped to the ground in the filthy recycling area. The one thing that should have been there was nowhere in sight.

"It's gone. It's gone. My capsule is gone."

I'd been anxious ever since parting ways with Team Leader Choi. But I hadn't expected someone to take it in less than half a day. I shouted into the empty air.

"Who the fuck took it?!"

And an answer came back.

"Me, you son of a bitch."

Jinho was smoking on the roof of the goshiwon[187] building, in the same spot where I'd seen him that morning. He exhaled a wistful stream of smoke and continued.

"I spent ten years crying, regretting it, and making vows…"

"You want me to make you cry and regret it for real?"

"You're no fun. You haven't seen this movie, have you?"

"Quit joking around. This is serious."

"What, did you come up empty today?"

---

[186] 1,937,000 won is about $1,400 or €1,200.

[187] A goshiwon is a building of small, inexpensive rooms for rent.

"No."

My voice drained of strength as I went on.

"The capsule."

"…Huh?"

"Some bastard took my capsule."

"Cough! Cough-cough!"

Maybe he'd inhaled the cigarette smoke wrong. Jinho hyung[188] coughed like a maniac before he finally managed to speak.

"D-didn't you throw it away because you didn't need it?"

"I did."

Until the System came back.

I hadn't expected the situation to change this much in just a few hours.

I should've kept it for one more day.

Where was I even supposed to start looking? I let out a deep sigh.

"Hyung,[189] you didn't happen to see who took it, did you?"

"Uh… well."

Jinho scratched his head.

"If I saw it, then I saw it. If I didn't, then I didn't."

Was that supposed to be an answer, or was it just crap?

When I glared at him, he smiled sheepishly.

"Look, it's not like I'm hoping for a finder's fee or anything…"

It definitely sounded like he wanted a finder's fee.

Anyway, that wasn't the point. I shot to my feet and asked,

"You saw them? You're sure?"

"If I had to choose, I'd say I did."

"Who? Where did they go?"

"I'm not asking for a finder's fee, but roughly how much were you thinking?"

"…One hundred thousand won?[190]"

"Oh, dear. Maybe I'm getting old. My memory's a little hazy."

"For fuck's sake."

"Right, then. Good luck in this heat."

"The finder's fee is one hundred and eighty thousand won.[191]"

Apparently satisfied with the amount, Jinho beamed.

"Your capsule. I picked it up."

---

[188] Hyung is a term a man uses to address an older brother or an older male friend.

[189] Hyung is a term a man uses to address an older brother or an older male friend.

[190] One hundred thousand won is about $71 or €65.

[191] One hundred and eighty thousand won is about $130 or €120. The Korean for "eighteen," sip-pal, echoes the swear Taekyung just used; he also switches abruptly to polite speech.

"…?"

It took me exactly three seconds to understand.

What a goddamn daylight robber.

I was speechless. He'd really stabbed me in the back like this?

"But there wasn't anywhere suitable to put it. My room's too small, you know."

"So?"

"I put it back in your room. I did good, right?"

How could I hit this man so thoroughly that word would spread about what a fine job I'd done?

My fists trembled.

"It really is here."

The capsule occupied half the studio as if nothing had happened. All I could do was let out a hollow laugh.

Should I call this lucky?

Of all the people who could have taken it, it had been Jinho.

I opened the lid, picked up the user manual that had been tossed onto the worn seat, and flipped to the last page.

> Main Features
>
> - A customized capsule for one person! Once a user is registered, the capsule becomes permanently bound to that user and remains so until their death.

…Come on. No way.

It has to be a simple coincidence.

But I couldn't shake the unease. I glared at the capsule, the source of everything that had happened.

What the hell is this thing?

The reason I'd thrown the capsule into the recycling area that morning was so I could forget everything. My life was already dry enough; I wanted to write it off as one nightmare and keep living my life as I was.

But things were different now.

Because I have the System.

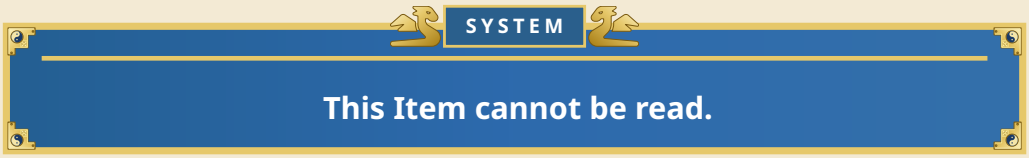
The System…

Then something occurred to me. I placed my hand on the capsule's surface and murmured,

"Item check."

Ding.

Just as I thought. The corners of my mouth had just begun to rise when—



"...It can't be read?"

That had never happened before.

Is it because I'm not in Murim?

Flustered, I started checking random objects around the room. The television, a ballpoint pen, even my pillow. Every time, the System displayed accurate information.

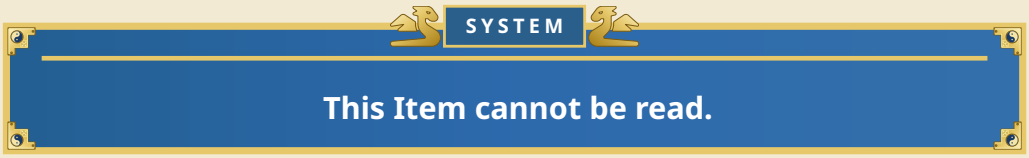
There was only one exception.

It couldn't read the capsule.

"Wow. This is driving me nuts."

Just in case, I picked up the user manual. The result was the same.

Ding.



I flopped onto the bed. I stared blankly at the old, yellow-stained ceiling and thought.

What's going on?

None of this made sense yet. But one thing was certain.

I've become stronger. Incomparably stronger.

Power had soaked into every fiber of my body. Internal energy writhed in my dantian.

Synchronization had given me strength. Strength far beyond that of an F-rank Hunter. Strength enough to defeat a C-rank Rare Monster alone.

Would you like to join the Guild?

It was the first recruitment offer I'd ever received. But I refused. When someone recognized me, fear had come before joy.

Can't blame me.

I'd endured seven years with the label of F-rank Hunter. I was a caterpillar that had spent its whole life crawling through the dirt, only to suddenly sprout wings called the System.

Of course I was afraid.

But what if I can keep using this power? What if I can keep using the System?

My heart pounded at the mere thought.

At the same time, the past seven years flashed through my mind. The name F-rank, stamped on me like a brand despite all the insane effort I'd put in. Even the memories from two years ago, when I'd trembled at other people's contempt, at the guilt and the helplessness.

"Fuck…"

I couldn't take it anymore. I shot to my feet, raced out of the goshiwon[192], and flagged down a passing taxi.

"Where would you like to go?"

I already knew my destination.

"Take me to the Bucheon Branch of the Hunter Association."

A Hunter rank reassessment.

F-rank Hunter. I'd start by breaking the loathsome shackle that had tormented me for so long.

Let's give it a shot.

As I clenched my fist, the taxi driver said,

"This is a Seoul taxi."

"Oh."

[192] A goshiwon is a building of small, inexpensive rooms for rent.

Chapter 47

The Hunter Association.

The name had first appeared some thirty years ago, when the Great Cataclysm ended.

The first-generation Hunters who survived that blood-soaked catastrophe raised their flag, and over the years, the Hunter Association grew into an organization of tremendous stature.

Gulp.

I swallowed as I stared up at the Association building towering before me. Its sheer size and height made it stand out even in this dense forest of skyscrapers. Though it was an ordinary weekday, countless people streamed in and out.

How many years has it been?

Every Awakened underwent rank measurement under the Association's supervision.

I was no different. Thinking of twenty-year-old Jin Taekyung walking in here with his heart full of excitement almost made me laugh—like hell it did.

Now that I'm actually here, I'm incredibly nervous.

I entered the lobby on stiff legs. The place was the size of a playing field and packed with people. Following the electronic signs posted throughout the lobby, I found the place I wanted.

Measurement Waiting Room

On the clerk's instructions, I filled out the paperwork and went inside. Dozens of people were waiting to be measured.

Thud.

The door shut, and everyone's eyes shot into me like arrows.

I can't breathe. This is suffocating.

Even the air was different here. A taut tension pressed down on the entire waiting room.

One measurement decides your whole Hunter life.

I was no exception. I'd once been so nervous that I farted in front of an examiner. That pretty much said it all.

I was waiting my turn, lost in thought, when—

"Jin Taekyung?"

A familiar voice came from behind me. I slowly turned my head.

There he was.

"I thought it might be you. Sure enough."

A potbellied, middle-aged man with a bulbous nose. A face I couldn't forget no matter how hard I tried.

…Team Leader Kim?

Kim Sangshik. A founding member and team leader of Sopung Guild, where I'd spent years. He could be summed up in one word.

Former boss.

"Wow, I never expected to run into you here. Good to see you."

Team Leader Kim thrust out his hand with a hearty laugh. I hesitated for a moment, then shook it.

"Likewise. It's been a while."

"What do you mean, a while? It's only been a few days."

"Those few days felt pretty long to me."

I'd said it thinking of Murim, but Team Leader Kim would take it another way. After all, he was the one who'd handed me my dismissal only a few days ago.

"It's because it's summer. My days have felt long lately too."

"Really?"

Watching him slip past the remark like a sly old fox, I let out a dry laugh.

He was always an amusing man.

In more ways than one.

"So what brings you here?"

"I had some business. What about you, Team Leader?"

"Came to scout. Heard there was a decent one this time."

They'd fired me for staff cuts in a restructuring. And he was here to scout.

"I see."

That was all I had to say. It was the same tired story everyone knew, and it was already over. I had no lingering attachment to it.

"What about you? Why are you here? Don't tell me you're trying to get reassessed."

"Yes."

Team Leader Kim smiled.

"Nice try, but isn't that a waste of money? A reassessment isn't cheap. Must be a burden for an F-rank Hunter."

"I thought I'd give it a try anyway. Just in case."

"You should save your money while you're young. What's going to change if you keep clinging to something that'll never work?"

"Who knows? I think this time might be different."

"It's not that easy—"

"Team Leader."

"Huh? What?"

I smiled gently.

"That's enough."

Team Leader Kim's smile cracked.

"What?"

"I said that's enough. I'm out of the Guild now, so stay out of my business."

"What's that supposed to mean?"

What did it mean?

"You know exactly what I mean."

"…"

"All that 'It couldn't be helped,' 'At least you survived,' and 'Forget about it and make a fresh start.' You pretended to comfort me while chipping away at me behind my back."

"You…"

"Weren't you the first one to tell the Guild Master to fire me? Did you think I wouldn't find out?"

Kim Sangshik was a half-baked, petty little man.

Short on both humanity and ability.

Even inside Gates, he was always too busy saving his own skin. His reputation within the Guild was rock-bottom.

"Who did you put in my place after firing me? How much did they pay you to get them in?"

"Hey, Jin Taekyung."

Team Leader Kim pressed down on my shoulder and growled. He might not look it, but he was one of only three D-rank Hunters in Sopung Guild. With that kind of strength, he could toy with an F-rank Hunter like me using one hand.

But—

"Take your hand off."

I didn't even blink. It wasn't only the System that had synchronized. My martial arts, my stats, and even my steel-like Muscles and Bones had come with it.

"I'll count to three. Take your hand off."

"You little bastard. I've been putting up with you, but—"

I didn't hesitate.

"One. Two."

Three.

The instant I seized Kim Sangshik's wrist—

Clack.

"Would the next group please come in? Numbers twenty-one through thirty!"

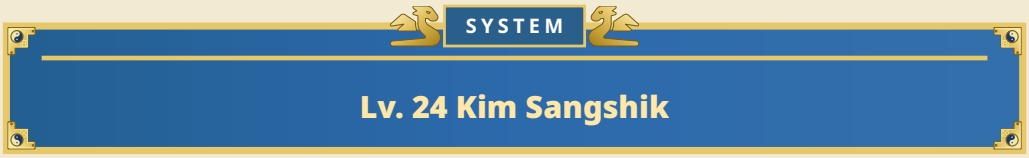
An Association examiner entered with a file in hand, and we sprang apart without waiting for the other to move first. Getting on the Association's bad side wouldn't do either of us any good.

"Consider yourself lucky."

"Who? Me, or you?"

Kim Sangshik's flushed face looked downright ridiculous.

So did the Level Window I picked up through Qi Sense.



"Meeting you was disgusting. Let's never see each other again."

I rose without a shred of regret. My waiting number was thirty.

My steps toward the examiner were no longer stiff.

"Number twenty-one. Please come forward."

A tense-looking Awakened stood before the measuring device. Made from an A-rank Magic Gem, it scanned his entire body and converted the mana inside him into numbers.

Bzzzzzt—

The examiner checked the reading.

"Amount of mana distributed throughout the body: F-rank."

The Awakened's face turned ashen. But it was too soon to despair. He still had a second chance.

"Try moving your mana. Concentrate as hard as you can and imagine firing it into the measuring device."

They were testing his mana control. Realizing it wasn't over yet, the Awakened gritted his teeth and strained with every ounce of strength he had—

Pfffft.

"…"

"…"

Looking ready to vomit, the examiner said, "Control ability: F-rank."

"Please! Just let me try one more time!"

"No. Next."

The line moved quickly.

Everyone was E-rank or F-rank. One guy wasn't even Awakened.

"This is a scam! A scam! That measuring device is made in China, isn't it? Huh? You bastards!"

"Handle him."

At the examiner's command, the security Hunters waiting nearby dragged the fraudster away. Even if that guy miraculously Awakened someday, he'd probably end up on the Association's blacklist.

"Next. Number thirty."

Here it came.

I took a deep breath and stepped forward. The examiner glanced at the file in his hand.

"This is a reassessment?"

"Yes."

"Mr. Jin Taekyung, you were rated F-rank seven years ago… You're aware that reassessments carry a separate fee, correct?"

From his tone, he might as well have been telling me not to waste my money and to go home while I still could.

The usual attitude toward an F-rank Hunter.

Do they think I'm a beggar?

I was used to it. That didn't make it any less insulting. When I glared at him, the examiner gave a short laugh.

"I'm only mentioning it in case you weren't aware, but the fee is two million won.[193]"

"…The price went up?"

"It has been a few years."

Fuck. I didn't know that.

How much was in my account right now…?

"Then we'll begin the measurement."

Nervous, I closed my eyes.

And the next moment—

Bzzzzzt.

A wave of magical power rolled out of the measuring device and swept through my whole body.

My fifteen years of internal energy responded with a shudder.

What rank will I get?

C-rank? No, I'd be happy with D-rank. But more than ten seconds passed, and the examiner still said nothing.

"Uh… Why is it doing this?"

[193] Two million Korean won is about $1,400 or €1,300.

"What's wrong?"

Flustered, he looked back and forth between the device and me, then cleared his throat.

"There seems to be some kind of error… We'll move on to the next step for now."

I had no idea what was happening, but strangely, it didn't feel ominous.

I've got a good feeling about this.

My heart pounding, I drew up my internal energy.

Ssshhh.

At the call of the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique, fifteen years of internal energy surged up and shot toward the measuring device.

At the lobby entrance—

"Well done."

Kim Sangshik patted a young man on the shoulder. As of today, the promising young man had officially been rated D-rank.

He would soon join Sopung Guild and be assigned to Kim Sangshik's team.

Thinking of the day to come, Kim Sangshik smiled proudly.

"Father and son on the same team. That's my boy."

"What are you talking about? I'm not even an official Hunter yet. I still have to go through the training center."

"Don't worry. Your father already took care of it."

"Wait, really? Didn't you say the Guild didn't have any openings?"

"There's always a way."

He didn't mention that he'd made room by firing the lowest-ranked Hunter, who had long been a thorn in his side.

"Anyway, get plenty of rest this week. Starting next week, we'll go to work together __"

Kim Sangshik's face suddenly twisted.

"What's wrong?"

"…Nothing. Go wait in the car."

Once his son had left, Kim Sangshik rolled up his shirtsleeve.

His wrist was already swollen blue-black. The sight made him grind his teeth.

"Jin Taekyung, you fucking bastard."

He'd disliked that bastard from the start. An F-rank Hunter had no business being deputy team leader, and he'd hated the way Taekyung acted like a brother to the former team leader, who was now dead.

That bastard should've fucking died with him back then.

The unfortunate accident two years ago had been a stroke of extraordinary luck for Kim Sangshik.

After being sidelined over several sex scandals, he'd returned triumphantly as team leader. A few days ago, he'd even managed to get Jin Taekyung thrown out.

But did that bastard really reawaken?

Kim Sangshik stared down at his throbbing wrist.

It had lasted only an instant, but the strength he'd felt had been tremendous. Taekyung might have reawakened as an E-rank—or perhaps even a D-rank.

"No. Reawakening isn't child's play."

Maybe he'd simply gotten weaker because he hadn't exercised lately. Kim Sangshik was muttering to himself, his thoughts in turmoil, when—

"Breaking news from the measurement room."

"Did someone promising show up?"

"They say a big fish surfaced. C-rank."

"C-rank? That's not bad, but is it really enough to call him a big fish?"

"His mana control is supposedly A-rank."

"What? A-rank? Get your hooks into him, now!"

"Yes, this is Choi Minsu from Sangdong Guild. The reason I'm calling is…"

A stir spread among the scouts prowling the lobby entrance like hyenas.

Most had been sent by small and midsized Guilds, but the handful representing major Guilds were already moving quickly.

C-rank alone is impressive, and he's gifted with mana control on top of it?

This was a jackpot.

Kim Sangshik's mind snapped into focus. He cast every thought of Jin Taekyung aside and pulled out his phone.

"Hey, Team Leader Kim. Did that business go well?"

The deep voice on the other end belonged to Sopung Guild's Guild Master.

Kim Sangshik spoke urgently.

"Guild Master, it's chaos here. A C-rank just appeared, and they say his mana control is on the level of a high-ranking Hunter."

"What? Where did a guy like that come from?"

"Exactly. The major Guilds always snatch them out from under us, but it looks like they were a step late this time."

"Good. So that's how it is…"

Huff. Huff.

Rough breathing came through the phone, as though the Guild Master were excited. Even the way he addressed Kim Sangshik changed.

“Sangshik. You hold on to that guy no matter what. Tell him we’ll meet any conditions he wants.”

“How high can we go?”

“Don’t worry about the money. Add plenty on top of whatever the others offer. The major Guilds will back off if they decide he isn’t profitable enough. It’s not like they’re desperate for him.”

“Yes, yes.”

“I’m on my way. Keep him there until I arrive. If you pull this off… you know what that means, right?”

After ending the call, Kim Sangshik clenched his fist.

We’ve got this!

He was an old hand at this business. Holding on to a newly Awakened rookie would be easy.

This was a world where money could put even ghosts to work.

Double whatever everyone else offers. I’ll offer him twice as much, no matter what.

The commotion grew louder. The elevator was descending from the third floor, where the measurement room was located.

“He’s coming!”

“Hey, stop shoving!”

Some twenty scouts crowded around the elevator doors like a swarm of ants. Kim Sangshik muscled his way to the front and readied his business card.

Ding.

At last, the elevator doors opened.

Kim Sangshik bowed low and launched into his prepared speech.

“Hello. I’m Team Leader Kim Sangshik of Sopung Guild. We are a prestigious Guild with a long tradition here in Bucheon—”

“That’s the first time I’ve ever heard anyone call Sopung a prestigious Guild.”

“…What?”

At the familiar voice, Kim Sangshik slowly raised his head.

Their eyes met.

At the same time, Kim Sangshik’s buttonhole-sized eyes went wide.

“Y-you…”

Jin Taekyung grinned.

“We meet again, Mr. Kim Sangshik.”

Chapter 48

"Y-you? What are you doing here?"

"Good question. What am I doing here?"

"Then, could it be…?"

"What do you mean, 'could it be'? It is."

Kim Sangshik's face turned dark and sallow, like a man suffering from shit poisoning.

Seeing him like that felt like finally passing ten years' worth of constipation. Ah, so this was a shitgasm.

"Anyway, let's take a step back. We're not the only ones here, you know."

I stepped forward, and Kim Sangshik retreated weakly.

The other scouts surrounded me, business cards in hand.

"We're from Sangdong Guild. We promise you the best possible treatment."

"Instead of doing this here, why don't we move somewhere private and talk…"

Recruitment offers poured in from every direction. Within moments, I had dozens of business cards in my hands.

So this is what it feels like.

It felt strange. Surreal. Things I hadn't experienced once in seven years were unfolding right before my eyes.

In just half a day, the world around me had changed.

No.

I'm the one who changed.

People said C-rank was where you started being a real Hunter in this business. Exceptional abilities, a high salary, and recognition from society as a mid-level Hunter.

It finally sank in that I had set foot on that path.

And…

This was only the beginning.

With the System's power, I could keep growing.

That was how I would step onto a new path faster than any other Hunter.

"Sir, name your terms and we'll meet them, no matter what."

"Ah, sure. I'll contact you later."

"You mean it, right? We'll be waiting!"

No. Don't wait. I'm not going to call.

"All right, everyone, calm down."

Association security guards stepped in to hold back the scouts who refused to leave me alone.

They normally wouldn't go this far for a C-rank Hunter, but my case was so unusual that it seemed to be attracting a lot of attention.

Well, I did jump all the way to C-rank from a single reawakening.

It wasn't a bad feeling. No—it felt good.

Suppressing the smile that kept tugging at my lips, I left the Association. Even then, one person followed me out.

"Jin Taekyung! No, Mr. Taekyung!"

"Heh."

I looked at Kim Sangshik and swallowed a hollow laugh.

Only thirty minutes ago, he'd been calling me a bastard. Now I was suddenly Mr. Taekyung.

"What do you want?"

"I'm sorry about earlier. Really. And I'm sorry about everything that happened before, too."

Kim Sangshik rambled on, confessing every wrong he'd ever done me. Once his untimely confession was over, he finally got to the point.

"So let's forget all that and treat this as business."

"Business."

I rolled the word around on my tongue.

It sounded nice. It felt awful. All the more so because the business partner in question was Kim Sangshik and Sopung Guild.

"You know how it is, Mr. Taekyung. Unless you're dealing with a major Guild, they're all more or less the same."

"I know. I also know that even the major Guilds will reach out to a C-rank Hunter."

"I'm telling you to think carefully. They're not desperate. Major Guilds can find C-rank Hunters without much trouble, so they'll treat you accordingly."

Kim Sangshik kept going, spraying spit as he talked.

"No matter how much anyone else offers, we'll top it. The Guild Master has already approved it, so you can count on that."

Sopung Guild had been in steady decline for several years.

Given the situation, the Guild Master seemed scared shitless.

And this guy's no different.

His standing in the Guild was already at rock bottom, and now the F-rank Hunter he'd fired on a whim a few days ago had reawakened as a C-rank.

The corners of my mouth rose at the thought of what would happen once the Guild Master, a man notorious for his temper, found out.

"Just look at it positively. Actually, forget standing around here. Why don't we go somewhere decent and talk it out honestly? The Guild Master is on his way here right—"

“Mr. Kim Sangshik.”

At my quiet voice, Sangshik fell silent.

“If you want to recruit me, tell the Guild Master this. Don’t leave out a single word.”

“Tell him what?”

“I’ll think about it if he gets rid of one man I can’t stand the sight of.”

It was obvious who I meant.

Leaving Kim Sangshik behind with his face twisted in fury, I got into a taxi.

Yeah. That should do it.

I sank deep into the soft seat.

The rank reassessment. Running into old bad blood. An indescribable rush, and at the same time a sense of relief.

“Where would you like to go?”

“Hope Goshiwon[194] at Songnae Station.”

The taxi driver looked at me and chuckled.

“Oh, you’re that passenger from earlier.”

“Ah.”

Goddamn Seoul taxis.

“What’s gotten into you? You actually bought beef.”

We spread out a mat and set up a grill on the goshiwon[195] roof. Jinho hyung[196] gazed contentedly at the meat as it cooked.

“All right. In recognition of your sincerity, I’ll forget about the finder’s fee.”

“I wasn’t planning to pay you anyway.”

“Are you some kind of thug?”

“Right back at you.”

We sat across from each other, sipping soju.[197]

“But where did you get the money? Just this month, you were whining about how hard up you were.”

“Today’s pay.”

“How much could that possibly be? Did getting fired from the Guild make you give up on life?”

---

[194] A goshiwon is a Korean building of small, inexpensive rooms, often rented by students or people on tight budgets.

[195] A goshiwon is a Korean building of small, inexpensive rooms, often rented by students or people on tight budgets.

[196] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

[197] Soju is a Korean distilled alcoholic drink.

"How much?"

I couldn't help letting out a little laugh.

"Oh, now you're laughing?"

"Of course I am. You're treating ten million won[198] like pocket change."

Jinho froze.

"How much?"

"Ten million won."[199]

"You made ten million won[200] from one day's work?"

"A little more came in, but that's for now."

"You didn't…"

Jinho swallowed hard. He caught on fast. I gave him a meaningful smile.

"That's right. Today, I—"

"Did you sell an organ?"

Should I kill him?

I let out a long sigh, then downed my drink.

"Tell me the truth. As the goshiwon[201] manager, I have a duty to know."

If you only heard that, you'd think he was the prime minister, not a goshiwon[202] manager.

"I earned it at a Gate."

"Show me proof. I only believe what I see with my own eyes."

"Suit yourself. Here."

I handed him my phone. The message had arrived while I was on my way back from the Association after the reassessment.

The sender was…

"Designer-Brand Junkie? Who's this?"

"The Team Leader I ran the raid with today."

"He must be rich. I want to become sworn brothers with him."

This guy and I really did think alike.

A moment later, Jinho's eyes widened as he read the message.

"Ten million three hundred thousand won?[203] Am I reading this right?"

"Probably."

---

[198] Ten million won is about $7,100 or €6,500.

[199] Ten million won is about $7,100 or €6,500.

[200] Ten million won is about $7,100 or €6,500.

[201] A goshiwon is a Korean building of small, inexpensive rooms, often rented by students or people on tight budgets.

[202] A goshiwon is a Korean building of small, inexpensive rooms, often rented by students or people on tight budgets.

[203] Ten million three hundred thousand won is about $7,400 or €6,600.

According to the contract, I was supposed to receive three hundred thousand won.[204] Team Leader Choi had added another ten million.[205]

And there's still a balance left.

The Hobgoblin Priest and Hobgoblin Great Warrior were C-rank Rare Monsters. Team Leader Choi had added that he was looking for buyers for their equipment, hides, and Magic Gems.

> "We'll make an additional payment as soon as they're sold."

The next thing I knew, I was at a nearby supermarket, sweeping up every piece of beef I could get my hands on.

"You…"

Jinho stared blankly between me and the phone in his hand.

"Where the hell have you been, and what did you do?"

"It's a long story."

Jinho hyung[206] chuckled and gripped the scissors.

"The story's long, but your life's about to be short?"

Where was I even supposed to begin?

I had decided not to tell him anything more about the capsule.

It seemed better to let him keep believing it was an absurd lie.

"Two Rare Monsters showed up at the Gate today, and…"

At a life-or-death moment, the luck of a reawakening had come, and I'd been able to take them down. Then I told him about the Association.

It was a hastily stitched-together story, but Jinho bought it.

"So you're a C-rank Hunter now?"

"The reassessment process takes a few days, so technically, not yet."

"Same thing, you idiot."

His face was dazed and his voice hoarse.

Jinho hyung[207] stared at me for a long moment. Moisture gathered in his eyes.

What's gotten into this guy?

"…Don't tell me you're crying?"

"The fuck I am. What kind of bullshit is that?"

He turned away with an unnecessary curse, but he couldn't hide the single tear that slipped down. I watched him out of the corner of my eye as he roughly rubbed his face with his sleeve.

---

[204] Three hundred thousand won is about $210 or €190.

[205] Ten million won is about $7,100 or €6,500.

[206] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

[207] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

"Hyung?"[208]

"Turn the meat over. It's burning."

"Don't change the subject."

"I said it's burning!"

"Okay, okay."

Sizzle.

As I turned the meat, I felt flustered, yet something tickled deep in my chest.

Come to think of it, I've known Jinho for a long time.

Six years? Seven? I wasn't sure. I'd never counted. Whenever I came back to the goshiwon[209] after a hard day, he was always there.

Sometimes I wondered if this was what it would have felt like to have a real older brother. We had lived like brothers, like friends.

"Hey."

Jinho broke the awkward silence. For no reason, I flipped the meat again.

"Yeah? What?"

"Good for you."

"…Yeah."

"And…"

His quiet voice followed.

"You worked hard."

Those few words were enough.

Something surged up from deep inside me. All the emotions and memories that had piled up over the past seven years came rushing in at once.

"Congratulations on becoming a C-rank Hunter. I guess I can't make fun of you anymore."

"Hyung…"[210]

"Taekyung…"

"Hyung!"[211]

"Taekyung!"

We hugged each other tightly across the grill. Jinho hyung[212] whispered in my ear, his voice shaking.

"Do you remember what I said earlier?"

"I know how you feel, hyung. Thank you."[213]

---

[208] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

[209] A goshiwon is a Korean building of small, inexpensive rooms, often rented by students or people on tight budgets.

[210] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

[211] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

[212] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

[213] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

"Not that. The finder's fee."

"...What?"

"Make sure you pay me. Hyung's having a hard time these days."[214]

"..."

"You make a lot of money now."

Should I really kill him?

I staggered back to my room and threw myself onto the bed.

I let out a little laugh, thinking of the one person who was probably cleaning up the roof while grumbling.

You really can't let your guard down around him.

That was so like Jinho. The way he congratulated me, and the joke at the end.

I knew it was all just his way of expressing himself.

You worked hard.

Those words kept circling in my head. It was embarrassing to admit, but for a moment there, I had almost cried.

Yeah. I did work hard.

After my father died, I never stopped running. I worked part-time jobs while finishing high school, then kept enduring for the sake of my sick mother and little sister.

At some point, all of it had simply become a given.

And then—

Ding.

SYSTEM

You have been afflicted with the Status Effect Dead Drunk.

You can detoxify yourself by circulating your qi.

Something that wasn't a given had entered my life.

It had all started with that unidentified piece-of-junk game capsule.

"A game capsule, huh?"

I didn't even know what to call it anymore. It had made me a C-rank Hunter, so should I call it a gift from God?

No. Maybe it was a gift from the devil.

Is this really okay?

[214] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

Even after the best day of my life, the thought still occurred to me for one simple reason.

Nothing comes for free.

That was the world I knew. Everything came with a price tag. Whether you could see it or not, sooner or later, you had to pay.

How much does the System cost?

A hundred billion won?[215] A quadrillion won?[216] Maybe even more?

I laughed weakly as my eyelids grew heavy.

Oh, right. I was dead drunk.

Chirp. Chirp-chirp.

Outside the window, the grass insects were crying loudly. My vision darkened, and sleep poured over me.

That night, I dreamed.

I dreamed that somewhere deep in the mountains, someone was shaking me awake.

“Captain! Captain!”

There was something about that voice that made me want to punch its owner just from hearing it. At the same time, it sounded familiar, and part of me wanted to see who it belonged to, but I was too sleepy to open my eyes.

“What do we do?”

“We have to tell the main force at once…”

“Why is Captain suddenly like this now of all times…”

It felt like listening to a broken radio. The voices crackled with static and kept cutting out.

I’m sleepy…

As my consciousness drifted farther away, I heard a quiet but distinct voice.

“Youngest, stay alive.”

But when I woke the next day, I couldn’t remember any of it.

[215] A hundred billion won is about $71 million or €65 million.

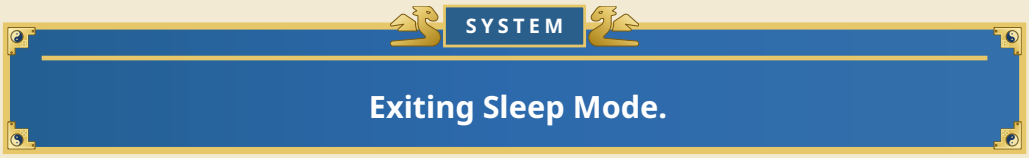
[216] A quadrillion won is about $710 billion or €650 billion.

Chapter 49

Early morning.

I eased my eyes open.

Ding.



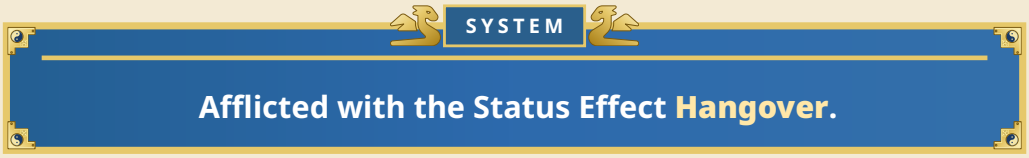
The System notification came with a sigh of relief.

“Phew.”

Thank goodness. It hadn’t all been a dream.

It had only been one day, but yesterday had changed my life. If I’d woken up as Jin Taekyung, F-rank Hunter, reality would have felt like a nightmare.

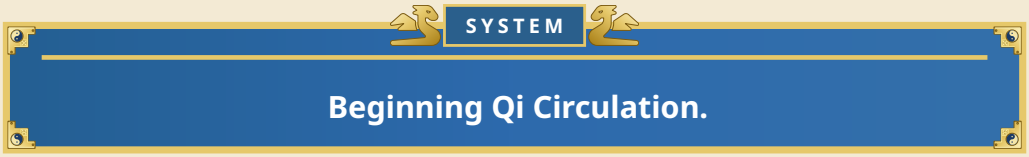
I rustled my way up—and that was when it hit.



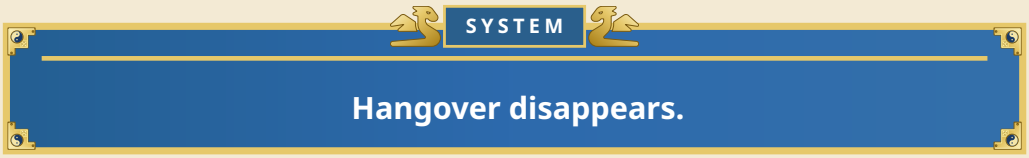
“Urgh.”

Last night’s aftermath was no joke. I clutched my spinning head and sat cross-legged on the mattress.

According to the System, circulating my qi could detoxify me, too.



Following the formula of the Jin Family’s Cultivation Technique, I guided my internal energy. The moment I began circulating my qi, the headache started to fade. About ten minutes later, the message I’d been waiting for appeared.



But I didn’t stop. I knew that ending the circulation abruptly midway would make it less effective.

Something I learned in Murim.

A full hour passed before I finally uncrossed my legs. My head was clear, and my body brimmed with energy.

The problem was…

Why am I taking in so little qi?

To increase my internal energy, I had to draw in qi from outside, store it within myself, and circulate it. But during my first attempt in reality, strangely little qi had entered my body.

And it's murky, too.

It was like a tiny serving of bland food that took forever to arrive. I frowned.

Maybe it's the pollution?

Since internal energy was based on pure natural qi, that was possible. Compared to Murim, the natural environment of modern society was in dire shape.

Or maybe it's the location.

A single room in a decades-old goshiwon[217] was hardly a nature-friendly place. It stank, and the facilities were run-down.

Despite being the goshiwon[218] manager, Jinho hyung[219] was always questioning what this place had originally been.

"Maybe it used to be a torture chamber. During the Great Cataclysm, they probably dragged monsters in, tapped them on the balls with a knife, and asked where the Demon King was. They would've given up the location of the Demon King's parents, too."

…You had to give him credit for his imagination.

He should be sleeping by now, right?

He treated getting up in the morning as a disgrace, so there was no need to check. I was wondering whether to go grab breakfast when—

Bzzzt.

A text arrived on my phone.

> ㄴ 〈 Designer-Brand Junkie
> ㄴ Designer-Brand Junkie
> ㄴ Do you have some time?

The sender was Designer-Brand Junkie—or rather, Team Leader Choi.

[217] A goshiwon is a Korean building of small, inexpensive rented rooms, often with shared facilities.
[218] A goshiwon is a Korean building of small, inexpensive rented rooms, often with shared facilities.
[219] Hyung is a familiar Korean term a man uses for an older brother or older male friend.

A glittering chandelier. Stylishly dressed people. Soft classical music playing in the background.

I couldn't tell whether our meeting place was a café or a high-end restaurant.

"May I take your order?"

Shit. Even the waiter here looks like a celebrity.

He had a model's proportions and the face of a handsome Greek god.

Is this how everyone turns gay?

While I was experiencing an identity crisis, Team Leader Choi calmly placed his order.

"One Black Ivory, please. What about you, Mr. Taekyung?"

The Greek god turned toward me.

Something about the atmosphere made me feel like I shouldn't order a caramel macchiato.

"I'll have the same."

The coffee that arrived a little later was decent enough.

"It's good. This is Black… what was it?"

"Black Ivory."

Even after hearing the name again, I still had no idea what it meant. I just accepted it and moved on.

I muttered my honest take.

"It looks expensive. Do they use good beans?"

"It's elephant dung."

"Oh."

I quietly set down my cup. Team Leader Choi let out a short laugh, then spoke.

"Congratulations."

The congratulations came out of nowhere, but I immediately understood what he meant.

He was talking about yesterday's rank reassessment.

"You're fast. It's personal information—the Association wouldn't have opened all of it."

"C-rank reawakened Hunters are rare. Besides, I saw what happened yesterday with my own eyes. How could I not know?"

Fair enough.

As I nodded, Team Leader Choi held something out to me. A single envelope lay neatly on the table.

"What is this?"

"You'll know when you look."

Don't tell me—money?

I checked the contents. Instead of a check, tiny printed letters packed the page.

“It’s a contract.”

“These are the best terms our Guild can offer. Give it a read.”

I was already reading it, from the first line to the last. Every clause brought another surprise.

“This doesn’t look like a C-rank contract.”

After seven years in this business, I’d seen plenty and heard even more.

Yet even I had never seen a contract this generous.

“They’re good terms even among B-rank contracts.”

“Then why offer them to me…?”

“Because I trust myself.”

“What?”

“I trust my instincts and my eye for people. That’s why I want to sign you, Mr. Jin Taekyung.”

Team Leader Choi set down his empty cup.

“Will you sign?”

Honestly, I was wavering. A lot.

It wasn’t only the terms. Someone had recognized me and wanted me this badly. I wanted to nod right then.

That was why I hesitated longer today than I had yesterday. By the time I finally made my decision, the coffee had gone cold.

“I’m sorry.”

My reason was the same as yesterday.

Under the contract, I would have to work as a Hunter affiliated with the Guild for at least one year.

I was grateful for the offer, but… I couldn’t rush this.

“Have you already signed with someone else? Or are you planning to?”

“No. I just need more time.”

“Time.”

Team Leader Choi sighed.

“I suppose it can’t be helped.”

I was about to apologize again when he said,

“Here’s my second offer.”

“Pardon?”

Team Leader Choi pulled another envelope from his jacket. Still dazed, I took it and checked the contents.

“A provisional contract?”

“You have a rough idea of what that is, right?”

Of course I did. I knew it well.

If the Manpower Office was day labor, a provisional contract with a Guild was temp work. You'd be attached to the Guild for a short stretch, basically a mercenary.

"You won't turn this one down too, will you?"

It wasn't quite as generous as the formal contract, but the terms were still excellent. More importantly, the contract period had been left blank.

"Write down whatever period you want."

"Oh. Right."

I took the pen he offered, still somewhat dazed.

After thinking it over, I wrote seven days. A week should be enough time to see whether the System would last.

Once I'd signed, Team Leader Choi held out his hand.

"I look forward to working with you."

"That's my line."

As we shook hands firmly, it finally sank in that I'd taken my first step as a C-rank Hunter.

Even if it's only a provisional contract.

My chest swelled with emotion.

"Should I come in tomorrow?"

"No."

Team Leader Choi tapped his watch.

"Starting now."

Vroom.

Team Leader Choi's car was a large military vehicle. He looked like the type to collect expensive supercars, so this was unexpected. I only understood why after we arrived at the Gate.

"Pick something."

"Pick what?"

"Equipment."

Team Leader Choi pressed a small button, and a trunk large enough for five grown men to lie down in appeared.

"I had it modified for work. Leaving all this at home felt kind of off."

I stared into the trunk with my mouth hanging open.

Holy crap.

Equipment worth at least several million won[220] was neatly stacked and sorted inside. Armor and weapons were only the beginning. There were all kinds of potions and even disposable magic scrolls that most people considered too expensive to use. He had everything.

"…Is all of this yours, Team Leader?"

"For now. Some were gifts, and I bought some because they looked nice."

Ah. So he bought equipment because it looked nice.

How rich do you have to be to think like that?

C-rank Hunters made good money, but Team Leader Choi's spending was already beyond that. He must have been rich enough that money was never a concern.

Gulp.

"I think I'd rather rent something. If I borrow yours and it gets damaged, it'd be a little…"

"They're out of fashion, so it doesn't matter."

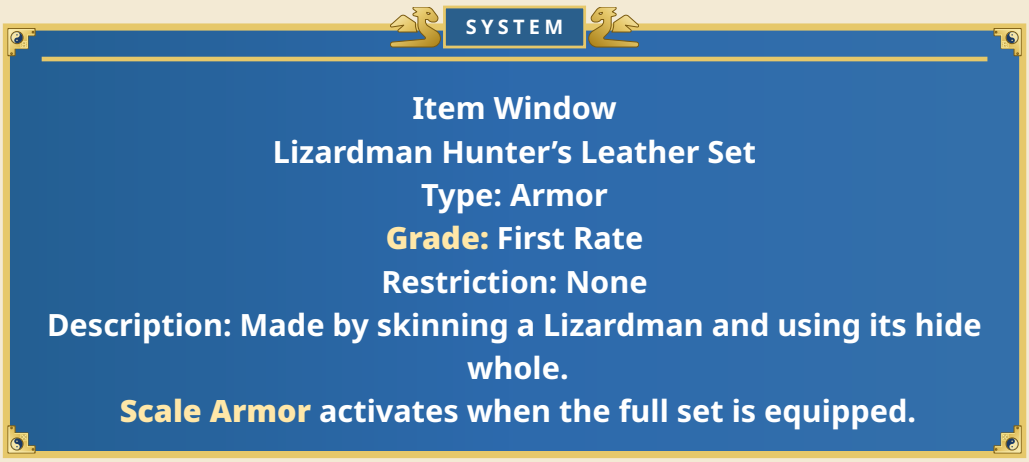
Ah. So he even cared whether equipment was fashionable.

I gave up thinking about it around there and picked my equipment.

The System made the process easy.

Item check.

Ding.



This looks pretty good.

It was light, and the leather was both tough and hard.

As soon as I put on the entire set, the Scale Armor effect activated.

"Oh."

Green scales rose from the leather, forming a dense layer over my entire body.

Team Leader Choi nodded when he saw me.

"You picked a good one. You've got a good eye."

It's the System that's good.

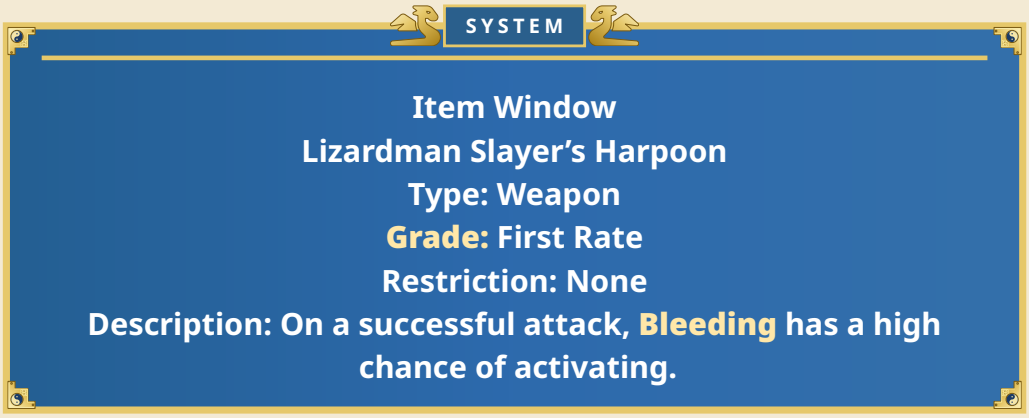
[220] Several million won is roughly 2–9 million won, or about $1,400–$6,400 and €1,300–€5,800.

I smiled awkwardly and rummaged through the weapons. Come to think of it, I'd only ever seen Team Leader Choi use a sword, but there were more than five types of weapons in the trunk alone.

They've all been used, too.

I could see traces of the effort he'd put into finding the weapon that suited him.

A little later, I found myself holding a spear.



Anyone who saw me would think I had a Lizardman fetish.

The spear completed my equipment selection. Team Leader Choi let out a short laugh.

"What's so funny?"

"I was just thinking that things are going well."

"Pardon?"

"You'll find out soon enough."

I had no idea what he meant, but I followed him to the front of the Gate. Instead of an Administration staffer, some man was standing there.

"You've arrived."

He bowed at a perfect ninety-degree angle. Even more surprising was how naturally Team Leader Choi accepted it.

"How's the Gate?"

"Yes. I received your call yesterday and restricted access."

"Thank you for your hard work."

"Not at all, Young Master."

That term could be used by a woman to address her husband's unmarried younger brother, but there was no way this man was Team Leader Choi's sister-in-law…

So Team Leader Choi was the young master of some rich family.

No wonder.

I should have realized it the moment I saw him decked out in luxury equipment from head to toe.

And being fashion-conscious enough to care about equipment design? You couldn't pull that off unless you'd been born with one hell of a gold spoon.

That guy has everything.

The man who had everything turned to me.

"All right. Let's go in."

"Right now?"

"The equipment is taken care of. Is there a problem?"

His tone made it sound so obvious that I looked around.

There was me, Team Leader Choi, and the unfamiliar middle-aged man. That was everyone.

"What about the other team members?"

"They're right here. The team members."

"Oh, I see. He's going in too, right?"

The middle-aged man cut in, his voice heavy.

"I'm not."

"Then…?"

"It's just the two of us. There's no one else."

Team Leader Choi's answer left me dumbfounded.

"No one else?"

"No."

"Not even one person?"

"We're not bringing so much as a dog."

Look at how decisive he was. Who was he, Judge Bao?[221]

"So the two of us are clearing the Gate alone?"

"Why not? It's only a D-rank Gate."

"This is my first D-rank Gate."

"I've been to plenty."

No, fuck…

A D-rank Gate wasn't some neighborhood discount store.

"If it's just the two of us, I'm backing out."

To raid a D-rank Gate safely, you needed a team of ten D-rank Hunters. I could use the System, and I'd learned martial arts, but that didn't eliminate every danger.

"I know what you're thinking, Mr. Jin Taekyung. But let me tell you one thing."

Team Leader Choi continued in a relaxed voice.

"I'm a reawakened Hunter, too."

"Reawakened? I thought you were C-rank, Team Leader…"

[221] Judge Bao, or Bao Zheng, was a Chinese magistrate celebrated in popular stories for impartial and uncompromising judgments.

“C-rank was what I received when I was first measured. My reawakening happened afterward.”

Meaning his abilities were at least B-rank.

The odds were slim, but he could be even higher.

A B-rank Hunter.

If that was true, the situation changed. Just the two of us also meant a bigger cut for me.

“If you want to go back, I won’t stop you. I can go in alone. It wouldn’t be the first or second time.”

He walked in and out of D-rank Gates alone on the regular?

“Then take care. Starting tomorrow, we’ll look for E-rank Gates.”

That sealed it.

I grabbed his shoulder as he turned away.

“Team Leader Choi.”

“Yes?”

“I want to… raid.”

Team Leader Choi smiled warmly.

“Let’s do our best.”

Chapter 50

My mouth fell open at the sight before me.

Amid the hot, humid air, wetlands stretched endlessly through dense forest.

“This is a D-rank Gate…”

I knew higher-ranked Gates contained larger spaces. I just hadn’t expected the difference to be this extreme.

“Big, isn’t it?”

I forgot all about being angry and answered.

“Yeah. Big enough to be daunting.”

“This is about average. Once you reach B-rank Gates, you even have to hire a separate guide.”

“…Feels like we need one now.”

“We’ll be fine today.”

Team Leader Choi pulled out a laminated sheet and showed it to me.

“What’s that?”

“A map. They gave it to me when the rights were transferred.”

A map. Then we wouldn’t have to worry about getting lost—

“Wait. What did you just say?”

“I said it was a map.”

“No, not that. What you said after that.”

“You mean the transfer of rights?”

Yeah, you. That.

“What does that mean?”

“Exactly what it sounds like.”

Team Leader Choi spoke as if it were no big deal.

“This Gate is mine.”

“What?”

“More precisely, I hold the exclusive rights to it.”

Maybe it was the wetlands. Sweat beaded on my palms, and my throat went bone-dry.

I swallowed a dry gulp.

Exclusive rights to a Gate?

In Korea, Gates were national property.

Since the Great Cataclysm, Magic Gems had become a core energy source, and Gates were essentially diamond mines that never ran dry. Yet this guy held the exclusive rights to one.

Who the hell is he?

I knew he was some rich family's young master, but I hadn't realized he was this rich.

"Let's get moving."

Team Leader Choi strode ahead. His back looked dazzling.

Ah, that golden radiance. The scent of untouchable wealth.

I'll bury my bones in your Guild.

I swore it then and there.

The wetlands were a maze.

Without a capable guide like Team Leader Choi, I would have wandered for a long time. How long had we been walking when—

- Keeiik.

The cry grew clearer as I drew up my internal energy.

A monster had appeared.

At least twenty.

According to Team Leader Choi's explanation on the way here, the monsters in this Gate were swamp Lizardmen.

They lived in several colonies under a single tribe, and this seemed to be one of them.

"This is the small colony closest to the entrance. There should be about twenty, so let's take them out quickly and move on."

Team Leader Choi hacked through the vines as he advanced. He was usually a pretty-faced young master, but once actual combat began, he was no joke. Watching him barrel forward like an eight-ton[222] truck with a broken steering wheel, I could practically smell the machismo.

He's fucking cool.

I felt like we could sweep aside not just thirty Lizardmen, but a hundred, as long as Team Leader Choi was with me.

Now I understood why people got high-level players to carry them in online games.

"Keiik!"

Maybe that was why I didn't feel particularly nervous when I came face-to-face with Lizardmen for the first time.

Mostly, I was fascinated to see monsters I'd only ever encountered in photos and videos.

"Oh, they're big."

[222] Eight metric tons is about 8,000 kg, or 17,600 lb.

Even the smallest of the twenty stood a head taller than me.

They were at least two meters[223] tall, with lean muscles and thick tails that made them look even larger.

Still not as big as the Hobgoblin Great Warrior I fought yesterday, though.

These hideous basketball prospects didn't seem too happy to see us.

- Keiik!
- Keet! Keet!

Dozens of harpoons flashed in their hands. I watched them approach from the front, spreading out to surround us.

"No archers."

"Swamp Lizardmen mostly use harpoons. They might throw them, so be careful."

"Yep."

As expected of a lizard expert. He even stood there with his arms casually folded.

"Keiik!"

They had closed to within twenty meters.[224] I grinned at Team Leader Choi.

"These guys have no fear."

"That's a Lizardman trait. They're reckless, and they prefer a head-on fight."

"Aha."

In the meantime, the distance shrank to ten meters.[225] Team Leader Choi's folded arms were starting to bother me.

"I think it's about time we started fighting."

"Guess we should."

"…Ah. Right. We should."

Whoosh!

Then three or four harpoons tore through the air. If I'd still been an F-rank Hunter, my life would have flashed before my eyes. Now I just swung my spear and batted them aside.

Clang, clang, clang!

That was when I noticed something strange.

- Kieeeik!
- Keet! Keiik!

What's wrong with them?

Their eyes rolled back until only the whites showed, and they shrieked wildly. This went beyond hostility. It was practically hatred.

As I stood there bewildered, Team Leader Choi casually remarked,

[223] Two meters is about 6 ft 7 in.
[224] Twenty meters is about 66 ft.
[225] Ten meters is about 33 ft.

"It's because of your equipment."

Equipment? What did my equipment—

Ah.

Lizardman Hunter's Leather Set. Lizardman Slayer's Harpoon.

Shit. Just look at those names.

If I were a Lizardman, I'd throw harpoons too.

Come to think of it, they only threw them at me.

With their people's mortal enemy standing right in front of them, they were treating Team Leader Choi like he was invisible.

At this rate, I was going to be the only one they attacked—

No, wait.

"Did you plan this?"

"Plan what?"

"You dressed me in this so I'd pull aggro while you mopped them up. That was your strategy all along, wasn't it?"

"I swear it wasn't."

Team Leader Choi's face turned serious as he added,

"I'm going to stand back and do nothing."

"What?"

"You'll pull the aggro and handle the raid. Don't get the wrong idea."

What the hell kind of bullshit is that?

"So… you want me to fight them alone?"

"Yes."

"While you stand there with your arms folded and watch?"

"I'll unfold my arms."

"No, for fuck's sake…"

"Harpoons incoming."

Whoosh!

Harpoons flew as green scales flashed from every direction and the Lizardmen charged.

Team Leader Choi sprang back and shouted with heroic gravity,

"You got this!"

Was this guy completely insane?

I wanted to run over and grab him by the collar, but harpoons were already flying at me from every direction.

Clang!

- Keiik!

"You bastards."

Grinding my teeth, I drew up my Qi Sense. Soon, twenty spears sprang up over their heads.

SYSTEM

Lv. 40 Lizardman Tribesman

Level 40, huh?

I tightened my grip on my spear.

“You’re all dead.”

Ding.

SYSTEM

Damage dealt to this monster increases by 10% due to the effect of Lizardman Hunter’s Leather Set.

Damage dealt to this monster increases by 20% due to the effect of Lizardman Slayer’s Harpoon.

All Lizardmen in this Gate are hostile toward you. They will never stop until they have avenged this grudge!

At the same time, the Lizardman Slayer’s Harpoon traced a heavy arc. The forms of the Jin Family’s Spear Technique, now at Seven Stars,[226] poured toward them.

Crunch!

- Keiik…

The yellow reptilian eyes slowly closed.

The green wetlands were soaked with the corpses and blood of the ones already dead. Not a single Lizardman was left standing.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Level Up!

Level Up!

Leaving the cheerful System notifications behind, I turned around.

Team Leader Choi was leaning against a tree. He’d said he would unfold his arms, but there he was with them folded again. That made me twice as pissed.

[226] “Seven Stars” renders chil seong, a Korean expression indicating seven-tenths mastery here.

"What do you think you're doing?"

Team Leader Choi silently stared at me, then tossed something over.

A small drink bottle filled with red liquid. A potion that restored depleted Stamina.

"So first you make me sick, then you give me medicine?"

"You look rather healthy for a sick man. You don't have so much as a scratch."

...That actually sounded plausible. I almost let myself be convinced.

While I hesitated, Team Leader Choi spoke.

"I'm sorry."

He didn't stop there. He even bowed at the waist.

It was such a formal apology that I was left with nothing to say. My anger eased, but I still wanted to know why he had done it.

"Why did you do that?"

"I needed to see what you could do."

"Just for that?"

"It's important to me. I need to know how you move, how many enemies you can handle, and how far we can go together."

"So you just slipped out alone while it was crawling with monsters?"

"If I hadn't trusted you, I wouldn't have done it."

I had to admit, praise felt pretty good coming from someone as capable as him.

More importantly, I didn't get hurt, and I leveled up twice.

Trying not to sound too eager, I asked,

"So what's the verdict?"

"Hmm."

Team Leader Choi studied me with that peculiar look of his. At last, he spoke.

"I still don't know."

"What?"

"Which is why..."

Team Leader Choi pulled something out and tossed it to me.

It was a long, opaque cylinder. Liquid sloshed inside when I shook it.

"What's this, a potion?"

"There's a button on the bottom, right? Press it."

Does that open it?

I tilted my head and pressed the button.

Click.

The front of the cylinder sprang wide open.

The problem was—

Fwoooosh—

Boom!

Whatever had been inside shot up like a firework and burst in midair. The pink liquid exploded outward, spreading over a wide area.

"Huh?"

What is that?

As I stared blankly, Team Leader Choi's voice slipped into my ear.

"Pheromones."

"Pheromones? Like perfume?"

"Something like that."

"…?"

"They were extracted from female Lizardmen."

The instant he finished speaking, I felt a tremor from somewhere.

It was the ground. The ground was rumbling.

Team Leader Choi kindly added,

"They're extremely potent."

You bastard…

"Team Leader Three."

Those were the first words the half-gray, middle-aged man had spoken in an hour. Kim Sangshik, who had spent all that time waiting while the Guild Master chain-smoked, answered immediately.

"Yes, Guild Master."

"Curious, aren't you? Figured I called you in first thing this morning to raise hell?"

"Ah, no, sir."

The Sopung Guild Master smiled good-naturedly.

"You're right."

"What?"

"I called you to raise hell."

"…"

"Do you know where I went today?"

The Guild Master exhaled a plume of cigarette smoke.

"The Guild Alliance breakfast meeting."

Small and midsize Guilds were businesses too. In every region, Guild Masters held meetings to socialize and strengthen their alliances. Today had been one of those occasions.

"I went there on an empty stomach, and just as I was finally about to take a bite, that Sangdong Guild Master bastard told me something interesting. He said the Crank who awakened recently had been one of our Guild members until a few days ago.”

“…Guild Master, that’s—”

The Guild Master raised a hand, cutting Kim Sangshik off.

“I thought it was bullshit. The Sangdong Guild Master might be a rude bastard, but he’s not the type to make up stories. Especially not at an alliance meeting.”

“I-I’ll look into it again!”

“Team Leader Three? No. No need.”

The Guild Master flung a crumpled bundle of papers across the room.

“I already looked into it myself.”

Kim Sangshik recognized the crumpled papers for what they were: someone’s personal file.

He recognized the name on it too.

“Jin Taekyung. Team Leader Three knows that name too, right?”

Fuck.

Kim Sangshik squeezed his eyes shut as the Guild Master tapped the ash from his cigarette.

“I know how you feel, Team Leader Three. You’re a founding member of the Guild, after all. You’re allowed to fire one bottom-tier Hunter you don’t like. Stick your beloved son in the vacancy. Right?”

“Yes. Yes, sir.”

“But the F-rank loach you treated like dirt and kicked out turned into a dragon and came back, huh? I even made a point of telling you to recruit him, but if you told the truth I’d obviously raise hell. You’d get a reputation for having dog eyes that can’t even recognize someone. So you filed a false report, right?”

Sizzle.

The Guild Master crushed out his cigarette. As the embers scattered, the last of his patience vanished with them.

“Team Leader Three. No, Sangshik. Have we been together about twenty years?”

Kim Sangshik answered uneasily.

“Twenty-one years, Guild Master.”

“That’s not what I meant.”

“…Yes, hyung.”[227]

“Good. That sounds much better. Keep calling me that from now on.”

“What?”

“I’ve carried you for twenty-one years. I’ve done more than enough. I’ll speak to the rest of Team Three separately, so you’re leaving the Guild as of today.”

[227] Hyung is how a man addresses an older brother or an older man with whom he has a close relationship.

"H-hyung."[228]

"Shut your mouth, leave quietly, and I won't block your path. Once you're out, do whatever you want."

The Guild Master's voice was packed with tightly suppressed fury.

Kim Sangshik realized he had no other choice.

Leave? Leave the Guild?

He had spent more than twenty years at this job. And now he was being told to leave over something like this. Cast aside without a second thought.

Fuck…

He clenched his teeth and walked out of the office.

One last blow came after him.

"Hey, HR. Process two terminations today. Kim Sangshik and Kim Sangho."

For the next few days, Sopung Guild was in an uproar over the rare event of a father and son being forced out at the same time.

Along with that, the latest news about the bottom-tier Hunter who had recently left became the hottest topic in the Guild.

"They say he's C-rank now. Reawakening."

"Oh my, Mr. Taekyung? The Taekyung I know?"

"That's what I'm telling you. He hit the jackpot. Apparently Kim Sangshik went to recruit him without even realizing who he was and got flat-out rejected."

"He found every excuse he could to fire him, and now he's reaping what he sowed. I heard Team Leader Kim's been going around claiming he was wrongfully dismissed and badmouthing the Guild Master."

"He still hasn't come to his senses. Man, I'm jealous, though. When will I ever get to live a life like that?"

"Honestly, Taekyung deserves it. He worked so hard that luck finally found him."

"Deserves it, my ass. Then are the rest of us all just living it up? It's luck. All luck."

Half envy and half jealousy, the conversations always ended with the same question.

"Where is Mr. Taekyung now, and what's he doing?"

[228] Hyung is how a man addresses an older brother or an older man with whom he has a close relationship.

Chapter 51

Swish, swish, swish!

Swords, axes, maces.

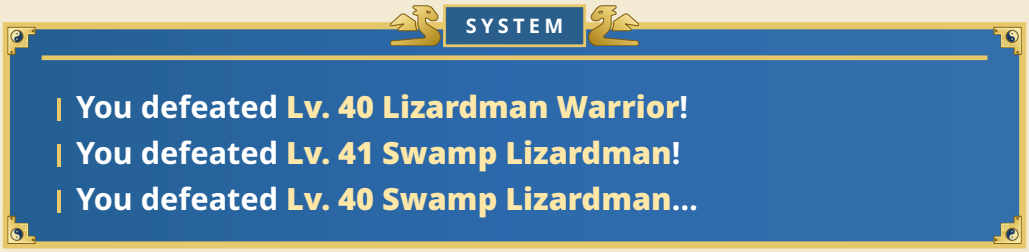
Dozens of weapons poured down like rain. But I could see every one of them clearly—where each attack was headed and how.

I slipped through the gaps.

Slice—

It started with me taking the head off a C-rank monster, a Lizardman Warrior. As the spearhead swept through a semicircle, blood spurted in every direction.

Ding. Ding. Ding.



Keeee...

The survivors hesitated and backed away. The same creatures that had been pouring out killing intent at the enemy of their kin were now trembling with fear.

But that lasted only a moment.

Gwoooaar!

It was at least twice the size of the others, with a gigantic mace in its hand. The Lizardman Chieftain's roar exploded through the air. At the appearance of their leader, the retreating Lizardmen came to their senses and formed ranks.

I was wondering why this was wrapping up so easily.

Team Leader Choi's unhurried voice came from behind me.

"Can you handle it?"

"Is that something someone who hasn't lifted a finger for days should be asking?"

"This is different. It's a C-rank Gate."

"Then help, why don't you."

Team Leader Choi thought it over before answering.

“I don’t think I can. I’m wearing a limited edition today. It’d break my heart if blood splattered on it.”

“…Should I make it hurt for real?”

The longer we talked, the more my gut burned and the back of my head throbbed, as if I were suffering an Internal Injury. I’d rather fight the monsters.

As I took a long stride forward, Team Leader Choi tossed out a single line.

“Retreat is another option.”

The man standing behind me with his arms folded so blood wouldn’t splatter on his limited-edition Equipment had made a pretty good point.

The kind that made me want to hit him.

And then…

“Why bother when there’s a better way?”

Ahead of us, the monsters surged forward like a wave, led by the Lizardman Great Chieftain. C- and D-rank monsters mixed together—a force an ordinary C-rank Hunter wouldn’t even dream of facing.

An ordinary C-rank Hunter, that is.

Status Window, open.

Ding.

The System answered at once.

A week had passed since I’d started working as a Hunter again. On the Status Window, the number 40 and the line at the very bottom shone brightly.

Since returning to reality, I hadn’t spent a single Remaining Point. Purely out of curiosity.

How far can I go as I am now?

But hoarding them any longer would be reckless.

Assign 30 each to Strength and Stamina. Assign 40 to Agility.

The next moment, my Remaining Points hit zero.

In exchange, new power surged from deep inside me. I was no longer the same Jin Taekyung I’d been only seconds ago.

Yeah. This is it.

I was still trembling with exhilaration when—

Gwaaaar!

The Lizardman Great Chieftain charged with a roar. I thrust my spear toward the gigantic mace casting a shadow over me.

“One Annihilation.”

At the tip of my spear, a path through the wind opened.

“Hah.”

Team Leader Choi—Choi Minwoo—let out a hollow laugh.

A dense fog of blood hung over the wetlands, and beneath it lay the sprawled corpses of the monsters.

What the hell…

Dozens of monsters, including the boss, had been slaughtered in an instant. All of it by the spear of a C-rank Hunter who had reawakened only a few days ago.

Is something like this even possible?

It was a question he had carried since the day he first met Jin Taekyung.

That day, they had gone to an E-rank Gate without much thought. There, Taekyung had overwhelmingly overpowered a Rare Monster that normally took a couple of C-rank Hunters to bring down.

And on top of that, the strength he had shown over the past few days was…

Calling him a C-rank Hunter is a joke.

The reason Choi had begun raiding alone with Taekyung was simple.

He wanted to see how far this fascinating man could go.

And he wanted to keep anyone else from finding out.

But then a thought occurred to him.

Could he be stronger than me…?

No. No.

That was impossible.

Choi Minwoo forced the thought aside. Then Jin Taekyung caught his eye.

He was clutching the boss monster’s corpse—its upper body completely gone—and wailing in grief.

“No! My hide! This was expensive!”

…There was no way a man like that could be.

No. He mustn’t be.

Choi Minwoo suddenly felt cheated.

Burning Friday. Bulgeum, for short.

Other people in their twenties would be drinking in groups and drifting in and out of clubs. I spent it running Gates with Team Leader Choi.

Once in the morning. Twice in the afternoon.

By the time we finished three C-rank Gates and came back out, night had already fallen.

“Thank you for your hard work, Young Master.”

The face was familiar now. Team Leader Choi addressed the rugged-looking man in his forties like this:

“Thank you for your hard work too, Butler Kim.”

Butler Kim. Not a secretary—a butler.[229]

The word was so detached from reality that I thought I’d misheard it at first.

I’ve only ever met church deacons.

Back when I was a snot-nosed kid getting a thousand won[230] a week in allowance, one of them had been the bastard who forced me to hand over a hundred won[231] as a tithe.

Of course, he hadn’t called me Young Master. When I dug in and refused to pay, he’d even muttered that I was the child of Satan.

And at seven years old, I was the kind of kid who always asked when something made me curious.

“Mom. Are you Satan?”

“Huh? Satan?”

“Yeah. The church deacon said I was Satan’s child. I’m your kid, so that makes you Satan, right? Right?”

Those words turned my mother into Satan.

I never got to eat the church tteokbokki[232] again, and the church deacon nearly went to be with the Lord.

Thinking back on it, my life really had been one hell of a variety show.

“Did you have something to say…?”

Butler Kim’s voice pulled me back.

“Nothing. I was just thinking about something else.”

“Let’s call it a day.”

Team Leader Choi had already changed into street clothes. In a lightweight tailored suit, he looked just like a celebrity.

Life is so damn unfair.

I grumbled inwardly as I started taking off my Equipment. Carefully, of course. I’d looked up the price on the first day, and it was…

Never mind. Let’s not go there.

---

[229] The Korean word jipsa can mean both butler and church deacon.

[230] A thousand won is about $0.71 or €0.65.

[231] A hundred won is about $0.07 or €0.06.

[232] Tteokbokki is a Korean dish of chewy rice cakes, usually served in a spicy sauce.

While Butler Kim loaded the Equipment into the car, I asked Team Leader Choi, “What time should I come in tomorrow?”

“Tomorrow?”

Team Leader Choi sounded puzzled.

“Today is Friday.”

“Yes.”

“And tomorrow is Saturday.”

“I know Saturday comes after Friday.”

Does he take me for a fucking idiot?

“No, I mean…”

Team Leader Choi furrowed his brow.

“Don’t tell me you’re planning to work this weekend too.”

“…Isn’t that obvious?”

“…”

“…”

Team Leader Choi asked with a shocked look,

“If you don’t take weekends off, when do you rest?”

“Um. When I can’t find work?”

“How often is that?”

“I don’t know. If I get a lot of time off, maybe once a month?”

“You used to belong to a Guild. You worked weekends then too?”

“I did if there was work.”

“Isn’t that a violation of the Hunter Labor Law?”

Even Team Leader Choi, who seemed perfect, didn’t know one thing.

How the world actually worked.

I let out a short laugh.

“What small or midsize Guild follows that to the letter? They all throw in extra pay and send you out on raids. Worked out for me, anyway.”

“Excuse me? You liked it?”

“I go to the day-labor agency on weekends. Getting extra pay from the Guild beats going there. They paid us cash on the spot to keep it off the books.”

“…”

“That’s just how it is.”

Team Leader Choi shook his head in disbelief.

“Our Guild follows the Labor Law. Provisional contracts are no exception.”

That’s a shame. Looks like I’ll have to go to the day-labor agency this weekend.

As I smacked my lips over the missed opportunity, Team Leader Choi gave me that peculiar look of his.

"Why do you push yourself so hard?"

"Why?"

"You're a C-rank Hunter now. You can afford to take it a little easier."

"That's…"

Because I don't know when the System might disappear.

I caught the words before they burst out of my throat. That was my secret—something I couldn't tell anyone.

"No particular reason. You have to row while the tide is in."

"If you keep working like that, you'll break the oars. Think about the people in the boat with you."

"The people in the boat with me? You, Team Leader?"

"Well, for example…"

Team Leader Choi paused before continuing.

"Your family, perhaps."

Family.

It was only one word, but warmth seeped into every corner of my body. We talked on the phone now and then, but I hadn't seen them in more than two months. Counting the time I'd spent in Murim, it had been three.

Has it already been that long?

Ever since my father died, my life had felt like a car driving uphill.

So I'd had no choice but to keep my foot on the gas. It felt as though I'd roll backward the moment I let up. As though the engine might die at any second.

"Anyway, weekends are off. Don't even think about going to the day-labor agency. Rest. That would be a contract violation."

"Oh. Okay."

Forcing me to rest this hard… Maybe this guy Choi isn't such a bad person after all…

No.

I couldn't let myself get taken in by a little emotional appeal. Not after all the hell I'd gone through on my own.

Team Leader Choi is an exploitative employer. An exploitative employer.

It was obvious he only wanted me resting on the weekend so he could work me to the bone starting next week. It was the mentality of a slave plantation owner who didn't want his worker wasting stamina somewhere else.

What a vicious man.

"Everything is ready, Young Master."

Butler Kim had returned after loading the Equipment.

That man's suffering under an exploitative employer too. It's almost ten at night, and he still hasn't gotten off work.

“Ah. What about the thing I mentioned?”

“I brought it.”

“Give it to him.”

At the exploitative employer’s command, Butler Kim held out the small box in his hands.

“Please take this, Hunter.”

To me.

“Huh? Me?”

It looked like a box of tonic drinks. I blinked at it until a thought flashed through my mind.

I asked carefully, “Don’t tell me this is money.”

“We contracted for weekly pay. Did you forget?”

I had. I’d assumed I would get it on Sunday.

I took the box, still dazed. It was heavy.

“Do you normally pay in cash?”

“Of course not.”

“Then…”

“You said you preferred cash, Mr. Jin Taekyung. Especially crisp new bills.”

I’d mentioned it in passing yesterday—or the day before. I hadn’t expected it to come back like this.

My opinion of the exploitative employer rose a little.

Of course, the most important part is still left.

Four days of pay, Tuesday through Friday. My first weekly paycheck as a C-rank Hunter.

Of course I was excited to find out how much it was.

I swallowed and opened my mouth.

“Then how much is all of this…?”

“I added a little extra on top of the contracted amount. The settlement details are inside, so check them. We’ll be going.”

“Until next time, Hunter.”

Team Leader Choi and Butler Kim took off in a flash.

It all happened in an instant.

I stared after the receding car lights, bewildered, then opened the drink box. In the faint moonlight, thick bundles of bills caught my eye.

One, two, three…

The count stopped at six.

Six bundles of a hundred bills.

In other words, six million won.[233]

"What is this?"

Scam.

The word flashed through my mind. Just as my legs were about to give out—

"Huh?"

Had I seen it wrong? Why were the bills yellowish?

"Wait. Wait a second!"

I focused internal energy into my eyes, and my vision brightened.

Then I saw her.

A kindly smiling woman in a hanbok,[234] right there on the bill.

"Shin Saimdang![235] Wise mother and virtuous wife! Her son is Yulgok Yi I! Her husband is Yi Wonsu!"

I started speaking in tongues before I knew it.

This was insane. Completely insane.

One bundle held a hundred Shin Saimdang bills. Six of those meant…

"Th-three hundred million!"[236]

This time I couldn't catch myself as my legs gave out. I dropped to my knees with a thud and stared blankly into the drink box.

Under the bundles, a white sheet of paper lined the bottom.

Right. The settlement sheet!

I unfolded it in a panic.

It contained a complete record of the past four days' earnings.

Right down to the final amount being paid to me.

The settlement says thirty million won?[237]

What? Had I imagined it?

I was confused. Completely confused.

My shaking gaze froze on the final line.

Bonus: 270,000,000[238]

Then I remembered Team Leader Choi's last words before leaving.

I added a little extra on top of the contracted amount.

Thunder and lightning raged through my head.

I rose on trembling legs. Far off in the distance, the car's lights were already fading.

---

[233] Six million won is about $4,300 or €3,900.

[234] A hanbok is traditional Korean clothing.

[235] Shin Saimdang (1504–1551), a Korean artist remembered as a model mother and wife, appears on South Korea's 50,000-won banknote (about $36 or €32).

[236] Three hundred million won is about $210,000 or €190,000.

[237] Thirty million won is about $21,000 or €19,000.

[238] The bonus is 270 million won, about $190,000 or €170,000.

They looked like a single ray of light.
“Ahh. Aaaah…”
Team Leader Choi.
No—he was the Light.

Chapter 52

Six in the morning.

Taxi driver Mr. Kim picked up his first fare of the day—and regretted it ten minutes later.

What rotten luck.

At first glance, the young man looked perfectly normal. He had a sturdy, muscular build and a clean-cut face. At most, he looked to be in his mid-to-late twenties.

But then…

"Sniff, sniff."

Something was off about him. Very off.

"Huuugh."

He was hugging a drink box like treasure, cracking it open every thirty seconds to smell it, then shuddering as if possessed.

What the hell is he doing?

A chill ran down the back of Mr. Kim's neck. He had been driving a taxi for more than ten years, but he had never encountered this particular breed of problem customer before.

Just as he stole another glance at the young man in the passenger seat—

"Mister."

"Y-Yes?!"

His heart nearly stopped.

The young man's eyes, hollow only a moment ago, now gleamed like a wild beast's.

"There's a truck behind us."

"A-a truck? A blue one?"

"Yes. Doesn't it look like it's been following us since that intersection?"

"Huh? Well, I suppose it does."

"It might be tailing us."

What fresh bullshit was this?

Mr. Kim's eyes darted around before he finally gave the answer the young man seemed to want.

"I-I'll peel off to the side."

The young man hugged the drink box tight until the blue truck disappeared from view, as if someone might snatch it away.

"Sniff. Sniff."

Of course, he didn't forget to smell it every chance he got.

This guy's completely insane.

The AC was blasting inside the car, but Mr. Kim's back was soaked with cold sweat. And this was his first fare of the day.

What a thoroughly cursed day.

Vroom.

The moment I handed over the fare and shut the door, the taxi shot off like a bullet.

Anyone watching would've thought a monster was chasing it. What if he got in an accident?

I clicked my tongue and headed into the apartment complex, still cradling yesterday's drink box against my chest.

Three hundred million won[239].

That was about as much as I'd saved over three full years as an F-rank Hunter. Of course, I didn't have a single won[240] of it left now.

I spent it all paying off debts.

There had been a time when I was drowning in debt, but I'd gritted my teeth and kept going until things gradually got better. I'd even moved my family into a safe-zone apartment near Ilsan.

Lately, though, my life had been like a roller coaster.

A roller coaster that would plummet if the System disappeared…

No. I was home for the first time in months. I needed to stop thinking about that.

Which building and unit was it again?

I only came by once every couple of months, so this always happened.

I glared at the tightly packed apartment buildings, then pulled out my phone and called. It rang for quite a while before the line finally connected.

Click.

"Hello?"

I'd expected Hayeon to still be asleep this early, but her voice was perfectly clear.

"You were already up?"

"Of course I'm up. Do you know what time it is?"

"It's not even seven."

"I study better when I wake up early."

My little sister never failed to impress me. Jinho hyung[241], who considered waking up in the morning one of the seven deadly sins, should've heard that.

"Why'd you call?"

---

[239] About $210,000 or €190,000.

[240] One won is about $0.00071 or €0.00065.

[241] Hyung is how a younger man addresses an older brother or an older male friend.

“I’m out front.”

“Huh? Out front?”

“Yeah. But I forgot which one is ours.”

“…Again? You really are something. Wait there.”

I stood there holding the dead phone. A few minutes later, a girl emerged from the entrance of one of the buildings, dragging her slippers along.

Even from a distance, she radiated the aura of a total bum. The look on her face said that everything in the world was too much trouble, and I couldn’t help laughing.

“Jin Hayeon!”

“Don’t yell. You’ll wake people up.”

…Yeah. That was my little sister.

“What brings you here? You didn’t even tell us you were coming.”

“Do I have to announce it before coming to my own house?”

“You show up so rarely. The women’s association president probably visits more often than you do.”

“That bad?”

“That bad.”

The elevator stopped. Hayeon punched in the code at the front door and turned the handle.

And there—

“Son!”

Someone stood beaming at me.

Wrinkled hands. A perm half fallen out. She looked as delighted as a child receiving a surprise gift.

My throat tightened. I scratched my chin, then burst out laughing.

“I’m home, Mom.”

I had finally come back.

To the place where my family was waiting.

Home.

Sizzle, sizzle.

Mom was busy with breakfast in the kitchen. A good smell hung in the air.

“Look at Lady Kim, all excited because her son’s finally home.”

Hayeon scratched her stomach and plopped down beside me.

The old sofa sagged beneath her.

What a pig.

"Is she making a lot?"

"Yeah. A whole feast. Looks like we're eating well today."

She answered without taking her eyes off her phone.

"You haven't seen your brother in ages. Aren't you happy to see me?"

"Huh?"

"I mean, you could at least massage my shoulders after everything I've been through."

Hayeon let out a long sigh.

"What's gotten into you, Mr. Taekyung? We don't have that kind of relationship."

"…Listen to that attitude."

It wasn't like we'd only started bickering yesterday, but I still felt a pang.

I mean, I'd barely made it home after nearly dying!

"That got to you just now, didn't it?"

Her radar was scary.

"Go get ready for school, you little cafeteria parasite."

"Mm. Today's the school founding anniversary."

My fist trembled.

I wanted to smack the back of her irritating head right then and there, but if I did, I'd really lose.

"You want to hit me, don't you? Your fist is shaking."

"You're lucky you're a girl. If you had balls, I would've—"

"Mom! Oppa[242]'s sexually harassing me!"

"Hey, hey!"

"He said b—mmph!"

I clamped a hand over Hayeon's mouth. She thrashed, hitting and pinching me, but she was still just a nineteen-year-old girl. It didn't hurt.

Then one of her flailing feet accidentally slammed into the drink box I'd carefully set in the corner of the sofa.

Thump.

Flutter.

The box sprang wide open.

Yellow bundles of bills spilled across the living-room floor.

Hayeon froze.

"Come on, stop fighting and eat your breakf—"

Mom had come out of the kitchen too.

Everything in the living room stopped as if someone had hit pause. Only the quiet simmering of the stew filled the silence.

[242] Oppa is how a younger woman addresses an older brother or an older male friend.

Sizzle, sizzle.

I smiled awkwardly and opened my mouth.

“Can’t we talk about this after breakfast?”

“…Son?”

“Mmph, mmph, mmph.”

It looked like breakfast would be delayed for quite a while.

I told my family a suitably edited version of everything that had happened so far.

My reawakening as a C-rank Hunter, and where the money had come from.

“So that’s what happened.”

Their reactions fell into two categories.

“I see.”

Mom nodded blankly.

And then—

“Proof.”

“…”

Yeah. I hadn’t expected anything else from you.

I sighed and tossed Hayeon my wallet.

“What’s this?”

“Take a look.”

She eyed me suspiciously, then started rummaging through it. There was barely anything inside, so it didn’t take her long to find it.

“Whoa.”

A single card in her hand.

It was the C-rank Hunter license the Association had issued me two days ago.

“This isn’t fake, is it?”

“Want to get hit?”

“Guess it’s real.”

“Forging one is a serious crime, you idiot.”

“What about the money? Did that Team Leader Choi or whatever his name is really give it to you, like you said?”

“How many times do I have to tell you before you believe me?”

“About three hundred and fifty?”

Despite what she said, she seemed to believe me now.

[243] About $210,000 or €190,000.

A silver C-rank Hunter license. Three hundred million won[243] in neatly stacked bundles.

Every bit of it looked completely out of place in this old, cramped living room.

Mom sat there staring blankly and muttered, almost a groan.

“What on earth is all this…?”

Hayeon let out a hollow laugh like an old woman who had seen everything life had to offer.

“I know. Live long enough and you see everything.”

“You’re not even twenty.”

“It’s just an expression. But, Mom.”

“Y-Yes?”

“I smell something burning.”

“Oh, right! The stew!”

Mom’s half-lidded eyes flew open. I hurried to my feet, but the kitchen was already a disaster zone.

Mom followed me in, stomping her feet.

“Oh no! What do we do?”

The broth had boiled down to almost nothing, and the fish had turned into lumps of charcoal. I’d been looking forward to a home-cooked meal after so long, but…

Well, this wasn’t such a bad turn of events either.

“Let’s go out to eat. It’s been a while.”

Normally, Mom would’ve launched into a long speech about the absurd price of restaurant food, while Hayeon would’ve asked us to order fried chicken instead. This time, they both stayed quiet.

“Little sister.”

“Yes, dear brother.”

“Grab the money.”

“Yessir.”

As if she’d been waiting for the order, Hayeon swept up the bundles of cash.

“I’m sorry, but our restaurant has a dress code…”

The manager of the upscale restaurant—where a course meal cost several hundred thousand won[244] per person—gave us an awkward smile.

“A dress code?”

“Yes. As you can see, all our other guests are dressed accordingly.”

[244] Several hundred thousand won—roughly 300,000–900,000 won—is about $210–$640 or €190–€580.

He was right. Men and women alike wore suits and dresses. Some were even in evening gowns.

Shit. Anyone watching would think they'd come to dance at a ball.

What was this, eighteenth-century France?

For someone like me, who'd only ever gone to gukbap[245] places, it was a massive culture shock.

"Let's just go somewhere else."

"Yeah. Hayeon knows a lot of good restaurants around here."

My family seemed even more embarrassed than I was, so I simply walked out.

The three of us were reflected in the restaurant glass. We'd clearly dressed up for our first meal out in a long time, but every piece we owned was cheap market-brand stuff that already looked well-worn.

Had they been that short on money?

I'd sent most of what I earned home while cutting back on my own food and clothes.

Even when I was an F-rank Hunter, I'd worked twice as hard as everyone else. It couldn't have been a small amount.

"Son, should we go get pork belly? Maybe something greasy is a bit much this early in the morning."

"Pork belly sounds good. Mom knows what's what. A friend of mine went to the barbecue place at the intersection up ahead and said it was amazing."

Just pork belly.

I had a C-rank Hunter license in my wallet and a bag stuffed with cash. They knew that. They could afford to splurge without worrying.

That's why I work.

Someone once said money couldn't buy happiness. That happiness didn't come with a price tag.

Personally, I had one thing to say to people who spouted that crap.

Fuck off.

You can't spend money when you don't have any.

After spending all night wondering what to do with it, I'd finally made up my mind.

For today, at least, I would spare no expense on my family.

And now, that resolve swelled even stronger.

"Let's eat a little later."

Without waiting for an answer, I flagged down a passing taxi.

"Where to?"

[245] Gukbap is a Korean dish of rice served in hot soup.

“Mirae Department Store.”

It was supposedly the biggest and most expensive department store in the area. In the rearview mirror, Mom’s eyes widened.

“The department store?”

Meanwhile, the corners of Hayeon’s mouth curled up slyly.

“Nice. My rich oppa[246] can buy me clothes too.”

Sharp as ever. She caught on immediately.

I gave a short laugh.

“Buy whatever you want.”

“Really?”

“Pick out Mom’s things first.”

“Okay.”

“You’ve got yourself a devoted son, ma’am. Ha ha.”

Only then did Mom smile at the driver’s banter.

“You’re really buying everything?”

“Everything.”

Once I confirmed it one last time, Hayeon tore through the department store like a colt off its reins. She scanned the clothes with a terrifyingly keen eye and moved so fast I started to wonder if she was an Awakened.

At first, Mom looked at the price tags more than the clothes. Before long, though, she started joining in enthusiastically.

“Mom, what do you think of this?”

“Isn’t it too short?”

“This one!”

“That’s nice.”

“This too!”

“That’s pretty. Excuse me, miss—do you have this in one size larger?”

Two hours later, I began to feel a change in my body.

I’m dying.

For reasons I couldn’t explain, I was suffering from extreme shortness of breath and agonizing pain in my legs.

A sense of helplessness comparable to what I’d felt facing Jopil in Murim engulfed my entire body.

“Oppa[247], how do I look?”

---

[246] Oppa is how a younger woman addresses an older brother or an older male friend.

[247] Oppa is how a younger woman addresses an older brother or an older male friend.

“Ugly. Get lost.”

“Son, try this on.”

“I don’t think I need to. I’ll take it.”

I have no idea how many clothes we bought that day or how much we spent.

All I know is that by the time we finished shopping, one of the department store’s top executives came to see us off.

“Welcome.”

The manager of the restaurant with the strict dress code didn’t even recognize us.

“Wow, I’ve never eaten anything like this before.”

“I know. How do they make the food look so pretty?”

Mom and Hayeon whispered to each other, their cheeks flushed.

We’d spent dozens of times more than the several-hundred-thousand-won[248] course meal just so we could eat it, but not a single won[249] felt wasted that day.

“But I want rice. This is too rich.”

“Why are the portions so small?”

…I pretended not a single won[250] felt wasted.

[248] Several hundred thousand won—roughly 300,000–900,000 won—is about $210–$640 or €190–€580.

[249] One won is about $0.00071 or €0.00065.

[250] One won is about $0.00071 or €0.00065.

Chapter 53

Ding.

"...O-oppa!"[251]

I gasped and opened my eyes.

The first thing I saw wasn't the ceiling of my goshiwon[252], but Hayeon's face.

Oh, right. I came home yesterday.

"Did you have a nightmare?"

"Huh?"

"You were screaming earlier. And you were sweating like crazy."

I was?

Before I could ask, I realized my whole body was soaked in sweat, and my throat stung as if I'd swallowed sand.

Why do I feel like this?

The System didn't only work while I was awake. Sleep Mode let me sleep deeply while restoring me to peak condition.

Nothing like this had ever happened in Murim or since Synchronization. And a nightmare, on top of that?

What did I even dream about?

My head throbbed, but I couldn't remember the dream at all.

Hayeon asked worriedly, "Has something bad happened lately?"

"No. Nothing like that."

"If there is, tell me. Don't suffer by yourself."

"Yes, nuna."[253]

"I'm not joking."

Her little fist thumped my chest. Faced with Hayeon's serious expression, I had nothing to say. I scratched my chin.

"Really? Nothing bothering you? Nothing giving you a hard time?"

"I told you, there's nothing."

---

[251] Oppa is a Korean term a girl or woman uses for an older brother or a close older man.

[252] A goshiwon is a small, inexpensive rented room, typically in a building with shared facilities.

[253] Nuna is a Korean term a boy or man uses for an older sister or a close older woman. Taekyung uses it jokingly for his younger sister.

It was a lie. There had been things seven years ago, and there would be things seven years from now. There had been days when I locked myself in my room and cried, and days when I drank myself senseless with Jinho just to forget.

That's enough.

There were things I couldn't tell my mother, who had worked until the cartilage in her knees wore down raising the two of us, or my little sister, a high-school senior now preparing for her college entrance exam.

Enduring things alone and overcoming them. I was used to it by now.

I flashed her a grin as if nothing was wrong.

"My life's finally about to take off. What would I have to worry about? Ah, there is one thing. How I'm supposed to spend all this money. Something like that."

"Big talk."

The mood lightened a little. I made a face on purpose.

"Big talk? Don't you remember yesterday? Want me to show you the bundles of cash again?"

"I'll give you that. You're obnoxious, but I can't argue."

"I've hit the peak of my twenty-seven-year life graph. Nothing's going on, so you just study hard."

"My grades are in the top 0.1 percent nationwide, okay? I'm doing more than well enough, so don't worry."

Hayeon pouted and started to leave, then stopped and turned back.

"Oppa. But…"

"Yeah?"

"Who's Jin Wikyung?"

"…What?"

A name I never expected, at a moment like this.

My body went rigid.

Crunch.

I bit into a piece of freshly made young-radish kimchi. It was Mom's cooking, the food I'd wanted so badly, but I could barely taste it.

Because of the conversation I'd just had with Hayeon.

"Where did you hear that name?"

"From you. You kept saying it in your sleep."

And then her final question.

"Someone you know? If they show up in your dreams, you must be close."

I couldn't answer. I hadn't found that answer in Murim or in reality.

No. I no longer had any reason to look for it. I had returned to reality, and Jin Wikyung was in Murim.

Then why did Jin Wikyung suddenly show up in my dream…?

My thoughts were a mess. Was it some aftereffect of Murim? The term PTSD came to mind—post-traumatic stress disorder.

This is driving me crazy.

My expression must have hardened without my noticing. Mom asked gently, “Have you lost your appetite? I made all your favorites.”

“Oh, no. When did you make the kimchi? And this doenjang-jjigae[254] is perfect.”

I hurriedly made excuses and picked up my spoon. For the first time in ages, the three of us were together at one table. I couldn’t ruin this precious moment.

It’s nothing. It has to be nothing.

Slurp.

Even so, the savory doenjang-jjigae[255] tasted faintly bitter.

The unease nagging at the back of my mind soon faded, and I went back to normal.

I laughed and talked with my family all day. I even took a long nap, and by the time I woke up, it was evening.

Time to go back.

“Stay a few more days. I was going to make boiled pork tomorrow.”

“There goes Lady Kim again. I know how to eat boiled pork too, you know?”

Hayeon grumbled at the reluctance dripping from Mom’s words.

“She packed you a ton of side dishes already, so why are you so worried? At this rate, she could open a side-dish shop.”

“…That’s true.”

The shopping bags Mom had prepared by the front door were packed with side dishes. Even this much was a compromise I’d only managed to reach after talking her down.

I don’t have anywhere to put them.

If I put a fridge in my three-pyeong[256] goshiwon[257] room, there really wouldn’t be anywhere left to stand. No—there wasn’t even room for a fridge.

I already had a capsule the size of one.

Should I start looking for a new place?

---

[254] Doenjang-jjigae is a Korean stew made with fermented soybean paste.

[255] Doenjang-jjigae is a Korean stew made with fermented soybean paste.

[256] One pyeong is about 3.31 m^2 (35.6 ft^2); three pyeong is about 9.93 m^2 (107 ft^2).

[257] A goshiwon is a small, inexpensive rented room, typically in a building with shared facilities.

I was thinking that as I slung the backpack I'd packed the night before over my shoulder.

"…?"

Why was it so heavy? All I'd put inside were a few outfits I'd bought yesterday.

When I set the backpack down, my family suddenly grew frantic.

"Son, you'll be busy starting tomorrow, right? Hurry back, wash up, and get a good night's sleep."

"…A minute ago, you told me to stay a few more days."

"Oppa, you're going to miss your ride."

"I'm taking a taxi, though?"

"The late-night surcharge. You'll have to pay the late-night surcharge."

By then, I had a pretty good idea what was going on.

"When did you put it in?"

"P-put what in?"

"The money."

Their faces answered for them. I sighed.

"I told you to keep it and use it when you need it."

"…"

"I make plenty of money. And I will from now on, too."

I mixed fact and fiction fifty-fifty.

The average annual salary of a C-rank Hunter was five hundred million won.[258] I'd met a generous employer in Team Leader Choi and received a bonus beyond anything I could have imagined, but if the System disappeared, all of it would go up in smoke.

That was why I'd wanted to give even more to my family, but…

"That's money you risked your life to earn. Spend it on yourself. All right?"

"Mom."

"Son."

Then Mom spoke quietly, leaving me at a loss for words.

"Don't push yourself. And don't get hurt. That's all Mom needs."

What else was I supposed to say?

A little later, I stepped out into the humid summer night.

With shopping bags full of side dishes and a backpack stuffed with bundles of cash.

Vroom.

---

[258] Five hundred million won is about $360,000 or €320,000.

[259] A goshiwon is a small, inexpensive rented room, typically in a building with shared facilities.

Throughout the taxi ride back to the goshiwon[259], I thought about Mom's final words and the warmth in them.

And about a voice from a memory that was growing fainter and fainter.

"Survive. I'm telling you to run without looking back. That's your mission."

Shaaah—

Blood spurted.

Not the green blood of a monster, but red human blood. Fighting through the burning pain in my thigh, I rammed my spear into the Lizardman Chieftain's chest.

"Keee…"

Ding.

SYSTEM

You defeated Lv. 50 Lizardman Chieftain!

You gained EXP!

Gate cleared. A mana field leading outside formed over the Lizardman Chieftain's lifeless body.

That was when Team Leader Choi pushed away from the tree.

"Three."

"Pardon?"

"The number of times you've been injured today, Mr. Jin Taekyung."

His long, sturdy fingers pointed to each wound on my body.

The nape of my neck and my arm, already treated with potions, and my thigh, which was still bleeding.

"I'm fine. They were only grazes. A low-grade potion is more than enough…"

"You're not fine."

He cut me off firmly. Team Leader Choi's expression was always unreadable, but this time something was different.

One thing was certain. The emotion showing on his face wasn't simple concern.

"You weren't injured even once last week. Same Gate, same monsters. If this is happening, there can only be one reason."

His clear eyes fixed on me.

"Mr. Jin Taekyung. Is something wrong?"

One day. Two days. Three days.

Time passed, but things didn't improve. On the fourth day, I ended up injured in five different places.

"Not in your current condition. Go home."

Leaving Team Leader Choi's words behind, I headed for the goshiwon[260], my head a mess.

What's the problem?

Everything had been going well. The System hadn't disappeared, and I had roughly three hundred million won[261] deposited in the bank. All that remained was to keep riding high as a C-rank Hunter, but…

Those damn dreams.

That was when it started. Ever since my first night at my family's house, I'd been having nightmares.

The scenes in them grew clearer by the night, and every time a dream ended, I woke up soaked in sweat. Even if I circulated my qi and restored my physical condition, my unstable mind only made me commit more mistakes.

This is going to be a problem.

My body was in reality, but my mind was still trapped in Murim. I was wondering whether I should see a psychiatrist when I reached my goshiwon[262] room.

Click.

"Oh, you're back?"

The greeting was so natural that I almost wondered whether I'd walked into the wrong room.

I asked, incredulous,

"What are you doing?"

Jinho answered, "Disassembly and reassembly."

He was sitting in front of the capsule with a screwdriver. For a second, my vision went yellow.

This bastard isn't actually—

"Are you crazy? Move!"

"Hey, hey. Hear me out."

Jinho hurriedly waved his hands.

"I haven't even started yet."

"What?"

"I just got here too. Seriously."

---

[260] A goshiwon is a small, inexpensive rented room, typically in a building with shared facilities.
[261] Three hundred million won is about $210,000 or €190,000.
[262] A goshiwon is a small, inexpensive rented room, typically in a building with shared facilities.

He didn't look like he was lying. Only after I checked that the capsule was still intact did a sigh of relief escape me.

"Phew."

Jinho looked taken aback by my reaction.

"Why are you making such a fuss over one junk capsule that doesn't even work? What happened to tossing it out like a piece of luggage?"

"That was then."

There was no way Jinho could know about Synchronization, or what that unidentified object—nothing but a junk capsule to him—meant to me.

"Anyway, don't touch it. Got it?"

"You look ready to beat me to death."

"I'll tear you to pieces."

"…"

I ignored Jinho's baffled expression and flopped onto the bed.

After that little episode, it felt like all the energy had drained out of me.

"Something going on?"

"Going on, my ass."

"Complaints about you have been no joke lately. Today, I barely managed to calm down the guy next door and send him away."

I could guess why.

Jinho gathered up the tools he'd scattered across the floor and continued.

"He says he's going crazy because you groan all night. Oh, and he asked who Jin Wikyung is."

That name again.

I buried my face in the pillow.

"Just tell him she's my girlfriend."

I saw his hand tremble around the monkey wrench.

"You got a girlfriend? You traitorous bastard."

"…"

"Is she pretty? How old is she? Show me a picture."

This guy was thirty. It was tragic.

"The name's a bit exotic, though. Is she an ethnic Korean from China? Or Chinese?"

"…Chinese."

It wasn't exactly wrong.

"This bastard hits C-rank and he's already gone global. Anyway, introduce me to a girl. I like China. Nǐ hǎo ma?[263] Wǒ ài nǐ.[264] What else was there?"

---

[263] Nǐ hǎo ma? is Mandarin Chinese for "How are you?"

[264] Wǒ ài nǐ is Mandarin Chinese for "I love you."

"You fucking bastard."

"Idiot. You got the tones and pronunciation all wrong. You think you'll even make it to a hundred days[265] like that? Repeat after me. Nǐ chī fàn le ma?"[266]

"You fucking bastard."

"Again. Nǐ chī fàn le ma?"[267]

"You fucking bastard."

"…Wait, you bastard!"

I ignored Jinho, enraged by his belated realization, and pointed at the door.

"Get out."

Please. Just let me have some time to myself.

Once the room was quiet, I sat up and walked over to the capsule. I tapped its old, grime-caked surface and muttered, "What the hell are you?"

As expected, no answer came.

I'd secretly been hoping for one. What a shame.

The System's already synchronized with reality. Why couldn't a machine talk too?

Honestly, I wasn't even sure it was a real machine. Reality had turned into fantasy a long time ago, but wasn't this a whole new genre?

If I wrote my current situation as a novel, what genre would I even pick? Fantasy? A game novel? Or—

Dimensional travel?

A hollow laugh escaped me. Dimensional travel? I really was losing it. There was no way something like that was possible.

There was no way…

My mind snapped clear as if someone had dumped ice water over my head.

…It is possible.

Dimensional travel had happened in the past, and it still existed now.

The invasion of the Demon King Asmodeus and the Gates were proof.

We only passed through Gates to leave and return to our world, but decades ago, an army of monsters had crossed through one from another dimension to Earth.

The Demon Realm.

A land of evil. The home of monsters. The Demon King's domain.

---

[265] In Korea, couples commonly mark their hundredth day together as a relationship milestone.

[266] Nǐ chī fàn le ma? is Mandarin Chinese for "Have you eaten?" Its pronunciation resembles a Korean profanity, which Taekyung keeps saying instead.

[267] Nǐ chī fàn le ma? is Mandarin Chinese for "Have you eaten?" Its pronunciation resembles a Korean profanity, which Taekyung keeps saying instead.

An unknown dimension no human had ever set foot in or even glimpsed. That was how humanity defined it.

But what if this capsule in front of me was a kind of Gate leading to another dimension? What if Murim was another unknown dimension?

Murim is another reality.

Everything I had seen and experienced there.

Water. Earth. Wind. And people, too.

They weren't NPCs.

I stared at my vacant face reflected on the capsule's faded surface.

For a long while after that.

Chapter 54

It felt like watching an old TV.

Scenes and voices stuttered across a faded screen, cutting in and out. Even so, the heat of the battlefield came through vividly.

“Kill them!”

“Destroy the Jin Family of Taiyuan!”

The people packed into the narrow gorge charged forward with a roar. Behind them, a flag marked Mount Heng whipped in the air.

Beyond the points of their blue-edged weapons stood another banner.

Jin (□).

And hundreds of martial artists sealing off the gorge.

“They’re bastards with neither martial honor nor chivalry. The Mount Heng Sword Sect disappears today!”

“Attack!”

Static crackled.

The view zoomed in through the noise, locking onto two people who stood out beneath the flag of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

An old man with a long white beard spoke.

“This will be a long fight.”

A massive man answered.

“And our last.”

The old man broke into a broad smile.

“It will be. Without fail.”

Then—

People crashed into people, swords into spears. Countless martial artists collided, and a thick mist of blood settled over the gorge.

Somewhere, drums thundered to announce the start of the battle.

Boom. Boom. Boom.

“Hah.”

I sat up, drenched in sweat. Another dream about Murim.

Unlike at first, I could now remember the dream clearly even after waking.

The battle has begun.

Time continued to pass in Murim even after I returned to reality.

The scenes I had just witnessed might be happening there right now. A great battle with the fate of two immense powers hanging in the balance.

No. There's one more.

A third force led by the Head Elder.

Once the battle reached its climax and both sides had suffered heavy losses, that was when they would finally move.

What about Hyuk Mujin? What happened to the reconnaissance squad?

If they arrived in time and exposed the betrayal, the worst could still be avoided. Or they might already be too late, and everything might be over.

The Head Elder…

An old man who had given me the creeps from the first impression. Who would have thought that so-called elder of the Jin Family of Taiyuan would be plotting something like this?

If the Head Elder emerged as the final victor, it would all be over.

A rebellion was always followed by a bloody purge.

Jin Wikyung, Wipeng, Hyuk Mujin, and the reconnaissance squad.

Then there was Han Yeop, too badly injured in his fight with Jopil to march out, as well as Gong Yacheong and the siblings Socheon and Soyul, who were still recovering.

Familiar faces appeared and vanished in my mind, over and over.

What were they to me?

One month in Murim.

To them, I had been a Benefactor, a trusted superior, and a comrade they could trust to watch their backs. And to someone…

"I'm proud of you."

"Are you hurt anywhere?"

"Survive, my youngest."

We were also brothers by blood.

But what had they been to me? NPCs loaded with advanced AI? Or people?

What were they?

Another dimension only I could come and go from, and the people left behind there. What was I supposed to do about that?

My eyes drifted to the capsule on their own.

What if I went back…?

The thought startled me.

I was out of my mind.

Go back and do what? This was a massive battle involving some two thousand martial artists. Among them were monsters as strong as Jopil, One Question, One Kill—or even stronger.

And I was thinking of going back there?

“You lunatic. You crazy bastard. You’ve completely lost it.”

I was muttering the words like a sigh when my phone buzzed.

Bzzz.

Designer-Brand Junkie.

It was Team Leader Choi.

A large café surrounded by downtown skyscrapers.

“Here are the materials you requested.”

Butler Kim held out a thick binder. Even at a glance, it looked like a massive file of more than a hundred pages.

“That’s a lot.”

“I investigated just as thoroughly.”

Choi Minwoo nodded and began flipping rapidly through the pages. What he was reading was one man’s life.

Jin Taekyung’s twenty-seven years were contained in those hundred-odd pages.

Birthplace, background, how he had grown up—even account inquiry records provided by the bank. Nothing was missing.

Anything unusual or suspicious had been marked in bold, allowing Choi Minwoo to finish the entire file in under thirty minutes.

“What do you think, Butler Kim?”

“He’s clean.”

Butler Kim’s answer was definitive.

“He isn’t an illegal Awakener, nor did he approach you as part of some scheme.”

Choi Minwoo nodded. If Butler Kim said so, then it was so.

Butler Kim had spent the past two weeks using every means available to investigate everything about Jin Taekyung. Every one of the hundred-odd pages on the table would have passed through his hands.

“So this was all a coincidence?”

“For now, yes.”

“Butler Kim.”

“Yes. Please go ahead.”

“Do you know the odds of reawakening?”

“I understand they’re around one percent.”

One in a hundred.

To an ordinary person, that might not sound impossibly rare. But those hundred people weren’t ordinary people. They were Hunters who had already beaten similar odds just to Awaken in the first place.

And even among them, only a chosen few were lucky enough to reawaken.

“Then what are the odds of an F-rank Hunter reawakening as a C-rank Hunter in one leap?”

Choi Minwoo didn’t wait for an answer.

“And what are the odds of a C-rank Hunter clearing a Gate of the same rank alone?”

“Alone, it would be impossible. He would have to be at least B-rank…”

“And yet there’s someone who can.”

“Could it be…?”

“Ten C-rank Gates and ten D-rank Gates. Across twenty raids, all I did was stand by with my arms crossed and watch. There was never any need for me to step in.”

His long fingers tapped the thick binder.

Everything about Jin Taekyung was written inside it, yet in another sense, it said nothing at all.

After a moment of silence, Butler Kim spoke.

“I’ll investigate him again.”

“No.”

Choi Minwoo shook his head.

“Keep poking at it and we’ll only make trouble for ourselves. I intend to keep him close and watch him.”

“Do you intend to recruit him into the Guild after all?”

“I should. If something smells fishy, I’ll dig into his background. If not…”

Choi Minwoo’s eyes gleamed.

“I’ll make him one of my people. Even if it takes Three Visits to the Thatched Cottage.[268]”

And in the next moment—

Jingle.

The doorbell rang as someone entered the café, and Choi Minwoo gave a quiet laugh.

Zhuge Liang—or rather, Jin Taekyung.

A signing bonus of 500 million won.[269]

A fixed monthly salary of 50 million won[270] and a seventy-percent settlement share.

[268] “Paying three personal visits” alludes to Liu Bei’s repeated visits to Zhuge Liang in Romance of the Three Kingdoms to recruit him as an adviser.

[269] 500 million won is about $360,000 or €320,000.

[270] 50 million won is about $36,000 or €32,000.

An officetel of roughly 132 square meters[271] and a sedan came as extras, while coverage under all four national insurance programs was a given. After reading through the contract, I had exactly one thought.

This is insane.

What kind of outrageous terms were these?

They were giving me a home, a car, and more money than I knew what to do with.

The average annual income of a C-rank Hunter was 200 million won,[272] including fixed pay and raid earnings.

And me?

The signing bonus alone is 500 million.[273]

These terms were normally reserved for B-rank Hunters or higher.

That meant they valued my skills that highly. It was also proof that I had found an employer with enough insight not to judge a Hunter by rank alone.

And he has the money to back it up.

I stared across the table at Team Leader Choi. As always, his expression gave nothing away, and his eyes were deep.

Team Leader Choi suddenly spoke.

“This is the third time.”

He had made me two offers before, and I had turned them both down. This was his roundabout way of telling me not to refuse him again.

“I’m sorry about that. There was a minor issue.”

“Have you resolved it?”

“Yes. For now, I think so.”

“Then there shouldn’t be any problem now.”

“…Of course.”

Even as I answered, doubt gnawed at me.

Was there really no problem now? Was it okay to leave things like this?

What the hell am I thinking?

I needed to get this over with before my thoughts wandered again.

“I’ll sign.”

I began signing with the fountain pen Team Leader Choi had handed me.

One page, two pages, three…

The contract was five pages long. All I had to do was write the three characters of my name on the last page, and it would be done.

At that moment, the question returned.

---

[271] An officetel is a Korean mixed-use unit designed for both office and residential use. 132 square meters is about 1,420 square feet.

[272] 200 million won is about $140,000 or €130,000.

[273] 500 million won is about $360,000 or €320,000.

Is this really okay?

The fountain pen that had moved without hesitation began to slow. One thought led to another.

What if it isn't? But isn't this exactly what I wanted?

It was.

This was what I had desperately dreamed of for seven years.

A massive salary and high social standing.

Becoming a son and older brother my family could be proud of, and giving them a comfortable life.

Becoming someone others envied and admired instead of ignored and looked down on.

I can have it all now.

I could spend the rest of my life enjoying all of it. Goodbye to my miserable old life. Goodbye to that shitty Murim.

Crack.

And goodbye to the fountain pen, too.

I relaxed my grip. Ink spilled from the shattered pen and soaked into the contract.

"Mr. Jin Taekyung. Let me ask you again."

Team Leader Choi pulled out a white handkerchief and wiped the ink that had splashed onto his chin.

Despite the sudden mess, he looked perfectly calm.

"That problem from last time. Have you really resolved it?"

"No."

The moment I answered, I felt a weight lift from my chest.

"If it's something I can help you with…"

"I appreciate the offer, but I have to handle this myself."

Team Leader Choi studied me with an odd look, then gave a quiet laugh.

"I didn't know signing a contract could be this difficult. I never expected to be turned down three times, either."

He sounded more amused by the situation than angry.

"When would be a good time for the fourth offer?"

He had probably meant it half as a joke, but my answer was serious.

"Tomorrow. Same time, same place."

"Tomorrow?"

"Yes. Tomorrow."

Only one day.

But for me, it would be a month, or perhaps several.

Team Leader Choi had no way of knowing that, and he furrowed his brow.

“I don’t much like jokes like that.”

“Neither do I. Not jokes like this.”

He had no idea what my words meant.

“I’ll be sure to see you.”

It was a vow to myself.

A vow that I would return alive.

And…

“Tomorrow, you’ll have to raise the contract terms even further.”

I left the café, leaving Team Leader Choi behind with his eyes wide.

“Phew.”

I took a deep breath and opened the capsule.

The sight of the sagging seat and VR headset made my heart pound. Even after coming this far, temptation kept rearing its head and whispering to me.

Don’t go back.

Forget everything and be satisfied with your life here.

Everyone you met in Murim was an NPC, and Murim is nothing more than a game.

Right. There had been a time when I thought that way.

But after wrestling with it, I realized that one way or another, I was going back.

I’d already reached my conclusion a long time ago.

On the night of the blizzard, I had gone back for Gong Yacheong.

I had brought along two young siblings who were nothing but baggage, and instead of using the reconnaissance squad as shields, I had fought Jopil and nearly died.

It probably started then.

That was when the three letters NPC, lodged in my mind, began to fade.

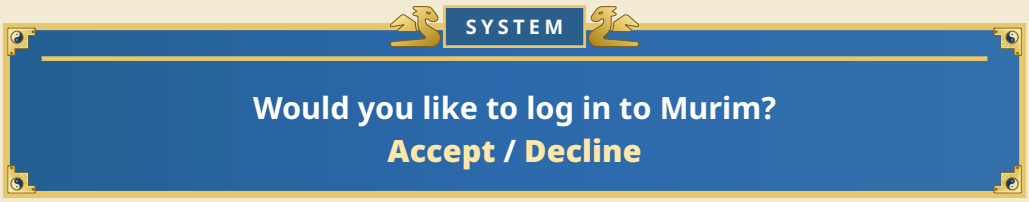
That was when I saw the two-character word for family in Jin Wikyung’s back as he told me to survive and turned away.[274]

“Fuck. My life really is a variety show.”

With a hollow, complaining laugh, I climbed into the capsule. The moment I put on the VR headset, a single line of text appeared in front of me.

Ding.

[274] In Korean writing, each syllable is written as a single character block; the word for “family” consists of two such blocks, contrasting with the three Roman letters in “NPC.”



“Yes.”

My consciousness faded. My vision went dark.

I logged in.

Chapter 55

This is driving me crazy.

Hyuk Mujin felt the world go yellow before his eyes.

Assassins disguised as disciples of minor sects. The Head Elder's betrayal. That alone was enough to make his head explode, but…

Why the hell did this guy collapse too?!

Jin Taekyung had passed out without warning. The reconnaissance squad members had taken turns slapping his cheeks and shaking him by the collar, but he still showed no sign of waking.

He's definitely still breathing.

It was enough to make a ghost weep. And with things as they were, Hyuk Mujin—the deputy squad leader—had ended up in charge of this enormous mess.

"You, and you."

Mujin singled out two of the reconnaissance squad members still standing there in a daze.

"Return to the main family at once and report what happened."

The Head Elder.

Mujin did not know why one of the family's most respected elders, a hero of the old Great Faction War, had devised such a dark scheme or what he hoped to gain from it.

But they had to prevent the worst from coming to pass.

"The rest of us are heading for the main force. Hurry!"

Mujin hoisted the unconscious Jin Taekyung onto his back.

After running for roughly two hours, the world went yellow before his eyes again—this time for a different reason.

I'm going to die.

It had only been a few days since Jopil's brutal palm strike had left him with internal injuries. He had boasted to Jin Taekyung that he was almost fully recovered, but in truth, he needed at least two solid weeks of rest.

"Huff… huff."

He was soaked through, and his legs were trembling.

He would have fallen behind even if he had only been trying to keep up. With the solidly built Jin Taekyung on his back, he was practically dying.

Ah, Mother. Father.

Now he was even hallucinating his parents—who were alive and well—beckoning to him. The woman standing beside them had a face he often saw in the temple hall.

Guanyin Bodhisattva?[275]

"Child. You have suffered enough. You may rest now."

Her benevolent smile slowly put Mujin's heart at ease.

Yeah. I've done enough. The squad leader drops like a rock when it matters most, and these bastards won't even offer to carry him for me, whether I drop dead or not.

Fuck it. Whatever.

Mujin was just about to let go when—

"Whew… haaah."

Warm breath slipped into his ear. He knew who it was without turning around. Tears of relief stung Hyuk's eyes.

"Captain!"

Jin Taekyung grinned and whispered,

"Candy in your ear."[276]

Clang! Clang!

"Kill them! Kill them!"

"Graaah!"

Blood sprayed and screams rang out on every side. A blood-soaked martial artist crawled on all fours between the corpses.

His still-youthful face was stained with pain and terror.

"Hnnh… hhhk…"

He tried to hold it back, but the sobs kept breaking free. He had spent ten years gritting his teeth and honing his martial arts, yet none of it had helped him on this blood-soaked battlefield.

The senior he had relied on was dead. So was the fellow disciple who had been like a brother. Weapons had poured in from every direction, splitting open bellies and hacking limbs apart.

"Mother… Mother…"

He called for her over and over until his face suddenly went rigid.

Shunk—!

A spearhead protruded from his chest.

His eyes flew wide for an instant, then the light faded from them. A wandering martial artist with a bandit's beard pulled his rusty spear free and grinned.

"What's a brat doing here?"

---

[275] Guanyin, known as Gwaneum in Korea, is the bodhisattva of compassion in East Asian Buddhism.

[276] "Candy in your ear" and "Was it sweet as a dream?" reference lyrics from the Korean pop song "My Ear's Candy."

But even a wandering martial artist who had survived countless brushes with death could not dodge the blade that came flying at him a moment later.

Slice—

A silver line flashed, and the wandering martial artist's head shot into the air.

A wandering martial artist killed a martial artist. Another martial artist killed the wandering martial artist.

Nameless men killed and died on every side, over and over.

That was what a battlefield was.

Yes. This was what it was like.

The Head Elder gazed over the battlefield, lost in memory.

Eight Spring Gorge. A battleground that had earned a single line in the history of the Great Faction War decades ago. How many people had died in that narrow gorge?

I was young then, too.

His body had been strong, and his heart had burned hot. Back then, the embarrassing word chivalry had still meant so much to him.

But the Great Faction War had changed the Head Elder. He had grown weary of the endless fighting and afraid of death.

What good is a chivalrous warrior? Die, and you're nothing but a ghost.

That realization had been a form of enlightenment. In the end, he had survived and become a hero. After long years of patient endurance, he had finally reached this point.

Now it was time to reap the fruit.

The Head Elder turned his shrewd old eyes toward the man standing beside him.

What a waste. Such a waste.

Jin Wikyung was a remarkable talent. He was young, highly accomplished in martial arts, and above all, possessed the dignity and judgment a leader needed. He sometimes allowed sentiment to sway him, but perhaps that was also why he was so deeply respected within the family.

He is more than capable of restoring this family.

If Jin Wikyung became the Family Head, and if his two younger brothers—each already distinguishing himself—stood firmly behind him…

The Head Elder caught himself and let out a short laugh.

What a ridiculous thing to be thinking after coming this far. Besides, Jin Taekyung was probably already dead, reduced to a lonely ghost.

"I've grown old."

Jin Wikyung reacted to the quiet mutter.

"Did you say something?"

“Nothing of importance. Old men tend to talk to themselves. More importantly, how does the battle look to you, Lesser Family Head?”

“It is going in our favor, but…”

Jin Wikyung’s expression darkened slightly. They held the advantage in troop quality and terrain, but their casualties continued to mount.

There was no way he could watch members of his family die and feel at ease.

“Lesser Family Head. I understand how you feel, but do not act rashly.”

The Head Elder’s warning was stern.

“A leader must know when to step forward. The longer the battle drags on, the more impatient the enemy will become. That is the moment we must seize.”

“The Mount Heng Sword Sect will soon throw its full strength at us.”

“They’ll put their Peak masters at the front. Their Sect Leader, Lee Cheonbaek, may even come himself.”

“Then everything will be decided.”

The Head Elder nodded.

“If you, Wipeng, and I hold off the enemy commanders while arrows rain down from the cliffs, their morale will collapse.”

“It’s a shame we can’t use fire. I resent the heavens.”

The narrow terrain of Eight Spring Gorge was perfect for a fire attack, but the heavy snowfall several days ago had left snowdrifts everywhere.

Yet even if the heavens had taken Jin Wikyung’s side, what he hoped for would never have happened.

The men drawing their bows atop the cliffs would obey the Head Elder’s command.

“I resent the heavens as well.”

The Head Elder meant it.

He had waited far too many years. He resented Heaven’s mandate for arriving only now.

“Candy in your ear.”[277]

“Captain!”

“Was it sweet as a dream?”[278]

“…Are you insane?”

[277] “Candy in your ear” and “Was it sweet as a dream?” reference lyrics from the Korean pop song “My Ear’s Candy.”

[278] “Candy in your ear” and “Was it sweet as a dream?” reference lyrics from the Korean pop song “My Ear’s Candy.”

The sight of Hyuk Mujin's ugly face filled me with relief. I felt the same way about the other reconnaissance squad members who crowded around after hearing I was awake.

"Captain's awake!"

"What happened? Are you all right?"

"Wasn't he dead?"

I'd have to deal with the bastard who had just said that later. I memorized his face and name, then grinned at everyone.

"Been a while. You guys been well?"

"Huh?"

"What's that supposed to mean?"

"Did he hit his head?"

"His head—check his head!"

Exactly the reaction I'd expected.

Still, it was a greeting I'd genuinely wanted to give them at least once.

…Not that they didn't treat me like a lunatic afterward.

"Anyway, that's enough greeting. How long was I out?"

Mujin sank to the ground with a thud and answered.

"Definitely more than an hour, but probably a little under two."

I'd spent two weeks in reality, so the timing roughly lined up. I nodded and moved on to my next question.

"Was I breathing?"

"Why are you asking that all of a sudden? Seriously."

"We don't have time. Just answer."

"You were breathing, so you woke up. Otherwise, you'd be dead."

Fair enough.

Apparently, logging in or out left my body on the other side in a state of suspended animation.

If I'd logged out before dealing with the assassins, there wouldn't have been a body left for me to return to.

I'd think about that later.

There was a more urgent problem.

"The main force?"

"We were already heading toward them. I split off two men and sent them back to the family."

"Good. How much farther?"

"At least another two hours."

"Two hours…"

"Uh, Captain. I'm sorry to say this, but… I think we have to consider the worst-case scenario."

Mujin and every member of the reconnaissance squad fell silent. Nobody had to ask what the worst-case scenario meant.

I've thought about it too.

According to what Gwak Jun had said just before he died, this betrayal had been meticulously planned for a long time.

But the plan had exactly one flaw.

Me.

The Head Elder had underestimated me.

No—maybe in a way, he had overestimated me. He'd sent dozens of First Rate masters just to kill me.

Even that hadn't been enough. I had survived.

He made a mistake.

On top of that, when Gwak Jun first revealed his true colors, he'd said they needed to get moving soon if they wanted to arrive on time.

Which meant…

"It's not too late."

I met each squad member's eyes and spoke firmly.

"Don't think about the worst-case scenario. No matter what it takes, I'll change that outcome."

"Captain…"

"So, Mujin."

I gave Mujin's choked-up face a good-natured smile.

"Get up. Now."

"I'm dying here."

"Want to get beaten to death instead?"

"…"

"Run even one more step in the time we've got. Don't you know marathon spirit?"

"I don't."

Ah. Right. This was Murim.

"Anyway, get up. Another hour will do it."

Mujin grabbed his trembling legs and forced himself upright, then cocked his head.

"An hour?"

"Yeah. An hour."

"I already told you. Even at full speed, it'll take two hours."

"Exactly. An hour."

"What are you even talking about…?"

"Mujin."

"Yes?"

Mujin blinked at me with the guileless eyes of an ox. I smiled even brighter.

"You ever heard of grit?"

I didn't care whether it should take two hours or four.

We were getting there in one hour. Period.

"Run like hell. That'll do it."

"Huk."

Every face in the reconnaissance squad went deathly pale.

"We've been blocked."

"Casualties are mounting. Sect Leader, please take action."

Even as the reports continued, Blood Wolf Sword Lee Cheonbaek, Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect, did not open his eyes.

I was too hasty.

The war had started in a rush, and the preparations had been just as thin. Provisions were burning down fast, morale was dropping, and deserters were popping up one after another.

They read us completely.

Rage over his son's death and impatience with the situation had clouded his judgment. He had ignored his subordinates' advice and chosen the fastest route.

And so he had encountered the Jin Family of Taiyuan in a narrow gorge whose very name had been unfamiliar to him: Eight Spring Gorge.

"Sect Leader!"

At his subordinate's shout, Lee Cheonbaek slowly opened his eyes.

The formidable eyesight of a Peak master pierced the battlefield.

"Gaaah!"

"Wipe them out! They're nothing but rabble!"

Well over a thousand of his men were trapped at the narrow entrance, unable to advance. The wandering martial artists and mounted bandits he had placed at the front had numbers, but individually, they were inferior even to the Jin Family's rank-and-file warriors.

Sword fodder, at best.

Just as he clicked his tongue inwardly, several dozen wandering martial artists began peeling away from the front line. The middle-aged wanderer leading them shouted at the top of his lungs.

“This is a dog’s death! Brothers of the Blood Rain Group, fall back!”

Those became the middle-aged wandering martial artist’s last words.

Whoosh—

A light breeze.

That was all the wanderer felt.

He did not know that Blood Wolf Sword Lee Cheonbaek had already brushed past him. He did not know that the wandering martial artists under him had frozen in terror.

He only thought, all of a sudden, that his neck felt hot.

“Uh…”

His cleanly severed head dropped with a dull thunk. The headless body staggered a few more steps, then went down like a rotten old tree.

“Blood Rain Group, was it?”

Lee Cheonbaek pointed his sword at the frozen wanderers. Not a single drop of blood stained the blade.

“Go back.”

A Peak master’s killing intent shot into them like a blade. The wandering martial artists charged toward the front even faster than they had come.

They had decided that fighting at the front beat throwing themselves at the Peak master in front of them.

“Rat bastards.”

Lee Cheonbaek went after them. His burning gaze was aimed somewhere ahead, where the Jin Family of Taiyuan’s command had to be.

“The Sect Leader is taking the lead!”

“Everyone, charge! Wipe out the Jin Family of Taiyuan!”

As Lee Cheonbaek stepped forward, the Mount Heng Sword Sect’s core forces followed.

Three Peak masters and dozens of First Rate masters surged toward the front.

Chapter 56

The Head Elder was the first to notice Lee Cheonbaek's arrival.

The leader himself has entered the fray.

The fierce wave of qi blasting across the gorge, and the killing intent rolling with it, made that obvious even without seeing him.

Sure enough—

"You bastards!"

Lee Cheonbaek appeared with a thunderous roar. His half-gray hair whipped around like a mane, and his eyes burned red.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect's core forces arrived on his heels—First Rate martial artists and three Peak masters!

"Wipe out those Jin Family of Taiyuan bastards!"

"The Sect Leader is here! The Sect Leader has come!"

"Waaaah!"

The cheers rekindled their fading will to fight. Lee Cheonbaek surged down the path that had opened before him.

"Kill those treacherous Jin Family of Taiyuan bastards!"

Jin Wikyung was not about to stand by and watch.

"The time has come."

The Head Elder answered.

"I agree."

In truth, he had not welcomed Lee Cheonbaek's arrival. A certain amount of attrition would have made the cleanup easier.

But neither the Jin Family of Taiyuan nor the Mount Heng Sword Sect had suffered significant losses yet.

It doesn't matter. They'll be making their move anyway.

The two great powers claimed to rule Shanxi, but compared to them, they were insignificant.

Even at the height of its power, the Jin Family of Taiyuan had been treated as nothing more than a martial family from the frontier. How could it possibly stand against them?

A mere martial family…

The Head Elder swallowed a bitter smile and drew his sword.

Shing.

For many years, he had carried two swords—one in his heart and one at his waist.

There was no need for further words.

"I'll handle Lee Cheonbaek."

"Please do."

Who was Blood Wolf Sword Lee Cheonbaek? The man who had founded the Mount Heng Sword Sect with nothing but a single sword, and who now meant to become the ruler of an entire city. Enemy or not, there was no denying he was a Peak martial artist of the highest caliber.

I want to fight him.

But Jin Wikyung forced down the heat in his blood.

This battle would decide the fate of his family. He had to set aside his fighting spirit.

"Wipeng."

"Yes."

Wipeng had already drawn his sharp, narrow sword and taken his place at Jin Wikyung's side.

"You and I will handle the rest."

"As you command."

There was not a trace of hesitation in his answer. Jin Wikyung smiled faintly and drew his own sword—the treasured blade passed down through generations of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

It was the only thing left behind by the father who had vanished one day without a trace.

> I'm going to travel around the Central Plains for a while.
> Use this in the meantime.

Remembering the letter stuffed carelessly into the scabbard made Jin Wikyung's blood boil all over again.

Travel around the Central Plains, my ass. You spent your whole life having fun.

He had no idea where that so-called Family Head was or what he was doing, and his second brother, thousands of li[279] away, had probably only just received the letter.

I have to protect them.

Martial artists, maids, servants, children.

Jin Wikyung was the Family Head of the Jin Family of Taiyuan now. No one else.

Whether they lived or died was a burden he alone had to bear.

We will win.

Jin Wikyung's eyes flared wide. He raised his sword and unleashed an azure dragon's roar.

"Don't let a single one of them live!"

[279] In this Chinese setting, one li is about 500 meters (0.311 miles).

Whoosh, whoosh, whoosh!

The Jin Family's masters kicked off the ground and soared into the air. At the signal, a single fire arrow rose high behind them.

That was when dozens of figures stood up along the cliffs.

"Fire!"

Beneath a sudden rain of arrows, the clash between the masters who would decide the course of the battle began.

Blood Wolf Sword Lee Cheonbaek was a born martial artist.

Blessed with an innate talent for martial arts and the instincts of a beast, he had cut down his enemies and fulfilled his ambitions one after another.

He had founded the Mount Heng Sword Sect, then strengthened it by absorbing the surrounding factions one by one. His aim was to lay the foundation for a great family that would one day be recognized even in the Central Plains.

"Sect Leader! The Young Master…"

Then, one day, his second son came home a corpse.

He had not died in a fair duel. Deadly poison had killed him, blood pouring from all seven orifices.[280]

Lee Cheonbaek swore an oath.

He would kill and burn everything connected to the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

And now Jin Wikyung stood before him.

Flames blazed in Lee Cheonbaek's eyes.

"You bastard—!"

He charged like a beast. His sword, imbued with one jiazi[281] of internal energy, shone milky white.

With this much power, it could cut through any armor or divine weapon.

That bastard dies here!

Certain of his victory, Lee Cheonbaek was about to swing when—

"Oho. Sword Energy?"

A quiet voice came from behind him.

Lee Cheonbaek's heart sank.

How?

He had given up his back far too easily. His response was lightning-fast. Gripping his sword in reverse, he stabbed behind him.

Whoosh.

[280] The seven orifices are the two eyes, two ears, two nostrils, and mouth.

[281] A jiazi is a traditional sixty-year cycle.

The blade pierced empty air, but the attack bought him time. Only then did he get a look at his opponent.

A beard hung down to the man's chest, and a relaxed smile played at the corners of his mouth.

He was a white-haired old man.

Lee Cheonbaek recognized him at once.

"Blade of Flowers?"

The Head Elder nodded.

"I haven't heard that name in a long time. And you must be Lee Cheonbaek."

"That's right."

Even as he answered, a chill ran down Lee Cheonbaek's spine.

He did not dare look for Jin Wikyung or check how the battle was unfolding. If he took his eyes off the old man, he felt as though his head would come off at once.

Coincidence? No.

It was true that the sight of Jin Wikyung had driven him into a frenzy. It was also true that impatience had gotten the better of him.

But Lee Cheonbaek was a Peak master.

A Peak master who had reached the level of injuring others with Sword Energy.

There could only be one answer.

A master!

Whether by a full form or half a form, the old man before him stood above Lee Cheonbaek.

Lee Cheonbaek tightened his grip on his beloved sword.

"I've heard much of your reputation."

"Reputation? I'm nothing more than an old man put out to pasture."

"Then why didn't you stay there?"

"You're still young, so there's a lot you don't understand. The older you get, the more important it is to move around once in a while."

Lee Cheonbaek ground his teeth at the Head Elder's sly manner.

Damn old man.

He had been watching the Jin Family of Taiyuan for a long time.

He knew there was a faction centered around the Head Elder that opposed the Family Head. He had even privately hoped the family would split from within.

Instead, the exact opposite had happened.

So when an outside enemy invades, they unite as one?

Lee Cheonbaek stared at the Head Elder with heavy eyes, then opened his mouth.

"How strong are you?"

"As strong as you believe me to be."

“Word games.”

“I was thirty when they called me Blade of Flowers.”

The Head Elder had already been a Peak martial artist at thirty.

Now he was seventy. How much had his martial arts changed since then?

After a moment’s thought, Lee Cheonbaek gave a wry laugh.

I’ve grown old too.

Blood Wolf Sword.

In his youth, Lee Cheonbaek had been unstoppable. Without an exceptional martial art or a respectable master, he had carved his way through everything on his own.

Even against an opponent a level above him, he never backed down. He charged like a wolf and tore out their throats.

I lived half my life that way…

At some point, people had started calling him Sect Leader instead of Blood Wolf Sword.

Blood relatives, subordinates, wealth.

The things he had to protect had piled up like a mountain.

He spent less time training and more time handling affairs. When the moment came to act, he stopped to think instead.

Just as he was doing now.

“Why are you laughing?”

Lee Cheonbaek answered the Head Elder’s question.

“I’m laughing because I find myself pathetic.”

“You’re afraid of me.”

Lee Cheonbaek nodded in silence.

“Were you afraid of death?”

“For a very brief moment.”

“And now?”

“I’m going to kill you.”

“Someone of your level can’t manage that.”

“You have to measure them to know which is longer, don’t you?”

“That’s what the short ones always say. They never realize that even after you measure, the result doesn’t change.”

“You have a sharp tongue.”

“My tongue isn’t the only thing that’s sharp.”

The Head Elder lowered his sword.

It looked like an ordinary blue-steel sword, but the moment it entered his hand, it began to give off a vicious killing edge.

“Come at me first.”

Lee Cheonbaek did not refuse.

His blade drew in one jiazi[282] of internal energy, raising a shimmering haze of light.

The level of injuring others with Sword Energy—a realm countless martial artists dreamed of reaching.

Tssss.

The instant the Sword Energy rose three chi[283]—about ten centimeters—Lee Cheonbaek shot forward.

A unique martial art, perfected through countless real battles, unfolded from his fingertips.

Whoosh! Whoosh-whoosh-whoosh!

Boom!

Sword Energy slashed in every direction. Screams erupted amid the mounds of dirt blasted into the air.

“Graaagh!”

They were the cries of martial artists caught in the gap.

Every voice belonged to a young man.

A red warning light went on in Lee Cheonbaek’s mind.

Behind!

He spun and swung in the same motion.

He saw a white beard fluttering in the wind.

And the sword in the old man’s hand.

Boom!

Kh.

The thunderous impact sent Lee Cheonbaek reeling backward. He was not even given time to feel the pain in his wrist.

Boom! Boom! Boom!

Every time the two swords met, thunder and lightning rolled.

Sword Energy streamed from their blades, smashing the ground and tearing through the air.

Whoosh!

“What in the world is that…?”

The martial artists on both sides forgot their own battles. They could only stare, dumbstruck, at the incredible life-and-death duel.

At that moment, every one of them was thinking the same thing.

---

[282] A jiazi is a traditional sixty-year cycle.

[283] One chi is about 3.03 centimeters (1.19 inches); three chi are about 9.1 centimeters (3.6 inches), rounded to ten centimeters in the source.

Are those two really human beings like us?

The ceaseless thunder. A display of Sword Energy so dazzling that merely watching it left them spellbound.

The movements of the two men at its center were faster and stronger than anyone they had ever seen.

Someone murmured as if groaning.

“So this is a Peak master…”

To their eyes, either man could have won.

But the superiority in strength was obvious.

After some three hundred exchanges, the Head Elder’s swordplay changed.

Whoosh—slice!

“Ghk.”

Lee Cheonbaek bit down on his lip.

Blood streamed from the forearm the Head Elder’s sword had raked.

The strength drained from his sword hand.

Of all things.

He immediately shifted the sword to his other hand, but he was right-handed by nature.

Even fighting at full strength might not have been enough. Now that his sword arm was injured, the outcome was all but decided.

Boom!

Crack.

A single blow snapped his wrist.

His Sword Energy, weakened by the severe drain on his internal energy, could no longer stand against the Head Elder.

But Lee Cheonbaek did not give up.

Not yet. It isn’t over yet.

He had taken worse injuries than this, plenty of times.

Drawing on the strength in his arm, waist, and legs, Lee Cheonbaek swung his sword.

No—he tried to.

Slash!

This time, it was the knee.

The severed tendons gave way, and Lee Cheonbaek’s knee buckled against his will.

His sword carved uselessly through empty air.

Shhk. Shhk-shhk-shhk.

His side. His shoulder. His chest.

Lightning stabbed and sliced through his entire body. The fierce Sword Energy did more than cut flesh and bone—it churned his insides.

"Bleeegh!"

Lee Cheonbaek vomited blood mixed with pieces of his organs and looked up at the Head Elder through clouded eyes.

The old man's face was impassive.

There was no thrill at having defeated his opponent, nor any joy at the war's end.

To him, this was nothing more than the natural outcome.

"Cough… So Shanxi's Number One was standing right in front of me."

"If you're not Number One Under Heaven, you're nothing more than a martial brute from the frontier. Neither you nor I are made for such heights."

"Tell me what you want. I'll give you my neck. I'll make my men surrender, and I'll seal the sect for ten years—or a hundred. So…"

"No. What I want is annihilation. Complete annihilation, without a single blade of grass left standing."

"Why…!"

"Don't ask me that. If you had won, it would have been our family facing annihilation."

Lee Cheonbaek glared at the Head Elder with bloodshot eyes.

He wanted to snap that wrinkled neck then and there.

But grievously wounded as he was, all he could do was force out his voice.

"Jin Family of Taiyuan. You started this, didn't you? You killed that boy—my son!"

"Ah, Lee Seogeun. Yes. That child was where it all began."

A sardonic smile touched the Head Elder's lips.

Even the master of the Mount Heng Sword Sect, one of the two powers that divided Shanxi between them, had failed to notice their intervention.

Even now, with death staring him in the face.

When you meet Yama,[284] ask him who killed Lee Seogeun.

The Sound Transmission burrowed into Lee Cheonbaek's ear, and his eyes flared wide.

"What does that mean…?"

It was a thoroughly impulsive act.

Perhaps pity for Lee Cheonbaek, who was about to die knowing nothing.

Or perhaps it was nothing more than an old man's whim.

Consider it fare for the road to the afterlife. Think it over on your long journey.

The Head Elder raised his sword.

The light of the setting sun beyond the winter ridge splintered across the blade.

[284] Yama is the Buddhist lord of the underworld.

With this…

With the death of the giant called Lee Cheonbaek, the Mount Heng Sword Sect would collapse.

Those who resisted would die. Those who surrendered would be taken prisoner.

One war would end…

And a new war would begin the moment everyone was drunk on victory.

It's over.

At last, the Head Elder's sword moved.

Screeeech—!

A sharp sound tore through the air.

Sensing his end, Lee Cheonbaek closed his eyes.

The blade, wrapped in blue Sword Energy, traced a beautiful arc.

Slice.

But both the sound that had come first and the direction of the sword were not what Lee Cheonbaek had expected.

A spear had come flying at the Head Elder's back out of nowhere, and he split it apart with Sword Energy.

The old man roared in fury.

"Who the hell are you?"

The answer came an instant later.

"It's me, you fucking bastard!"

The Head Elder saw the face of a young man standing tall on a low hill, and groaned.

"Jin Taekyung?"

Chapter 57

"Faster! Go faster!"

"Huff… huff!"

We ran like mad. Hyuk Mujin was panting like he was about to drop dead, but he didn't. Whenever he started to slow down, I pressed the spearhead against his back, and he took off like Red Hare.[285]

Then the sounds began to reach us.

Screams. Steel clashing against steel…

Good. The battle wasn't over yet.

Relief hit me, and my heart hammered at the same time. The fighting was still going on, but I still hadn't confirmed whether Jin Wikyung was alive or dead.

What if he died because we were a minute—or even a second—too late?

If that happens…

Crack.

My grip tightened around the spear before I realized it. I drew internal energy from my dantian and sent it flowing into both legs.

"C-Captain!"

I kept running, leaving the reconnaissance squad's voices fading behind me. The countless tracks left by the main force and the growing din of the battlefield showed me the way.

Stay alive. Stay alive. Please, stay—

There!

Below a low hill, less than two hundred meters[286] away, countless martial artists were locked in a bloody struggle, killing and being killed.

"Die!"

"Gaaah!"

Corpses and blood—and more corpses, more blood!

The sight before me was so brutal that it left me speechless.

If my years as a Hunter hadn't hardened me to this sort of thing, I probably would have stood there stunned for a long time.

Jin Wikyung! Where is Jin Wikyung?

But someone else caught my eye first.

White hair, unmistakable even from this distance.

The Head Elder!

He stood in front of someone, sword in hand.

---

[285] Red Hare is the legendary warhorse of Lü Bu in Romance of the Three Kingdoms.

[286] Two hundred meters is about 656 ft.

The Head Elder's back blocked most of my view, but the man kneeling in front of him was huge and held a sword of his own.

A big man with a sword?

Only one person came to mind.

Jin Wikyung. If I wanted to save him, I had to act now.

Open Inventory.

My Murim Inventory was packed with all kinds of things.

The spear I pulled out was one of them, with a wooden shaft and a steel head.

Equip Weapon.

Spear in hand, I took several steps back.

Two hundred meters.[287] An impossibly long distance—especially if I was trying to hit someone with a thrown spear.

But I had to do it.

No reason I can't.

Strength, Stamina, Agility.

I pushed the stats I'd built up traveling between Murim and reality to their limits.

With internal energy in my arm, I could send the spear farther and harder.

"Hup."

I held my breath and stepped forward. The first step was slow, the final step heavy. My arm snapped out like a whip, and the spear shot from my fingertips.

Fwoooosh!

The throw was faster and more accurate than I'd expected. It looked ready to punch straight through the Head Elder's back.

But then…

Shhk.

What the hell was that?

Blue light flashed, and the spear split cleanly in two from the tip of the spearhead to the end of the shaft.

I couldn't tell whether I'd thrown a spear or a birthday cake.

"Who the hell are you?"

The old man had quite a set of lungs.

"It's me, you son of a bitch!"

That was probably the first time in the Head Elder's life anyone had cursed him like that.

To make matters worse, he and I belonged to the same family in Murim. Going by the family tree, the difference in seniority between us was roughly that of an archaeopteryx and a chick.

---

[287] Two hundred meters is about 656 ft.

That alone was plenty of reason for him to be stunned, but I still had one finishing blow left.

"The Head Elder is—!"

My voice, loaded with internal energy, thundered across the battlefield. Even I was startled by how loud it was. I could only imagine what it sounded like to everyone else.

I stared at his cold, frozen face in the distance and shouted with all my might.

"A traitor!"

Jin Wikyung heard the voice immediately after bringing down all three Peak masters of the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

No, it wasn't just him. Everyone on the battlefield heard the shout.

"Who the hell are you?"

"It's me, you son of a bitch!"

Cursing?

That was common enough on a battlefield. But it was a different matter when the target was the Head Elder and the young man who had appeared out of nowhere to hurl such abuse at him was Jin Taekyung.

"Isn't that… isn't that the Third Young Master?"

"What? That's Jin Taekyung? But why?"

"What's going on?"

Jin Wikyung was wondering the same thing.

What in the world is happening?

His youngest brother, who should have been in the rear, had appeared on the battlefield. That alone was bewildering enough, but now he was hurling unspeakable abuse at one of the family's most senior elders.

Wipeng, standing beside him, muttered, "He's completely lost his mind."

Jin Wikyung was about to nod without thinking when—

"The Head Elder is—!"

An even bigger bomb dropped.

"A traitor!"

An icy silence fell over the battlefield. Even the sporadic clash of weapons came to an abrupt stop.

Everyone stared blankly at Jin Taekyung.

What kind of bullshit is this?

Betrayal? The Head Elder?

Is he drunk? The Third Young Master must be slipping back into his old habits.

The martial artists of the Jin Family of Taiyuan naturally thought so, and those of the Mount Heng Sword Sect were no different.

Even the senior members who had recently begun to think better of Jin Taekyung gaped at him.

"What a lunatic."

"Does he have any idea who the Old Master is?"

If anyone deserved the most credit for this war, it was undoubtedly the Head Elder.

He had helped Jin Wikyung unite the family's forces, and in today's battle, he had defeated Lee Cheonbaek.

Even setting aside his contributions to the war, Jin Taekyung's claim could only sound absurd.

Who was the Head Elder?

He was a master of the previous generation whose title, the Blade of Flowers, was renowned even across the Central Plains. He was a symbol of righteousness who had struck down countless fiends during the Great Faction War.

Every martial artist in Shanxi held some measure of respect for him.

"That man? A son of a bitch? A traitor?"

"Good heavens. That boy is smearing shit over the Jin Family of Taiyuan's three-hundred-year history."

The Jin Family of Taiyuan and the Mount Heng Sword Sect—everyone present seemed to share the same thought.

With at least one exception.

The Head Elder. Betrayal.

The moment Jin Wikyung heard his youngest brother's words, he felt all the blood in his body run cold.

The vague sense that something was wrong had finally taken shape.

Lee Seogeun's death was where it began.

He had died after being poisoned with a lethal toxin. The Mount Heng Sword Sect had named the Jin Family of Taiyuan as the culprit, sparking the war.

But the most important question had been left unanswered.

Who was the killer?

Even now, with the war nearing its end, the culprit hiding behind it all had never been identified. No—precisely because the war was nearing its end, no one cared about the killer's identity anymore.

Survival of the fittest. The strong would survive and claim everything.

This war... was wrong from the very beginning.

Lee Seogeun's death.

The unnaturally rapid spread of the rumors.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect had declared war, and the Jin Family of Taiyuan had responded. That was how the fighting had begun in earnest.

And the Head Elder was there.

The Head Elder, who had shut himself away from the world, had emerged immediately after news of Lee Seogeun's poisoning reached the family. His role within the family had been enormous.

A respected martial artist. A revered elder of the family.

Without the Head Elder's active support, the Jin Family of Taiyuan might have split in two.

We made it this far because of his help.

Then Jin Wikyung turned the thought around.

We made it this far because this was exactly what the Head Elder wanted.

In a moment too brief to even call an instant, Jin Wikyung reached his conclusion and spoke.

"Wipeng."

"Your orders."

"Cut down the First Elder."

"What?"

The stooped, emaciated old man—the First Elder—stared wide-eyed.

The senior members nearby were equally shocked.

"L-Lesser Family Head!"

"What is the meaning of this…?"

But Wipeng did not hesitate. Before anyone could react, his sword was already flying toward the First Elder's chest.

Clang-clang-clang!

Two swords suddenly cut in and knocked Wipeng's blade aside.

Their wielders were two enormously tall, fat old men.

They were the Second and Third Elders, who, together with the First Elder, called themselves the Head Elder's hands and feet.

Wipeng's brow twitched when he saw the faint Sword Energy clinging to their blades.

"You were hiding your martial arts."

The First Elder answered with a punch.

Boom!

The profound internal energy he had accumulated over his long life sent Wipeng flying. Then the First Elder straightened his stooped back.

The entire field froze at the emergence of yet another Peak master, one who had spent his life hidden in the Head Elder's shadow.

“First Elder, what… what is this?”

“Then could it be…?”

Betrayal.

The word stamped itself into everyone’s mind.

“That’s impossible!”

The White Tiger Hall Leader let out a shrill shout. If the Elders were the Head Elder’s hands and feet, then he had served faithfully as the First Elder’s.

“Elder, Lesser Family Head. There seems to have been some misunderstanding…”

But he never finished.

The First Elder jerked his chin, and the Second Elder moved with blinding speed, severing the White Tiger Hall Leader’s neck.

Shhk. Thud.

Jin Wikyung and the First Elder locked eyes across the space between them.

“You recruited the White Tiger Hall Leader too?”

“He was loud. That was all. The others were no different.”

Jin Wikyung’s guess had been half right and half wrong.

The Elders had betrayed them, but the senior members of the Elders’ faction had not.

“Then why… Ah!”

“Sharp. I’ll give you that.”

The First Elder drew a dark, grimy bamboo tube from inside his robes. The fuse was already burning, and almost nothing remained.

“How could we share such an important secret with men like them? Their job was done once they’d thrown the family into confusion. It made things easier if they had no idea what was happening outside.”

Jin Wikyung screamed, “Stop him!”

“You’re too late.”

The First Elder was right.

The moment the fuse burned to its end, something burst, and a red flame shot high into the sky.

Fwish—boom!

It was a signal.

The martial artists of the small and mid-sized sects collectively known as the Five Gates of Shanxi changed in an instant—the Samdo Sect, an alliance of three sects; the saber-focused Byeokdo Sect; and the Gunggui Sect, which had been raining arrows down from the cliffs without pause.

“Kill everyone in your path!”

“No exceptions! Wipe them all out!”

They were no longer the clumsy Third Rate martial artists they had seemed to be. Killing intent flowed from their eyes, and their sword paths were sharp.

This wasn't something they prepared overnight.

Jin Wikyung's expression hardened.

Boom!

The Head Elder looked up at the sky. Before the red flame had even faded, thunderous shouts erupted from every direction.

Too fast. Far too fast.

The signal was supposed to be sent only after the Mount Heng Sword Sect had been annihilated. The Five Gates of Shanxi were a blade honed over decades. It had to be swung once and bring everything to a lightning-fast end.

All things have their proper flow.

The plan that had proceeded without a hitch was beginning to unravel.

As the Head Elder smiled bitterly, a voice reached his ears.

"So… it was you."

Lee Cheonbaek.

His voice was faint, but his eyes burned more fiercely than ever.

"You still have the strength to speak?"

"I'll tear you apart while you're still alive."

No sooner had Lee Cheonbaek finished speaking than blood gushed from his mouth. The Head Elder pressed one of his acupoints and murmured, "That would be inconvenient just yet. You still have something to do."

Lee Cheonbaek despaired.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect had suffered heavy losses, but several hundred martial artists still remained. With its entire leadership destroyed, if the Sect Leader were now taken prisoner…

Kill me instead!

The anguished cry never left his mouth. The Head Elder pressed the Mute Acupoint, taking his voice. Then his hand brushed the Paralysis Acupoint, and Lee Cheonbaek's body went rigid.

He had become a living corpse with his eyes still open.

"You bastard! Get your hands off him!"

At the same moment, something shrieked through the air.

Fwoooosh!

The Head Elder did not panic. He swept his sword upward from below. Beyond the spear splitting in two along the line of his Sword Energy, Jin Taekyung was charging toward him at terrifying speed.

“Aaaaaah!”

“Captain! Please slow down a little!”

And with him came a dozen or so riffraff who had appeared from who knew where.

Chapter 58

The battlefield descended into chaos. At the signal, two hundred martial artists suddenly turned and swarmed in every direction like a pack of wolves.

“Kill them all!”

“Aaaaargh!”

They weren’t quite on the level of Gwak Jun and the assassins we’d fought earlier, but they radiated an aura like well-honed blades.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan and the Mount Heng Sword Sect. If the martial artists of both factions joined forces, we’d have a real chance—but right now, that looked difficult.

This is bad.

Worst case, I might have to pull Jin Wikyung out and run.

I was thinking that when the reconnaissance squad arrived behind me, breathing hard.

“Captain, maybe we can—huff!”

The moment they saw what was happening in front of them, their eyes nearly popped out. Hyuk Mujin, who came crawling up behind them, gaped as well.

“Bweeegh!”

“…So that was it.”

It must have been rough. After a fast, heavy burst of vomiting, Hyuk looked half-dead as he spoke.

“I think this is as far as I go.”

Anyone looking at him might have taken him for a wounded soldier who’d been stabbed while fighting bravely.

I gripped his shoulder hard.

“Mujin. You can do this.”

“No. I’m finished. I’ll only be a burden if I go.”

“A burden? You’re an excellent meat shie—”

“Excuse me?”

“Shield! You’re the Jin Family of Taiyuan’s shield!”

“I could have sworn you said meat shield.”

Ignoring Hyuk’s suspicious muttering, I hauled him to his feet. Right now, even a meat shield—no, a single extra hand—was precious.

Besides, apart from me, Hyuk was the strongest meat shield in the reconnaissance squad. Damn, it kept slipping out.

I deliberately lowered my voice.

“Our family is in danger, and you’re saying you want to run?”

If it had been me, I would have run.

“No, sir!”

A twenty-first-century office worker would have spat in your face and walked away even if you promised to file it as a workplace injury, but the reconnaissance squad was more loyal than I’d expected. Hyuk drew his sword, his face pale.

“Very well. If a martial artist has to die, he should die fighting.”

“That’s a fine resolve, but don’t die.”

“You just called me a meat shield.”

“You don’t trust me?”

“Yes.”

Hyuk’s answer was as sharp as a blade, and quiet laughter spread through the reconnaissance squad. The tension in my body, frozen by my first large-scale battle, eased a little.

I grinned and tightened my grip on my spear.

“Eyes wide, ears open. Follow my orders, and you’ll make it back alive.”

That was a vow I was making to myself. I would get these guys out alive somehow.

Please don’t die.

I didn’t know how this war would end, or who would live and who would die.

All I could do was give it everything I had.

“Let’s go.”

At that, we charged forward like a gale. We were an arrow with me at the tip, and our target had already been chosen.

The Head Elder.

Clear in the distance, I could see a white-haired old man. At his feet lay a fallen man surrounded by a pool of blood.

A ball of fire surged up from my gut.

“That’s my brother…”

I pulled a spear from where it had been driven into someone’s corpse like a gravestone. Then, in the next instant—

“Get your hands off him, you bastard!”

The spear shot straight ahead, devouring the hundreds of feet between us.

Someone in the reconnaissance squad let out a muffled cry.

“We got him!”

That was when the Head Elder’s sword moved.

Shuk.

A streak of light. The spear split in half and bounced away to either side.

Same result as before. But this time, we’d closed the distance considerably, so I saw it clearly.

The blue flash that surged along his blade for an instant.

Aura?

No. Why was that showing up here?

Aura.

A crystallization of mana that only an A-rank Hunter or higher could draw out.

Mana and internal energy were different only in name. Both were forms of qi. And since this was Murim, that made it Sword Energy.

Sword Energy.

Heh heh heh.

Fuck. Are you kidding me?

I'd known for a long time that the Head Elder was a master. I'd even been prepared to fight him if it came to that. The problem was that a Head Elder who could use Sword Energy hadn't been part of the plan.

This is a bit much.

I glanced aside and saw more than ten pairs of trembling eyes.

Hyuk Mujin's were practically undergoing an earthquake.

"C-Captain."

"Y-Yeah?"

"That just now… looked like Sword Energy."

"Yeah…"

"Can you use Sword Energy too?"

"If I could, I would've used it already. Even Jopil wasn't at that level."

"Right?"

"Right. But aren't you exhausted?"

"I feel like I'm going to throw up."

As if we'd agreed on it, we slowed down. We'd gone from the hundred-meter dash[288] to race walking, but it still felt like we were walking into a lion's jaws.

"Uh, Captain."

Hyuk spoke with every trace of color drained from his face. Judging by his complexion alone, he could have passed for a white man.

"Are you sure the Head Elder betrayed us?"

"I'm sure."

"Could it possibly be a misunderstanding—"

Before he could finish, three or four black-clad men charged at us with a shout.

[288] 100 meters is about 328 ft.

"Protect our lord!"

"For the Head Elder!"

Get a load of those lines. They'd work perfectly as a toast at a Jin Family of Taiyuan year-end party.

I cut down every last black-clad man charging us, then looked at Hyuk.

"Uh, what were you about to say?"

"…Nothing."

Having failed to win the argument in his own head, Hyuk hung his head with a grim expression.

But only for a moment. Step by step, the closer we drew to the Head Elder, the more desperately he searched for a way out.

"Why do people have to fight?"

Is this bastard aiming for the Nobel Peace Prize?

"You said earlier you'd fight and die. Like a martial artist."

"That was the worst-case scenario. Wouldn't it be better to settle this with a conversation?"

"Talking would be nice. But they sent assassins after us first."

"Oh."

"And I threw a spear."

"Ah."

"And I cursed while throwing it."

"Ah—ahhh."

By the time we were within about a hundred feet of the Head Elder, Hyuk's face looked like death. The other reconnaissance squad members didn't say anything, but I could see them trembling.

Of course, I wasn't much different. Just thinking about Sword Energy made my heart pound.

I'm well and truly screwed.

But I had no intention of running. If I had, I never would have come back in the first place. I would have been content with reality and simply kept living there.

I'd already come too far. There was only one path left.

"Stop."

Everyone halted as if they'd been waiting for it. Hyuk's face said he was hoping for a dramatic peace treaty, but I gripped my spear and stepped forward.

"W-Where are you going?"

"To fight. You wait here."

"Are you insane? We'd be better off waiting for the Lesser Family Head and attacking together—"

“See the person lying over there?”

“Y-Yes.”

“That’s my brother.”

Hyuk stared at me as though the sky had fallen, then let out a deep sigh.

“Then I’m coming with you.”

“What?”

“Even a meat shield like me should bump our odds up by a hair, shouldn’t it?”

This guy actually came up with some admirable thoughts.

I snorted a laugh and turned away.

“You trying to get yourself killed? I’m just going to feel him out and come back. Wait here.”

The Head Elder was now barely thirty feet away.

A distance either of us could cross in an instant.

A heavy silence pressed down on the space between us. In those few moments, my palms grew damp.

Phew.

But I wasn’t an easy mark either. At Level 30, when I was only Second Rate, I’d already defeated Jopil, a Peak master. And I’d continued to improve after returning to reality.

Now that I was Level 40, I could proudly call myself a master capable of holding his own in either reality or Murim.

No. I was a master.

If I keep as much distance between us as possible…

In a fight where a few centimeters[289] could decide life or death, a spear’s reach was a massive advantage.

I watched the Head Elder’s face and steadied my breathing.

This is doable.

I drew up my internal energy in a single burst and charged. Ten feet—the range where my spearhead could reach the Head Elder, while his sword couldn’t reach me.

Now!

I brought the spearhead down toward the crown of his head.

At the same time, the System notification I’d been waiting for rang out.

Ding.

[289] A few centimeters is roughly 1–2 in.

SYSTEM

| The effect of the Title Gambler is applied.
| Strength temporarily increases.
| Agility temporarily increases.
| Stamina temporarily...

The effect of the Gambler Title, which raised combat-related stats by ten percent in a one-on-one duel, seeped into every part of my body.

And on top of that—

Whoosh!

The increase in my stats accelerated the attack as well. The spearhead came down like a bolt of light, aimed at the crown of the Head Elder's head.

This is going in.

I was certain.

Even a monster like Jopil wouldn't have been able to dodge it. But the man I was facing wasn't Jopil.

He was the Head Elder.

Boom!

The spear shaft shuddered with a thunderous crash. The Head Elder had blocked the spear with a movement too fast for me to see, and now he smiled faintly.

"Not bad. Better than I expected."

Without even time to answer, I wrung out every last ounce of strength. The spear, loaded with tremendous force that even a decent master would have struggled to endure, crushed down on his sword.

Grrrkk.

With an ugly grinding sound, his sword slowly began to rise...

No. Wait.

It should be going down. Why is it coming up?

I'd put that much force into it, yet I was the one being pushed back. At my dumbfounded expression, the Head Elder's smile deepened.

"You tried, but did you think that would be enough?"

The next instant, every hair on my body stood on end.

Tssssss.

A blue haze bloomed along the blade.

Sword Energy.

Before I could even react, the spearhead that had been slowly getting pushed back was sliced off like tofu.

Shing.

Now it wasn't a spear but a staff. A long staff.

Sword Energy flashed again toward me as I backed away.

Shing.

The long staff became a short staff.

Shing.

"…"

Fuck. Even nunchucks would be longer than this.

I hurled the iron rod—no longer a spear or even a staff—at the Head Elder.

Shing.

"Do you intend to run?"

Run? What a hurtful thing to say.

I'd already thrown myself sideways the instant I released the rod. I grabbed the collar of the man lying facedown as though dead.

Got him!

My only goal from the start had been to rescue Jin Wikyung.

Now that I'd accomplished it, there was no reason to fight that monstrous old man. I clutched Jin Wikyung to me and launched myself away with all my strength.

Whoosh—boom!

The Sword Energy that came a beat later split the ground.

Hyuk Mujin and the reconnaissance squad surrounded us as we escaped the Head Elder's range by a hair.

"Protect the Captain!"

"Are you all right?"

I said nothing. I forgot that we had to flee from the Head Elder immediately. I even forgot that we were standing in the middle of a battlefield.

My mind was consumed by a single question.

Who is this man?

I'd definitely rescued Jin Wikyung. I was supposed to have rescued him…

So who was this macho-looking middle-aged man in my arms?

His face was covered in blade scars, and his eyes were bloodshot. In a trembling voice, I asked,

"Excuse me, but who are you…?"

At that moment, Hyuk Mujin let out a startled cry.

"Gah! Lee Cheonbaek!"

Lee Cheonbaek? The name rang a bell.

"You know him?"

"Of course I do!"

"Are you close?"

“What kind of bullshit is that? That’s Blood Wolf Sword Lee Cheonbaek!”

“Blood Wolf Sword?”

“Yes! That Blood Wolf Sword…!”

“Cool alias. Sounds like a master.”

Hyuk tore at his hair and shouted,

“He’s the Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect! Blood Wolf Sword Lee Cheonbaek!”

“…!”

I scrambled backward.

This man was Lee Cheonbaek?

Cold sweat ran down my back.

He’s Lee Seogeun’s father.

He was the man who’d started a war because he thought I’d poisoned his son. He was also a cold-blooded killer who’d slaughtered adults and children alike in revenge.

As if rescuing the wrong man wasn’t bad enough, I nearly got stabbed for it.

But Lee Cheonbaek no longer seemed to have the strength left for that.

His whole body was covered in blood, and he couldn’t so much as twitch a hand. It looked like he’d suffered a serious Internal Injury or been subjected to a Pressure-Point Strike.

Still, at least it isn’t Jin Wikyung.

As if he’d read my mind, Hyuk asked,

“Then where is the Lesser Family Head?”

“I don’t know. And…”

I hurriedly yanked him back by the nape of his neck. A sword flew in and buried itself where Hyuk’s foot had been a moment earlier.

I’m really well and truly screwed.

I let out a deep sigh, then continued.

“You think that old man is going to let us go?”

The Head Elder burst into a hearty laugh.

“Ha ha ha! Have you ever seen such an insolent brat!”

“If I behave politely, will you let us go?”

“Don’t you think you’ve come too far for that?”

Tsssss.

Sword Energy surged up.

No more words were needed.

I pulled a spear stuck among the corpses. Then, with everyone’s eyes on me, I spoke.

“Encircling formation. Spread out.”

One of the oldest Hunter sayings went like this:

There are strong monsters, but no monster that can’t be taken down.

What made that possible was a raid.

Chapter 59

Shh-shh-shhk!

Jin Wikyung and Wipeng's battle against the three Elders raged like a storm.

Sword strikes crashed together from every direction, too fast and fierce for an ordinary martial artist to follow.

Krshhk.

Blocked.

The instant Wipeng realized it, he twisted aside. The Second Elder's sword grazed his hair as it thrust past.

The Second and Third Elders pressed him as though they were one.

"You bastards!"

Jin Wikyung charged with a roar, only for the First Elder to cut him off.

"Where are you rushing off to?"

Sword Energy shot upward, then plunged toward the crown of Jin Wikyung's head.

The blow threatened to split him in two. Jin Wikyung hurriedly raised his sword to block. Pale Sword Energy wreathed his blade as well.

Boom!

A figure staggered back through the cloud of dust kicked up by the thunderous impact. Jin Wikyung's face had gone pale. He spat out bloody phlegm.

What the hell kind of internal energy…

He had trained in exceptional martial arts and taken elixirs since he was a child, but this was a bad matchup. The First Elder was a vile old monster who had lived for more than one jiazi[290] while concealing his black heart.

Together with the Head Elder, he was a living witness who had fought his way through the Great Faction War.

"You goddamn old bastard."

The First Elder replied with a hearty laugh.

"Lesser Family Head, mind your dignity."

But the First Elder was not nearly as composed as he appeared.

His trembling blade and throbbing wrist were proof enough.

To think they were this strong.

Even in a street brawl, numbers mattered. How much more would they matter in a fight between masters? Yet Jin Wikyung and Wipeng were stronger than he had expected.

Or perhaps an old man's pride had led him to overestimate himself.

---

[290] A jiazi is a sixty-year cycle in the traditional East Asian calendar.

How cruel. Truly cruel.

One jiazi[291]. He had accumulated profound internal energy over those sixty years, but even that could not halt the aging of his body.

If only I were ten years younger.

After a bitter jab at himself, the First Elder stepped toward Jin Wikyung.

The swords of his sworn younger brothers, the Second and Third Elders, grew fiercer still.

Shh-shh-shhk!

“Urgh!”

Jin Wikyung and Wipeng were gradually driven back. Having only just fought the Peak masters of the Mount Heng Sword Sect made their situation even worse.

Their vision began to swim. Small wounds multiplied across their bodies. Their hands and feet no longer moved as they wished.

We can’t keep this up.

Jin Wikyung’s expression darkened.

Fwoooosh!

The First Elder’s Sword Energy had been bearing down without pause when it abruptly changed course. In the next instant, a lightning-fast strike split its target.

Shhk.

Fwaaah!

A man staggered in a spray of blood. The sword he had aimed at the First Elder’s side had shattered beyond recognition, and blood poured from his chest like a waterfall.

The First Elder saw his face and clicked his tongue.

“Discipline Hall Master, you foolish friend. Did you want to die that badly?”

“F-First Elder…”

The Discipline Hall Master’s voice sounded ready to give out at any moment. Yet he neither fell nor stopped speaking.

“You have… violated the family’s laws.”

“Heh heh. And?”

“As the Discipline Hall Master of the great Jin Family of Taiyuan, I command you. The guilty shall abolish their own martial arts and enter the Repentance Cave…”

Shhk.

The First Elder answered with his sword.

The Discipline Hall Master had a nature as unyielding as bamboo, but his martial arts were not particularly advanced. He could neither see nor evade the stroke that pierced his throat.

---

[291] A jiazi is a sixty-year cycle in the traditional East Asian calendar.

Fire blazed in Jin Wikyung's eyes.

"You bastard!"

Jin Wikyung was not the only one enraged. The Discipline Hall Master's death set fire to the hearts of the Jin Family of Taiyuan's senior members.

"Discipline Hall Master!"

Before they were martial artists, they were human.

They had lived long enough to have much they had built, and much they had to protect. That was why they had feared it: a Peak master's prowess, thrown away on a dog's death.

But the Discipline Hall Master's dignified end brought emotions they had briefly forgotten boiling back to the surface.

Shame and anger.

"Strike down those traitors!"

"Show them the spirit of the Jin Family of Taiyuan!"

Those most ashamed of themselves were the first to charge. They were the senior members who had belonged to the so-called Council of Elders faction.

They could not forgive themselves for helping the traitors. Nor could they forgive the Elders who had betrayed both them and the family.

"Fools."

Shhk. Shhk. Shhk.

Every time the three Elders' swords flashed, another life was extinguished.

The difference in strength was clear. Even so, the Elders' wrinkled faces stiffened.

These bastards…!

Dozens of First Rate masters surged in from every direction without fear of death, each prepared to take an enemy with him.

It was not their martial arts that rattled the Elders, but their sheer momentum.

And amid that disruption, two men seized the opening without hesitation.

Shhk.

"Gah!"

A scream tore from the Third Elder's mouth. Before he knew what had happened, Wipeng's Sword Energy had surged up and carved through his side.

"Little brother!"

The Second Elder wavered at the scream of the sworn brother who had stood beside him for decades. For the briefest instant, his attention shifted elsewhere.

It cost him dearly.

Three swords thrust out at once, grazing him from head to toe. As the Second Elder hurriedly retreated, a bolt of lightning shot toward him.

Fwoooosh!

The instant he felt something cold burrow into his back, the Second Elder knew it was over.

Thuk!

It split flesh and severed bone. The Sword Energy rampaged like a living thing, tearing through his blood vessels and searing them.

How long had it been since he had felt pain like this?

The Second Elder's vision went white. Soon, he could no longer feel any pain at all.

"I, Jin Wikyung, Lesser Family Head of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, have cut down the Second Elder!"

As Jin Wikyung ripped his sword from the Second Elder's chest and roared, the Third Elder's head was falling not far away. Wipeng, soaked in blood, lifted it high.

"Here is the Third Elder's head!"

The survivors took up the cry.

"Wipe out the traitors!"

"The Jin Family of Taiyuan is not the enemy of the Mount Heng Sword Sect! Lower your swords!"

The shouts ringing out across the battlefield rallied the Jin Family's martial artists.

With its leadership all but wiped out, the Mount Heng Sword Sect had yet to find its bearings. Before long, however, its martial artists turned their weapons on the black-clad men.

"What are you doing? Those Jin Family bastards are right in front of us—"

"Enough of your nonsense. The only ones attacking us are those bastards in black!"

He was right. The Jin Family's martial artists were following their command's orders to the letter, and Mount Heng's people realized one of their enemies had dropped away.

The black-clad men who had appeared out of nowhere were now their common enemy.

"Show them the strength of the Mount Heng Sword Sect!"

"I don't know where you crawled out from, but wipe them all out!"

Once the two forces joined together, it was the black-clad men who began to give ground.

They were elites hardened by brutal training, but the deaths of the two Elders inevitably shook their morale. Blades rushed in from every direction, giving them no chance to recover, and the black-clad men began to fall one after another.

"Aaargh!"

"Don't fall back! Anyone who retreats will die!"

Even in that chaos, the First Elder swung his sword without a word.

Everything within his sight, everything within his reach, was his enemy.

Shhk.

Twenty? Thirty? He no longer knew. Like a man possessed, the First Elder cut down everything that stood in his way. Among them were people who had once addressed him with reverence and young men who looked barely twenty.

What does age matter when it comes to life and death? Anyone who stands before a blade is a person of Murim.

At last, a bear of a man blocked the path of the First Elder, who was drenched in the blood of dozens. His eyes looked ready to burn everything to ash.

"Why did you do it?"

"Wealth and glory. To seize the Jin Family of Taiyuan and swallow all of Shanxi."

The answer came without a hint of hesitation. Everyone trembled with rage.

Everyone but one.

Jin Wikyung shook his head.

"That isn't the answer I wanted."

"Then answer it yourself, Lesser Family Head. Why would my brothers, my lord, and I do such a thing?"

"Revenge."

Jin Wikyung continued in a quiet voice.

"The grand plan you spoke of wasn't meant to win you wealth and glory or make you ruler of a single province. Too many opportunities for that have already passed, and you're all old. And…"

"Enough."

"The Head Elder has no descendants. Neither do the Second Elder, the Third Elder, or you."

At that moment, a livid spark flared in the First Elder's placid eyes.

It was the anger he had suppressed for many long years, a remnant that surfaced for the briefest moment before sinking again.

"Why did you do it?"

Instead of answering, the First Elder raised his sword and pointed it at Jin Wikyung.

No—the tip pointed over Jin Wikyung's shoulder, toward someone somewhere beyond him.

"Hear it from him yourself."

In the end, the Head Elder held the final key.

Jin Wikyung strode toward the First Elder.

"I will. After I cut you down."

"Can you really afford to take your time like this?"

"What do you—"

Jin Wikyung's frown froze.

Taekyung!

His youngest brother, the apple of his eye, was holding off the Head Elder.

The instant he remembered what he had momentarily forgotten, all the blood in his body seemed to turn cold.

If I delay any longer, something irreversible will happen.

The moment Jin Wikyung grasped the full situation, his voice rang out like bitter frost.

“Wipeng. Take the First Elder.”

“I obey.”

“The rest of you, lend him your strength.”

“We follow the Lesser Family Head’s command.”

Wipeng and some ten surviving senior members spread into a wide ring around the First Elder.

“Everyone else, follow me and open a path! We’re going after the Head Elder!”

Jin Wikyung was about to depart with several dozen guards when he glanced back at the First Elder. Though his end was approaching, the old man showed no sign of agitation. If anything, he looked relieved.

“First Elder.”

“Do you have something left to say?”

Jin Wikyung tossed out a single sentence.

“By the authority of the Lesser Family Head of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, I expel you from the family.”

“Heh heh. Heh heh heh!”

Leaving the First Elder’s laughter behind, Jin Wikyung raced toward the battlefield.

Dozens of black-clad men tried to stop him, but the tide had long since turned. Martial artists surged in from every direction and hacked them apart.

“Open a path!”

“It’s the Lesser Family Head! Kill anyone who stands in his way!”

It was only a moment. For Jin Wikyung, an eternity passed.

Taekyung. Please, please…

He could not even bring himself to think the word death.

How long had he run with his pounding chest clutched in his arms? When he finally reached his destination, his eyes flew wide.

What is this…?

The scene before him was utterly shocking.

Raid.

Until a few decades ago, it was a word used only in games.

But after the Demon King appeared and the Great Cataclysm began, raids became the defining symbol of Hunters.

Countless real battles had been fought and countless lives sacrificed along the way. Building on that experience, Hunters had finally established the modern method of raiding.

Tank, damage dealer, healer.

The tank blocks. The damage dealer attacks. The healer heals.

It sounded simple, but becoming a licensed Hunter required studying a mountain of raid manuals and proving yourself through actual combat.

Hunter training camp… That was a living hell.

But because I endured it, I came out a Hunter. Now, as a seven-year veteran, I can pull the right position and the right response for any situation.

And right now—

“Hey, throw dirt! Keep throwing it!”

I realized that everything I’d learned wasn’t worth shit.

Tank? Healer?

Fuck…

I was a fucking moron for thinking ten melee damage dealers counted as a raid.

Chapter 60

The Head Elder thought,

Have I lived too long?

The Murim he remembered had not been like this. Martial artists had not been like this.

Ganging up on an opponent was shameful. Ambushes were condemned. A man who got so much as dirt on his back became a laughingstock.

And yet…

“Throw dirt! Keep throwing it!”

In all his eighty years, he had never seen anything like this. What? Throw dirt?

It was a cheap, cowardly trick that not even the Demonic Cultists he had fought like mortal enemies decades ago had stooped to using.

Is that bastard truly a martial artist?

Even more appalling was the reaction of his so-called subordinates.

“Squad Leader’s orders! Throw dirt!”

“Keep your distance! Watch the Sword Energy!”

Watching the men obey without a word made his head spin.

What kind of goddamn bastards are these?

They were not martial artists.

No, they were not even human.

This was an insult to all martial artists—and to the Head Elder himself, who had devoted his entire life to the sword.

“How dare you…”

He was drawing his sword when—

“You idiots!”

A stern shout rang out half a beat sooner. A young man whose face was swollen as though he had been stung by a swarm of bees swept a fierce glare around him.

“What the hell do you think you’re doing?”

He looked ridiculous, but he had real spirit. Yes. That was how a martial artist ought to behave.

At least one of them has some sense.

The Head Elder was nodding to himself when the young man shouted,

“You think dirt’s enough? Mix in rocks too!”

“…!”

The Head Elder shuddered as though struck by lightning.

The humiliation was so unprecedented that he forgot even to swing his sword as a clod of dirt flew straight into his face.

Splat!

He could say with certainty that in all his eighty years, he had never taken an attack so humiliatingly or with his guard so completely down.

As the dirt pattered off him, he spotted a hefty rock thoughtfully mixed in with it.

“Uh-heh. Uh-heh-heh-heh.”

The Head Elder laughed like a madman.

Then his laughter abruptly stopped.

At the same moment—

Tssssss.

Sword Energy surged from his blade, laden with one jiazi[292] of internal energy.

“Are you prepared?”

Jin Taekyung watched him and muttered,

“Shouldn’t have mixed in the rocks…”

Before the words had even left his mouth, the Head Elder charged like a lion. The dozen or so sheep screamed and scattered.

“Spread out! Spread out!”

“Keep throwing dirt!”

Even as they fled, they did not forget to throw dirt.

Fwoooosh—

A fierce gale blasted from the tip of the Head Elder’s sword. Sand, dirt, stones—it made no difference. Before that overwhelming power, everything shattered and scattered.

How are we supposed to fight this guy?

Head-on?

Calling us melee damage dealers was being generous. If I sent the reconnaissance squad against the Head Elder, they’d be dying in heaps before I could blink.

I’d gotten attached to the bastards, though. I couldn’t let them die like dogs for nothing.

“Caaaptain!”

That bastard deserved to die, sure.

Why did you have to mix in rocks? Seriously, the rocks.

The Head Elder’s first target was Hyuk Mujin. Naturally. He had boldly struck the opening blow.

I heaved a deep sigh and launched myself toward him.

[292] Jiazi is a traditional sixty-year cycle; here, it describes the amount of internal energy accumulated over that span.

Shiiiiing!

I thrust my spear at the Head Elder's chest with all my strength.

The Sword Energy about to carve through Hyuk Mujin's back immediately changed direction.

Shing.

That goddamn Sword Energy.

There was no time to look at the spearhead it had sliced clean off. I snatched the terrified Hyuk Mujin by the scruff of his neck.

"Run!"

But the Head Elder was not about to give up so easily.

Swoooosh!

The air shrieked, and my side burned. A mere graze tore away a handful of flesh and sent blood spraying.

Kh.

It hurt like hell. But right now, even screaming was a luxury.

I need to buy time.

I shoved Hyuk Mujin aside and turned back. The Head Elder raised an eyebrow.

"You?"

It was only one word, but the meaning came through perfectly.

You think the likes of you can stop me?

I answered as calmly as I could.

"Yeah. Me."

"Do you not value your life?"

"If I tell you it's damn precious, will you let me live?"

"Heh heh. What an insolent tongue for one so young."

"Gramps, does your pecker still stand?"

Tssssss.

It rose ramrod straight.

Large, magnificent Sword Energy.

"…Still going strong, I see."

The hand gripping my spear grew slick with sweat.

Looks like I'll have to use every last trick I've got if I want to survive this.

I had far more secrets than the Head Elder knew.

I could attack using my Inventory, and I had One Annihilation—a Skill that poured several times my normal strength into a single blow.

I've never shown it to anyone, just in case something like this happened.

Was this what people in Murim called a final, last-resort technique?

One thing was certain. Neither the Head Elder nor anyone else in Murim would see it coming.

And on top of that…

“Encircling formation. Form up.”

Shff.

Hyuk Mujin and the reconnaissance squad began closing in from every direction.

A flimsy net for a fish as big as the Head Elder.

But with a sharp enough harpoon, we had a chance.

“You think this will be enough?”

“To catch one old man? More than enough.”

The Head Elder smiled, amused.

“What a fearless brat. The kind who only comes to his senses after a beating.”

But he never got the chance. A voice suddenly cut in.

“I must have misheard you. Say that again.”

A mountain of a man stood there, his eyes wide and fierce. The voice that emerged from between his thick lips was cold as ice.

“You said you were going to lay a hand on our boy?”

Fwoooosh.

Sword Energy blazed up along his blade like wildfire and pointed at the Head Elder.

Jin Wikyung had appeared like a savior. He winked at me.

“Well? Your big brother looks cool, doesn’t he?”

Still the same.

It was the first time I had seen that face in a month.

The moment Jin Wikyung appeared, the tension drained from my body.

I was glad.

Just glad.

Thank goodness he’s alive.

Wikyung was covered in blood, as though he had fought a brutal battle to get here. Wounds large and small showed through the tears in his clothes.

But that was enough. All that mattered was that he was alive.

There’s a lot I want to say, but it can wait.

We could have our reunion after the war was over. Wikyung seemed to feel the same way. He turned his gaze forward.

At the end of our gazes, the Head Elder slowly began to speak.

“If you have made it this far, then…”

Jin Wikyung's icy voice cut him off.

"The Second and Third Elders are dead. The First Elder is only a matter of time."

That was good news. If Wikyung put it that way, the Elders must have played a major role in this war.

The Head Elder had lost his hands and feet.

"Did the two of them… go peacefully?"

"Probably."

The Head Elder nodded readily.

"They always said they wished to die fighting as martial artists. They got their wish. I'm glad."

"They'll be remembered as traitors, not martial artists. Every last one of you."

"History is written by the victors."

The Head Elder leveled his sword at us. Even before dozens of men, including me and Jin Wikyung, he stood utterly composed.

"Now, let us decide who the victor will be."

Jin Wikyung opened his mouth as if he had something to say, then closed it firmly.

The next moment, a thunderous roar burst from him.

"Strike down the rebels!"

Shing. Shrrring.

Dozens of weapons were drawn at once, all aimed at a single man. It was quite a sight.

"We obey!"

With a tremendous shout, dozens of martial artists charged as one. I was no exception. My grip tightened around my spear, and my chest felt ready to burst.

We can win. No. We win, no matter what.

It was an all-out melee without the slightest formation. But we had Jin Wikyung, a Peak master, and dozens of martial artists at his back.

And there's me.

The Head Elder had placed too much faith in his own strength. He had committed every last man to the front without keeping even a minimal guard around himself. As a result, the black-clad men were now pinned down by the combined assault of the Jin Family of Taiyuan and the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

The Head Elder…

dies right here.

It's over!

It did not take long for that certainty to shatter.

Shushushushush!

Dozens of tiny points shot out of nowhere, slicing through the air faster and harder than any of us had expected.

"It's the finger-flicking technique!"

Jin Wikyung's shout rang out, but I had no time to wonder what that was.

Pow-pow-pow-pow!

Clang!

"Aaargh!"

"Guh!"

Some men fell. Others knocked the projectiles aside.

Those who fell did not rise again.

Don't tell me…

It had lasted only an instant, but I had seen it clearly. Tiny fragments were embedded like buckshot around their hearts and across their faces.

Stones?

They were little more than shards now, but they had definitely been stones. Unable to withstand the Head Elder's internal energy, they had shattered the moment he fired them at us.

That's possible?

Goose bumps rose across my skin, but it was not over.

The Head Elder was extending one hand toward us.

"Scatter!"

This time, Wikyung and I shouted at once. The martial artists, already on high alert, scattered in every direction.

Good. We weren't too late this ti—

My relief lasted only a moment.

Swoooosh!

This time, what came shooting at us was not the finger-flicking technique.

It was the Head Elder.

He plunged into the martial artists and rampaged among them like a wild beast.

Slash. Slash. Slash.

"Grrk."

"Hhk."

Each time his sword flashed through the darkness, another life went out. Wherever the Head Elder passed, he left only strangled screams and corpses behind.

"Head Elder!"

Jin Wikyung charged at him in fury. By then, the Head Elder had already killed five people. Yet his pale face remained untouched by so much as a drop of blood, making him look like a ghost.

“You’ve come?”

“How dare you!”

“You’re all so clumsy. Peace must have lasted too long.”

There was one undeniable fact.

The Head Elder was a hero of the Great Faction War.

He was stronger and more experienced than anyone else here—a Peak martial artist honed through countless battles.

Shiiiiing!

The Sword Energy Jin Wikyung unleashed stabbed through empty air. The Head Elder evaded it with nothing more than a slight tilt of his head, then flicked a finger.

His target was me.

Shhk!

I could not see a thing, but instinct told me what it was.

Internal energy.

It was exactly that—a solid mass of qi.

I threw myself into a roll without hesitation.

Pshk.

“Guh.”

I should have blocked it with my spear, but the attack was too unfamiliar for me to think that far ahead.

An unnamed ally paid the price with his life.

I felt rotten.

“Narye tagon? You truly are a donkey.”[293]

I spat out the dirt in my mouth.

“When your life’s on the line, you do whatever it takes.”

“Haha. You’ve already become a proper man of Murim.”

Clang! Clang-clang-clang!

What kind of monster was this?

Even as he spoke, the Head Elder deflected every one of Jin Wikyung’s Sword Energy attacks. The sight left me speechless.

Thud!

Even then, a fist loaded with internal energy smashed the skull of a martial artist who’d gone for his back.

[293] Narye tagon is a humiliating evasive roll likened to a lazy donkey rolling on the ground.

“You’re still twenty years too early.”

The battle had barely begun. Not even enough time had passed to drink a cup of tea, yet nearly twenty martial artists had already become cold corpses.

“You bastard!”

Shiiiiing!

A middle-aged warrior whose face looked vaguely familiar lost his head to Sword Energy.

“Die!”

Boom!

A young man with a baby face that might have been twenty had his chest caved in and dropped to his knees.

They were not NPCs.

They were real people.

Faces I had seen at least once around the Jin Family of Taiyuan. Faces belonging to people whose hands I had shaken.

I gritted my teeth.

I’m sorry.

I was not apologizing because I lacked the power to stop it. I was apologizing because I had used their deaths.

Shhk!

Another man fell to the Head Elder’s finger-flicking technique like a puppet with its strings cut. But just as the corpse seemed about to topple backward, it sprang upright like a roly-poly toy.

Then it pitched toward the Head Elder.

“Cheap trick!”

Boom! Bang!

With one hand, the Head Elder blocked Jin Wikyung’s sword. With the other, he sent a palm strike hurtling into the corpse.

And then…

Now.

Hidden behind the corpse as it flew through the air, I thrust my spear.

“One Annihilation.”

The next instant—

Goooooong.

A deafening roar left my ears numb.

Chapter 61

Gooooong.

The Head Elder felt the air tremble. At the same instant, he grasped the destructive power behind the spearhead hurtling toward his chest.

This is… dangerous.

He had felt his life threatened this keenly only a handful of times. Every hair on his body stood on end, and the world slowed.

Shiiiiing!

Jin Taekyung's spear came from the front, while Jin Wikyung's sword flew in from behind. The two brothers' coordinated attack came together with perfect timing.

A true life-or-death moment.

Fwoooosh.

The one jiazi[294] of internal energy coiled in the Head Elder's dantian spread through every limb and bone. It poured vitality into his aging muscles and woke his blood vessels. The change did not stop there.

Tssssss.

The Sword Energy that had extended nearly a foot[295] compressed to half its length.

But this was not a loss of power. It was a concentration of it.

The threadlike Sword Energy wrapped around the entire blade, taking the shape of another sword.

Sword Force.

The symbol of the superhuman masters who had broken through the wall of the Peak realm and opened a great new domain.

It was still incomplete, no more than half-formed, but it was unmistakably Sword Force—the culmination of the martial arts the Head Elder had spent his life mastering.

Shhk.

Even the Jin Family of Taiyuan's ancestral treasure sword was severed, Sword Energy and all. Jin Wikyung's internal energy scattered in an instant, the shock wrenching his insides. His face went pale.

One stroke would have been enough to take his neck.

But the Head Elder had no time.

Shwack!

He reached for the spear now almost at his chest. His wrinkled hand, too, was wrapped in a dazzling radiance of qi.

---

[294] A jiazi is a traditional sixty-year cycle.

[295] The source measures this length as nearly one ja, a Korean unit equal to about 30.3 cm (11.9 in).

It, too, was an incomplete Palm Force, but it was enough to stop Jin Taekyung's spear.

No. It looked like enough.

Kraaaaaash!

Until the vortex pouring from the spearhead swallowed him whole.

A deathly silence descended. It felt as though the dozens gathered here—perhaps everyone on the battlefield—were watching us.

No.

Not us.

One man.

"This…"

At the center of countless gazes, the Head Elder slowly opened his mouth.

"What form was that?"

I answered.

"One Annihilation."

Even saying the words brought on a ravenous hunger. Every muscle in my body stung, and not a scrap of internal energy remained inside me.

But that was all.

Unlike when I'd fought Jopil, I neither passed out nor collapsed pathetically to the ground.

My body can handle it now.

I had grown strong enough to withstand One Annihilation's side effects. And as I had grown, so had One Annihilation's power.

The Head Elder's condition was proof of that.

"One Annihilation. One Annihilation…"

Muttering under his breath, he pressed an acupoint on his shoulder.

The bleeding stopped, but that was all. The arm ground away without a trace by One Annihilation's vortex did not return.

"I never thought I'd end up one-armed at my age. Heh heh."

The Head Elder gave a hollow laugh and turned toward Jin Wikyung.

"You have a frightening younger brother."

Jin Wikyung asked, his face wan, "Does that child frighten you?"

"What about you?"

"I'm proud of him."

There was not a hint of hesitation in his answer. A smile spread across his pale face.

"I raised him like gold and jade, but he grew into steel. That's the kind of child Taekyung is."

The Head Elder stared at his smile.

"You're quite a capable man. Worthy of shouldering the future of the Jin Family of Taiyuan."

"Am I?"

"But not as much as your younger brothers."

Jin Mukyung had reached the Peak realm at twenty, so that was understandable. But ranking even me that highly was almost more praise than I could handle…

What is he getting at?

As though he had read my mind, the Head Elder continued.

"Power is the one thing a man will not share, even with his own blood. When the time comes, will you still be so proud of your younger brothers?"

The air around us went ice-cold in an instant.

Everyone facing the Head Elder at close range belonged to the Jin Family of Taiyuan. Cautious looks clung to my cheeks, then quietly slid away.

Family Head? I have no intention of becoming anything like that, you bastards.

That was when Jin Wikyung spoke.

"So that was it."

Bitterness and relief mingled in his voice. The Head Elder's brow twitched.

"What are you talking about?"

"The reason you betrayed us. The reason today came to pass."

"…!"

The Head Elder's trembling eyes answered for him. I sighed inwardly.

So that was what this was about.

A succession struggle.

It felt as though a huge piece of the puzzle had clicked into place. The smaller pieces still out of position began falling into place one by one as they spoke.

"What happened?"

Jin Wikyung asked respectfully.

The shift in his tone was so natural that no one else seemed to notice.

"Do you know anything about your grandfather?"

"I have heard nothing. Father never spoke a word of him."

"He was a coldhearted man. Toward his children and his only younger brother alike. And…"

The Head Elder gave a dry little laugh.

"He was petty. For many reasons, we gradually drifted apart despite once being close brothers. Then it happened."

“The Great Faction War.”

“Have you heard of the Hundred Thousand Demonic Disciples? They came in endless waves. The Murim Alliance was formed, but it was little more than a coalition of the Nine Sects and One Gang, each too busy defending its own territory.”

That was also when the Head Elder had begun making a real name for himself.

He rallied Shanxi’s martial artists beneath the Jin Family of Taiyuan’s banner and ultimately drove out the Demonic Cult’s forces.

“The final battle took place right here, at Eight Spring Gorge.”

His gaze seemed to grope toward some distant point in the past.

“It had been a long war. Many had died, and everyone was exhausted. But we still had hope—the hope that we could finally return to our families. All three hundred members of the death squad shared that hope.”

“In the end, you won a great victory.”

Three hundred against three thousand.

The result was the Demonic Cult’s annihilation.

It was a glorious victory and the reason the Head Elder was still remembered to this day. Everyone had believed that without question.

Until just now.

“There was an ambush.”

What?

“We fought while retreating deep into the gorge, but we were hopelessly outnumbered. Even as I swung my sword like a madman, one question refused to leave me.”

The Head Elder’s voice was chillingly calm.

“How could they have set an ambush in advance? My elder brother should have been blocking the road into Eight Spring Gorge.”

“…!”

Silent shock rippled through the crowd. The last traces of color vanished from Jin Wikyung’s already pale face.

“The battle lasted half a day. We fought waiting for reinforcements that never came, and it was useless. Of the three hundred volunteers, only eight survived. When we finally returned to the family, I have never been able to forget the look on my brother’s face when he saw me.”

“Is that… true?”

“Enough time has passed for mountains and rivers to change several times over. Did you think I had come this far on mere suspicion?”

Decades were more than enough time for suspicion to harden into certainty. The Head Elder laughed hollowly.

“My brother turned the war into an opportunity. I became a hero on the battlefield, but he became Family Head. Everyone who had followed me either died in battle or vanished afterward.”

“Then was that why you entered the Council of Elders immediately afterward?”

“Because only then would he feel at ease. Because only then could my people and I remain alive.”

My people?

I thought back to what he had said. The eight survivors who had followed the Head Elder and lived to the end.

It wasn’t difficult to guess who they were.

The Elders and the Sect Leaders of the Five Gates of Shanxi.

The survivors had sworn revenge—revenge against the Family Head and the family that had betrayed them.

The Head Elder slowly swept his gaze over the crowd.

“It had been a very long wait.”

Silence swallowed everyone. Disbelief, shock, shame—their emotions differed, but no one could bring themselves to speak.

Well, no one except me.

“You sure dragged that bullshit out.”

“…!”

I couldn’t hold back the little snorts of laughter leaking out of me.

I had listened all the way through to see where this was going, and this was what I got.

“In the end, you only have one goal.”

I jerked my thumb at the Head Elder.

“Revenge, my ass. You’re trying to become the man on top, aren’t you?”

“What did you say?”

“I’m right, aren’t I? Get rid of everything in your way—the Jin Family of Taiyuan, the Mount Heng Sword Sect—and swallow Shanxi whole.”

“You insolent—!”

Had the old man swallowed a locomotive boiler? Oh, right. No trains here.

“Revenge? Sure. Fine, revenge…”

I picked at my ear and continued.

“But why now?”

This had happened a full forty years ago. Even counting the Head Elder’s age, he had waited half his life.

“How many of the people who stabbed you in the back are even still alive? There’s being late, and then there’s this. And please, I’m begging you—don’t give me that bullshit about a junzi[296] waiting ten years to take revenge."

If waiting ten years made you a junzi[297], did waiting forty make the Head Elder Jesus?

This was nothing more than a crazy old man trying to justify himself.

"You run your mouth just because you've got one."

"I did. What are you going to do about it?"

"Do you think you know everything?"

"Do I need to? After things have gone this far?"

The question was so obvious I snorted a laugh and pointed at the battlefield.

A mountain of corpses and a sea of blood. Utter pandemonium. The scene before us was exactly that.

"That…"

The cold light in the Head Elder's eyes wavered. But only for an instant.

"I see. What more is there to say?"

He muttered the words in self-mockery, then raised his sword.

"Head Elder."

Jin Wikyung's lips moved, but that was all.

This fight would end only when one side died. They had come too far to turn back.

"Come."

I wasn't about to refuse.

"Attack!"

It was time to hunt the wounded beast.

I remembered the day I first saw the Head Elder.

A bearing and dignity that made his age meaningless. His white beard called an immortal to mind.

Fwoosh!

Of course, there were no immortals who mercilessly cut people in half.

Even rotten, a prized fish is still a prized fish.

Drenched in blood, he swung his sword without pause. Everyone stared at him with a mixture of awe and fear.

"Monster…"

The Head Elder had lost an arm, but he was still strong.

He was clearly no longer as strong as before, though.

This is doable.

[296] A junzi is the Confucian ideal of a morally upright gentleman.

[297] A junzi is the Confucian ideal of a morally upright gentleman.

The Head Elder might have been a Peak master, but the martial artists here were the Jin Family of Taiyuan's elite. They had fought across the battlefield under Jin Wikyung and were skilled enough to have survived their earlier clash with the Head Elder.

Clang-clang-clang!

The Head Elder knocked away the blades driving at him from every direction, his face darkening. Before, he would have used Sword Energy to cut through everything in his path.

It was proof that the internal energy that had once seemed like an inexhaustible spring was finally running dry.

On top of that, his aged body had reached its limit.

Shraaaak!

Sword wounds began to multiply across the Head Elder's body. Unlike before, most of the blood was now his.

Now!

I wasn't about to miss that opening. I drove my spear forward with all my strength, tearing a handful of flesh from his side.

"Hk!"

Even through the pain, the Head Elder cut down another martial artist and lunged at me. He had clearly set his mind on killing me; faint Sword Energy gathered along his swinging blade.

But…

Shhk.

The Sword Energy scattered in a rising spray of blood. Jin Wikyung appeared behind the staggering Head Elder.

"I'd forgotten you were there."

The Head Elder turned, his face twisting.

"Did my elder brother teach you to put a blade in someone's back?"

"My family members are dying. Is a sneak attack really that important?"

"Aren't you ashamed as a martial artist?"

"I am the Lesser Family Head before I am a martial artist."

"The Lesser Family Head, is it? Heh heh."

Jin Wikyung regarded the Head Elder with a complicated expression.

"The tide has already turned."

"So? Are you going to ask me to surrender?"

"Please put an end to this meaningless fight."

The battle had turned in our favor long ago. But the black-clad men continued their stubborn resistance, and the screams and corpses showed no sign of diminishing.

"You're right. Perhaps this is a meaningless fight. But…"

The staggering Head Elder straightened his back. A sharp gleam flashed in his eyes, and a blade-like aura began to rise from him.

"We've come too far to stop."

A last desperate struggle?

No. It was more than that. Someone suddenly came to mind.

Jopil.

The Head Elder's current appearance overlapped with Jopil's final moments before his death.

Innate qi. He's drawing out his innate qi.

Internal energy was acquired power accumulated by circulating qi and consuming elixirs. Innate qi was the opposite—the foundation of the human body, life force itself.

The Head Elder was staking his life to use it.

"Cough."

He spat out blood and raised his sword. His life was fading rapidly, yet his sword shone more brilliantly than ever.

The moment I saw that overwhelming sight, a single word slipped out of me.

"Sword Force…"

It was instinct.

My heart pounded from the mere sight of it. I could feel a terrifying power that far surpassed Sword Energy.

And then—

"Yes. You were here."

His blood-red eyes, their capillaries bursting one after another, locked on me.

Jin Wikyung lunged to stop the Head Elder.

"No!"

But the Head Elder had already vanished from where he stood.

In a single step he compressed fifty feet[298] and brought his sword down on me.

Whoooong.

So this is how I die.

It was an attack I could neither dodge nor block.

I was dead. I was going to die.

But…

I can't die like this.

I wrung every ounce of strength from my muscles. The last scant handful of internal energy raced toward the spearhead.

[298] The source measures this distance as five jang, about 15.15 m (49.7 ft).

It was a final struggle, and a show of respect for the life I had lived so fiercely until now.

“One Annihilation.”

Shiiiiiiing!

My final strike, carrying every last bit of strength I had, shot forward.

Chapter 62

The world seemed to stop.

My heartbeat thundered in my ears, and I could see every last grain of dirt drifting through the air.

And then…

Whoooosh.

A flash of light.

The glow pouring from the Sword Force was beautiful—and unerring. I could feel the devastating power in it, enough to split not only my spearhead but my body itself in two.

It's over.

I had done my best. It would be a lie to say I had no regrets at all, but that wouldn't change the outcome.

All I could do was meet it with everything I had left.

Shwaaaak!

The spearhead tore through the wind. The Sword Force erased it.

That was the instant death came striding in.

Shreeeek! Thunk!

The Head Elder's eyes flew wide.

A mysterious figure had sprung up with lightning speed and driven a dagger into his dantian.

"You…"

"You should've struck a lethal acupoint."

It was an ambush no one could have expected.

Until a moment ago, he had been nothing more than one of the countless corpses scattered around us.

But he wasn't.

He had merely been waiting with extraordinary patience for the right moment—the moment he could avenge his child.

The Head Elder screamed.

"Lee Cheonbaek!"

"Kahahaha!"

The instant Lee Cheonbaek burst into wild laughter, my spearhead punched into his back.

It tore through flesh and bone, driving forward without resistance.

SYSTEM

You have defeated Lv. 75 Lee Cheonbaek!
Level up!
Level up!
Level up!
...
All status ailments have been recovered due to the stacked effect of the level-ups!

The change came at once.

My aching muscles, my heavy feet, my empty dantian—all of them swelled with new strength.

At the same time, I knew what I had to do.

One Annihilation.

Once more, a white vortex erupted.

Kraaaack!

A narrow escape.[299]

Never in my life had those four syllables hit so close to home.

I had really died and come back. I'd even seen a vision of going through immigration into hell, sharing a passionate hug with Yama,[300] and snapping a commemorative photo together.

If it hadn't been for Lee Cheonbaek, that vision would have become reality.

Good thing I saved him.

I wanted to close Lee Cheonbaek's eyes so he could rest in peace, but there was still work to do.

"Should've lived a decent life, then. Just a little."

The Head Elder gave a quiet laugh. He looked horrific.

One Annihilation had swallowed his remaining arm, and it hadn't stopped there—it had punched a hole the size of a fist through his chest.

"What a nasty-hearted brat. Have you no manners toward a dying old man?"

"The old folks I know spend their twilight years enjoying their grandchildren's antics. They don't run around trying to kill them like you, you old bastard."

"Why, you brat! Try acting like a grandson before you say something like that."

[299] Gusa ilsaeng is a four-syllable Korean idiom meaning a narrow escape from death.
[300] Yama is the ruler of the underworld in Buddhist tradition.

He laughed heartily. He looked deflated, yet relieved, as though he had finally let go of everything.

“Taekyung is a good kid. If you had opened your heart first, the two of you might have been close as grandfather and grandson.”

The Head Elder turned his head.

Jin Wikyung stood there, sword in hand.

“Are you planning to stab me with that sword?”

“I’m considering it.”

“You’d better finish considering it quickly. I don’t have much time left.”

His words were true.

Even now, as he talked as though nothing were wrong, blood poured like a waterfall from the severed stumps of both arms and from his lower abdomen.

On top of that, there was the backlash from drawing out his innate qi.

The fact that he was still alive felt like a miracle.

“You look like you’re suffering.”

“No. I’m growing comfortable.”

The answer was firm.

“I was barely thirty when the Great Faction War began. After that, I never once rested easy—not even for a moment. No…”

The Head Elder went on in a strained voice.

“In truth, perhaps I’ve been tired for a very long time.”

I muttered in disbelief.

“You did all that, and now you’re coming out with this?”

“Taekyung!”

Jin Wikyung sent me a mildly reproachful look, but the Head Elder did not seem offended. A breathy laugh escaped his closed lips.

“Puh-huh. Yes, you’re right. Just think of it as a senile old man’s bullshit.”

“Looks like it really is time for you to die.”

“Hey! You little brat!”

“What? It’s not like I said anything wrong.”

The Head Elder watched Jin Wikyung and me bicker through fading eyes.

“There was a time when we were like you two. Yes. There certainly was.”

But he no longer had time to linger over those memories.

“Cough! Guaaack!”

The Head Elder staggered after vomiting what looked like a whole bowlful of blood.

He was at death’s door. Every capillary in his eyes had burst, and the blood pouring from his body had long since pooled at his feet.

Anyone could see there was no hope left for him.

He's really dying? That Head Elder?

Everyone dies.

Hundreds of lives had vanished on this battlefield alone—perhaps more than a thousand.

But the Head Elder's death was something I had never even been able to imagine.

That was how overwhelming his martial prowess had been. It made his current state look all the more wretched.

And that only made me more curious.

"Why are you holding on this hard?"

The Head Elder answered.

"Because I want to tell those who went before me… that I did my best."

"Any regrets?"

"None."

He smiled broadly and thrust out his chest.

"Finish it. With your own hands."

I raised my spear.

Jin Wikyung wore a troubled expression, but he did not try to stop me.

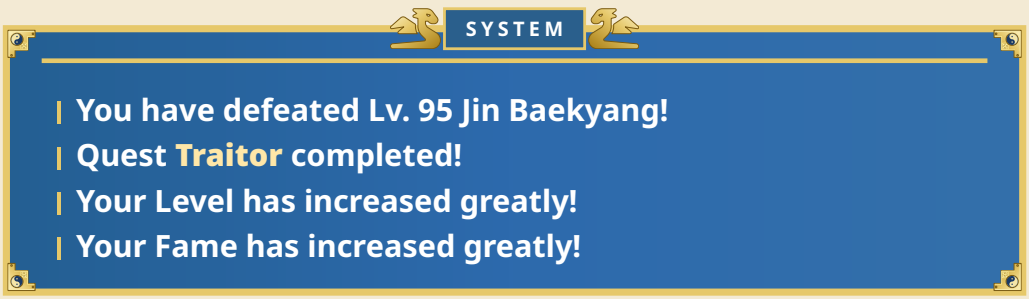
Shhk!

A single gust of wind passed, and the Head Elder's knees—which had seemed incapable of ever buckling—touched the ground.

A peaceful smile appeared on his wrinkled face.

At the final moment, his lips moved, but no sound came out.

That was all.



For one brief moment, silence fell.

Then a colossal roar erupted—unlike anything I had ever heard.

"The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, Jin Taekyung, has cut down the Blade of Flowers, Jin Baekyang!"

SYSTEM

You have acquired the Title Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi!

Dozens.

Maybe hundreds.

Every survivor was shouting my name.

The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi.

I rather liked my new name.

“Third Young Master Jin Taekyung of the Jin Family of Taiyuan cut down the Head Elder!”

“The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi defeated the Blade of Flowers!”

“The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi…”

Wipeng gave a quiet laugh.

He was the wastrel Third Young Master who had never even been called an earth dragon.[301]

But now, there was no denying it.

He was a Hidden Dragon.

If he obtained the dragon pearl,[302] he could roam the azure heaven.

“What do you make of it?”

The First Elder answered.

“Do you believe that?”

“Everyone is shouting that the Head Elder is dead.”

“That is because my lord wanted it that way. A mere Third Young Master killing him? It’s laughable.”

“You can see that from here? Sharp eyes.”

“This is what comes of letting your attention wander. Hahaha.”

He was leaning at an angle against a heap of corpses.

A sword wound split him on a slant from about the shoulder to the waist, and blood poured from it in torrents.

“Surrender. If we treat you now, you can live.”

“No. This old man’s end was decided long ago. A very painful death.”

Wipeng shook his head.

“I won’t allow it.”

[301] The Korean term for “earth dragon” also refers to an earthworm, making it a lowly contrast to “Hidden Dragon.”

[302] The dragon pearl is a legendary jewel associated with dragons in East Asian tradition.

“My death does not require permission. Neither you nor even I can do anything about it.”

“What does that mean?”

Wipeng furrowed his brow, unable to follow, when—

“Beware Dark Heaven… Grrk.”

It happened in an instant.

Blood poured from all seven of the First Elder’s orifices. His eyes rolled back, and his entire body convulsed.

“First Elder!”

By the time Wipeng hurried over, the First Elder had already stopped breathing.

Just as he had said, he had met a painful death. His face was twisted grotesquely.

This is…

Poison? Or a restriction?

There was no way to know yet.

Wipeng carved the single word that had become the First Elder’s last deep into his mind.

Dark Heaven. He definitely said Dark Heaven.

It was the only clue the First Elder had left behind.

Wipeng stared at the dead man’s face with mixed emotions, then turned away.

“I, Wipeng, cut down the First Elder!”

Despair spread across the faces of the black-clad men.

Faced with two paths—death or surrender—they chose the latter.

Clang. Clatter-clatter.

Weapons fell limply to the ground.

The war was over.

Where there were the dead, there were also survivors.

Jin Chung, Sect Leader of the Gunggui Sect,[303] was one of them. He had climbed to the top of the cliff before the battle began.

“How futile.”

It had been a grand scheme to which he had devoted half his life.

The result had been disastrous.

The Head Elder he had served as his lord, the Elders he had treated as brothers, and the Sect Leaders of the Five Gates of Shanxi were all dead.

The survivors’ last desperate struggle was over as well.

[303] The characters in Gunggui (□□) mean “bow” and “ghost.”

Now, only he remained.

So this is how it ends.

Jin Chung turned around.

Fifty martial artists of the Gunggui Sect were waiting for his orders.

“Leave.”

A subtle ripple of agitation passed through them.

One of the nearest martial artists spoke cautiously.

“Sect Leader, what do you mean…?”

“This fight is already over. I will not force you to sacrifice yourselves. Leave by this road. Scatter as widely as you can and get out of Shanxi. If you do, you may at least save your lives.”

The martial artist nodded resolutely.

“I will follow you until I die.”

“I… will remain here.”

“What?”

His confusion lasted only a moment before his voice began to tremble with emotion.

“Is it because of us?”

“Not at all.”

Jin Chung answered firmly, but his thoughts were different.

If I went with them, the Jin Family of Taiyuan would hunt them relentlessly.

The Five Gates of Shanxi were many, yet one.

One, yet many.

They had been created for the same purpose, but each sect had raised its martial artists in a different way.

Jin Chung had not raised them as weapons.

He had taken them in as disciples.

“Sect Leader!”

“Please lead us!”

Every one of them had been an orphan with nowhere to go.

For at least ten years—twenty or more in some cases—he had fed them, sheltered them, and taught them martial arts.

If the grand scheme had succeeded, they would have become the backbone of Shanxi’s Murim.

Now that it had failed, they were nothing more than traitors.

“Do you not understand what’s happening?”

“Even if we die, we will stay with you, Sect Leader.”

“You fool!”

“Please allow us.”

The martial artist who had stepped forward first slammed his forehead against the stone ground.

Then, one by one, his disciples began to kneel.

Jin Chung looked up at the sky and lamented.

“If only the grand scheme had not been delayed. If only they had stepped forward!”

Talk of them was a secret known only to the eight leaders.

Speaking those words aloud was no different from deciding to share his final moments with his disciples.

This too must be heaven’s will.

Jin Chung turned his gaze from the dark night sky and helped the prostrate martial artist to his feet.

He felt endlessly sorry—and deeply moved—by the loyalty the man had shown.

“That’s enough. Get up.”

At the warmth in his voice, the martial artist lifted his head.

He flicked his tongue over the trickle of blood running down his forehead, then gave a crooked grin.

“Yes.”

Thuck!

Jin Chung stared blankly at the martial artist.

The shock was so great he could not even feel the pain.

What in the world…?

Shwaaak!

The martial artist pulled his hand from Jin Chung’s chest.

A glow brighter than moonlight clung to it—a blood-red Force so ominous that the mere sight of it inspired dread.

“You…”

“You already know, so why ask? Oh, and about what you just said—I’ll give you a simple answer.”

The martial artist’s smile deepened.

“Why would we step forward? This is as far as your role goes.”

Jin Chung’s eyes flew wide.

Them.

The unknown beings who had never revealed themselves until the very end.

Dark Heaven!

“You bastards!”

“Don’t look at me like you’ve been used. Have you forgotten who got you out of that hell alive?”

Jin Chung remembered the nightmare from forty years ago.

The corpses of allies covering the ground around him.

The endless army of the Demonic Cult surging toward them.

They had gathered around the Head Elder and prepared themselves to die.

That was before Dark Heaven appeared.

“We saved your lives and gave you a chance at revenge. What more did you want?”

He was right.

Dark Heaven had annihilated the Demonic Cult’s army, then proposed a deal.

They had accepted.

It meant having a gu[304] planted in their heads, but they would have done anything for revenge.

But…

“Wasn’t your real aim to use us to rule Shanxi?”

“Well, maybe that was the plan at first.”

“Then what was it all for?”

The martial artist grinned.

“A bigger picture.”

At the same time, his bloodstained hand pressed against Jin Chung’s chest.

Boom.

A small explosion went off inside Jin Chung’s body.

The energy burst his eardrums, tore his blood vessels apart strand by strand, and reached his heart.

Just like this…

The thought went no further.

Jin Chung’s lifeless body flew like a bird and plunged off the cliff.

Shiiiiik! Crash!

The martial artist glanced down and grimaced.

“Ouch. That must’ve hurt.”

When he turned around, screams and blood were waiting for him.

Ten black-clad men who had appeared out of nowhere were massacring the Gunggui Sect’s disciples.

“Let’s finish this quickly and go.”

“As you command.”

---

[304] A gu is a traditional poison associated with venomous creatures; in Murim fiction, it may be implanted in a person’s body.

Shreeeeek! Thud!

The martial artist turned his gaze toward the bottom of the cliff.

Screams erupted all around him, but below the cliff, the air was filled with cheers and shouts.

“The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi!”

“Jin Taekyung! Jin Taekyung!”

“The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi…”

The plan had succeeded.

But Jin Taekyung’s appearance had been a variable even he had not anticipated.

He did not like that.

Take him out, or let him be?

If he set his mind to it, he could tear him out by the roots.

His deepening gaze turned toward Jin Taekyung, ringed by cheers.

“Our youngest! My little brother!”

“Let go! Let go, you idiot!”

A snort of laughter escaped him.

I’ll let you live. For today.

The martial artist turned away.

Some fifty corpses lay like a carpet in his wake.

Chapter 63

Creeeak.

The man entered the inn around early afternoon.

The old wooden door creaked, but no one inside turned to look. Not even the owner and the waiter, who should have been rushing to greet a customer.

“So? So what happened?”

“Quit keeping us in suspense and tell us already!”

At the crowd’s eager urging, the old man tapped his empty bowl.

Only after the owner filled it to overflowing with bamboo-leaf wine did the old man—the storyteller—continue.

“A fierce battle broke out. Blood Wolf Sword Lee Cheonbaek brought no fewer than thirty thousand men. Against them, the Jin Family of Taiyuan had only three hundred elites.”

“Thirty thousand!”

“My word, thirty thousand!”

“Does that make any sense? Mount Heng Sword Sect isn’t one of the Nine Sects and One Gang[305]…”

The storyteller stopped mid-sip and spat the wine back out.

“Fuck this. This booze tastes like shit. I’m leaving. You can hear the rest from the guy who brought up the Nine Sects and One Gang.”

“Now, hold on. Why are you doing this?”

“Who just said that?”

The mood turned ugly, and a young man was shoved back, half-stumbling.

Only then did the storyteller lower his half-raised ass back onto his seat. He was offended now, and that had made him bolder.

Tap, tap.

Everyone frowned as the storyteller tapped his empty bowl. Now they had to give him money, not more wine. They were in the middle of an unspoken standoff when—

Ting.

“Huh?”

The storyteller’s narrowed eyes flew open. A gleaming silver nyang[306] had come flying from somewhere.

“Well. Whoever that is, they’re a big spender.”

“Who was it?”

---

[305] The Nine Sects and One Gang is a conventional grouping of major martial sects and the Beggars’ Gang in martial-arts fiction.

[306] A silver nyang is a unit of silver currency used in the story’s historical setting.

“Why are you looking at me? You trying to get me beaten to death by my wife?”

That was when someone spoke from behind the crowd.

“I’d like to hear more.”

The voice was quiet but resonant. It belonged to the man who had entered the inn earlier. His face was hidden beneath a bamboo hat pulled low, and the cloak wrapped around him was caked with dust.

A martial artist.

Nobody needed to say it. Everyone in the inn came to the same conclusion.

The storyteller looked from the silver to the man and swallowed.

“Thank you, Great Hero. Is there something in particular you’d like to hear…?”

In his experience, ruffians and martial artists were only a hair apart. He was an old man who had lived his share of years, but he had no desire to get stabbed to death in a place like this.

Fortunately, the man in the bamboo hat belonged to the latter group.

“Keep it simple. Just the facts.”

Judging by his voice, he was clearly a young bastard—but a young bastard who had learned martial arts. The storyteller couldn’t treat him carelessly. He rubbed his palms together.

“I’ll tell you everything I know, sir. The whole lot.”

“That battle you mentioned. How many days ago was it?”

“Five days ago.”

“Who won?”

“The Jin Family of Taiyuan wiped the floor with them. I heard the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi played a major role.”

“Then Mount Heng Sword Sect… What did you just say?”

“Excuse me?”

“Shanxi, what?”

“Ah, you mean the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi?”

“That’s right. I’ve never heard that alias before.”

“If you’re from out of town, that would make sense. Young Master Jin only rose to prominence recently.”

“You mean Young Master Jin Wikyung, the Lesser Family Head?”

“What? Not at all. The Lesser Family Head is impressive too, but the one who played the biggest role this time was Young Master Jin.”

“So that Young Master Jin… Wait. Is the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi somehow related to Third Young Master Jin Taekyung?”

“They’re the same person.”

After a long silence, the man snapped his fingers. A second silver nyang[307] landed perfectly in the storyteller's bowl.

"I believe I asked you to keep it simple and stick to the facts."

"I'll stake my balls on it."

At the storyteller's resolute answer, the man sighed.

"Let's say that's true. What happened to Mount Heng Sword Sect?"

"They're on the verge of closing their gates. Second Young Master Lee Seogeun had already died, and their Sect Leader, Blood Wolf Sword Lee Cheonbaek, fell in battle. Two days later, even their successor—the First Young Master—was killed fighting a band of mounted bandits."

"Mounted bandits?"

"These gutsy bastards heard the Blood Wolf Sword was dead and stormed Mount Heng Sword Sect. Word is they'd been circling nearby from the start, waiting for their chance."

"What a dog's mess."

"A horse's mess, more like. They're mounted bandits, aren't they?"

The inn went dead quiet. Everyone expected the big-spending martial artist to drive a third silver nyang[308] into the storyteller's forehead.

Instead, the man rose from his seat without a word.

"Thank you for the story."

Even after the man left, the storyteller's tale went on. The patrons drank without pause, and the snacks never ran out.

They all talked about the struggle for supremacy among martial artists. Victory and defeat. The young hero who had risen like a morning star.

"It won't be long before the Jin Family of Taiyuan steps beyond Shanxi and stands tall in the Central Plains. The Lesser Family Head, who excels in both civil and martial arts, the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, who rose to prominence this time, and… and who else was it?"

"The Heaven Shaking Sword?"

"Ah, right. Second Young Master Jin Mukyung!"

"That young man is incredible too. They say he's a martial arts genius who appears once in a hundred years, if that."

"But where is he now? What's he doing?"

"Dunno. At this hour, he's probably asleep."

Even as the drinking continued inside the inn, the man rode on in silence. His mouth was shut tight, but his ears remained wide open.

"Did you hear?"

---

[307] A silver nyang is a unit of silver currency used in the story's historical setting.

[308] A silver nyang is a unit of silver currency used in the story's historical setting.

"The Sleeping Dragon again? My ears are bleeding. Give it a rest."

"Yeah, but this is top-grade information. I heard it from a martial artist at the Jin Family of Taiyuan's Gate Guard Pavilion."

"What's the fuss?"

"You know the Heavenly Axe?"

"The Heavenly Axe of the Eighteen Strongholds of Green Forest? That mountain bandit who's a Peak master anyway?"

"That's the one. Word is the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi took him out too!"

"Isn't that just a rumor? Why would someone like the Heavenly Axe come all the way to Shanxi Province to play bandit?"

"How would I know? The wilder part is that Yama Whip was there too."

"Yama Whip too?!"

"They say he's disguised as a coachman at Honghwaru. If you ever have reason to go there, watch yourself."

Of all the words in the ceaseless chatter, two came up most often.

The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi.

And Jin Taekyung.

The closer the man came to his destination, the more the rumors swelled like a snowball, growing larger and larger.

The most handsome man of all time. Possessor of the heaven-bestowed Heavenly Martial Physique. A chivalrous hero who cannot stand injustice.

The man in the bamboo hat spurred his horse onward. Hearing so much as the Shan in Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi made his stomach churn and his head ache as if he had suffered an internal injury.

He finally reached his destination the next morning.

Been a while.

The place he had returned to after several years was unchanged.

If there was any difference worth mentioning—

"Stop right there! I am Hyuk Mujin, Captain of the Gatekeepers of the great Jin Family of Taiyuan, hegemon of Shanxi, and right-hand man of the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi! State your identity and purpose, and—"

—it was that a guy who looked like hell was serving as Captain of the Gatekeepers.

The man in the bamboo hat, Jin Mukyung, sighed.

"Shut up and open the gate."

Whoooosh.

A current flowed, calm and unimpeded.

The internal energy that had left my dantian raced through hundreds of acupoints, then finally returned to its rightful place.

Ding!

SYSTEM

You have successfully circulated your qi.
The realm of the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique has risen to the Eighth Stage.

I opened my eyes as I listened to the System notification.

The Eighth Stage.

It was clearly good news, but I couldn't help feeling a little disappointed.

I had been waiting for a different notification.

Could've at least bumped up my internal energy.

Today marked two months since I had gained access to the System. Circulating my qi had become a habit, but my internal energy was still going nowhere.

At this rate, it'll take another ten years.

The greatest strength of the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique I had learned was its stability. Unlike ordinary internal cultivation techniques, I could even run it while moving.

The problem was…

It accumulates internal energy slow as fuck.

For a martial artist, lacking internal energy was a fatal weakness.

I could handle First Rate and Second Rate opponents easily enough, but if I ran into a Peak master as an enemy, even two lives wouldn't be enough.

Experiencing the Head Elder's martial might firsthand had driven that home.

That old man was something else.

Even after five days, I still couldn't forget it.

No. Not five days.

Even fifty years from now, I would never forget that sight.

The Sword Energy and Sword Force sweeping across the battlefield. And that absurd number—Level 95.

How long could I have lasted against him one-on-one?

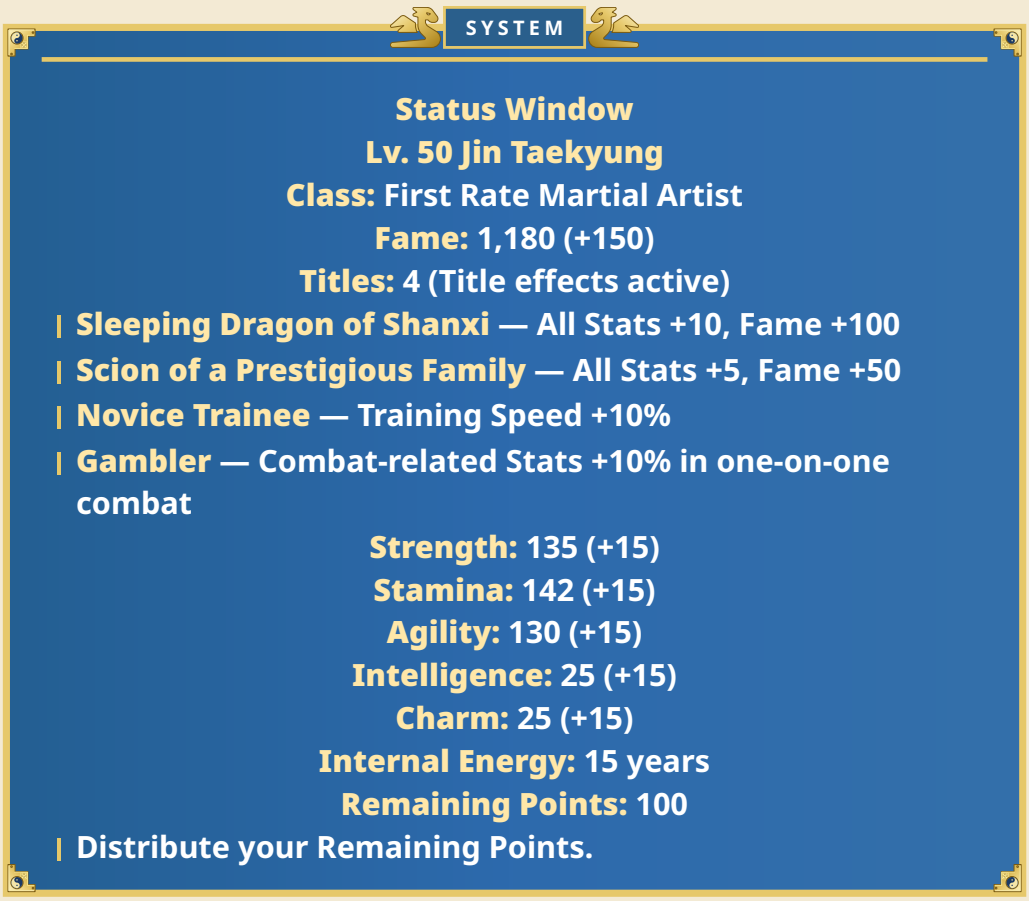
Even if I had wrung out every last ounce of strength, I doubted I could have held on for a full minute.

But unexpected variables had overturned the result, and I had managed to drive my spear through his chest.

And the System had not forgotten my reward.

“Open Status Window.”

Ding!



“Ohhh, yeah.”

I had checked that Status Window dozens of times over the past few days, and I still wasn’t sick of it. It felt like carbonation popping in my veins.

Fighting the Head Elder was worth it.

It had been a gamble with my life on the line, and the reward was just as lavish.

I had jumped thirteen levels in one stroke, my Fame had entered the triple digits, and my Titles had changed.

“Check Titles.”

Ding!

SYSTEM

Status Window
Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi
Grade: Peak
Effect: All Stats +10, Fame +100
Description: Your fame has now spread throughout Shanxi. But the world is vast and masters are many. Never become complacent!

I wasn't a nationwide name yet, but apparently I had some real clout here in my home district of Shanxi…

So that's why it's called the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi?

Goyang's Honey Fist. Incheon's Sea of Blood. That kind of thing.

Either way, it was good for me. I had a solid new Title, and Family Shame, the tag that had clung to me until recently, was gone. It felt as good as having an aching tooth pulled.

I've gotten stronger again.

I suddenly remembered my conversation with Team Leader Choi before returning to Murim. I had told him that the next time he saw me, he would have to revise my contract.

He had probably taken it as a bluff. I had made it a fact.

I'll get as strong as I can, then go back.

I would take every scrap of power I could get before I returned.

Internal energy, martial arts, stats. Whatever it was, all of it.

On my next Logout, I'd be a B-rank Hunter—no, an A-rank Hunter—and return home in glory…

"Huh?"

Wait.

I was forgetting something incredibly important.

What is it?

I stopped everything I was doing and tried to pin down that sense of déjà vu.

That was when—

"Is it here?"

"Yessir. No mistake."

Two voices murmured outside the door. The moment I realized one of them belonged to Hyuk Mujin—

Boom!

The door tore off its hinges with a thunderous crash.

I take basic common sense seriously.

Tissues go in the trash. Cigarettes belong in designated smoking areas. Porn comes from Japan.

And when you enter someone else's room, you knock.

I especially believe that anyone who barges into a room occupied by a man alone without knocking deserves life in prison.

"Here you are."

By that standard, the bastard in front of me got the death penalty.

Smashing the door got him life. Talking to me like we were equals on our first meeting earned him an additional sentence.

I answered him politely.

"Yeah. I'm here."

The bastard's eyes went round. His face was black with grime, as if he had spent twenty years in the Aoji Coal Mine.[309]

Young, in shabby clothes. The story practically wrote itself.

Wandering Martial Artist #1.

An extra who had come running after hearing about the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi.

I turned to Hyuk Mujin, who was wearing a similar expression.

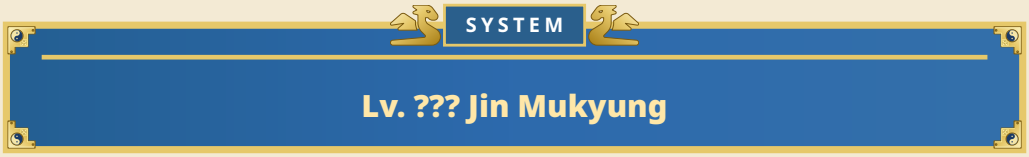
"What's with this guy?"

Hyuk Mujin froze solid. He looked like he had seen a ghost.

"You don't know him?"

"How would I know, idiot? You have to introduce people."

Grumbling, I raised my Qi Sense. A blue circle stretched toward the two of them.



Jin Mukyung. Guess he's pretty high-level.

"Huh? Jin Mukyung?"

I looked at the Level window once.

Then at his face.

I repeated that three or four times before approaching him with my heart pounding.

"Uh. Just a second."

[309] Aoji Coal Mine was a coal mine in North Korea notorious for harsh working conditions.

"…"

Rub, rub.

My clean sleeve turned black. Then a handsome face emerged. I thought I had seen it somewhere before, and then I realized it was the face I saw every morning when I washed up.

We're the spitting image of each other.

Heh.

I gave an awkward laugh. Wandering Martial Artist #1 was glaring at me, his eyes like ice.

"Long time no see, hyung.[310]"

[310] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

Chapter 64

Slowly. Don’t rush.

Jin Wikyung steadied his breathing. This was a crucial moment. One mistake could ruin everything.

I’ve done well so far. I just need to keep it up.

A bead of cold sweat slid down his cheek, but Jin Wikyung was concentrating so fiercely that he didn’t even notice.

His pupils contracted. His faint, trembling breath stopped.

Now!

It was the instant Jin Wikyung’s eyes flew open and his hand shot out like lightning.

Bang!

“My lord!”

Wipeng burst into the study amid a thunderous crash and spoke with an urgent expression.

“There’s chaos outside… What’s wrong?”

A trembling voice escaped Jin Wikyung’s lips.

“I was almost finished.”

“What?”

“I poured my heart and soul into it for two shichen.[311] All for this one moment.”

“I don’t know what you’re talking about, but that’s not important right—”

“It is important!”

With a cry that sounded almost like a scream, he tore at his hair.

“It was important! Who are you to decide that?”

Tremble, tremble.

Jin Wikyung looked so sorrowful and full of resentment that Wipeng forgot about the urgent situation and stared at his lord.

I was too hasty.

It had been five days since the war ended. Jin Wikyung had been buried under an unprecedented workload dealing with the aftermath. Of course his nerves were frayed. If Wipeng had driven a normally generous man to such anger, the fault had to be his.

“I apologize. I was in such a hurry that I lost my head.”

Wipeng’s sincere apology softened Jin Wikyung’s anger.

“Please be more careful next time.”

---

[311] A shichen is a traditional time unit of approximately two hours; two shichen are approximately four hours.

But it did nothing to ease the sorrow saturating his voice. Feeling even guiltier, Wipeng said, “If it’s something I can take care of, let me help.”

“No need. The water’s already spilled. I’ll have to start the drawing over from the beginning.”

“I can draw it for you inst—what?”

Wipeng approached Jin Wikyung with a trembling heart. A huge sheet of paper completely covered the table.

“What is this?”

His voice was drier than desert sand, but Jin Wikyung didn’t notice.

“I tried to capture the battle from five days ago in a painting.”

“Not the battle. The Third Young Master.”

“Same thing. Anyway, it would have been perfect once I finished Taekyung’s eyes…”

“I came in and ruined the brushwork.”

“No. Come to think of it, this is for the best.”

Jin Wikyung sighed.

“Heaven must have refused to let my paltry skill portray Taekyung. Don’t you agree?”

“…”

Wipeng silently picked up the painting.

Rip! Rip-rip-rip!

“No! My Birth of a Hero!”

“You even gave it a title?”

Wipeng pressed a hand to his forehead as Jin Wikyung wailed in anguish. Whenever—very, very occasionally—his lord acted like this, Wipeng felt the urge to retire to the countryside.

Should I just open a martial arts school?

Seeing his lord gather up the scraps of paper with a devastated expression made him feel even more desperate to retire.

“I was going to keep it in my private collection!”

“To hell with your private collection—you need to get outside right now.”

“Why?”

“Young Master Jin has returned.”

Jin Wikyung stopped picking up the scraps and tilted his head.

“Did the youngest go somewhere?”

“Not that Young Master Jin.”

At the disbelief in Jin Wikyung’s eyes, Wipeng nodded.

“Yes. The Second Young Master has returned.”

"Mukyung!"

His face lit up. His second younger brother had returned after three years. He wanted to run out and greet him at once.

"All right. Where is he now?"

"At the Third Young Master's residence."

"That Mukyung, who hated the youngest so much, went to find him the moment he arrived? Maybe he's finally going to act like an older brother. He's grown up. Hahaha!"

That was when Jin Wikyung burst into hearty laughter.

Rumble-rumble-rumble.

A sudden thunderous crash shook the estate, followed by screams.

—The building is collapsing! Everyone, get out of the way!

—Get people over here!

—The Third Young Master's residence is collapsiiiing!

Jin Wikyung blinked.

"I think I just heard that the youngest's residence collapsed."

"Brothers grow up by fighting, don't they?"

"What are you talking about… Don't tell me—"

"It's nothing. Just draw a new one."

Wipeng answered with an expression of enlightenment and spread a fresh sheet of paper over the study table.

"I think you should call this one The Hero Getting Beaten Like a Dog by His Second Brother."

Whoooosh!

Using a Peak movement technique, Jin Wikyung dashed away like the wind. Wipeng watched his back disappear and sighed.

Should I really open a martial arts school?

His worries had only been growing lately.

Jin Mukyung.

Twenty-three years old. Known by the epithet Heaven Shaking Sword.

A martial arts genius who had reached the Peak realm at barely twenty.

But more important than that was the fact that he was this body's—Jin Taekyung's—second older brother. So, naturally, I was curious.

"I can't remember what Jin Mukyung—or rather, my second brother—was like."

Amnesia was an excellent excuse. When I asked Jin Wikyung that question, he told me everything about him.

"You won't be able to see him right away. He's very far away."

"Where is he?"

"At Heaven's Gate Temple in Henan. That heartless brat hasn't shown his face once in three years."

Despite his words, Jin Wikyung had looked proud.

Like a parent whose child had gotten into Harvard.

"What's his personality like?"

"Hmm. He's kind. People often misunderstand him, but he's definitely a good kid."

"Were we close?"

"…You were. I think you were? Yes, you were close."

"Ah. Right."

I hadn't thought much of it at the time. Once I learned how far Henan was from the Jin Family of Taiyuan, I lost interest altogether.

What, was I seriously going to still be in Murim by then?

It was a distance that required several weeks of nonstop travel on horseback.

That was also why Jin Mukyung hadn't shown so much as the tip of his nose before the war ended. And yet…

I never expected to meet him like this.

His appearance had caught me completely off guard.

I gave him an awkward smile and held out my hand.

"Long time no see, hyung.[312]"

The "hyung"[313] who had been gazing at me steadily took my hand.

"Yes. It's been a long time."

This guy seems nicer than I expected.

Just as Jin Wikyung had said, people must have misunderstood him because of his fierce eyes.

Thinking that eased my tension, and I was able to smile more naturally.

"How've you been?"

Jin Mukyung gave me a faint smile in return.

"Well enough. But, youngest."

"Yeah?"

"Your speech has gotten casual."

Whoom!

The next thing I knew, I was flying toward the wall. Jin Mukyung had hurled me with tremendous force.

What the hell?

---

[312] Hyung is a Korean term a younger man uses for an older brother or a close older male.

[313] Hyung is a Korean term a younger man uses for an older brother or a close older male.

I twisted my body in midair. Then I lightly stepped off the wall and landed on the ground. Jin Mukyung watched me and gave a quiet snort.

“Well, well.”

I didn’t like where this was going.

I scratched the back of my head.

“Weren’t we close?”

“We were. My fist and your body.”

“Ah.”

I was insane to believe Jin Wikyung. The man doted on his younger brothers like his life depended on it.

Shit. He should’ve explained that properly.

Jin Mukyung held out his fist.

“This is your oldest friend. Say hello.”

“Hello.”

Ominously, his smile widened.

“Our youngest has grown a lot. Acting cocky in front of your big brother.”

Whoooosh!

Jin Mukyung charged like lightning and threw a punch. The air tore before his fist.

He’s serious?

The blow carried no internal energy, but the raw force behind it was immense.

I jerked my head aside in alarm.

Bang!

The wooden wall exploded. Fists rained down through the splinters scattering in the air.

Bababang!

Face, chest, shoulder, stomach.

The punches seemed wild and random, but his movements flowed smoothly, and the area they covered was as tightly woven as a net.

“A fist technique?”

“Been a while since you had a taste of the Reformation Fist, hasn’t it?”

Fuck, what kind of name is that for a fist technique?

As I cursed inwardly, a move from the Reformation Fist slammed into my abdomen.

Whump!

“Hup.”

“It’s not over yet.”

I fought through the breath-stealing pain and blocked the incoming punch with my forearm. The dull impact made my bones throb.

"You blocked?"

Bababababam!

It hurt. It hurt like hell.

Jin Mukyung outclassed me in every way—strength, speed, everything.

But how should I put it…

This is more manageable than I expected.

Was it because he wasn't using internal energy?

At first, all I could do was take a one-sided beating. But after a while, his attacks slowly began to come into focus.

Whoosh!

Jin Mukyung's fist sliced through empty air. A precise read. A clean dodge.

He looked at me in surprise.

"You've improved quite a bit."

I steadied my breathing and grinned.

Since things had come to this, I figured we might as well have a satisfying fight.

"Not quite a bit. A lot. Haven't you heard the rumors?"

"I have. Until I'm sick of them."

Jin Mukyung gave a quiet laugh.

"Then prove how much of them is true."

Shwaaak!

With a sharp sound of air being split, his hand shot toward my wrist.

Like hell!

I widened my eyes and slapped the incoming hand away.

Or tried to.

Tap, tat-tat-tat!

Five attacks and defenses passed between us in less than a second. Then the match was decided in an instant.

Clamp!

"What the hell is this pathetic grappling technique?"

Jin Mukyung finally twisted my wrist into a lock with a strange movement, then spoke as though I were hopeless.

Being caught so helplessly already had me seething, but his next words set my chest on fire.

"Again."

"…What are you trying to do?"

"I already knew the rumors were nonsense. Now I need to correct the habits of a little brother who doesn't know his place."

Jin Mukyung released my wrist and crooked a finger.

“Come at me. I won’t go easy on you this time.”

I stared at him in silence.

Jin Mukyung was unquestionably a master far beyond me. The wall of the Peak realm was too high for my current abilities to overcome.

I knew that. I knew all of it.

This is pissing me off.

And suddenly, I was curious.

How far could I go?

Just how strong was Jin Mukyung, the genius whose reputation had spread so far?

This was competitive pride—not as a Hunter, but as a martial artist of Murim.

Let’s do this.

Jin Mukyung was the first to notice the change in me.

“I didn’t know you could make a face like that.”

“This is my normal face.”

He laughed as though he found it amusing.

“Fine. That’s all well and good… but are you still talking so casually?”

At that moment, Jin Mukyung’s fist blurred.

Whoosh! Whump!

My vision flashed. Even though I had been concentrating to the extreme, I hadn’t managed to avoid the attack completely.

Jin Mukyung looked from his fist to me and back again.

“That shouldn’t have happened.”

The punch had been aimed at my temple. If it had landed cleanly, that would have been the last blow.

Even though he hadn’t used internal energy, I had managed to partially evade a Peak master’s full-powered One Strike.

“See? I’ve improved a lot.”

“I admit it. But you’re not even a quarter as good as the rumors claim.”

“Don’t worry. I’ll catch up little by little from here on.”

“You’ll catch up to me? How long do you think that’ll take?”

I answered.

“Starting this very moment.”

“Hold out for a quarter of an hour. Then you’re my big brother.”

Jin Mukyung’s form blurred once again. But this time, I was a step faster.

Assign ten points to Agility.

Ten level-ups gained through the war. A hundred points lying dormant in my Status Window.

Some of them answered my command.

Shwaaaak!
The change was instantaneous. At the same time, certainty filled me.
I could perfectly evade Jin Mukyung’s fist as it flew toward my face.
Whoosh!
Too slow.
Without hesitation, I turned my head.
Whump!
…Damn it. I should’ve used ten more points.

Chapter 65

Jin Mukyung wondered.

What happened over the past three years?

He hadn't felt this bewildered in a long time, and with every passing moment, his bewilderment snowballed.

Whoosh!

Boom! Crash!

The air exploded. The bedroom furniture—and even the walls—shattered to pieces.

But that was all. Jin Taekyung was narrowly dodging every one of his attacks.

He's dodging this? That guy?

Mukyung could hardly believe his eyes.

Jin Mukyung knew Jin Taekyung well. A scion of a martial family in name only, he was a pathetically weak man in both mind and body.

Mukyung had been willing to overlook it when they were snot-nosed children, but Taekyung's behavior had only grown more absurd with each passing year.

I used to wonder how someone like that could possibly be my little brother.

Had Taekyung been fifteen? Mukyung still remembered the day he brought a chair to the training hall with perfect clarity.

"Little brother, what's that?"

"A chair."

"You left off the last syllable."[314]

"A chair, sir…"

"Why did you bring it?"

"To use during horse-stance training."[315]

"Ah. Because horse stance is too hard?"

That groundbreaking idea had made Jin Mukyung smack his forehead.

At the same time, he had attained enlightenment.

Ah. Words won't work on this one.

"Get down."

And so the Reformation Fist had been born.

And now that same guy is what? The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi?

---

[314] In Korean, adding yo to an answer makes it polite. Mukyung is demanding that Taekyung address his older brother respectfully.

[315] Horse stance is a martial-arts training posture held with the legs spread and knees bent.

When Mukyung first heard the story at an inn, it was so ridiculous that he couldn't even bring himself to snort. If the storyteller had been twenty years younger, Mukyung would have beaten him senseless.

That was also why he had gone straight to Taekyung's room as soon as he arrived at the family.

Has he gone so far as to fabricate rumors now?

It was obviously the Three Calamities Sword Technique. Mukyung could already picture the whole thing.

The only thing Taekyung knew how to do was chase women. He must have decided he wanted a taste of fame and started pretending to be a Peak master.

You're in for it today.

He had barged in with exactly that attitude.

But then…

He's different.

Mukyung had realized it the instant he saw Taekyung.

His bones and muscles had grown larger and harder. Deep within eyes that still looked like those of a Third Rate wastrel, there was a sharp, piercing aura.

The hand they clasped afterward was rough and strong.

Peak? No. Not yet. He's still Supreme First Rate.

Mukyung knew because he had already walked that path himself. Jin Taekyung was still unrefined. He merely stood before the wall of the Peak realm.

That made it all the more astonishing.

How on earth?

Water and sunlight alone did not make everything grow. Just as a sprout needed spring to emerge, there was a proper time to learn martial arts.

Jin Taekyung had been born with a decent physique, as befitted the bloodline of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, but he had squandered those years and missed his chance.

And yet that same man had grown this much in only three years.

Unless he's undergone Bone Transformation…[316]

Whoosh!

The sharp sound of splitting air shattered Jin Mukyung's thoughts. He narrowly avoided Taekyung's fist, his face hardening.

He's getting faster.

It wasn't his imagination. The more time passed, the faster Taekyung became.

Whoosh!

Even now.

[316] Bone Transformation is an advanced bodily transformation in martial-arts fiction.

Thud!

Jin Mukyung raised an arm to block the attack, and his feelings were nothing but bewilderment. Watching him, Jin Taekyung snickered.

“You didn’t think you could dodge that, did you? That’s why you blocked.”

“You…”

“I told you. I’m catching up.”

“What happened to you? Did you drink gongcheong seokyu[317] or something?”

“Why would I drink oil? You’re completely insane.”

“…”

Jin Mukyung trembled at the first verbal abuse he had ever heard in his life.

Who was he? A youthful Peak master and a martial-arts genius! Even the scions of prestigious families throughout the Central Plains who envied him would never dare speak to him so rudely.

And yet his own younger brother, only three years apart in age, had called him a crazy bastard.

“You’re dead.”

Jin Taekyung had flinched for a moment at the ominous aura, but then he let out a quiet laugh.

“Getting pretty casual, aren’t you?”

“What?”

“Didn’t you say that if I lasted a quarter of an hour, I’d be your hyung[318]? It’s been a quarter of an hour. Right, Mujin?”

Hyuk Mujin, crumpled in a corner and barely able to breathe, cautiously answered.

“Yes, I think it probably has.”

But when he saw Jin Mukyung glaring at him as though he meant to kill him, he answered again, nearly in tears.

“Though maybe not… Could I just go outside?”

“No.”

Jin Mukyung muttered the word in a sinister voice and drew up his internal energy.

The aura of a Peak master pressed down on the air. Cracks split the floor, and the atmosphere swelled as though it might burst.

Gr-r-rk.

The smile vanished from Jin Taekyung’s face.

---

[317] Gongcheong seokyu is a rare martial-arts elixir; seokyu is also the Korean word for petroleum.

[318] Hyung is a man’s term of address for an older brother or an older male he is close to. Hyung-nim is a more respectful form.

"Hyung-nim[319]. I don't think that's quite fair."

In contrast, a broad smile filled Jin Mukyung's face.

"Just keep doing what you were doing, you little bastard."

Bang! Cra-crash!

A deafening roar.

Then, collapse.

Jin Wikyung arrived too late and dropped to his knees before the ruined pavilion.

"Youngest—!"

Rustle. Thump!

At that moment, someone emerged through the wreckage. Wearing a wind cloak, he tossed out a shapeless lump like a piece of luggage. It was impossible to tell whether it was alive or dead.

"He's not dead yet."

After thinking for a moment, he continued.

"One of them might be dead."

As if answering him, a groan rose from the pile of rubble.

"Ghhhh…"

"That's the Captain of the Gatekeepers!"

"Save him! Take him to the Medicine King Hall!"

Looking refreshed, Jin Mukyung gazed up at the sky.

"Ah. Beautiful weather."

A rude younger brother needed a good beating now and then.

The distinctive smell of medicinal herbs stung my nose. I slowly opened my eyes.

The room had been cleaned up. A dozen or so people hurried back and forth outside the door, and Hyuk Mujin lay asleep in the bed beside mine, swathed in bandages.

The Medicine King Hall.

At this point, it was practically my second home. Come to think of it, I had probably woken up here more often than I had in my own pavilion.

Oh, right. The pavilion had collapsed too.

Great.

"Goddammit."

That ignorant bastard, Jin Mukyung. Where was I supposed to sleep now?

As I stared blankly at the ceiling, something began squirming beneath my blanket.

[319] Hyung is a man's term of address for an older brother or an older male he is close to. Hyung-nim is a more respectful form.

What the hell is this?

I lifted the blanket, revealing a small, round, white life-form clinging tightly to my side.

A brief silence passed before I opened my mouth.

“What are you doing here?”

“Shh! Quiet! Quiet!”

It was Soyul, Socheon’s little sister. The five-year-old stared at me with the most desperate eyes in the world.

“What are you doing?”

“Be quiet!”

“Your voice is the loudest one here.”

“Shh!”

Whatever she was doing, she certainly knew how to live an interesting life.

I sighed and pulled the blanket back over us. That lasted only a moment.

Squirm, squirm.

“Pwah!”

Soyul poked her face out and huffed.

“I can’t breathe!”

Was this really the Medicine King Hall? Could just anyone wander in and out of a patient’s room while he was supposed to be resting?

“Are you sorry or not!”

She tapped my chest with her tiny hands, and her expression was surprisingly stern.

“All right. So what were you doing here?”

“Playing hide-and-seek.”

“With whom?”

“With my big brother!”

Soyul smiled sweetly.

“He’ll never dream I hid here!”

“We’ll see.”

I glanced at the closed door. I had sensed someone hovering outside for a while now. It was obvious who it was.

“Come in.”

“…”

“It’s all right. Come in.”

Only then did the door cautiously open. Looking deeply humbled, Socheon said,

“Please excuse the intrusion, Benefactor.”

At the appearance of her brother, Soyul stared at me in shock.

“You betrayed me!”

I answered with a benevolent smile.

“Life is a series of betrayals.”

“That doesn’t count! It was a dirty conspiracy!”

“Where did you learn words like that?”

At the sight of his five-year-old sister showing off such sinister vocabulary, Socheon’s face turned red.

“Yul, you mustn’t say things like that!”

“Big brother’s a whole heap too!”

“You mean he’s in on it.”

At this point, any chance of getting some rest had gone out the window.

Suppressing a sigh, I sat up.

“Urgh.”

“Benefactor, are you all right? You haven’t recovered yet…”

“It’s not that bad. I’m just bruised.”

I had been beaten a little—or rather, quite a lot—but all that had happened was that my bones ached and my entire body was covered in bruises.

Jin Mukyung must have held back because I was his only younger brother. I’d counted on that, which was why I’d acted so recklessly.

“Oh, I see. That’s a relief.”

“But how did you know? Have the rumors already spread?”

“Everyone in the family knows.”

Naturally. A two-story pavilion had collapsed early in the morning.

Curious to hear what was being said, I asked,

“So what are people saying?”

The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi got beaten like a dog by the Heaven Shaking Sword. Turns out he was nothing but hype.

Surely rumors like that had spread everywhere.

I can already see it…

“Everyone is furious. What a treacherous scheme!”

“Huh?”

A treacherous scheme? What was he talking about? Had Jin Mukyung used poison without my knowing? Had I been poisoned?

As I searched my memory in bewilderment, Socheon ground his teeth, his face full of rage.

“If he had crossed my path, I would have torn him apart, even if it meant dying with him.”

“Thanks for caring, but isn’t that a little excessive? Calm down. Seriously, calm down.”

Jin Mukyung probably wouldn’t simply laugh that off if he heard it.

But despite my attempts to stop him, Socheon’s anger did not subside.

“How could I? The Lesser Family Head himself has proclaimed the man’s immediate execution.”

“…”

What the hell? That’s terrifying.

Was this the kind of place where the second son got the death penalty for hitting his youngest brother?

Is this what Murim is like?

I asked in a trembling voice.

“Did they kill him?”

Socheon shook his head regretfully.

“He escaped. The pursuit team should be tracking his trail by now.”

“Are you kidding me?”

They had even formed a pursuit team. I barely restrained the urge to split open Jin Wikyung’s and Socheon’s heads and inspect their brains.

“Was all that really necessary?”

“Pardon?”

“I mean, the guy was a little rough with me, but he didn’t seem like such a bad person.”

“He tried to harm you, Benefactor!”

“That happens. I understand.”

I had a younger sister too, so I knew how it was. Sometimes I wished Hayeon had been a younger brother. If she were some hulking bastard of a man, I could beat him half to death without worrying about social criticism or pangs of conscience.

“Look. I’m barely hurt. Spit on it, give me a day or two of rest, and I’ll be completely fine.”

Socheon’s eyes trembled violently.

“Benefactor… You are truly a junzi.[320] I, Socheon, am sincerely moved.”

Thump.

This was driving me crazy.

I pressed a hand to my forehead as Socheon abruptly dropped into a full bow.

“Enough. Go tell them to call off the pursuit. No—going myself would be faster. Where’s my eldest brother?”

Socheon immediately answered.

[320] A junzi is the Confucian ideal of a morally upright gentleman.

“He should be in the office with the Second Young Master.”

“Huh?”

“Pardon?”

“No, what did you say?”

“The Lesser Family Head is in the office with the Second Young Master.”

My thoughts became tangled. I barely managed to speak.

“Then who is the pursuit team chasing?”

Socheon tilted his head.

“The assassin, of course.”

“An assassin?”

“What assassin?”

Another voice suddenly cut in. Hyuk Mujin had woken up and spoke in a tone that clearly meant What kind of bullshit is this?

“What is he talking about?”

I ignored Hyuk Mujin and gestured for Socheon to continue.

“For now, we suspect he may be the Head Elder’s hidden disciple. His martial arts were so formidable that if the Second Young Master hadn’t happened to arrive, you would have suffered a grave calamity… Isn’t that right?”

Hyuk Mujin’s mouth fell open at the unbelievable story.

“Are you crazy? Do you want me to tell you why I ended up like this?”

Just as the shrimp whose back had been broken in the fight between two whales was about to tell the truth, Socheon spoke up.

“Ah, I left out Warrior Hyuk. I heard that you fought bravely against the assassin.”

Hyuk Mujin’s ears perked up.

“Me? Who said that?”

“The Lesser Family Head. You distinguished yourself in battle this time, and you were badly injured while protecting the Benefactor. Everyone is envious, saying your reward will be enormous. They say you’re a shoo-in to become the next Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion.”

“T-The next Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion!”

“But what were you going to tell us?”

“That…”

Hyuk Mujin flinched for a moment, then continued in a resolute voice.

“About the assassin.”

“Oooooh!”

“He was strong. Even I, the next Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion, fought him for a hundred-odd exchanges without settling the match…”

What a bumper crop of bullshit.

Chapter 66

Step. Step.

Each time the young man took a step, people hurriedly moved aside.

His sculpted, handsome features played a part, but it was the intense presence radiating from him that overwhelmed them.

He stood out even from a distance.

“Wow, he’s handsome.”

At the thoughtless remark from a maid who had joined the household the previous year, an old servant gave a quiet laugh.

“Stop dreaming.”

“Who said I was? I’ve just never seen him before.”

“Didn’t you see him earlier, when the Third Young Master’s pavilion collapsed?”

“With all that chaos, do you think I only saw one or two people? Still, I don’t think I could forget that man even if I’d seen him in the middle of a war. Hehe.”

“True. He was in quite a state back then.”

The maid thought for a moment, then her eyes widened.

“Oh, don’t tell me…”

“That’s right. He’s the Second Young Master. So stop dreaming and get back to work.”

Jin Mukyung ignored the whispers around him and continued on with an indifferent expression.

When he reached the stately, old-fashioned pavilion, the martial artists guarding the entrance opened the doors for him. The looks of awe were a bonus.

“The Lesser Family Head is waiting for you.”

“Thank you.”

The moment Jin Mukyung entered the Lesser Family Head’s office, he was greeted by the rich scent of tea—and by his older brother, Jin Wikyung, charging toward him with heavy, pounding footsteps.

“Little brother!”

Jin Wikyung threw his arms wide and pulled Jin Mukyung into a tight embrace.

For a moment, Mukyung considered dodging. But if he did, he would have to watch that hulking man whine like a child.

“I can’t breathe.”

His tone was as stiff as a wooden puppet’s.

“Is that what you say to your brother after not seeing him for three years?”

“I would say the same if it had been thirty.”

“You’ve grown cold. You’ve changed so much.”

“Yes. I’m a cold-blooded man without blood or tears.”

“That’s all right. I naturally run hot.”

“…Let go.”

A short while later, the two brothers sat across from each other and began to talk.

“I don’t see Sir Wipeng.”

Wipeng, who should have been at the Lesser Family Head’s side like a shadow, was nowhere to be seen.

Jin Wikyung took a sip of tea before answering.

“I put him in charge of a pursuit team and sent him out. It’ll take at least half a month to go all the way to Three Questions Gorge and back.”

“That far?”

If Taiyuan, where the family was based, lay at the heart of Shanxi, Three Questions Gorge was practically its gateway and outermost edge. It was also a crossroads leading to Shaanxi and Henan, so even fifteen days would be a tight schedule.

“It’s only a formality anyway. Aren’t you putting him through too much?”

“Why? Feeling sorry for him?”

“I didn’t expect things to get this big.”

“Neither did I. I didn’t expect you to cause such an incident the moment you arrived.”

“That’s not—”

“Mukyung.”

Unlike before, Jin Wikyung’s eyes held a light reproach. Jin Mukyung sighed.

“I didn’t intend to take it that far. At first, I only meant to exchange a few moves.”

“And then?”

“He was pretty good. I got heated and used too much force.”

“Of course you did. He wasn’t the youngest brother you remembered.”

Jin Mukyung nodded reluctantly.

He had traded blows with Jin Taekyung himself only a shichen or two earlier.[321] He could no longer deny it.

“Since we’re on the subject, what on earth happened?”

“The youngest?”

“Everything. The letter I received only said that the Mount Heng Sword Sect bastards were invading.”

A messenger eagle had been dispatched immediately after the Mount Heng Sword Sect declared war, so there had been no way for him to learn the details.

All he knew were the rumors he had heard on his way to the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

---

[321] A shichen is a traditional unit of time equal to approximately two hours.

“Is it true that the Head Elder betrayed us?”

“Yes. It’s a long story.”

“How long?”

“It goes back forty years, to the Great Faction War.”

Jin Wikyung’s expression hardened as he began to speak.

“Then never mind.”

“Back then, the Head Elder… What did you say?”

“Never mind. It’s already over. What good would hearing about it do me?”

Jin Mukyung nonchalantly drained his tea in one gulp, and Jin Wikyung’s face filled with disbelief.

“You little bastard!”

This was the family’s hidden history, after all. Jin Mukyung had always cared about nothing but martial arts, but Jin Wikyung had never imagined he could be this bad.

“You need to know! You’re a direct descendant of our family—”

“The Head Elder betrayed us. Then he died. The Mount Heng Sword Sect was destroyed in the process. The Jin Family of Taiyuan was the final victor. Did I misunderstand anything?”

“No, that’s right, but…”

Jin Wikyung began to wonder which of them was the abnormal one.

Then he suddenly remembered something.

“You were the one who asked me to tell you everything!”

“Ah, I take that back. If I listen to things that happened before I was even born, I’ll grow old and die right here. I’d rather spend that time swinging my sword one more time.”

“…”

“Then I’ll be going.”

“You’re leaving? Where?”

“To train, obviously.”

“T-Training? Now?”

“I came hoping to spar with Sir Wipeng after so long, but he isn’t here. Shouldn’t I train alone, at least?”

Jin Wikyung was speechless.

Is that how a younger brother is supposed to act after seeing his older brother for the first time in three years?

His heart ached with betrayal.

“Mukyung!”

Jin Mukyung answered the heartfelt call coldly.

“Thank you for the tea.”

He left the office without even looking back.

Jin Wikyung stared at the back of his departing younger brother, stunned.

After everything I did to raise you…

Both his second and youngest brothers had grown up so fast. He was proud of the fine men they had become, but sometimes, moments like this still left him feeling hurt.

Yes. I suppose this is the natural order of things.

Jin Wikyung let out a sigh deep enough to sink the earth, then sat at his worktable.

He carefully began piecing together the ill-fated masterpiece that had been torn apart earlier: The Birth of a Hero.

“We haven’t found a single trace.”

“He left behind no witnesses or footprints. He’s an elusive bastard.”

At his subordinate’s report, Wipeng swallowed a bitter smile.

There had never been an assassin in the first place. Naturally, there were no traces to find.

I have to put on an act I was never meant to perform.

The conversation he had shared with Jin Wikyung a shichen earlier flashed through his mind.[322]

“An assassin? Haven’t you made this affair too big?”

“An opportunity has presented itself. We have to use it.”

“You don’t mean the opportunity to rebuild the Third Young Master’s pavilion even more lavishly, do you?”

“Oh, that’s a good idea. Make it happen.”

“My lord!”

“I’m joking. Just joking.”

“Then what opportunity are you talking about?”

That was when the smile disappeared from his lord’s face.

“An opportunity for our family to encompass all of Shanxi Province.”

“…!”

“I spent the past five days searching through every record in the family. There was a name I needed to find. You know what it is, don’t you?”

“Dark Heaven.”

“Aren’t you curious about the result?”

“You didn’t find it.”

[322] A shichen is a traditional unit of time equal to approximately two hours.

“Clouds are gathering. Clouds that have never shown themselves before. We need to prepare before they appear.”

“Give me your orders.”

“I’ll assign thirty elites to you. Head south immediately. The official objective is to capture or kill the assassin, but your true mission is something else.”

Wipeng unconsciously touched his chest. His fingers brushed against the thick bundle of papers Jin Wikyung had handed him.

“What is this?”

“On the coming New Year’s Day, I intend to summon every sect in Shanxi Province to our family.”

This was no invitation. It was a summons.

Wipeng was not foolish enough to misunderstand what that meant.

“Are you trying to become the Alliance Leader?”

“If necessary.”

Until recently, Shanxi Murim had appeared to the outside world to be divided between two towering peaks: the Jin Family of Taiyuan and the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

But the reality was different. Shanxi Murim was more like a three-legged cauldron.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan, the Mount Heng Sword Sect, and the smaller sects.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan held the central region, while the Mount Heng Sword Sect held the north. The south belonged to more than twenty small and mid-sized sects.

The Five Gates of Shanxi, which had vanished in the recent war, was merely the name given to the five especially powerful sects among them.

“Their alliance is strong. They may refuse to comply.”

“They might have, before the war.”

The three-legged cauldron had begun to tip.

And the Jin Family of Taiyuan had both the strength and the justification to support Shanxi Murim’s cauldron alone.

“Can you do it?”

The answer had already been decided.

Wipeng muttered in a low voice.

“I shall obey.”

At that same moment, Jin Wikyung was piecing together The Birth of a Hero and cursing Wipeng.

SYSTEM

Status Window
Lv.50 Jin Taekyung
Job: First Rate Martial Artist
Fame: 1,180 (+150)
Titles: 4 (Title effects active)
- Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi (All Stats +10, Fame +100)
- Scion of a Prestigious Family (All Stats +5, Fame +50)
- Novice Trainee (Training speed +10%)
- Gambler (Combat-related stats +10% in one-on-one combat)

Strength: 135 (+15)
Stamina: 142 (+15)
Agility: 180 (+15)
Intelligence: 25 (+15)
Charm: 25 (+15)
Internal Energy: 15 years
Remaining Points: 50
- Distribute your remaining points.

I stared at the Status Window in regret.

Damn it. I spent too many points.

While fighting Jin Mukyung, I had dumped a full fifty points into Agility. The balance between my stats, which I had worked so hard to maintain, was ruined. Of course I was bitter about it.

I thought twenty or thirty points at most would be enough.

A Peak master was a high wall to overcome.

No—maybe Jin Mukyung was simply even stronger than I had expected. People didn't get called geniuses for nothing.

"When I held out for fifty exchanges, even the assassin was visibly flustered. Until recently, I had devoted myself solely to training, so I was an unknown master whose name had yet to spread through Shanxi—"

Smack!

"Ghk!"

Hyuk Mujin, who had been struck on the back of the head, let out a scream.

"What was that for?"

"Stop filling the kids' heads with nonsense. Unless you want to croak."

But Socheon was waiting for the rest of the story with shining eyes.

"I'm fine."

"What does 'croak' mean? Soyul wants to croak too!"

"…You've still got a long time before that."

I stroked Soyul's head as she tugged on my sleeve and pestered me.

My connection with these little siblings had grown fairly deep. As I watched them quietly, someone suddenly came to mind.

"How is Great Hero Gong these days?"

Gong Yacheong—the middle-aged man Socheon and Soyul called Uncle.

Murim terminology still felt awkward to me, but I always made sure to call Gong Yacheong Great Hero Gong. He deserved the title.

"He's recovering smoothly. He still has trouble moving around, though."

"Really? That's good to hear."

"He said he would like to see you before he leaves."

I was about to nod without thinking when I stopped.

"Before he leaves?"

"Yes. He'll be put in charge of the Sakju Branch, which is being rebuilt this time."

"Then…"

"We've decided to go with him."

War took many things away.

Socheon and Soyul had lost both their home and their parents in the Mount Heng Sword Sect's attack. They could not turn back the years that had passed, but now that everything had been settled, they would return to the place steeped in precious memories.

"Thank you for everything, Benefactor."

The sincerity in his farewell made something tickle in a corner of my chest. There was still a reality far too cruel for these young siblings to bear.

What was worse, Soyul did not even know that her parents were dead.

She's five…

She was far too young to recognize and accept the present.

I tried to recall a memory from twenty-two years ago.

It was hazy.

"…I hope it's the same for you, too."

Soyul smiled shyly at the words she did not understand.

I turned toward Socheon.

"Can I come visit you from time to time?"

Socheon beamed as if he had been waiting for me to ask.

"You're always welcome, Benefactor."

Hyuk Mujin, who had been listening quietly, broke through the warm atmosphere between us.

"Then when are you leaving?"

“Half a year from now.”

“…”

There went my touching moment. I should’ve saved it.

Chapter 67

“Ugh, every bone in my body aches.”

Hyuk Mujin groaned. His exposed upper body was stained dark reddish-black all over.

At the sight, the crotchety-looking old man—the Medicine King Hall Master—clicked his tongue.

“What the hell did you do to your body?”

He untied the bundle he had brought with him, revealing acupuncture needles as thick as stakes. Hyuk Mujin asked in a terrified voice, “You’re going to stick those in me?”

“What, scared?”

“They look like they’ll hurt like hell… Please go easy on me.”

“Sure, why not.”

The Medicine King Hall Master answered readily and took out two large needles.

“I’ll put one in the Baihui Acupoint at the crown of your head and one in the Huiyin Acupoint at your perineum. If you die, you won’t have to worry about pain anymore.”

“…”

“Now you’re finally ready to be treated.”

After silencing Hyuk Mujin with a single sentence, the Medicine King Hall Master got to work. In the blink of an eye, dozens of large and small needles pierced Hyuk Mujin’s skin.

Thuk-thuk-thuk.

“Argh! Argh!”

“A young punk like you, making such a fuss. From the sound of that voice, you’ll be hale and hearty for another fifty years.”

Leaving Hyuk Mujin, who had turned into a porcupine, behind, the Medicine King Hall Master turned to me.

“Strip.”

“What, what?”

“Are you deaf? Take off your shirt.”

When it came to age, to hell with being the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi or anything else. I shot a sidelong glance at the blue-glinting needles and took off my top.

Rustle.

“Hm?”

The Medicine King Hall Master’s eyes widened when he saw my body.

“What the hell are you?”

His voice was full of astonishment, and understandably so. Until yesterday, my body had been covered in bruises, but now it was clean.

I didn't expect this much either.

After a single night's sleep, most of the bruises had disappeared, and even my aching bones felt perfectly fine.

Is this the power of Sleep Mode?

It seemed that simply sleeping now let me recover quickly from most ordinary bruises. Even the Medicine King Hall Master, a physician seasoned by years of experience, found me fascinating and examined me for quite some time.

"Did you take an elixir last night?"

"No. I just circulated my qi all day and got a good night's sleep."

"Is it the effect of the Hundred-Year-Old Snow Ginseng? No, that's too much…"

The Medicine King Hall Master glared at me suspiciously, as if wondering whether I had raided the medicine storeroom again, then shook his head.

"The Third Young Master may be discharged."

Hyuk Mujin, who had been groaning, brightened.

"What about me? What about me?"

"I swear, if you run off again without permission, I'll ram one of these needles into your Huiyin Acupoint."

The gaunt old man muttered in a sinister voice, jabbing a large needle through the air. He looked like something straight out of a horror movie.

That'll be one bloody opening ceremony.

"Third Young Master, get out. Unless you want the needles too."

Thanks…

That was the moment I jumped to my feet to escape those eyes gleaming with madness.

A sudden flash of insight crossed my mind.

Where am I supposed to go now?

The pavilion had collapsed, leaving me with nowhere to return to. I had become homeless overnight, and as I stood there hesitating—

"Ahem. Medicine King Hall Master, are you inside?"

A familiar voice came from beyond the door. Wondering if it could really be him, I opened it and found exactly the face I had expected.

"Hyung?"[323]

Jin Wikyung jumped a beat too late.

[323] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or an older man he is close to.

“No, what are you doing here? I came because I had something urgent to discuss with the Medicine King Hall Master during my duties. What an incredible coincidence!”

“…”

Nice try.

After hearing about my situation, Jin Wikyung led the way with a solemn expression.

“I know of a place you can use as a residence for a while. Follow me.”

He was clearly conscious of the people watching us. After all, the image he had built over the years was that of a coolheaded, capable Lesser Family Head who kept public and private matters strictly separate.

The problem was…

“It’s the Lesser Family Head.”

“Isn’t that the Third Young Master beside him? What are those two doing together in broad daylight?”

“Maybe he can’t bear to be apart from him for even a moment. You know how he dotes on the Third Young Master.”

Anyone who paid attention already knew: Jin Wikyung was a complete fool for his little brother.

Of course they did. Anyone who didn’t know would be the abnormal one.

He was still like this in his mid-thirties. I could only imagine how bad he had been when he was younger. Right after the battle, he had even been so overcome with joy that he carried me around on his shoulders.

“My youngest! My little brother!”

After making such a spectacle in front of hundreds of people, there was no way anyone could have missed it.

As I sighed inwardly, a thread of Sound Transmission slipped into my ear.

“How was that? Hyung[324] can act too, huh?”

I nodded. If there were an Academy Award for terrible acting, he might have had a shot at Best Actor.

“Are you all right? Mukyung didn’t do it out of malice, so I hope you’ll understand.”

“…”

His fists had been overflowing with malice. It was only thanks to my rapid recovery that I hadn’t spent several days staring at the Medicine King Hall ceiling.

[324] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or an older man he is close to.

I should avoid running into him whenever possible.

That kid had a nasty temper, and the martial arts to back it up. There was no dealing with him.

The moment Jin Mukyung appeared, he had shot straight to the top of my internal watch list.

"Still, see him often enough and you'll grow fond of him."

See him often enough and I'll grow black-and-blue.

Oblivious to my thoughts, Jin Wikyung laughed heartily and continued walking.

We passed through the bustling heart of the Jin Family of Taiyuan and kept going. The farther we went, the fewer people we saw.

Where are we now?

The sheer size of the Jin Family of Taiyuan's estate spoke to its former glory. Even from a distance, it looked as large as several soccer fields combined, so it was only natural that I couldn't see everything. There were still unfamiliar places everywhere my feet took me.

Everything's run-down.

By now, the people had disappeared completely, leaving the road deserted. The occasional pavilion and other buildings whose purposes I couldn't identify were old and gloomy.

It had the kind of atmosphere where rats held sports festivals during the day and ghosts played go-stop at night.[325]

When I looked around, Jin Wikyung hurriedly began to explain.

"Given how things have been for our family, even maintaining this much has been more than we could manage. We'll need to carry out extensive renovations now, of course."

"I don't really mind."

"Really?"

"Yes."

I meant it.

I had lasted five whole years in a cramped, three-pyeong[326] goshiwon[327] studio. Rats could be caught, and as for ghosts… Well, it wasn't as if real ghosts would actually show up.

"As long as it's spacious, I don't mind."

"So, no matter what the circumstances are, you don't care as long as it's spacious?"

The premise sounded slightly ominous, but I nodded anyway. Jin Wikyung's face brightened.

---

[325] Go-stop is a Korean card game commonly played with hwatu cards.

[326] One pyeong is 3.31 m^2 (35.6 ft^2); three pyeong is about 9.93 m^2 (107 ft^2).

[327] A goshiwon is a small, inexpensive rented room, often with shared facilities.

"That's a relief. I was worried you might dislike it."

"Where exactly is this place?"

"We're here. This is the building."

"Oh."

We stopped in front of a large three-story pavilion. Compared to the other buildings we had passed, it was much cleaner and had a distinctly elegant, old-fashioned charm.

I also liked the tall stone wall surrounding it.

"It's nice."

There was no reason at all to dislike a place like this.

Jin Wikyung smiled brightly, looking pleased by my reaction.

"Do you like it?"

"Yes. It's much cleaner than I expected. And it looks incredibly spacious."

"That's right. I had the training ground built large."

"A training ground!"

"I had another one built underground in case the weather was bad."

"Oh. Two training grounds!"

"If we divide them up, there shouldn't be any problem."

"Whoa. If we divide them up, that'd be perfect… Huh?"

Wait. What had he just said?

"I'm not supposed to use it alone?"

"Oh, well…"

Jin Wikyung gave an awkward smile.

"It's spacious enough for two people to use it together, isn't it? You might grow closer while you're at it."

"Who is it?"

Unease began to creep up my spine.

And bad premonitions were never wrong.

Instead of answering, Jin Wikyung strode into the pavilion.

"Mukyung! Your big brother's here!"

Oh, damn it.

"So, I'd like you two to live together until his residence is rebuilt."

After hearing the situation, Jin Mukyung readily nodded.

"Very well."

I hadn't expected him to accept so readily.

His unexpected response surprised both me and Jin Wikyung.

“Wait, are you serious?”

“Yes. But please send me one person tomorrow.”

“Of course. I was worried about you shutting yourself away in the training ground all alone anyway, so this works out well. I’ll find you a capable servant who’s quick on the uptake. Or should I bring in a cook while I’m at it?”

“A servant or a cook is unnecessary.”

“Then what?”

Jin Mukyung gave me a long, meaningful look.

“Please call a physician.”

“…”

“…”

Of course.

The scenery I had seen on the way here suddenly rose before my eyes.

An empty street with no people around. An underground training ground where not even a scream could escape. The perfect conditions for committing a crime.

He’s really made up his mind to beat me senseless.

As I shivered with a chill, Jin Wikyung stammered, “M-Mukyung. No, that’s not it, right? It’s not what I’m thinking, right?”

“It’s exactly what you’re thinking. It might be worse.”

“If it’s worse…”

“Then you’ll need to call an undertaker instead of a physician.”

I threw myself toward the exit without delay.

Whoosh! Grab!

Goddammit.

Jin Wikyung caught me by the nape and hauled me back. Jin Mukyung let out a short laugh as he watched.

“What a pathetic movement technique. Even a back-alley dog would be faster than you.”

This time I fired back without backing down.

“If something’s faster than me, is it really a dog? It’s Red Hare, isn’t it?”[328]

“Even after taking that beating, you still haven’t come to your senses.”

“Hit me! Come on, hit me!”

Of course, I had no intention of actually being hit. I had a dependable protector on my side.

“Enough!”

[328] Red Hare is the legendary swift horse associated with the historical warlord Lü Bu.

The booming shout shook the underground training ground. Unlike before, Jin Wikyung's face had hardened.

"What do you two think you're doing?"

I had never seen him like this. They said it was frightening when a kind person got angry, and Jin Wikyung now showed me exactly what that meant.

"Instead of getting along as brothers, you're trying to start a fight in front of me?"

Under his fierce glare, Jin Mukyung and I both fell silent.

"It isn't half a year or a year. It's only fifteen days. I'm asking you to live together just until the pavilion is finished. Was that such a difficult request?"

Jin Mukyung flinched. As the one responsible for demolishing the pavilion, he couldn't help feeling guilty.

"That was because that brat was being rude…"

"And that gives you the right to demolish a pavilion and beat up your little brother? You call that an excuse?"

Jin Mukyung lowered his head.

"I'm sorry."

This time, the arrow turned toward me.

"Taekyung, what about you?"

I wanted to whip out my ID card, but I held myself back.

This body was only twenty now, and Jin Mukyung was my blood brother, three years older than me.

"Answer!"

"…I'm sorry."

Jin Wikyung glared sternly at both of us.

"This is a decision I reached after careful consideration. If you dislike each other that much, say so now. I'll respect your wishes."

Jin Mukyung and I locked eyes in midair.

Our answers burst out at the same time.

"I don't want to."

"Nor do I."

"…"

After a heavy silence, Jin Wikyung finally managed to speak.

"I'm glad you two are willing to follow your big brother's wishes."

Why ask when he'd already decided on the answer?

Chapter 68

In the end, Jin Wikyung was the winner. He kept pleading with moist, puppy-dog eyes, saying, “Just half a month. No, just ten days. Can’t you two live together?” until Jin Mukyung and I threw up our hands and surrendered.

And that was how we ended up in this situation.

After Jin Wikyung left, the underground training ground fell silent, leaving just the two of us.

Jin Mukyung was the first to break the silence.

“I’ll tell you the rules.”

“Rules? What rules do two men living together need?”

“First. From now on, you will treat me with respect and use polite speech.”

“What if I refuse?”

Jin Mukyung struck the steel training dummy standing beside him.

Boom! Crack!

The steel dummy went flying and slammed into the wall. A distinct handprint had been stamped into its caved-in chest.

“What did I say the first rule was?”

I glared at Jin Mukyung. I had been through hell and back. If he thought something like this could break my spirit, he was sorely mistaken.

“You said I was to use polite speech, sir.”

…

But a mature member of society knew how to avoid unnecessary fights.

This was how adults fought. Heh.

Then why do I feel like crying?

Ah, I miss Mom.

“Good. Second. You will live as quietly as a dead mouse. If you make enough noise to wake me up or interfere with my training…”

Boom! Crack!

As the second steel dummy went flying, I nodded frantically.

“Last, the third rule. You may use the training ground freely, but if I tell you to move, you will do so without complaint. Understood?”

“Yes, yes.”

“You’re finally coming to your senses.”

Jin Mukyung nodded with satisfaction and pointed toward the exit.

“Now leave. Your room is on the third floor.”

As I hurried out of the underground training ground, his training shouts rang out behind me. Being treated like a piece of luggage made my competitive spirit flare. I turned around for a moment and made a vow.

Just you wait. I'll catch up soon.

Whoosh! Slash!

Sword Energy cleaved through the third steel dummy. As I watched its head drop limply to the floor, I revised my vow slightly.

Just you wait. I'll catch up someday.

The room was bleak. Unlike my old room, which had been decorated so lavishly that it bordered on gaudy, this one contained only a few essential pieces of furniture.

"This is a bit much, even for him."

Or should I say it was just like Jin Mukyung?

We had only met the day before, but that had been enough for me to figure out his personality. He hated anything superfluous and valued efficiency. He was also a diligent man who never neglected his training.

"…"

What the hell? The more I thought about it, the more impressive the bastard seemed.

He had a violent side, beating his own little brother like a dog for failing to use polite speech, but when I thought about it carefully, that had been self-defense.

Put yourself in the other person's shoes. Wasn't that the foundation of human relationships?

If I had a little brother like this, I would've beaten him too—and then some.

His older brothers were working their asses off to rebuild the family, while the youngest was neglecting martial arts and going crazy over alcohol and women.

Jin Wikyung only let it slide because he was a saint. Reacting with his fists like Jin Mukyung did was perfectly normal.

And he's strong, too.

Who knew? Maybe once he saw that his younger brother had turned over a new leaf, he would personally teach me martial arts.

This is an opportunity.

My eyes lit up.

Unlike Jin Wikyung and Wipeng, whom I only occasionally saw because they were so busy, Jin Mukyung spent all day holed up in the training ground.

If I received one-on-one lessons from a Peak master during the ten days we lived together, wouldn't my martial arts improve by leaps and bounds?

More than now. Much more.

Greed suddenly raised its head from deep inside me.

No, this wasn't greed. It was hunger—the hunger for everything I had never been able to possess.

Wealth and fame? I wanted them. But they were only a part of what I truly sought.

I want to become stronger.

I had thought I was strong enough, but I wasn't.

I was still nowhere near strong enough to protect the people who mattered to me. I had felt it when I faced Jopil, and again when I saw the Head Elder.

The overwhelming difference in power.

At my current level, I could barely protect my own life, let alone the people who mattered to me. I was nothing more than a frog that had only just poked its head out of a well.

I don't know how long it'll take, but I'll catch up soon enough.

It had taken me only two months to rise from Third Rate to Supreme First Rate, and from F-rank to C-rank. My current resolve was no idle boast.

The war was over, and I had plenty of time now. I intended to raise my abilities as much as possible before logging out.

Should I get myself measured again as soon as I return?

If my internal energy could support it, I could probably reach B-rank without much trouble.

I was smiling contentedly as one happy thought led to another when—

"Huh?"

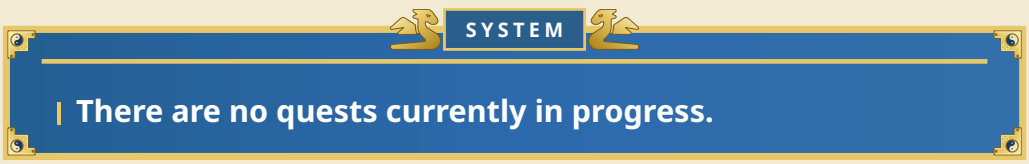
What was it?

I felt as though I had forgotten something important. As if I had overlooked something I absolutely could not afford to miss. It was the same sense of wrongness I had felt before meeting Jin Mukyung yesterday.

It did not take long to realize what it was.

"Q-Quest Window, open."

Ding.



No quests in progress?

The instant I saw the System message, my vision swam. I knew exactly what that meant.

…What about the Logout Quest?

The Logout Quest—the only way to travel between Murim and reality—was nowhere to be seen.

I was staring blankly at the System message, unable to process this unexpected situation, when—

Ding.

A new window unfolded in midair with a clear chime.

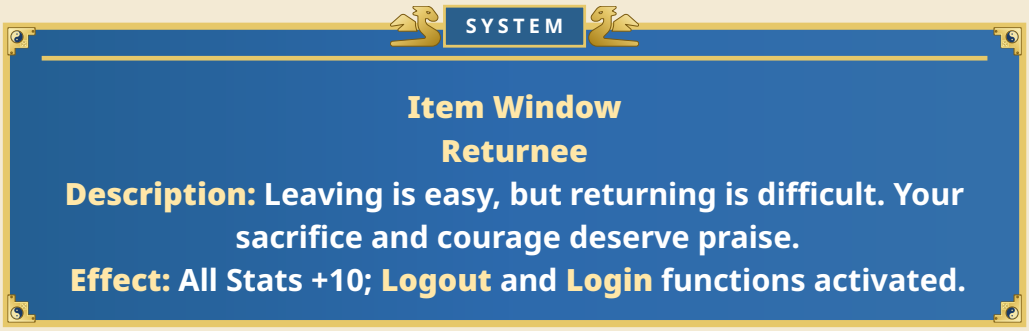
“Returnee? A new feature?”

What was this?

I hurriedly opened my Status Window, and sure enough, the word Returnee was sparkling brightly.

“Check Title.”

Ding.



At that moment—

Boom, boom, boom!

Fireworks exploded inside my head.

Jin Mukyung breathed.

He breathed through his nose, his mouth, and his wide-open body. The internal energy in his dantian mingled with the qi of heaven and earth flowing into him.

Whoosh.

Another name for the dantian was the qi sea—the sea of qi, where energy gathered and flowed. Jin Mukyung felt waves of qi coursing through the tiny meridians throughout his body.

And he rejoiced.

This is it.

He had first picked up a sword at the age of five. It had been a wooden sword Jin Wikyung carved with clumsy hands. He had liked the rough texture, and he had liked the sound of wind scattering every time he swung it. From that day onward, he had never taken even a single day off from training.

“He’s a genius. A true genius.”

“That boy was simply born with it. Otherwise…”

Some people had admired him. Others had envied him. Their intentions had been different, but they all said the same thing.

A genius of martial arts. A born talent.

Even while people chattered about him, Jin Mukyung remained shut away in the training ground, continuing his practice. To him, training was not painful. It was the process of becoming stronger, and it was a source of joy.

Whoosh.

What escaped with his breath was not only turbid qi. Jin Mukyung exhaled the distracting thoughts in his mind along with it.

From this point on, he had to focus solely on circulating his qi.

Can I do it today?

It was time to face the enemy he had fought every day for the past three years.

The enemy known as the Conception and Governor Vessels.[329]

He had been forced to retreat every time until now, but Jin Mukyung had not yet given up. If he won just once, he could open the Conception and Governor Vessels[330] and set foot in a new realm.

Let’s give it a try.

Just as Jin Mukyung resolutely drew up his internal energy with all his might—

“Hoooooowuuuuuuuu!”

What was that? A Heart Demon?[331]

The howl was chilling enough to raise goose bumps just by hearing it. It sounded like a demon laughing in delight. Jin Mukyung hurriedly tried to calm his internal energy when the demon shouted again.

“Strip off your voice and scream your underwear! Hoooooowuuuuuuuu!”

It wasn’t a demon.

Only one person could spout such bullshit from a pavilion that was off-limits.

---

[329] The Conception and Governor Vessels are two principal channels in traditional Chinese medicine’s system of meridians.

[330] The Conception and Governor Vessels are two principal channels in traditional Chinese medicine’s system of meridians.

[331] A Heart Demon is an inner fear or obsession that can disrupt a martial artist’s concentration during cultivation.

“Jin Taekyung, you fucking—urk!”

His internal energy scattered in all directions as fury surged through him.

“What? The Jin Family of Taiyuan?”

The Sect Leader of Song Sword Sect had just been about to lie down. It was the middle of the night, and the general steward’s unexpected report jolted him wide awake.

“A-Are you sure?”

“How would I know? I’m not even a martial artist.”

The general steward was a former scholar who had retired to the countryside, and his response made the Sect Leader clutch the back of his neck.

It had been a mistake to ask someone whose head contained nothing but ink and shit.

“Then how do you know they’re from the Jin Family of Taiyuan?”

“The gate guards came running and said people from the Jin Family of Taiyuan were outside. And, uh, what was his name? They said some fellow called Wi… Wi-something asked if he could meet you.”

Wi-something?

The Sect Leader swallowed.

“His name wasn’t Wipeng, was it?”

“Ah, yes. Wipeng.”

The Sect Leader nearly smashed the steward’s head with his wooden pillow.

Ghost Sword Wipeng came here in person?

He was the right hand of the Lesser Family Head, Jin Wikyung, and one of the core masters of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

The thought of a Peak master who had distinguished himself in the recent war paying them a visit nearly scared the soul out of him.

“Wake everyone up! Right now!”

This was an emergency.

Even as the Sect Leader rushed outside, a thousand thoughts raced through his mind.

Is this retaliation?

Song Sword Sect was a small- to medium-sized sect in central Shanxi Province. It had fewer than fifty disciples, most of whom were only Second or Third Rate.

They had received various forms of assistance because of their close relationship with the Jin Family of Taiyuan, but when war had actually broken out, they had quietly withdrawn.

Perhaps this visit was only to be expected.

Even so, why did Ghost Sword come in person? And at this hour?

The Jin Family of Taiyuan was renowned for its fairness and integrity, so they were unlikely to do such a thing. But if they had come to annihilate Song Sword Sect, there was nothing he could do to stop them.

Even he, the strongest martial artist in the sect, might not last three moves against Wipeng.

“Sect Leader!”

The gate guards, who had been whimpering like puppies desperate to poop, brightened at the sight of their leader.

But the Sect Leader could not share their joy.

His face stiff, he politely clasped his hands[332] toward the uninvited guests.

“I am Huang, the leader of Song Sword Sect.”

At the same time, the thirty uninvited guests in bamboo hats parted to either side. Beneath the hazy moonlight, one man stepped forward.

“Good to meet you. I’m Wipeng.”

He was young, just as the Sect Leader had heard, and ruder than expected.

Song Sword Sect might have been an insignificant sect, but how could he treat its Sect Leader like that?

Still, the Sect Leader did not dare show his displeasure. The rude young man was Ghost Sword, and behind him stood the name of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

If this was the price of turning a blind eye to an ally’s crisis, then he was getting off cheap.

The Sect Leader licked his parched lips.

“I have long heard of Ghost Sword’s great reputation. If you had sent word in advance, I would have gone out to welcome you…”

“Please do not trouble yourself, Sect Leader. I only intended to deliver a letter from the Lesser Family Head and leave.”

“A letter?”

Wipeng nodded and handed him a sealed letter. The seal of the Jin Family of Taiyuan was clearly visible in the torchlight held by one of the gate guards.

“This is…”

“An invitation. The Lesser Family Head requests that you visit our family on New Year’s Day.”

The Sect Leader of Song Sword Sect had lived in Murim for many years. He immediately understood the hidden meaning.

What invitation?

[332] Clasping one fist in the other hand is a traditional greeting or salute that can convey respect.

This was both a summons and a warning.

It was a warning that if they failed to answer the summons, they would be pushed out of the future course of Shanxi Murim.

New Year's Day would be the day the victorious lord accepted new vassals.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan has drawn its sword.

After a brief silence, the Sect Leader spoke.

"I have wanted to meet the Lesser Family Head for some time… This will be an excellent opportunity."

"It is an honor that you are willing to visit."

Wipeng politely clasped his hands.[333] The abrupt change in his attitude made the Sect Leader bite his lip.

"You must be tired from your journey. Rather than standing out here, why don't you come inside and rest?"

"Thank you for the kind offer, but I think we should be leaving. There is someone we need to catch."

"The man Great Hero Wipeng is pursuing? He must be quite the villain."

"A vicious assassin. He dared to try to harm the Third Young Master."

"T-The Third Young Master? Who would dare attack the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi?"

"Well, we assume the assassin was sent by someone hostile to our family."

"Good heavens."

"But…"

Wipeng's eyes flashed.

His sharp gaze swept through the interior of Song Sword Sect.

"Wouldn't you know it, our pursuit led us all the way to Song Sword Sect."

"T-That's impossible. Surely there has been some misunderstanding?"

The Sect Leader's heart dropped. He was about to start making hurried excuses when Wipeng smiled and waved his hand.

"Haha. Of course it must be a mistake. The whole world knows of the deep friendship between the Jin Family of Taiyuan and Song Sword Sect. How could such a thing be true?"

"…!"

"Thank you for your hospitality. I'll see you again on New Year's Day. Hyah!"

Wipeng and his subordinates disappeared into the darkness.

The Sect Leader of Song Sword Sect remained standing there for a long time.

[333] Clasping one fist in the other hand is a traditional greeting or salute that can convey respect.

Chapter 69

In the dead of night, while everyone else slept, Jin Wikyung awoke with a scream.

“Graaah!”

He flailed both arms wildly, then soon realized that he had returned to reality.

The flickering lamplight and the documents covering his desk. The familiar sight of his study.

“Phew.”

After letting out a sigh of relief, Jin Wikyung rubbed the back of his neck. It was damp with cold sweat, probably because of the nightmare.

I thought I was going to die.

He had dreamed that the earth split apart and the sky came crashing down. He had fled from a deafening roar that shook heaven and earth, running until he could barely breathe. The last thing he remembered was falling.

Maybe I’ve been pushing myself too hard.

There was more work than he could handle, but nowhere near enough people to do it. Each nerve-racking day bled into the next, and the fatigue kept piling up.

“Ugh. I need to hire more people soon. At this rate, I’ll die before my time.”

The world was vast, and there were plenty of talented people in it. And yet the Jin Family of Taiyuan still did not have a single decent strategist. That was because the family’s capabilities were lacking.

Why would anyone talented choose the Jin Family of Taiyuan in Shanxi over the great sects or renowned great families of the Central Plains, all of which would welcome them with open arms?

From their perspective, it was an obvious choice.

Until now, that is.

Everything was about to change. If the Jin Family united Shanxi Murim on New Year’s Day and continued expanding its influence…

Before long, talented people from across the land would come flocking beneath the Jin Family of Taiyuan’s banner.

Although I’ll probably die of overwork before then.

Jin Wikyung let out a deep sigh as he stared at the murderous mountain of paperwork.

That was when it happened.

Rumble.

The sound was extremely faint—so faint that only a Peak master like Jin Wikyung could have noticed it.

What was that?

He sharpened his senses. When he focused his internal energy on his ears, the sound became clearer.

Rumble. Clang.

Small, but unmistakable.

The sound of steel striking steel.

Someone was fighting. At this hour of the night, no less.

That was not the only reason Jin Wikyung's face hardened.

That direction is…

Jin Mukyung's residence lay in that direction. And as of yesterday, one more person lived there.

Surely Mukyung isn't beating up the youngest… No, of course not.

He had repeatedly urged them to get along. Surely they would not start trading blows already.

He had faith in his beloved younger brothers.

Clang. Clang!

"…"

Jin Wikyung quietly rose from his seat.

Once he fully unleashed his movement technique, Jin Wikyung reached Jin Mukyung's residence in no time.

The problem was that the closer he got, the more ominous the sounds became.

…He's probably training alone in the training ground, right?

Jin Wikyung hesitated, unsure whether to enter the pavilion. After a moment, he cautiously poked his head over the wall.

And witnessed a shocking sight.

"I told you. Rule number two. Huh?"

Boom! Crash!

Jin Mukyung swung his scabbard without pause. One person fled desperately, trying to escape him.

"Lo-Logout!"

Before Jin Taekyung could even finish his desperate cry, the scabbard flew toward him. It missed him by a hair and shattered the bluestone floor of the training ground.

Bang!

"I told you, you bastard—qi deviation! Conception and Governor Vessels!"

"Logouuuut!"

"…"

What was “Loguawk,” and why were qi deviation and the Conception and Governor Vessels suddenly coming up?

The flow of the conversation made absolutely no sense, but one thing was certain.

Something bad is going to happen if this keeps up.

At this rate, they might really have to call either a physician or an undertaker.

I’ll protect the youngest!

Jin Wikyung was about to charge in, his face set with determination, when—

“Why is your side open again? Are you that desperate to get hit?”

Whack!

“Guh!”

Jin Taekyung staggered after taking a blow to the ribs. Jin Mukyung did not miss the opening. He closed in and swung his scabbard again.

Thwack-thwack-thwack!

“Argh! Argh! Argh!”

“Don’t shrink back just because you got hit. Especially your lower body!”

Thwack!

“Grrr!”

“Oh, look at you.”

Jin Mukyung smiled disdainfully at the sight of his younger brother charging at him with his teeth clenched.

“You don’t even have the fundamentals down. First, fix that habit of throwing out your hands and feet on instinct. People learn martial arts, not beasts.”

“Shut up!”

“You have a terrible memory, too. Sleep well. When you wake up, I’ll explain the rules again.”

Whoosh! Thud.

Jin Taekyung took a direct hit to the chin, and his body crumpled. Jin Mukyung silently looked down at him lying spread-eagled on the floor, then slowly spoke.

“Please come out.”

There was no question who he was speaking to. Jin Wikyung emerged from behind the wall with an awkward expression.

“You knew I was here?”

“It would be strange if I didn’t. Every time that kid got hit, I could hear you swallowing from here like thunder.”

Jin Wikyung examined the fallen Jin Taekyung with worried eyes.

“His injuries aren’t too severe. That’s a relief.”

“It’s not like he’s going to die.”

“Mukyung!”

“Don’t worry. His bones and sinews are unbelievably sturdy.”

“Really?”

“He lasted four hours while taking a beating like that. With that kind of stamina and grit, he’ll soon… Why are you laughing?”

Jin Wikyung gazed at his younger brother’s face with a strange smile and answered cheerfully.

“It’s fascinating. Isn’t this the first time you’ve ever praised the youngest?”

Jin Mukyung stiffened.

Praise? I praised that bastard?

Impossible. His younger brother did not have a single redeeming quality. He had spent his days drowning in alcohol and chasing women, without a care for what happened to the family. And Jin Mukyung had praised him?

He forced himself to shake his head.

“…I did no such thing.”

“I see.”

“I really haven’t.”

“All right. Who said otherwise?”

“No, you’re still laughing!”

“I have never done that.”

“Hyung!”[334]

Jin Wikyung struggled to suppress the laughter bubbling up inside him. It pained him to see his beloved youngest brother hurt, but this was something Taekyung would have to experience sooner or later.

I can’t keep him under my wing forever.

The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi.

Another genius produced by the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

As he looked at his younger brother, who had grown so much in such a short time, Jin Wikyung felt both joy and unease.

No. Perhaps it was fear.

Is this even possible?

It was far too fast. Even to someone who had watched the genius Jin Mukyung from closer than anyone else, Jin Taekyung’s rate of growth was beyond comprehension.

I can’t even begin to gauge it.

As a child, Jin Wikyung had been a promising talent, but he had never been a genius. How could an ordinary man like him understand a genius, let alone teach one?

---

[334] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man close to him. Hyung-nim is a more respectful form.

Just as his worries were deepening, Jin Mukyung had returned.

Jin Wikyung had known at once that this was the moment, and put the two of them together.

I was so worried because they got along so poorly…

But now that he had seen them together, he knew those worries had been unnecessary. Jin Mukyung's methods were rough, but this was clearly training, not a one-sided beating.

Training that would make the fast-growing but still inexperienced Jin Taekyung tougher and sharper.

His body would suffer, though.

It's all for your sake.

Jin Wikyung gazed down at the fallen youngest with boundless tenderness and spoke.

"I'll be going now."

But Jin Mukyung was not about to let him leave like that.

"Where do you think you're going alone? Take that kid with you. I can't live with him."

"It's ten days. Can't you endure even that much?"

"I stopped at this much today out of respect for you. If you insist, call an undertaker tomorrow."

"Are you serious?"

"Yes. So taking him with you right now would be better for him, too."

"If that is truly what you want…"

Jin Wikyung nodded and continued.

"Then do so."

"Yes, yes?"

"Do as you wish."

After tossing out that one sentence, Jin Wikyung turned and began walking away.

Imagining what expression Jin Mukyung must be wearing, he let out a quiet laugh.

This will be a good experience for you, too.

This uncomfortable arrangement was not solely for the youngest's sake.

Geniuses were always lonely. Jin Wikyung had no doubt that the two geniuses would greatly spur each other on.

"Get up, you bastard!"

Whack!

"…"

Jin Wikyung had to suppress the urge to look back the entire way home.

"You awake?"

"…"

"I know you're awake. Answer me."

"…"

"I'll give you one last chance. If you're not up by the time I count to three, this training ground will be your grave."

"…"

"One, two."

Bastard. He counts ridiculously fast.

I quietly got up and stretched.

"Whew, I slept well."

When I casually turned my head, I found Jin Mukyung glaring at me.

The sight of his face brought yesterday's memories flooding back.

A man without blood or tears. A bastard who deserved to be beaten to death.

I addressed him in an innocent voice.

"Oh? Hyung-nim.[335] When did you get here?"

"…Just now."

Seeing Jin Mukyung smack his lips with disappointment, I decided that switching to formal speech had been a stroke of genius. If he found even one thing to nitpick, he was the type to beat me like a dog.

Fuck… Being weak is a sin. A sin.

I had my pride, too. But in an unarmed fight, I could not beat Jin Mukyung even if I died and came back to life.

While that bastard had been learning systematic fist and kicking techniques, I had been watching UFC matches. He was not someone I could overcome through sheer stubbornness.

That was why I had chosen Logout as my last resort.

Of course, it had failed spectacularly.

You can't Logout during combat? What kind of bullshit rule is that?

They could have told me beforehand. I had charged in without knowing and nearly gotten logged out of life.

I cast a sidelong glance at Jin Mukyung.

"Hey."

"Yes?"

[335] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man close to him. Hyung-nim is a more respectful form.

“Why are you looking at me like that?”

“Me?”

At his icy tone, I made my eyes as bright and innocent as possible.

Now I even had to watch how I looked at him if I wanted one less beating.

“You… Hah. Watch yourself.”

“Yes, Hyung-nim.”[336]

Jin Mukyung looked displeased by my sudden politeness. But he could hardly hit me just for having good manners.

“About yesterday…”

I quickly bowed my head.

“It was my fault. I made so much noise while you were training. I deserved to get hit.”

“No, hey.”

“Oh, no. Your hand must hurt from hitting me yesterday. Would you like me to blow on it?”

“You’re completely insane.”

Jin Mukyung looked as though he was debating whether to hit me, but eventually gave up and lowered his fist.

“Enough. Follow me.”

“…Where?”

“The training ground.”

I took back what I had just thought. He planned to beat me in the training ground.

He could not exactly turn my room into a wasteland again.

Jin Mukyung clicked his tongue when he saw my expression stiffen.

“It’s not that. Follow me. Training starts today.”

“Training?”

“Yes. I’m going to tear apart those horrible martial arts of yours and rebuild them from the ground up.”

The man who had beaten me senseless every time he saw me was suddenly offering to help me train? And he was even carving out time from his own schedule?

I’d sooner believe the Demon King Asmodeus had repented.

Perhaps he noticed the suspicion in my eyes, because Jin Mukyung let out a deep sigh.

“Hyung[337] came by yesterday.”

---

[336] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man close to him. Hyung-nim is a more respectful form.

[337] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man close to him. Hyung-nim is a more respectful form.

"Ah."

His personality might have been foul, but he had a clear sense of rank and propriety. If Jin Wikyung had personally asked him, the current situation made sense.

"There are several empty buildings. Why do you think he sent you to me? Damn it. I should have refused from the beginning."

...I suppose he really did not want to teach me.

But I desperately needed his help. If nothing else, there had to be some use for learning even one decent fist-and-kicking technique from him.

"Please teach me."

Jin Mukyung shook his head.

"Think before you speak. Meeting my standards will be difficult. If you're going to give up as soon as things become hard, quit now."

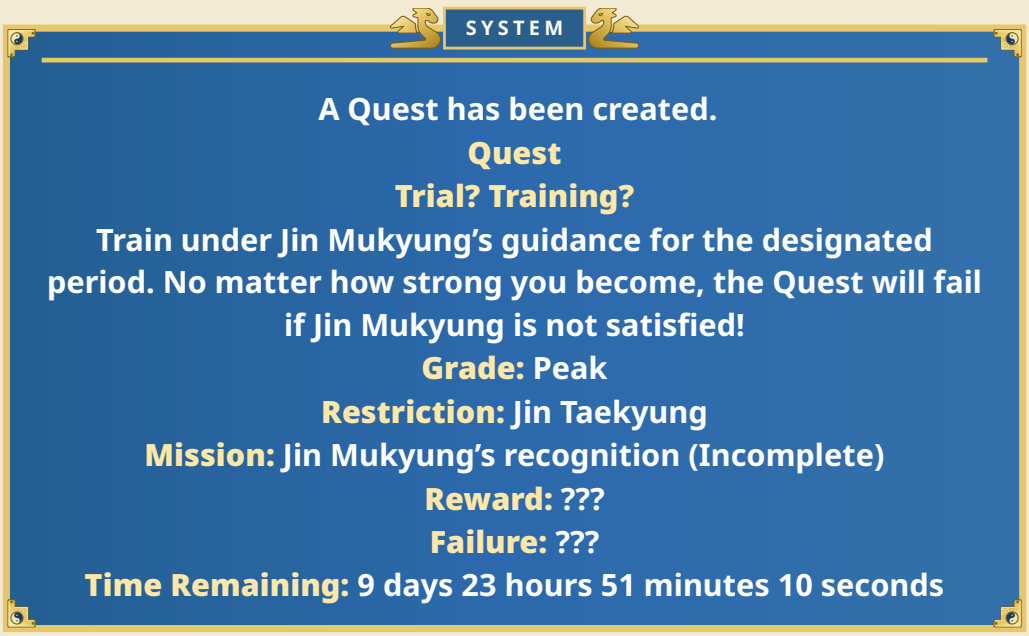
If I had given up every time things became difficult, I would never have made it this far.

"I want to become stronger."

Perhaps he sensed the sincerity in my voice. After staring at me for a long time, he finally opened his mouth.

"Come out to the training ground."

Ding.



Jin Mukyung's recognition.

It was an abstract mission, but I was confident enough. If I combined the System's cheat-like advantages with my own effort, I could grow so quickly that Jin Mukyung's eyes would pop out.

I can do this.

That was when I was steeling my resolve.

“Oh, right. You use a spear, don’t you?”

“Ah, yes.”

“Bring that with you, too.”

Jin Mukyung was a swordsman, so I had naturally assumed he would focus on teaching me fist techniques. Confused, I cautiously asked,

“Why the spear all of a sudden…?”

“Train as if it were real combat. Haven’t you heard that saying?”

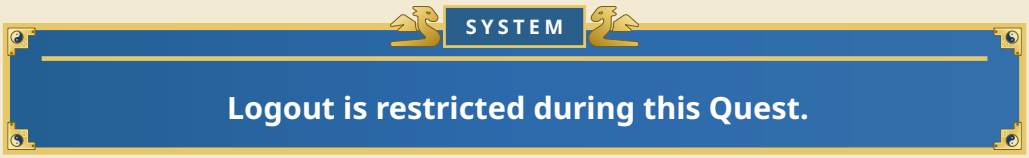
Jin Mukyung smiled brightly and added:

“I even got Hyung’s[338] permission. He said he doesn’t mind if we have to call an undertaker.”

I stared blankly at his back as he walked away with light, cheerful steps. At last, I managed to open my mouth.

“…Logout.”

Beep.



What the fuck.

[338] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man close to him. Hyung-nim is a more respectful form.

Chapter 70

Outside, dawn was dim. The winter air was cold as ice, and frost crumbled underfoot with every step across the training ground.

Jin Mukyung, who had already been warming up, grinned at me.

“Well? Are you mentally prepared?”

Of course not. But I hid my churning stomach and nodded.

Someone once said that if you couldn’t avoid something, you should enjoy it. Thinking of this as just another step toward becoming stronger made me feel a little more at ease…

Shing.

“Then let’s see that impressive skill of yours.”

Is this bastard Korean? Why is he so impatient?

I had no time to avoid him. Jin Mukyung rushed toward me in an instant, and I hurriedly swung my spear shaft at him.

Clang! Kaga-gang!

Jin Mukyung’s breath drifted between us over our locked weapons.

“Your stance isn’t bad.”

It had to be. I had survived seven years in a Gate where my life had been on the line, using nothing but a spear. The experience I’d built up with the spear was on a completely different level from my fists and kicks.

I glared into his eyes and answered.

“This time, it won’t be easy.”

One word at a time. Clearly and distinctly.

“You…”

Had he sensed my unusual aura? Jin Mukyung’s eyes trembled.

“Can’t you keep your damn eyes open?”

“Oh.”

Swoosh. Thud!

Jin Taekyung collapsed.

It was hardly surprising. This was already his fifth knockout.

The real surprise lay elsewhere.

I can’t believe he lasted two hundred exchanges against me.

Five spars over two shichen—roughly four hours.

Anyone would have been exhausted. But Jin Taekyung was different. He kept springing back up like a roly-poly toy, growing stronger each time. By the final spar, even Jin Mukyung had been forced to take him seriously.

What the hell is this guy?

Unarmed, his movements had been as clumsy as those of an eighty-year-old man. But the moment he picked up a spear, everything changed.

The coward who had fawned over Jin Mukyung to avoid getting hit had vanished. In his place stood a seasoned spearman.

He was like a wandering martial artist. Someone who had survived countless brushes with death.

His movements were so simple they seemed crude, while his irregular attacks and evasions relied entirely on instinct. A wandering martial artist's fighting style followed no fixed pattern.

That was exactly what Jin Taekyung looked like to Jin Mukyung.

Which only made the question more baffling.

How?

Even among the heirs of prestigious families who picked up a sword as soon as they learned to walk, countless people only hovered around the threshold of First Rate. Yet this man had stood before the wall of the Peak realm in just three years.

And he did it while giving off not the scent of a courtesan's powder, but the strong scent of a seasoned wandering martial artist. The more Jin Mukyung thought about it, the more absurd it seemed.

Was something like this even possible?

Technically, yes.

Having a Supreme Peak master cleanse his tendons and marrow. Improving his constitution with elixirs. Then swinging a spear until he shit blood while building real combat experience.

Every single day for three years!

"…That's ridiculous."

Jin Mukyung muttered hollowly and scratched his head.

Then only one answer remained.

A genius.

That one word resolved every question with perfect clarity.

Why?

Because he was a genius. Someone blessed by heaven, just as the word implied. Someone born with talent.

Geniuses were ahead in every way. They started from a completely different place.

"Zzz… Hoo…"

"…"

But of all people, this guy was a genius?

That was impossible. It couldn't be allowed!

Anger suddenly surged within Jin Mukyung, and he kicked his younger brother in the rear.

"Prrrblblbl."

Jin Taekyung rolled away several times before shuddering all over.

"W-Wolhwa noona[339]. Not there."

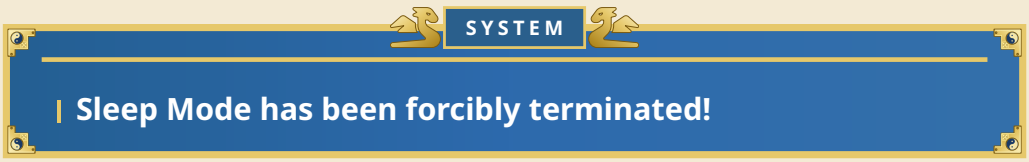
"…!"

"If you suddenly do this… Ah. Aah!"

Crack.

The last thread of Jin Mukyung's patience snapped.

Beep!



So it can be forcibly terminated?

My joy at discovering a new function lasted only a moment. Why had Sleep Mode been forcibly terminated?

Because someone had woken me up, obviously.

"On the sacred training ground, you say what? 'Not there'? 'Not there'?"

Whack! Whack! Whack!

Curled up like a shrimp, I pleaded in a dying voice.

"Please, spare me…"

"No!"

Thwack-thwack-thwack!

I had no idea how many times he hit me. I lost consciousness twice in the middle of it.

My last memory was of collapsing while using the last of my strength to leave a dying message on the training ground. When I opened my eyes, it was already night.

What did I even do for it to be night already?

I felt like a time traveler. Ever since I had met Jin Mukyung, entire days had been flying by.

[339] Noona is a Korean term a younger man uses to address an older sister or a familiar older woman.

Pain swept through my body as I muttered, “Jin Mukyung really is strong.”

Excluding Jin Mukyung, I had faced two Peak masters so far.

The Head Elder and Jopil.

The Head Elder doesn’t count.

In his case, I had to admit that luck had been on my side. If not for the sacrifices of the Jin Family of Taiyuan’s martial artists and Lee Cheonbaek’s surprise attack, he was a master I could never have defeated in a million years.

Then how does Jopil compare to Jin Mukyung?

I did not have to think for long.

I had fought both of them, so the choice was easy.

Jin Mukyung is stronger.

Jopil was unquestionably a monster. Even now, I got goose bumps whenever I remembered the savage heat pouring from his Flame Divine Palm.

But how should I put it? He was strong like a Peak master, and he used the deadly Flame Divine Palm, but that was all.

More precisely, it was a difference in how they used their martial arts.

Jin Mukyung was different from Jopil. Even during our spar, he had used more than ten different martial arts to completely shut down my attacks.

To a martial artist, martial arts were another weapon. Jin Mukyung knew how to draw out the right weapon at exactly the right moment.

Compared to him, what did I have?

Setting aside the Jin Family’s Cultivation Technique, which I had possessed from the beginning, the only martial arts I had learned in Murim were the Jin Family’s Spear Technique and the Jin Family’s Manoeuvre Technique.

Of course, both were unquestionably First Rate martial arts.

But put another way, they were only useful at the First Rate level.

The limitations of my martial arts. There was no way Jin Wikyung had failed to notice what I had felt.

That must be why he put me with Jin Mukyung. Ugh.

The pain made my brow furrow on its own. I had barely raised my upper body, yet every joint throbbed and my skin stung.

Apparently, even the rest provided by Sleep Mode had its limits.

Well, I did get beaten half to death.

To complete the Quest by earning Jin Mukyung’s recognition, I would have to endure days like today—or even worse ones.

Maybe I would simply get beaten senseless and fail the Quest anyway.

It really is one mountain after another.

And that made me happy.

As an F-rank Hunter, I had not even been given the right to climb a mountain. But everything had changed.

There was a mountain I had to climb, and I had been given the right to climb it.

Faster than anyone else!

This isn't the time for this.

Forgetting the pain, I rose. I could not bear to waste another minute or second.

Jin Mukyung was in the underground training ground.

I descended the stairs as quietly as possible and spotted him below.

"Hah!"

With a short shout, his sword moved.

Whoosh! Shh-shh-shhk!

The wind split along the blade.

Jin Mukyung moved without hesitation, thrusting and slashing through empty space at the speed of a ray of light.

About fifteen minutes passed before he lowered his sword and released a long breath.

"Hoo."

He wiped away his sweat with his sleeve, then turned toward me.

It seemed he had noticed my presence some time ago.

"Tell me."

The words came out of nowhere.

Caught off guard, I asked, "Tell you what?"

"About the martial art I just performed."

"Uh, well, first of all, it was really fast…"

"For the record, if you spout pointless bullshit like 'It was fast' or 'It was strong,' I'll kill you."

He's a mind reader.

I racked my brain for an answer that would keep me alive.

What had Jin Mukyung's martial art been like?

As I thought about it carefully, a vague impression began to surface.

"Rough?"

Jin Mukyung's eyebrow twitched.

Was that the right answer?

"Did you just speak informally to me?"

"…It seemed rough."

"Even a little kid could say that. Be more specific."

The image in my head gradually became clearer.

I remembered the blade pouring down upon an imaginary enemy and the movements that accompanied it. Fast and unrestrained. And the aura pressing down from every direction.

It was like…

“A waterfall?”

“…”

“Huh?”

What? Was that the right answer?

After a long silence, Jin Mukyung abruptly swung his scabbard.

Smack!

“Ow! Why did you hit me?”

“Just because.”

He stared at me with a strange look in his eyes.

“How did someone like you ever come out?”

Was that an insult or a compliment?

I had no idea what he truly meant, but I had to hear the answer to his question if only because I felt wronged. Rubbing my throbbing forehead, I asked:

“So, was that the correct answer?”

“There are thousands of martial arts manuals in Heaven’s Gate Temple. They were arrangements left behind by the departed Seniors who hoped to cultivate the younger generation of the orthodox Murim.”

“And?”

“The Falling Flow Sword you just saw is one of them. I found it buried deep in the archives.”

Falling flow. In other words, falling water.

A waterfall.

I had simply blurted out the first thing that came to mind, but it had actually been the right answer.

“Oh, ooh.”

Am I really a genius?

If I could recognize martial arts like this after only two months of learning them, I was afraid of how strong I might become in the future. Even I found myself frightening.

“Surely you’re not having the embarrassing thought that you’re a genius or something after managing only that much?”

“…”

He really is a mind reader.

Still, I seemed to have at least a little talent.

Unable to let go of the thought, I cautiously asked, “Can everyone normally do this much?”

Jin Mukyung flinched.

“O-Of course. Anyone with eyes should be able to guess this much.”

“Come on.”

“‘Come on’? Want me to pluck out one of your eyes?”

“…That might be a bit much.”

Why is this bastard being especially stone-faced today? Did something unpleasant happen?

Even after I backed down, Jin Mukyung could not contain his anger. He kept huffing angrily.

“It’s basic. Basic. Everyone can do it.”

“I said I get it. Why do you keep getting angry? You’re scaring me.”

“Are you rebelling against me? Is it because you’re going through the storm-and-stress stage of adolescence? Do you want to get beaten with the Twelve Gale Fists?”

I did not know what the Twelve Gale Fists were, but getting hit by them sounded painful.

I shook my head fiercely, but Jin Mukyung’s anger showed no sign of fading.

“Do you know martial arts? Huh?”

“N-No, sir.”

“How long have you been learning martial arts?”

The answer slipped out reflexively.

“Two months. Two months.”

“Right, a bastard who’s only been at it for two months… What? Two months?”

Jin Mukyung glared at me with bloodshot eyes.

“Not three years, but two months?”

This was an emergency.

The social instincts I had gained through seven years of working life shone at that moment. I hurriedly opened my mouth, making sure to emphasize one particular part.

“Three years! Plus two months!”

Jin Mukyung’s fist had been trembling as though he had suffered a stroke, but it steadied again. For some reason, even his voice seemed slightly gentler.

“You little bastard. You startled me.”

You startled me even more, you son of a bitch.

Does he have anger-management issues?

If he asked Jin Wikyung, my lie would be exposed immediately. But at least I would avoid the misfortune of experiencing the Twelve Gale Fists right now.

In any case, Jin Mukyung's anger subsided in the meantime.

"I'll say this only once. Listen carefully."

"I'll engrave it on my heart."

I bowed deeply, and he declared in a domineering tone, "I teach. You obey."

"…"

Is this a dog-training school or what?

"There will be no objections. Why? Because I'm stronger than you."

It was true, so I had no desire to argue.

Money, power, and force. Their forms might differ, but the world always revolved around the strong.

I wanted to stand at its center.

"What will you do?"

My answer had been decided a long time ago.

Chapter 71

The Jin Family's Spear Technique consisted of seven forms. The last of them, Sky-Piercing Strike, smashed into the steel dummy.

Boom!

With a deafening crash, the dummy's chest caved in and it slammed into the wall. As I drew back my spear, Jin Mukyung's voice reached my ears.

"The Jin Family's Spear Technique is passable."

"Uh, yes."

"The Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique is about the same."

Wait. Had I ever told him what martial arts I had learned?

As I searched my memory, Jin Mukyung let out a quiet laugh.

"Do you know why I entered Heaven's Gate Temple?"

"Um. Because you couldn't stand the sight of me?"

"…That's not entirely wrong."

He muttered under his breath and nodded, then suddenly caught himself.

"Ahem. There was a more important reason than that."

"What was it?"

"There were no martial arts left for me to learn in our family."

"What?"

"I needed something new. As luck would have it, Heaven's Gate Temple offered me admission, and I had no reason to refuse."

"Then what about the Jin Family's Spear Technique?"

"I just told you. There was nothing left for me to learn."

"No, but you're a swordsman."

"So?"

"Huh?"

"Don't you eat side dishes with your rice?"

"That's different."

"It's the same to me."

It's different to me.

I've learned to use several different weapons, too, but…

My situation was completely different from Jin Mukyung's. That had not been martial arts. It had been a desperate struggle to survive my battles with monsters.

Once I became accustomed to the spear, I had not had the time to look elsewhere.

Focusing on just one thing was already difficult enough.

"You look like you don't understand. It'll be faster if I show you."

Shing.

Jin Mukyung drew his sword and stood before the steel dummy.

He flexed his hands for a moment to warm up, then murmured, “Let’s try it like this.”

His legs crossed in a blur. A flash followed, slamming into the steel dummy’s chest.

Swoooosh! Boom!

I was speechless. The form was slightly different, but the movements were familiar. There was no way I could fail to recognize them.

“This is…”

“Sky-Piercing Strike. The final form of the Jin Family’s Spear Technique. Though in this case, I suppose I should call it the Jin Sword Technique.”

For a moment, I could not speak. Then I remembered something I had briefly forgotten.

Jin Mukyung was a genius. An ordinary person might struggle just to finish a bowl of plain rice, but Jin Mukyung could digest an eight-dish spread without trouble.

Genius. Genius. I’d only ever heard the word before.

By adding and removing just a few simple movements, he had transformed the Jin Family’s Spear Technique into a sword technique.

A genius of martial arts. The rumors had not been exaggerated in the slightest.

This bastard… He’s the real deal.

The System helped its user grow quickly. It did not turn them into a genius. But Jin Mukyung had been born one.

The move he had just shown me was probably no more than the tip of the iceberg. The thought sent a chill down my spine.

“Are you listening to me?”

His cold voice snapped me back to my senses.

“Ah, yes.”

“Your hyung[340] went to the trouble of giving you a demonstration, and you dare let your mind wander?”

Flick!

“Gah.”

My vision flashed. Jin Mukyung watched me suffer with satisfaction before speaking again.

“I’ll explain it one more time, so concentrate. Understand?”

“Gnh. Yes, sir.”

“Anyway, martial arts are…”

“…”

“Uh, martial arts are… Ah, damn it.”

[340] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or an older male he is close to.

Jin Mukyung's face flushed red as he shouted.

"You made me forget!"

Whack!

You fucking bastard…

In the end, Jin Mukyung chose conversation as his method.

A physical conversation.

"You don't understand when things are explained in words. It'll be faster for you to experience them with your body."

"W-Wait a moment."

"There's no 'wait a moment' in real combat. Would you say that to someone who came to kill you? 'I'm nervous, so I need to take a piss first.' Do you think he'd tell you to go take a shit while you're at it?"

"We're sparring right now!"

"Huh? Informal speech again. You're dead."

Jin Mukyung tightened his grip on his wooden sword and charged at me like a leopard.

I threw myself aside without waiting to see what happened.

Boom!

Leaving the bone-rattling crash behind me, I snatched a wooden practice spear from the rack. An ominous voice followed close behind.

"From now on, I'll teach you a lesson."

Swoooosh!

The sound of air tearing was anything but ordinary. I turned and swung my spear at the same time, but I was already too late. The faintly upturned corner of Jin Mukyung's mouth was right in front of me.

"First."

Thud!

His fist shot up from below and struck my lower jaw. My feet left the ground against my will.

Through my wavering vision, Jin Mukyung's voice continued.

"When fighting someone more skilled than yourself, be cautious."

The next moment, Jin Mukyung's palm struck my chest. With a bang like a bursting balloon, I flew backward and slid all the way to the wall.

"Cough."

My organs did not spill out along with a mouthful of blood. When I lifted my head, I saw Jin Mukyung slowly walking toward me.

"You scared little brat. Did you really think your hyung[341] would use internal energy against his younger brother?"

I answered gruffly.

"Then throw away the wooden sword."

"I can't. It feels better with this."

That was the confidence of the strong. Even so, he was not careless enough to discard his weapon.

This is going to be difficult.

Fortunately, Jin Mukyung was easy to provoke.

Especially when it came to me.

"Did you chicken out?"

"What?"

The smile vanished from Jin Mukyung's face. I was afraid of what he might do to me later, but that was a problem for later. Right now, I wanted to beat the bastard in front of me somehow.

"I asked if you chickened out."

"I don't really know what that means… but it's really pissing me off."

The instant he finished speaking, Jin Mukyung rushed at me. His movements were noticeably rougher than before. I knocked aside the wooden sword descending toward my shoulder with the shaft of my spear.

Krrrk.

Did they coat this wooden sword with glue?

I needed to open up some distance, but the sword would not come away. It coiled around my spear shaft like a snake and thrust toward me.

"What the hell is this?"

"What else? The Jin Family's Spear Technique. No, the Jin Sword Technique."

The Jin Sword Technique? This?

"It's completely different from what you showed me earlier!"

"Ah. I mixed in a few other sword techniques."

"That's cheating!"

"Second. Never forget that while you were drinking yourself stupid with women, I was training in blood and sweat."

At the same time, the wooden sword slammed into my side.

Thud!

Never mind the pain; a deep fury surged through me.

What? Drinking with women?

[341] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or an older male he is close to.

While everyone else was holding hands with their girlfriends and going on Christmas dates, I was having a group date with monsters in a Gate, you fucking bastard!

Whack-whack-whack!

The wooden sword pounded my thigh and forearm in quick succession, but I felt nothing. My anger had overwhelmed the pain.

I gritted my teeth and sent my spear flying in every direction.

Sshh-shh-shhk! Clang!

Under the sharp assault, Jin Mukyung began to give ground little by little. Combat was all about momentum. My instincts, honed through countless real battles, whispered to me.

Now!

I brought my spear down with all my strength toward the crown of his head.

Boom!

The crash was loud enough to leave my ears ringing. But the attack had not landed properly.

Jin Mukyung raised his sword and blocked the spear with ease. He snorted.

“Too obvious.”

“Yeah. If it’s too obvious, it’s no fun.”

With a triumphant grin, I drove my fist toward his abdomen.

It’s a feint, you bastard!

The provocation and the attack before it had all been for this moment.

At this distance, martial arts did not matter. One punch to the solar plexus, and not even a Peak master’s grandfather would stand a chance.

It’s over.

My fist, carrying all the resentment I had built up, slammed into Jin Mukyung’s solar plexus.

Clang!

…Clang?

What the hell was that?

My confusion lasted only a moment before a scream burst out.

From my mouth.

“Argh! My hand!”

It hurt! And it hurt like hell!

Through my pain-blurred vision, I saw Jin Mukyung bashfully lift his shirt. A bulging leather vest appeared beneath his martial arts uniform.

What is that?

A bulletproof vest? No. But it looked like it could stop bullets. Every pocket in the leather vest had been crammed full of iron ingots.

"Third…"

Jin Mukyung pulled a dented iron ingot from a pocket near his solar plexus. My fistprint was clearly visible.

"Fight only after discerning your opponent's intentions."

"Why the hell are you wearing that?"

"Fourth. Never neglect physical conditioning, even in everyday life."

"Damn it!"

Martial arts? Forms? To hell with all that. I cast off the awkward guise of a martial artist and returned to being a Hunter with seven years of experience.

My hand was already injured, so properly using the Jin Family's Spear Technique would be difficult. Besides, Jin Mukyung knew every martial art I had learned.

I'll show you what a real fight looks like.

With all my strength, I kicked Jin Mukyung in the shin as he grinned triumphantly. It was a decisive technique known as a soccer kick, or simply a shin-kick.

I had never seen anyone stay fine after taking one of these.

Clang!

Add one more to the list.

"You fucking—"

"You idiot."

Jin Mukyung looked down at me as I collapsed, clutching my foot. His expression seemed to say that I was the most pathetic person alive.

"Fifth… Never mind. I'm getting tired of talking."

He pulled a flat metal plate from beneath his pant leg and strode toward me. I tried to limp to my feet, but he kicked my ankle out from under me and sent me back down.

Damn it.

It was over.

If I used Inventory, I might have a chance to turn things around, but I did not want to do something so blatantly suspicious right in front of him. I lowered my head with a sigh.

"Let's stop."

"You want to stop?"

I lifted my head at his hard voice. Jin Mukyung's face had gone cold.

"After only this much?"

The man who had been grinning as he gleefully beat me only moments ago was nowhere to be seen.

His emotionless gaze made my skin prickle. My Adam's apple bobbed.

Gulp.

Almost simultaneously with the sound of me swallowing, the wooden sword slammed into my right shoulder.

My arm buckled with a thud, throwing me off balance.

“Guh. What the hell are you doing…?”

Jin Mukyung ignored me and swung the wooden sword again. The Jin Mukyung standing before me now seemed unable to hear the voice of the defeated.

Thud. Thud. Thud.

He struck my left arm, then both legs. Only then did his hand stop.

“You just had all four limbs cut off. By a vicious Peak master of the dark path[342] who is several times stronger than you.”

“…”

“If he were even nastier, he’d have other methods.”

Tap-tap-tap.

The instant Jin Mukyung’s hand blurred, my entire body went rigid and my tongue curled back. The System immediately alerted me to the abnormal conditions.

Beep!

SYSTEM

The Paralysis Acupoint has been subdued. You will be paralyzed for two hours!

The Mute Acupoint has been subdued. You will be unable to make a sound for two hours!

I could not move so much as a hair or make a single sound.

A breathing corpse. In my current state, even a child could kill me.

Jin Mukyung. You insane bastard!

The curses could only circle inside my head, unable to escape my lips. All I could do was glare at him. Jin Mukyung calmly met my furious gaze.

“Tendon-Splitting and Bone-Twisting is a cruel technique. Within an hour at most, your qi and blood will twist and every bone in your body will be crushed. Even if you miraculously survive, you’ll either go insane or spend the rest of your life crippled.”

“…”

“Do you think you could endure that pain? You’d probably forget who you are within fifteen minutes.”

My stomach churned. Not because of his explanation of Tendon-Splitting and Bone-Twisting.

[342] The dark path refers to underworld martial groups, as opposed to those considered orthodox.

It was Jin Mukyung's eyes. There was no emotion in them. Those black eyes were unfamiliar and frightening.

Could Jin Mukyung really be about to kill me?

No. That was impossible. I was Jin Taekyung. A direct descendant of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, and Jin Mukyung's only younger brother.

But what he did next went far beyond anything I had expected.

"Don't worry. I'll send you off without pain."

Something cold touched my throat as he spoke in a low voice. It was the metal plate Jin Mukyung had pulled out earlier. Its thin, sharp edge slowly dug into my flesh.

I'm going to die? Like this?

I had survived dozens of brushes with death. In Gates, and in Murim. I had struggled all this time to survive somehow…

And now I was about to die without even being able to blink.

To that bastard who was supposed to be my biological older brother, even though we did not share a single drop of blood!

What the fuck kind of situation is this?

My body rigid, I could only stare at the ceiling as the voice of the Reaper reached my ears.

"Die."

Slice.

The strength drained from my entire body. I felt hot blood trickling down my neck.

Jin Taekyung. Aged twenty-seven. Gone to sleep in Murim.

I slowly closed my eyes.

"…"

No, wait. Something was wrong.

My acupoints were sealed, but I just closed my eyes?

At that moment—

Ding.

SYSTEM

The Paralysis Acupoint has been released. The paralysis has ended!

The Mute Acupoint has been released. You can speak freely!

"Get up."

"…"

At Jin Mukyung's voice, I slowly opened my eyes. All five of my senses were sharp and clear, proving that I was alive.

How?

I hurriedly felt the back of my neck. The cut stung, and blood came away on my fingers, but there were only a few drops of it. Everything else had been an illusion brought on by the fear and tension of death.

"Remember."

His cold voice continued—the same voice that had pronounced my death only seconds earlier.

"You died once today."

Chapter 72

"You died once today."

His cold voice continued.

"Your limbs were cut off, you were subjected to Tendon-Splitting and Bone-Twisting, and your throat was cut. The degree and form of the pain may have been different, but you died. Without a doubt."

Once the relief of being alive faded, anger took its place.

I rose on trembling legs, swallowed the blood pooled in my mouth, and glared at Jin Mukyung.

This fucking lunatic.

I wanted to drive my fist into that smug face right away, but I held myself back. Not because I was weaker than Jin Mukyung. Because I knew he was right.

"…So? What are you trying to say?"

His answer came immediately, as if he had been waiting for me to ask.

"That your days are numbered."

"What?"

"You're only half-finished. Neither a martial artist nor a wandering martial artist. Just an incomplete mess. A sloppy bastard like you is begging to die the moment he ventures into the Murim."

Half-finished.

That might have been the most accurate description of my current state. I was both a Hunter and a martial artist.

"Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi? Supreme First Rate master? Even a passing dog would laugh. You're nothing but a brawler. You're sloppy for a martial artist, and you don't even fight as pragmatically as a wandering martial artist. Don't mistake surviving through good luck for skill."

I barely managed to open my mouth.

"Then what about Jopil? According to you, was that just luck too?"

"Jopil, One Question, One Kill? He was obviously an idiot who let his guard down in front of an enemy. You just happened to have one last move that could turn the tables."

"…!"

"What? Do you think I guessed too accurately despite not seeing it myself?"

Jin Mukyung clicked his tongue.

"Even a deaf old man knows that the Third Young Master of the Jin Family of Taiyuan is a wastrel. Did Jopil not know? The moment he let his guard down, he was finished too."

What is this bastard, a stalker?

I felt like Sun Wukong trapped in the Buddha's palm.[343] His guess was that accurate.

"Let me make this clear."

Jin Mukyung fixed me with a somber gaze.

"That luck of yours ends here."

"…"

"The Murim is crawling with all kinds of monsters. And they don't let their guard down like Jopil did. You're no longer the Jin Family's wastrel of a Third Young Master. You're the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi."

Every word stabbed straight into my vitals. Everything Jin Mukyung said was true, and it was time for me to face reality.

"Damn it."

He was right. I was half-finished.

Thanks to the greatest stroke of luck in my life—the System—I had somehow survived this long. But it seemed that luck had taken me exactly this far.

But… I really am lucky.

Not only had I discovered the problem early, but an excellent problem-solver was standing right in front of me to help solve it.

"Help me."

Jin Mukyung.

A fully realized Peak martial artist and a genius of martial arts.

And—

"…Hyung."[344]

My older brother.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Time Limit: 9 days 20 hours 23 minutes

Murim people were a proud lot. Even a Third Rate wandering martial artist who wore a rusty sword at his waist and drank cheap baijiu[345] was like that, so the arrogance of scions from prestigious sects reached the heavens.

[343] Sun Wukong, the Monkey King of Journey to the West, could not escape the Buddha's palm despite his extraordinary powers.

[344] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

[345] Baijiu is a Chinese distilled liquor.

“Help me, hyung.”[346]

In that sense, this guy had become a decent human being. Three years ago, he would have run to his eldest brother with tears in his eyes… but he had grown. Far more than expected.

He’s a strange one.

Neither his personality nor his martial arts were easy to pin down. That was both a strength and a weakness. But one thing was certain: none of it would work against a true master.

But his talent is real.

Over the past three years at Heaven’s Gate Temple, Jin Mukyung had encountered countless prodigies, but none could match Jin Taekyung’s rate of growth.

And he has strengths they don’t.

He had the eye to grasp martial arts at a glance, excellent instincts in real combat, and an ear for other people’s advice.

Though for now, he’s still a half-finished mess with everything jumbled together.

Given time, his weaknesses would be filled in and his excesses smoothed out. When that happened, Jin Taekyung’s martial arts would be complete.

Like taiji[347] achieving harmony.

Taiji? Is that a little too grandiose?

This was starting to become burdensome.

But he could not contain his curiosity. How would that bastard grow? How far would he climb?

I’m going to be busy.

He had to leave and return to Heaven’s Gate Temple within fifteen days at the latest. Jin Mukyung finally opened his mouth.

“What are you doing? Pick up your spear.”

“Hyung!”[348]

Seeing Jin Taekyung’s face light up, Jin Mukyung suddenly had a thought.

When did this bastard start speaking informally to me?

That was the moment the intensity of the training rose another level.

Bang.

Jin Wikyung stamped his seal on the final document, his eyes heavily bloodshot.

---

[346] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

[347] Taiji is a Chinese philosophical concept in which complementary forces form a balanced whole.

[348] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

He had been freed from nearly twenty hours of backbreaking labor, but he was not happy at all. New work would be piled up by tomorrow morning anyway.

Are these things breeding behind my back?

At least the end was finally coming into sight. That was some consolation.

After completing his final review, Jin Wikyung rang a small bell. Before its clear sound had even faded, two sturdily built servants appeared.

“Did you call, Lesser Family Head?”

“Take these away.”

“Yes, sir.”

The servants skillfully stacked the documents onto a cart. Just as they were about to leave, Jin Wikyung spoke.

“Ah. You stay.”

The servant he had singled out blinked in surprise.

“Me, sir?”

“That’s right. You.”

Once the two of them were alone, Jin Wikyung began speaking in a solemn voice.

“So, how have you been finding the work lately?”

“Very well, sir. It’s all thanks to your kindness, Lesser Family Head.”

“Nothing causing you any inconvenience?”

“Oh, goodness. Of course not.”

The servant, Childeuk, did nothing but nod repeatedly. He was illiterate and could not even get through the Thousand Character Classic,[349] but he still had ears to hear and eyes to see.

After its victory in the recent war, the Jin Family of Taiyuan had risen to become the foremost family in Shanxi. Its Lesser Family Head, Jin Wikyung, had begun to be called the Junzi Sword[350] for his swift recovery efforts and fair handling of the aftermath.

Why would such a great man want me?

His heart pounded with nerves. Had he made some mistake? Or had Jin Wikyung perhaps noticed his talent for martial arts?

The former would be disastrous. The latter would be a chance to turn his life around.

My bones and muscles are sturdy, at least. I never even had a stomachache as a child.

He could already see himself wearing a sword at his waist and letting his hero’s headband flutter in the wind.

But when Jin Wikyung saw Childeuk’s eyes glaze over, he flinched.

---

[349] The Thousand Character Classic is a classical Chinese text used to teach literacy.

[350] Junzi is a Confucian ideal referring to a morally upright and cultivated gentleman.

What's with this guy?

Childeuk's eyes were filled with desperate longing, as if he were willing to offer his soul to obtain whatever he wanted.

It was not the sort of look one man should give another.

Don't tell me…?

Male love, something he had only heard about…

No. That could not be it. He must not jump to conclusions. Childeuk was a member of the Jin Family household, someone he ought to trust and cherish.

Jin Wikyung forcibly erased his suspicions and spoke.

"I've heard a lot about you."

"Y-You have, sir?"

"Of course. I've been keeping an eye on you for a long time."

More precisely, not for a long time, but for the past three days.

Jin Wikyung had been searching for a reliable servant to entrust with a very important task, and Childeuk was the ideal candidate he had personally selected.

"A talented man possessing all four virtues—benevolence, righteousness, propriety, and wisdom. That was you."

"How can this be…!"

Childeuk, an exceptional servant possessing all four virtues, shuddered with emotion. Completely illiterate, he had no idea what those four virtues meant, but he understood the word "talented" perfectly.

I'm talented?

He had been praised for being strong and diligent, but no one had ever called him talented. And now he was hearing it from none other than the Lesser Family Head himself, a man as lofty as the heavens.

Was this a dream or reality? Childeuk was swept up in overwhelming excitement. He was so excited that even his tongue became tangled.

"I've always been watching you too, Lesser Family Head!"

Jin Wikyung flinched.

What did I just hear?

"…What do you mean?"

"I've dreamed of this moment for a long time. The day I would stand behind you, Lesser Family Head!"

"Wait. That sounds strange. Why would you stand behind me?"

"Ah!"

Childeuk sucked in a breath. Jin Wikyung was telling him not to stand behind him. In other words, he wanted Childeuk to take the lead and win glory.

"Then I'll stand in front!"

"No! That's strange too!"

But Childeuk's charge, like a wild stallion, did not stop.

"I will gladly offer this one body of mine!"

Jin Wikyung's vision went dark.

"No. Don't do it! Don't offer it!"

"Lesser Family Head!"

Huff, huff.

Childeuk panted heavily, and Jin Wikyung gathered his internal energy.

I never imagined something like this would happen.

No matter how open-minded he was, this was too much.

Personal sexual preferences were one thing, but he had no desire to become their object. Jin Wikyung swallowed hard.

"Then… are you really into men?"[351]

Childeuk's eyes flashed. His heart pounded at the thought of wearing the navy-blue uniform of the Jin Family's martial artists.

"Yes! Just give the order!"

"How dare you set your sights on me? Not a chance, you bastard!"

Smack!

A slap from a Peak master was powerful. Childeuk collapsed like a puppet with its strings cut. Jin Wikyung stared down at him, breathing hard, then hurriedly rang the bell.

Ding. Ding.

"Lesser Family Head, did you call—? Gasp! Childeuk!"

Jin Wikyung spoke to the horrified servant.

"Drag him out immediately!"

"W-What happened?"

"That bastard tried to… No. Never mind."

He could not possibly say such a thing to a member of his household. For the first time in his life, anger and wounded sorrow brought him close to tears.

"I-I'll take care of it."

Just as the quick-witted servant hoisted Childeuk onto his back, Jin Wikyung added the most important part.

"And that man."

"Yes?"

"Remove him from his post."

"Ah."

The servant suddenly remembered Childeuk's assignment.

---

[351] In Korean, nam-saek can refer both to male homosexuality and to the color navy blue, creating the misunderstanding between Jin Wikyung and Childeuk.

Delivering meals.

The most important duty given to Childeuk, an exceptional servant possessing all four virtues, was to bring every meal to Jin Mukyung and Jin Taekyung.

“Don’t let him anywhere near my younger brothers. Understood?”

“Yes, sir!”

Training Day 1

I decided to start keeping a diary today.

So I won’t forget what I learn during this training.

Under Jin Mukyung’s guidance, I did nothing but swing a spear all day. Every day begins and ends with a spar. I got beaten half to death, but it’s bearable.

This is my first time grinding ink, and it’s surprisingly fun.

Training Day 2

I swung my spear to the point of death again today. Maybe that’s why my Strength and Stamina stats increased, and the Jin Family’s Spear Technique reached the ninth stage.

I’m progressing much faster than when I trained alone, but I can’t help thinking I’d be better off spending this time learning another Peak martial art.

Still, Jin Mukyung must have his reasons.

Grinding ink is getting a little annoying. I’m tired.

Training Day 3

The Jin Family’s Spear Technique again. I asked him to teach me another martial art and got beaten half to death. He said my mind was rotten.

While desperately dodging his attacks, the Jin Family’s Manoeuvre Technique rose to the eighth stage. Damn it. This is surprisingly effective.

Training Day 4

I haven’t slept more than two hours a day since training began.

Most of my time is spent repeating the same cycle with Jin Mukyung: training, sparring, training, sparring. Starting yesterday, I began using fasting pills instead of wasting time eating.

Even with the System, I’m starting to reach my physical limit.

Training Day 5

My arms hurt, so I only ground a little ink.

The sky is yellow.

Going to sleep.

Training Day 6

I don’t understand why the System doesn’t have a notepad function.

I got pissed off while grinding ink and broke the inkstone. Jin Mukyung beat me.

Training Day 7

The Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique reached the ninth stage. My Level also increased by one.

I've practiced it so relentlessly that these days, I even use the footwork when I'm just walking around.

I got goose bumps.

Training Day 8

My hands and feet keep getting tangled today. It feels like these aren't the martial arts I know anymore.

The martial arts I've performed thousands—even tens of thousands—of times feel unfamiliar. Jin Mukyung said it was a natural phenomenon.

What the hell is he talking about?

I got beaten because my expression was disrespectful.

Training Day 9

I think I get it.

Bang!

Compressed air erupted from the tip of the wooden spear. Jin Mukyung skidded backward and clicked his tongue as he looked at his broken sword.

"That was a narrow success."

I did not answer. I stood there blankly, gripping my spear.

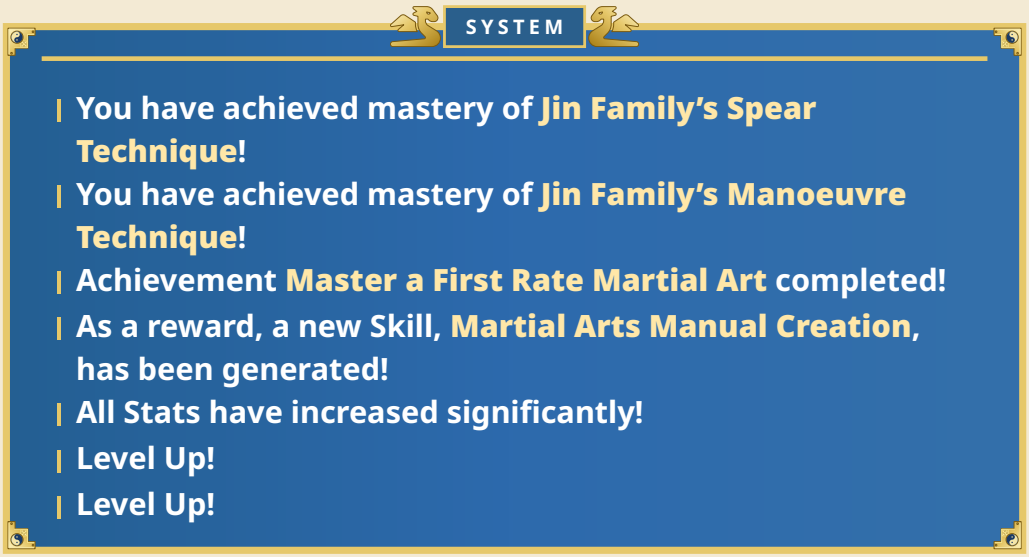
So this is what it was.

I had thought I knew the martial arts I'd learned inside and out. But I was wrong. I had merely mistaken the middle of the mountain for the summit.

Whenever my martial arts rose to a new level, a new landscape came into view.

Just like now.

Ding. Ding. Ding.



A wave of System notifications swept over me.

Chapter 73

Ding. Ding. Ding.

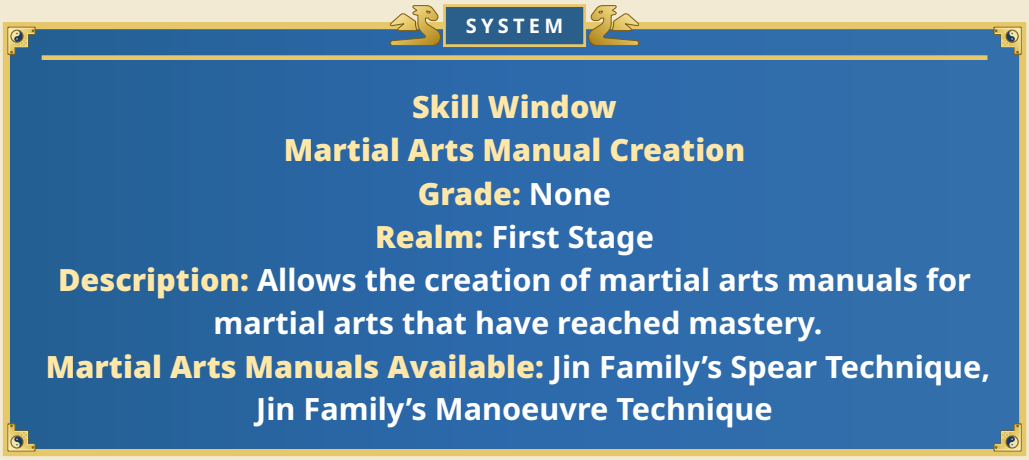
The flood of System notifications was enough to make my ears hurt. My mouth fell open as I dismissed the message windows filling my vision one by one.

Why are there so many rewards?

Two Level Ups, an increase to all my Stats, and a new Skill for completing an achievement.

Martial Arts Manual Creation?

Ding.



The description confirmed exactly what I had guessed.

It's a Skill, so I guess it's better than nothing…

For now, though, it did not seem particularly useful. I was mostly fascinated that the System would give me a production Skill like this.

This really does feel like a game sometimes.

There were still far too many things in this world that I had never experienced.

Everything was unfamiliar and unreal. Even now, I still could not tell whether Murim was a game or another reality altogether.

Smack!

"Ah."

I turned around, clutching the back of my stinging head. Jin Mukyung stood there holding a wooden sword broken in half, staring at me like I was pathetic.

"Not concentrating?"

"Seriously. Why do you keep hitting me in the head? It's annoying."

"You bastard. You're slipping back into casual speech again."

Jin Mukyung narrowed his eyes, but he was not very frightening anymore.

It's not like I've only been hit once or twice.

Today marked the tenth day since the hellish training began.

I had realized one important fact right from the start.

I get hit even when I use polite speech!

I had been beaten black and blue. I had even gained the Toughness Stat on only the second day, which said everything that needed saying. No matter what I did, I was going to get beaten anyway. I might as well speak casually and claim the moral victory.

Smack!

"That barely tickles."

The Toughness Stat had not appeared for nothing.

Just as flowers grew with sunlight and water, my Stats had flourished under merciless violence and hellish training.

Whack!

"Hey, wait. You hit bone. Bone."

"The spar isn't over."

Thud-thud-thud!

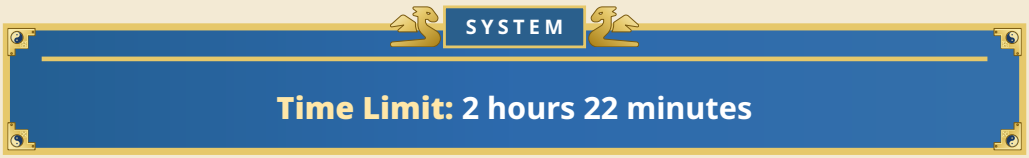
While taking hits from the wooden sword as it struck my vital points with practiced precision, I swung my spear as well.

Sshh-shh-shhk! Crack!

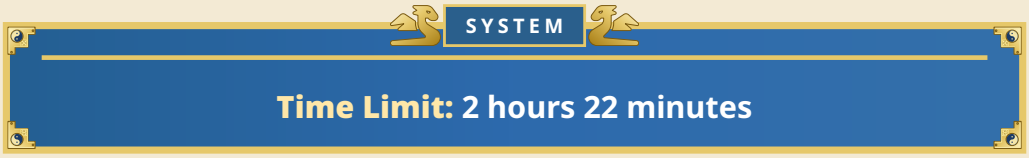
Ten days of hellish training.

At last, the Jin Family's Spear Technique and Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique, both brought to mastery, flowed from me as naturally as breathing.

Ding.



Ding.



"…?"

What the hell? Why did it ring twice?

Sshh-shh-shhk!

Clang!

As he blocked the spear bearing down on him, Jin Mukyung swallowed the laugh threatening to escape.

Look at this bastard.

Ten days. Short in some ways, long in others. But when that was all the time it had taken to master a First Rate martial art, it became another matter entirely.

What kind of bastard is this?

He had thought the same thing dozens of times over the past ten days. Jin Taekyung's rate of growth went beyond even the saying "hear one, know ten."

Knowing something and making it your own are different.

Mastering a martial art meant understanding it perfectly and being able to execute it. Jin Taekyung had made two First Rate martial arts completely his own in only ten days.

Even taking into account the fact that he had already reached a certain level, this was an astonishing achievement.

So this really is possible.

Jin Mukyung was dumbfounded. What had his initial estimate been again?

One thing was certain: Taekyung had far surpassed his original goal.

All I meant to do was cure him of that habit of throwing out his hands and feet whenever he felt like it, then make sure his fundamentals were solid…

But once training began, things had changed.

Fundamentals? Jin Mukyung had no way of knowing, but Jin Taekyung had trained relentlessly for seven years. Training to grow stronger. Struggling desperately to survive.

His palms had split open and healed dozens of times, and with every cycle, his spear had grown faster and stronger. As a result, there was nothing to criticize in Jin Taekyung's fundamentals beyond a few minor problems with his posture.

The same goes for everything else.

Horse-stance[352] training would have been nothing but a waste of time.

Strength, Stamina, Agility—every one of his physical abilities far surpassed those of martial artists at the same level, and all of them had developed with remarkable balance.

So it wasn't sheer luck that kept him alive until now.

Look at that tall, lanky frame and those long limbs. Those lean, compact muscles. Was this really the same skinny brat who had worked on his abs three years ago to impress courtesans?

Damn it. It's not like he has the Heavenly Martial Physique.

Jin Mukyung was once again struck by the sheer absurdity of it all when—

Swoooosh!

[352]Horse stance is a martial-arts training posture with the feet set wide and the knees bent.

A spear thrust forward with powerful momentum.

Jin Mukyung used his footwork to retreat, but Jin Taekyung pursued him relentlessly, pressing the attack.

Sshk! Sshh-shh-shhk!

Even the same martial art changed depending on who wielded it and how. Every move carried the wielder's temperament and disposition.

The Jin Family's Spear Technique Jin Mukyung was using now was no different.

Was this what the Jin Family's Spear Technique was supposed to be?

Martial artist and wandering martial artist. Movements that had been awkward and uneasy in some indefinable way were gradually beginning to harmonize.

He's already made it his own.

Ten days ago, Jin Taekyung had been half-finished, but the change had already begun. Jin Mukyung was proud of his younger brother's achievement. At the same time, heat began to build in his stomach.

This is…

He had felt this emotion once before toward someone else. He had never dreamed Jin Taekyung would become its object.

Jealousy. And competitive spirit.

Jin Mukyung froze in place.

Toward that momentary opening, the final form of the Jin Family's Spear Technique—Sky-Piercing Strike—shot forward.

"Haap!"

Whoooosh!

The wind spiraling around the spear swallowed Jin Taekyung's shout. Just as the spear seemed about to pierce Jin Mukyung's chest, his hand closed around his sword hilt.

Fwoosh!

A flash erupted from his waist and cleaved through the wind.

At its end stood Jin Taekyung.

Sshk!

A short rush of wind swept past, and my upper body suddenly felt breezy. My martial arts uniform had been sliced cleanly open from my right waist to my left shoulder, letting the chilly air of the underground training ground seep through the gap.

Only after confirming that I was unhurt did I let out a sigh of relief.

"Whew."

Sword Energy out of nowhere? My heart had nearly jumped out of my throat.

“Crazy. You said you weren’t going to use Sword Energy.”

“…Only an idiot would take that at face value.”

Jin Mukyung answered with a distinctly uneasy expression and sheathed his sword.

“Training ends here.”

Ding.

SYSTEM

Jin Mukyung has declared the training complete.
The remaining Time Limit has vanished.
Quest success will be determined by Jin Mukyung’s evaluation.

Success? Or failure?

Under my expectant gaze, he opened his mouth.

“You’ve still got a long way to go.”

“Ah.”

“To think this is all you managed to keep up with after ten days. What a waste of my ti—”

Jin Mukyung broke off with a sour expression.

“What’s with that look?”

“Huh? What?”

“That bizarre expression you’re making right now!”

“I’m not making one. I have no idea what you’re talking about.”

But Jin Mukyung was right.

I was struggling desperately to keep the corners of my mouth from rising. The reason was the System message floating in the air.

Ding.

SYSTEM

You have fulfilled the conditions for Quest success!
Quest Training? Trial! has been completed!
Level Up!
The Quest completion Reward has been moved to your Inventory!
Excellent work. An additional Reward will be granted!

“Hm. You’re a shy child, aren’t you?”

Jin Mukyung. An honest young man.

“You bastard! What the hell is that supposed to mean?”

“Forget it. Twenty-three is a bashful age.”

“You little—”

Jin Mukyung’s eyes went wild, and he was about to charge at me when—

Creak.

The door leading to the surface opened, and a servant cautiously poked his head inside.

“Um, Young Masters?”

He was the servant who had regularly brought us meals until about three days ago. Something had clearly happened since we last saw him. His face was covered in bruises, and four or five of his teeth were broken.

He continued speaking through the gaps in his teeth.

“The Lesser Family Head is looking for you.”

“…Damn it.”

Jin Mukyung looked back and forth between Childeuk and me, then reluctantly lowered his fist.

We followed Childeuk. Jin Mukyung walked along with a sour expression, staring only at the ground as if everything offended him. Childeuk kept groaning whenever pain shot through him with each step.

“Ow. Good grief. Urgh.”

“…”

That was seriously getting on my nerves.

“How did you get hurt?”

“There was a minor misunderstanding.”

Those looked like fairly serious injuries for a minor misunderstanding.

In the modern world, potions meant there was nothing that could not be healed. Murim was different. I clicked my tongue as I looked at Childeuk’s broken teeth.

“That must hurt.”

“It’s all right.”

Childeuk puffed out his chest with stoic resolve.

“A martial artist of the Jin Family of Taiyuan must be able to endure this much.”

“…”

He had been acting like he was about to die from the pain just moments ago.

But wasn’t this man a servant?

Come to think of it, his clothes have changed.

He was wearing the dark navy martial arts uniform worn by martial artists of the Jin Family of Taiyuan. I thought he had been wearing a servant’s clothes before.

Noticing my gaze, he smiled shyly.

“Oh. I officially became a martial artist a few days ago.”

“A martial artist?”

Jin Mukyung, who had been walking silently behind us, suddenly spoke.

“Under whose command?”

I might have made a name for myself lately, but I was still nowhere near as famous as Jin Mukyung. Childeuk answered with an awestruck expression.

“I serve directly under the Lesser Family Head.”

“Only specially selected martial artists in our family are allowed to serve directly under our eldest brother.”

Jin Mukyung looked Childeuk up and down. His gaze was not contemptuous so much as assessing, as though he were measuring Childeuk’s realm.

“Your physique is decent, but you don’t seem to have learned any martial arts.”

“Yes. To be honest, I’m bewildered myself. I’ve never properly performed so much as a single form.”

According to my Qi Sense, Childeuk was Level 12. That was high for a servant who had done nothing but carry food, but by martial-artist standards, he was Third Rate.

The First Rate masters directly under Jin Wikyung are all above Level 40.

What was going on? Did he have powerful backing?

Jin Mukyung seemed to have reached the same conclusion. His brow furrowed.

“You must have good connections. What does your father do?”

Childeuk blinked his large, calf-like eyes.

“He died ten years ago.”

“…”

“…”

“He was a famous herb gatherer, but he was killed by a tiger.”

For a moment, my vision went hazy. Befitting a Peak master, Jin Mukyung was the first to regain his composure and hurriedly tried to smooth things over.

“H-He must have been an excellent man.”

“Even now, I remember him as a very innocent man. He and my mother were very loving, too.”

“Then your mother… perhaps? No—she isn’t, right?”

“She’s doing well.”

Just as we breathed sighs of relief, Childeuk gazed wistfully at a distant mountain.

“I buried her beside my father, so I’m sure they’re both doing well.”

“…”

“…”

What followed was a march of death. I wanted to run away at full speed, but I gave up after hearing Childeuk muttering to himself.

“Oh, I haven’t seen those flowers in a long time. I used to see them everywhere when I went into the mountains with my father.”

“…”

“…”

If we had walked with him for another fifteen minutes, Jin Mukyung might have killed himself. Fortunately, after five minutes that felt like five hours, we reached our destination.

“Oh, you’re here!”

The sight of Jin Wikyung waiting in front of the pavilion nearly brought tears to my eyes. We cried out in voices thick with emotion.

“Hyuung![353]”

“Hyung-nim![354]”

Childeuk awkwardly clasped his hands in a formal salute.

“As ordered, I have escorted the Young Masters here.”

Jin Wikyung had been hurrying toward Jin Mukyung and me, but he suddenly stopped and embraced Childeuk instead.

“Jang Childeuk, a man of benevolence, righteousness, propriety, and wisdom! Martial Artist Jang, you’ve returned!”

“Yes, sir, Lesser Family Head!”

“You’ve completed a very important mission! Go and rest now.”

What on earth was happening? Jin Mukyung and I stared blankly at the scene.

Then a voice reached my ear through Sound Transmission.

There was, uh, a minor misunderstanding between me and this fellow…

“…”

Somehow, I had a feeling I knew who was backing Childeuk.

---

[353] Hyung is a Korean term a younger man uses for an older brother or older male acquaintance. Hyung-nim adds a respectful suffix.

[354] Hyung is a Korean term a younger man uses for an older brother or older male acquaintance. Hyung-nim adds a respectful suffix.

Chapter 74

"You've changed."

Those were the first words Jin Wikyung spoke after we entered his office. He studied me carefully, then patted Jin Mukyung on the shoulder.

"You've worked hard."

But despite the warm words, Jin Mukyung answered with a sullen expression.

"I almost called a mortician."

"You really know how to say beautiful things."

"You—whew. I'm letting that slide because Hyung-nim[355] is here."

"Thank you for that too."

Jin Wikyung gave a short laugh and gestured for us to sit. I took a seat, sipped the warm tea, and looked around.

"This place has changed a lot too. It was a mess the last time I was here."

The office was neat and orderly. When I had last visited fifteen days ago, the place had been a disaster, with all kinds of things strewn everywhere.

Now, even the table that should have been buried beneath stacks of documents was spotless.

"…It was a difficult time."

Jin Wikyung muttered with a clouded expression.

"But it's almost over. Just a little longer. I only have to hold out a little longer."

"…"

This guy had lost half his mind too. Then again, he had handled that enormous workload all by himself. It would have been stranger if he were still perfectly sane.

If it were me, I would've fled in the middle of the night ages ago.

I was no exception, but martial artists were, to put it kindly, men of action and, to put it unkindly, blockheads. I wasn't trying to disparage them. That was simply the truth.

The senior members of the family were much the same.

Some of that might have been because the Head Elder had installed puppets, but even the senior members who sided with Jin Wikyung were far from capable administrators.

Jin Wikyung had been born into a prestigious martial family, yet he was both a skilled administrator and an outstanding martial artist. In other words, he was the oddity.

"Just one day. I want to rest for just one day. I want to rest. I want to rest."

---

[355] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or older male he is close to. Hyung-nim is a more respectful form.

As Jin Wikyung muttered the same words over and over like a man with obsessive-compulsive disorder, Jin Mukyung clicked his tongue.

“Thank goodness I was born second.”

I nodded.

“Agreed.”

Taking care of my family in the real world was already backbreaking. If I had entered Jin Wikyung’s body instead of Jin Taekyung’s when I first logged in…

It would have been nothing short of bleak.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan even had hundreds of retainers under its command. The only advantage was that, as the homeowner, I wouldn’t have to worry about my jeonse deposit[356] going up.

“The eldest son is supposed to carry a heavy burden.”

Jin Mukyung snorted at my words.

“You have no right to say that, so shut up. Isn’t that right, Hyung-nim[357]?”

Jin Wikyung stared at me with moist eyes.

“How does he always manage to pick such touching things to say?”

“No, Hyung-nim[358].”

“You’ve grown up. You really have.”

“…Can I curse at him?”

Despite Jin Mukyung’s icy words, Jin Wikyung seemed not to hear a thing. Still deeply moved, he spread both arms wide.

“Let me hug our youngest just once.”

“Yes, hyung[359].”

“My youngest!”

Whump!

Jin Mukyung muttered with a face like he had bitten into something foul.

“This damned household. See if I ever come back.”

“Mukyung, you come here too.”

“No. I won’t, even if you beat me to death.”

“We’ve all gathered in one place for once, and you can’t grant your only older brother’s request?”

Jin Mukyung flinched at the hurt in his voice.

---

[356] A jeonse lease is a Korean rental arrangement in which the tenant pays a large lump-sum deposit instead of monthly rent.

[357] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or older male he is close to. Hyung-nim is a more respectful form.

[358] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or older male he is close to. Hyung-nim is a more respectful form.

[359] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or older male he is close to. Hyung-nim is a more respectful form.

"…Just this once."

The instant the words left his mouth, a hand as large as a pot lid dragged him in.

Buried against Jin Wikyung's chest alongside me, Jin Mukyung silently mouthed:

"You. Are. Dead."

Hmm. I'd better stay out of sight for a while.

Apparently he would be leaving soon anyway. I only had to avoid him for a few days.

If things get too bad, I can always log out.

I had completed the Quest, and I had already been thinking it was about time to return. There was also the matter of my contract with Team Leader Choi. More than anything, I was itching to test my newly refined martial arts in a Gate.

"Thank you. You two have given me strength."

After ending the emotional embrace, Jin Wikyung dabbed at his eyes with his sleeve.

"There's just so much work. So much work."

"…"

He really must have been suffering.

The tears of a human weapon made me solemn in spite of myself. I patted Jin Wikyung on the back.

"Hang in there."

Jin Mukyung, who had looked like death until moments ago, also gave Jin Wikyung a sympathetic look.

"Hyung-nim[360]. If it's really that difficult, take this guy and put him to work."

"…?"

What the hell was he talking about? Dumbfounded, I asked,

"Usually, at a time like this, shouldn't you at least say, 'I'll help,' even if you don't mean it?"

Jin Mukyung answered confidently.

"A martial artist does not make empty promises."

"Then why drag me into it while I'm sitting here?"

"You have plenty of time."

"I don't!"

"I have even less. I need to train. Besides, I'm hopeless with paperwork."

"I was in the seventh tier at school![361]"

"What nonsense is that?"

"It means I was terrible at studying."

---

[360] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or older male he is close to. Hyung-nim is a more respectful form.

[361] Korean school grades use a nine-tier scale, with the first tier highest and the ninth lowest.

Jin Mukyung thought for a moment, then frowned.

“A completely useless bastard. Hyung-nim[362], he does have good strength, so he would make an excellent laborer. I’ll be going now.”

“Wait.”

As Jin Mukyung swiftly turned to leave, a giant forepaw—no, hand—caught him by the nape. Its owner was, naturally, Jin Wikyung.

“Where do you think you’re going?”

“Pardon?”

“You have to hear why I called you two before you leave.”

“…What is it?”

Unease crept across Jin Mukyung’s face. I didn’t have a mirror, but I was probably wearing the same expression.

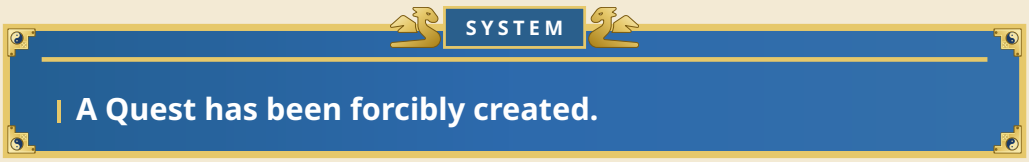
I smell trouble.

I had an uncanny nose for this sort of thing.

The smell of bad luck. The premonition that something bothersome was about to happen. Jin Wikyung’s next words turned that premonition into certainty.

“I need you to go to the Mount Heng Sword Sect.”

Ding.



“…”

Goddammit. Now it doesn’t even ask.

I stared at the translucent Quest window.

[362] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or older male he is close to. Hyung-nim is a more respectful form.

SYSTEM

Quest
[Yesterday's Enemy, Today's Ally]
Now that the full truth has been revealed, the Mount Heng Sword Sect is no longer an enemy, but an ally with whom you must join hands. Invite them to the Jin Family of Taiyuan for the upcoming New Year's Day.
Grade: First Rate
Restriction: Jin Taekyung
Mission: Deliver the invitation (Incomplete)
Reward: ???
Failure: None

After reading it two or three times, my initial bewilderment had mostly subsided.

Not bad.

The Quest wasn't difficult, and there was no penalty for failure. It was a simple mission that would end as soon as I delivered the invitation.

More importantly…

Logout.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Would you like to log out?

That meant I could log out without any problems. Having a Quest forced on me still left a bad taste in my mouth, but this much was acceptable.

Not that I'm in a position to refuse anyway.

Unlike me, who had already accepted reality, Jin Mukyung was resisting with all his might.

"So…"

Jin Mukyung struggled to continue.

"You're saying we should invite the Mount Heng Sword Sect for the coming New Year's Day?"

Jin Wikyung answered,

"Yes. They are guests we cannot afford to miss."

"Then why do we—or rather, why do I—have to go?"

"…"

Look at him, struggling to exclude himself.

Still, I agreed with part of his question.

Why us, specifically?

Jin Wikyung's answer only made the question even bigger.

"The Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect requested it personally."

I blurted out a question before I could stop myself.

"The Sect Leader?"

I had watched the Blood Wolf Sword Lee Cheonbaek die right before my eyes. Lee Seogeun, the Second Young Master, had been poisoned, and the Young Sect Leader whom I had never even met had reportedly died an absurd death during a mounted-bandit raid on the undefended sect.

I thought the Mount Heng Sword Sect's main force had been wiped out at Eight Spring Gorge too.

But the Sect Leader?

Jin Mukyung's reaction was much the same.

"The damage must have been severe. I only heard about it through rumors, but wouldn't it be understandable if they closed the sect's gates?"

Jin Wikyung shook his head.

"They were once one of the pillars of Shanxi Murim. Don't underestimate their foundations. If they have a rallying point, they can aim for a revival."

A rallying point.

The new Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect—the person who had requested that Jin Wikyung send Mukyung and me—seemed to be that new rallying point. I asked:

"Who is it?"

"Lee Seowol."

"Lee Seowol? Lee Seowol…"

I had never heard the name before. Judging by the surname, there seemed to be some connection to Lee Cheonbaek.

"You don't remember the name?"

"A hidden son? A distant relative? I'm not sure."

"As expected, you don't remember."

"Pardon?"

What did he mean, I didn't remember?

Is that someone I know?

As I tilted my head, Jin Wikyung gave me an odd look.

"The new Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect is a woman. She is Lee Cheonbaek's third child, the one and only younger sister of the deceased Young Sect Leader and Lee Seogeun."

At that moment, a fragment of memory flashed through my mind.

The stage in my memory was the main arena. The actor was Lee Seogeun. His face was flushed bright red as he shouted at me:

"You shameless bastard! You tore my sister's clothes and tried to violate her!"

Ah!

"Don't tell me it's her."

"That's right."

"…Damn it."

Only Jin Mukyung, who had no idea what we were talking about, blinked in confusion.

"What does that mean? Hey, do you know her?"

"Uh, well. You could say I do, and you could also say I don't."

"What the hell does that mean? So what exactly is your relationship with her?"

"Hmm."

An ex-girlfriend whose face I've never even seen? Or a flower snake?[363]

One thing is certain.

Neither of us would be particularly happy to meet the other.

I let out a deep sigh.

Long story short, Jin Mukyung agreed to go to the Mount Heng Sword Sect too. Jin Wikyung had used the masterstroke he had been saving.

"I heard the Mount Heng Sword Sect has a lot of martial arts manuals…"

"Even if they do, what good is that? It's not like I can read them."

"It does matter."

"Pardon?"

"The new Sect Leader has you figured out. She said she'd be willing to show you some of their Peak martial arts if you came."

"…When are we leaving?"

"Right now."

Everything moved at lightning speed. It had been only two hours since Jin Wikyung saw us off and we climbed into the four-horse carriage.

Jin Mukyung sat across from me, grumbling.

"A carriage? It'll take forever just to get there."

The land was so vast that, even by a rough estimate, it would take three days to reach Eung-hyeon, where the Mount Heng Sword Sect was located.

For Jin Mukyung, who wanted to see the Mount Heng Sword Sect's Peak martial arts as soon as possible, three days was an eternity.

[363] Flower snake is Korean slang for a woman who seduces men to exploit them.

“Hey, coachman, can’t you go any faster?”

A reply came from the driver’s box beyond the partition.

“First of all, I’m not the coachman. And no, I can’t go any faster. You may not know this from inside, but it’s freezing out here, and I’m about to freeze to death. Anyway, that’s how things are.”

“Use the whip and spur the horses on! A coachman should be able to do at least that much.”

“I’ll say it again: I’m not the coachman. Also, the whip is frozen solid, so it would be more accurate to call it an icicle. If I jab the horses in the rear with this icicle, I think they’ll get very angry…”

“What? If you’re not the coachman, why are you sitting there?”

“Before we left, you shouted that the attendants were getting in your way and ordered everyone to get lost. The coachman got lost too.”

Jin Mukyung thought about it carefully, then smacked his forehead.

“Oh, right.”

“…”

As expected, this guy wasn’t normal either.

“Then who are you?”

Recalling the law of conservation of idiots, I answered,

“Hyuk Mujin.”

“Who’s Hyuk Mujin?”

“You’ll know when you see his face. Hey, Mujin!”

The partition slid down, revealing Hyuk Mujin’s frost-covered face. His teeth chattered nonstop as Jin Mukyung studied him closely, then snapped his fingers.

“Oh, that guy.”

Hyuk Mujin answered curtly,

“Yes. I’m that guy.”

“Then why didn’t you get lost too? You should’ve brought the coachman instead.”

As if he had been waiting for that question, Hyuk Mujin proudly puffed out his chest.

“I only obey my Captain’s orders.”

“Captain?”

“The Third Young Master.”

Jin Mukyung’s head snapped toward me.

“Did you call him?”

“No. He was already there without me calling him.”

“That’s what he says?”

Hyuk Mujin looked back and forth between us with a wounded expression.

“You two really are brothers, I suppose.”

“Did you say your name was Hyung Mujin? Explain exactly what you mean by that.”

Jin Mukyung bristled and spoke in a sharp voice, but I merely let out a long yawn.

Hyuk Mujin clowning around was nothing new; when it came to dealing with that, I already had a full jiazi[364] of internal energy.

“It’s not Hyung Mujin. It’s Hyuk Mujin. I’ll try jabbing the horses in the rear with this thing, whether it’s a whip or an icicle.”

Clack.

Jin Mukyung glared at the partition, which had quickly slammed shut, then sighed and settled back into his seat.

“I shouldn’t have expected anything. If the water upstream is filthy, how could the water downstream be clean… What are you doing?”

I wrapped a fur hide around myself as I answered,

“I’m going to circulate my qi.”

“Really?”

“Yeah. Circulate my qi.”

“Then why does it look to me like you’re getting ready to sleep?”

“You’re imagining things.”

“Then why are you covering yourself with a fur hide?”

“I get cold easily.”

I made a show of sitting cross-legged. I also pressed myself firmly against the carriage wall so I wouldn’t topple over.

I can’t entrust my precious body to that guy.

I absolutely refused to come back and find my arms or legs broken. Better to make sure he couldn’t touch me at all.

“You know what happens if you touch me, right? Huh? Do you know what qi deviation is or not?”

“Seriously, this bastard’s been getting on my nerves for a while now…”

The moment Jin Mukyung raised his fist, I hurriedly closed my eyes. From the outside, it would look as though I had begun circulating my qi. As expected, no fist came flying at me.

All right, then. Now…

Logout.

Ding.

[364] A jiazi is a traditional sixty-year cycle.

There was only one possible answer.

Chapter 75

The way to tell the modern world apart from Murim is, oddly enough, by smell and temperature.

The smell of sweat inside a VR helmet. The heat inside a capsule warmed just right by sunlight streaming through the window.

“Phew.”

Once I took off the helmet and climbed out of the capsule, I finally felt like I could breathe. It was still only the difference between a scalding bath and a hot one, though.

How much time has passed?

I checked the watch on my wrist. The cheap twelve-thousand-won[365] digital watch I’d bought from a street stall in front of the Hunter training center about seven years ago had the advantage of an alarm and a stopwatch.

Beep.

[02:05:35]

Two hours, five minutes, and thirty-five seconds.

I had spent around twenty days in Murim, so the timing roughly matched what had happened last time.

Now that I’m back in the modern world, the time ratio must have reversed.

With Logout complete, ten days in the modern world amounted to one hour in Murim. I washed up in the goshiwon’s[366] communal shower and returned to my room.

Just as I was about to close the door, a black shadow sprang up.

“Boo!”

Knew it. Of course it was Seong Jinho.

“Oh. My. God. What. A. Surprise.”

“…What’s with that reaction? You knew I was here?”

“Your inhales and exhales were extremely intense. Mr. Jinho, were you excited?”

My five senses had grown sharper with each passing day. I could pick up the sounds and movements around me without even using Qi Sense.

He seemed to have been keeping his breathing quiet as he waited, but to my ears, every tiny movement and breath he made sounded like thunder.

“Try breathing a little more quietly. You’re supposed to be the goshiwon[367] manager. It’d be a problem if people started filing noise complaints about you.”

---

[365] Twelve thousand Korean won is about $8.60 or €7.70 at the project conversion rates.

[366] A goshiwon is a very small, inexpensive room-for-rent housing arrangement, often with shared facilities.

[367] A goshiwon is a very small, inexpensive room-for-rent housing arrangement, often with shared facilities.

“Damn it. How did you know? You’re just an F-rank Hunter… Oh, right. You became C-rank a while ago.”

“Listen to you. Making fun of me for being F-rank has really become a habit.”

“Hey, wait until you’re my age. I can’t even remember what side dishes I ate yesterday. You think something that happened barely a week ago is going to pop right into my head?”

“A week?”

Was that really all the time that had passed?

To me, it had been well over a month. To Jinho-hyung,[368] it had happened just last week. I felt a subtle sense of disconnect.

“Hey. What’s with that look? Is something wrong?”

“Nothing’s wrong. Anyway, what brings you here?”

“Listen to the way you talk. Are we in some kind of business relationship where we only see each other when there’s business involved?”

“Just get to the point. Keep it short.”

Jinho-hyung’s[369] face hardened. Had I taken the teasing too far?

Come to think of it, I had been too indifferent lately. Even before returning to Murim, I hadn’t been able to see him often because of all sorts of problems…

“Buy me dinner.”

“…”

“Grilled pork belly. Teppanyaki.[370] Fried chicken and beer.”

Shit. Of course.

And he even had the nerve to choose the menu himself.

“Did you leave money with me?”

“Your money is my money. And my money is my money, isn’t it?”

“Pronounce that properly. Unless you want a taste of a C-rank Hunter’s fist.”

Jinho-hyung[371] flinched and rubbed his palms together.

“Please, sir. Use your money to grease my parched stomach.”

“…”

That stance switch would make Udyr[372] weep.

It was ridiculous, but a quiet laugh escaped me. My stomach had also been screaming after nearly a month without a proper meal.

Let’s eat something decent for once.

I spoke in a solemn voice.

---

[368] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.
[369] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.
[370] Teppanyaki is food cooked on an iron griddle.
[371] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.
[372] Udyr is a League of Legends character known for switching between combat stances.

"I approve of your attitude. Lead the way."

"Where would you like to go, sir?"

"I'm tired of grilled pork belly and teppanyaki.[373] Let's have something a little more expensive today."

"Th-then, sir!"

Jinho-hyung's[374] eyes widened.

"Hanwoo![375] That pasture-raised beef with the incredible marbling?"

"What the hell are you talking about? We're going out for gopchang.[376]"

"…"

"If you don't like it, starve."

Thump.

Jinho-hyung[377] grabbed my shoulder and declared with a solemn expression, "I've always wanted to try it."

Our early dinner began at five that afternoon and ended at a makgeolli[378] bar on our third round. By then, Jinho-hyung[379] was completely plastered.

"Krroooorr."

"…"

I had seen this scene somewhere before.

As a strange sense of déjà vu came over me and I hoisted Jinho-hyung[380] onto my back, my phone rang.

> └ Designer-Brand Junkie: See you tomorrow at the same time, same place.

A single short text. The sender was Team Leader Choi.

The downside—and upside—of Sleep Mode was that it reduced how much sleep I needed. Except when I'd been badly injured in the fight with Jopil, I had never slept for more than three hours.

It's useful for training.

Three in the morning.

---

[373] Teppanyaki is food cooked on an iron griddle.
[374] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.
[375] Hanwoo is a Korean breed of native cattle whose beef is prized for its marbling.
[376] Gopchang is a Korean dish made from grilled intestines, usually beef intestines.
[377] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.
[378] Makgeolli is a Korean alcoholic drink made from fermented rice.
[379] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.
[380] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.

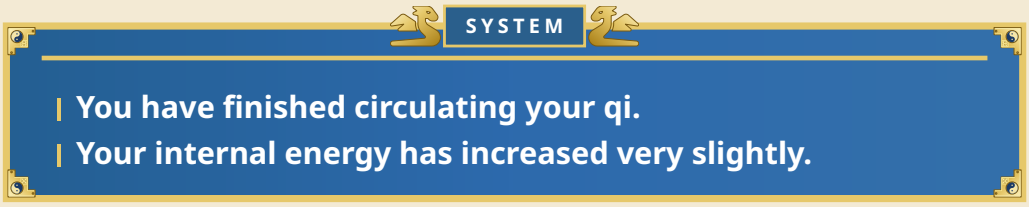
I woke up in peak condition and sat cross-legged. At some point, circulating my qi had become how I began and ended every day.

Whoosh.

A wave of internal energy began to flow.

The fifteen years of internal energy surging from my dantian cleansed the waste accumulated inside my body and breathed vitality into dormant acupoints.

Ding.



When the System notification sounded and I opened my eyes, more than two hours had passed. If I were in Murim, I would have gone straight to the training ground to warm up, but the real world came with all sorts of restrictions.

Especially in a goshiwon,[381] where the rooms were packed together like a chicken farm.

Damn goshiwon.[382] I need to get out of here soon.

Even training cost money these days. People who earned enough had several spacious private training rooms, while broke people like me had no choice but to make do with lousy conditions.

“Hup. Huff.”

I spent the entire morning running through the neighborhood. When I returned, I moved straight into basic bodyweight exercises without taking a break. Maybe it was because my Stats had increased, but instead of getting tired, I felt more energized by the minute.

Jinho-hyung[383] watched me with an appalled expression.

“Don’t you ever get tired?”

“Not really.”

“I’ve never seen anyone do one-arm push-ups as easily as you. How many have you done?”

“I don’t know. I counted to three hundred, then got too lazy to keep counting.”

“You’re a monster. Is that normal for a C-rank Hunter?”

“By the way, Seong Jinho.”

“Huh?”

---

[381] A goshiwon is a very small, inexpensive room-for-rent housing arrangement, often with shared facilities.

[382] A goshiwon is a very small, inexpensive room-for-rent housing arrangement, often with shared facilities.

[383] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.

"Why are you here?"

Jinho-hyung[384] had shown up about ten minutes earlier looking haggard, and he still hadn't left my room.

"Can't you tell? I came to eat ramen."

Tap tap. Ssshhk.

The way he dropped a raw egg onto the almost-cooked noodles looked completely natural.

His control of the burner flame to leave the egg perfectly runny was worthy of a Peak master.

"Give me three reasons why you need to stuff your face with that in here."

"First, there's no TV in my room. Second, there's a TV in your room. Third, ramen tastes best when you eat it while watching TV."

He rattled it all off without hesitation, and my blood started boiling.

"Just buy one! If you don't have the money, just take mine!"

"Ah, I'd rather not. I'm leaving soon anyway. Why bother adding to my luggage?"

"Then stop coming in and out of here and bothering me… Huh? What did you just say?"

"What?"

"Wait. You're leaving?"

"Ah, that."

Jinho-hyung[385] scratched his matted hair.

"It just worked out that way. The date isn't set yet, but I'm planning to move out soon. I can't stay holed up here forever."

"…"

"Why are you looking at me like that?"

"No, it's nothing."

I awkwardly looked away.

Who lived in a goshiwon[386] without a story of their own? I had mine, and Jinho-hyung[387] had his. It would be rude to pry.

Still, it's a shame.

He was someone I'd spent years with, like a friend and a brother. And now he was leaving so suddenly.

Caught up in complicated feelings, I cautiously opened my mouth.

"Hyung,[388] by any chance…"

---

[384] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.

[385] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.

[386] A goshiwon is a very small, inexpensive room-for-rent housing arrangement, often with shared facilities.

[387] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.

[388] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.

"I know how you feel, but I respectfully decline."

Had he realized what I was going to say? Jinho-hyung[389] cut me off decisively and continued.

"Kid, I'm thirty years old. I can take care of my own bowl."

"Then there's nothing I can do."

I'd thought I could probably live with Jinho-hyung,[390] but sticking my nose in too soon seemed to have pricked his pride.

His face scrunched up as he lifted the lid off the pot.

"You should've just said so from the start."

"What are you talking about? You never had any intention of it."

"What nonsense. I only cooked one because you said you weren't eating."

"…?"

Wait a second. How had the conversation ended up here?

After several seconds of silence, I finally asked, "What are you talking about? What's this about cooking something all of a sudden?"

"Obviously, ramen."

Jinho-hyung[391] glared at me menacingly.

"There's always someone who says he isn't eating, then asks for a chopstickful when you cook it well. How many times have I fallen for that one with you?"

"…"

"So a C-rank Hunter reaches into his poor hyung's[392] bowl? Are you even human?"

"…"

So when he'd mentioned his bowl earlier, he'd meant his actual bowl.

I wanted to throw his own words right back at him.

Is that thing even human?

I was a fucking idiot for thinking I could live with someone like him.

Ashamed of myself, I threw on some clothes. It was almost time to meet Team Leader Choi.

Bang!

I slammed the door hard enough to break it and left. One last shout rang out behind me.

"If you're going to the supermarket, get some kimchi!"

Ah, I wanted to kill him.

[389] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.
[390] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.
[391] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.
[392] Hyung is a Korean form of address a man uses for an older man with whom he is close.

Where was the place again?

I dredged up my memories from about twenty days ago and arrived at the meeting place.

It was a large café in the heart of a forest of skyscrapers. A handsome man sitting by the window spotted me and waved.

“Over here.”

I didn’t need him to say anything. There were dozens of tables in the café, yet Team Leader Choi was the only customer sitting inside.

He’s still handsome.

Dressed in a lightweight casual suit, Team Leader Choi looked as though he had just stepped out of a fashion shoot. A successful man in his twenties who had everything: looks, money, personality…

No. Leave personality out of it.

After exchanging a brief handshake, we sat down.

“Have you eaten?”

“No.”

Team Leader Choi tilted his head.

“Really? You seem to have eaten ramen.”

“…”

Damn it. This bastard had a bloodhound’s nose.

It was too embarrassing to explain the whole story about what had happened at the goshiwon,[393] so I hurriedly changed the subject.

“It’s lunchtime, but no one’s here.”

“We’re closed.”

“What?”

“The windows are covered with curtains, and there’s a ‘Closed’ sign on the door. Of course no one’s coming in.”

I looked around. Sure enough, everything was exactly as Team Leader Choi had described.

I had assumed the café would be open since it was the meeting place, so I hadn’t noticed. The whole situation was so strange that I blinked.

“But you’re open right now.”

The lights inside were bright, and the air-conditioning kept the place cool. I could glimpse at least ten employees, so why had they closed the door?

Team Leader Choi answered calmly.

“We have to be open. There’s a customer.”

“You just said you were closed.”

[393] A goshiwon is a very small, inexpensive room-for-rent housing arrangement, often with shared facilities.

“That’s up to the owner, isn’t it?”

“Uh… Team Leader, I’m asking just to be sure.”

“You don’t need to ask. This café is mine.”

Right. I’d figured as much.

Thinking back, the café had also been empty except for the two of us the last time we met.

I keep digging, and the hole never ends.

I said in amazement, “Team Leader, you have a lot of money.”

“I have enough that I don’t need to worry about running short. That’s why I can put a contract like this in front of you.”

Team Leader Choi smiled gently and handed me a folder.

“Now, shall we talk business?”

There was no reason to hesitate any longer. I nodded firmly.

“Let’s.”

An hour later, just as I finished adding my final signature, the System alert rang out.

Ding.

Chapter 76

Ding.

This counts as an achievement too?

Whenever a System message like this appeared, I felt like I had become some kind of hero. An achievement, huh? That was quite an impressive way to package joining a Guild just to make money.

Well, I'm not complaining.

Ten points was a pretty sweet reward on its own, but after hearing what Team Leader Choi said next, I had to keep fighting the grin that threatened to spread across my face.

"The signing bonus will be processed by the end of today. As for your housing and other matters…"

A 500 million won[394] signing bonus, a fixed monthly salary of 50 million won,[395] and a seventy-percent settlement share.

A house and a car provided by the Guild, along with dozens of other benefits.

I had already gone over everything in the contract several times, but hearing it laid out like this made it all feel new again.

I've really made it.

Barely three months ago, I couldn't have imagined my life turning out like this.

The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi in Murim, and a Hunter in the real world who casually earned hundreds of millions of won[396] a year.

"Team Leader."

"As for equipment rentals, you can use anything you want apart from my collection… Yes?"

"Could you slap me once? If this is a dream, I'd like to wake up quickly."

The moment I finished speaking, my vision flashed.

Wham!

Wham? Not smack?

---

[394] 500 million won is about $360,000 or €320,000.

[395] 50 million won is about $36,000 or €32,000.

[396] Hundreds of millions of won means roughly 100–900 million won, or about $71,000–$640,000 or €65,000–€580,000.

I rubbed my stinging jaw and muttered, “You really don’t hold back.”

“I have trouble refusing a request.”

“I don’t think I told you to use your fist.”

“You didn’t tell me not to, either.”

“…”

Without my newly acquired Toughness stat, I might have gone sprawling in a most undignified fashion.

Right. This guy was a B-rank Hunter.

The punch he had thrown without even taking a stance had landed squarely on my jaw. The power, the point of impact—both perfect.

“Still, don’t people usually slap you?”

“There are exceptions. So, are you feeling more awake now?”

“…Wide awake.”

“Good. It’s better for making a first impression if you meet them while you’re in your right mind.”

His out-of-nowhere remark made me look at him in confusion.

“First impression? Who are we meeting?”

“Who do you think?”

Team Leader Choi continued with a smile.

“The other Guild members.”

“Ah.”

Only then did I remember something I had completely forgotten.

A Guild needed at least three people to be established.

“Shall we get going, then?”

Team Leader Choi pointed out the window. A sleek black limousine was gliding into the parking lot in front of the café.

“Congratulations.”

That deep, dignified voice, the sort that belonged in a coffee commercial, belonged to Butler Kim. Even in the sweltering summer heat, he wore a suit as he expertly drove the limousine.

“Oh, yes. Thank you.”

For some reason, I found it hard to speak naturally around this man. Was it because the only butlers I had ever seen were in dramas?

No. If that were the reason, Team Leader Choi would be even worse.

After giving it some thought, I decided it was Butler Kim's distinctive air. The unfamiliarity of riding in a limousine for the first time might have had something to do with it too.

A limousine.

The interior was spacious and stocked with all sorts of things. For example, the small refrigerator Team Leader Choi had just opened.

"Would you like something to drink?"

"Sure."

I happened to be thirsty.

"Water? Alcohol?"

"You have alcohol?"

Team Leader Choi nodded.

"Of course. Anything you want."

"Then I'll have soju and beer. Half and half."

"…I'll give you water."

The bottle of water Team Leader Choi handed me didn't have even the most ordinary brand name on it.

He told me it had been brought in from somewhere in the Himalayas, and I clicked my tongue inwardly.

That must cost a ridiculous amount.

What a fucking waste of money. Still, when I took a sip, it was refreshingly cold.

Gulp.

Ding.

SYSTEM

You have consumed Essence of the Himalayas.
Your Intelligence increases by 1 for one hour.

…So this was why they blew all that fucking money. Well, this was how wealth got redistributed and the economy stayed active. Right.

The limousine came to a stop while I was wondering whether I should take a few bottles with me.

Butler Kim spoke in his characteristic deep voice.

"We've arrived."

The moment I stepped out, my jaw dropped at the sight before me.

A skyscraper towered into the sky. Its exterior gleamed even without direct sunlight, as if it had undergone some kind of magical treatment, and guards in formal uniforms stood waiting at the entrance.

“Wow. Woooow.”

As I continued to marvel at the sight, Team Leader Choi approached me.

“Impressive, isn’t it? It wouldn’t be an exaggeration to say that all the branches of Korea’s top one hundred Guilds are gathered here. There are even branches of foreign mega-Guilds whose names you know just from hearing them.”

I answered without taking my eyes off the building.

“Land must be insanely expensive here.”

“It is. You could call this the center of Gate activity around Bucheon.”

“Like Gangnam in the old days?”

“Neither of us lived through that era, but… from what I understand, this place is at least as expensive, if not more so.”

The value of land had been turned on its head long ago.

Though it had happened before I was born, middle-aged Hunters who had lived through the pre-Great Cataclysm era sometimes became nostalgic and went on about what things had been like back then.

“Back then, if you owned even one house in Gangnam, people said you were born with a gold spoon in your mouth.”

“People used to joke that Bundang was above heaven. That’s how valuable the land there was.”

“It was that expensive?”

“Expensive enough to make you puke. At least until the monsters invaded.”

I knew what happened after that. In the early days of the Great Cataclysm, well-developed metropolitan areas and densely populated regions were the first targets of the monster armies, and humanity had been helpless against them.

Present-day Gangnam and Bundang had both been destroyed once and rebuilt. After the Great Cataclysm, true prime real estate fell into two categories.

Safe zones and Gate-dense areas.

Safe zones, where the chance of a Gate appearing was close to zero, were the best places for ordinary people to live. Gate-dense areas, meanwhile, offered ideal conditions for Hunter Guilds to establish themselves.

Like a snack bar in front of an elementary school.

There were around a hundred Gates in Bucheon. Many were low-level, but by sheer number, Bucheon still ranked among the ten most Gate-dense areas in all of Korea.

And this was the center of it.

I could tell just by looking at the skyscrapers packed around us. This was a neighborhood where your average small or mid-sized Guild couldn’t even set foot.

Just how rich is this guy?

I was staring at Team Leader Choi in awe when he spoke.

“Let’s work hard and move somewhere like that, too.”

“I’ll devote my loyalty to you… Huh?”

“Pardon?”

“No, what?”

“What’s wrong?”

Damn it, why do you think? Are you asking because you don’t know?

I barely swallowed the words that had risen to my throat before managing to speak.

“You said we’d arrived?”

“Yes, we have.”

I whipped my head toward Butler Kim.

“Butler Kim, is this the place?”

“It is.”

Butler Kim nodded without hesitation, then added, “However, I believe you’re looking in the wrong direction.”

“The wrong direction?”

“Yes. If you turn your head a little to the right from where you’re standing, you should see it.”

I turned as instructed. After a brief silence, I asked, “What is that run-down building?”

Standing alone amid the luxurious skyscrapers, it looked especially small and dilapidated.

Butler Kim kindly explained.

“Strictly speaking, it’s a supermarket.”

“More precisely, it looks like a corner store.”

I narrowed my eyes and glared at the collapsing store. The yellowed sign read:

Sooni’s Super

“Who’s Sooni? What a tacky name.”

“She’s an old woman who’s lived here for seventy years.”

“Now that I think about it, it’s quite elegant. Sounds like a name that promises a long life.”

“She passed away two months ago.”

“Ah.”

Why is this happening to me?

“She was incredibly stubborn, so during the redevelopment of the Gate-dense area, she refused no matter how much money they offered. By then, the other Guilds had already established themselves… In the end, we purchased the property from her surviving family.”

"So that Sooni's Super is our Guild house?"

"Precisely."

I stared at the half-collapsed Sooni's Super with mixed feelings.

A Guild house was the face of a Guild. Its signboard. No matter how expensive the land in this neighborhood was, they had really chosen a place like that…

No, wait. For a newly established Guild, this is incredible.

It was only that my expectations had been too high. In an industry crawling with scams, Team Leader Choi had shown me enough sincerity that I could trust him and follow his lead.

"Team Leader Choi."

"Yes, Taekyung?"

I grabbed his hand.

"I'll work really hard. I don't care whether our Guild house is Sooni's Super or Sooni's Building."

Team Leader Choi answered with an awkward expression.

"I'm glad you understand."

"You know what they say. Though the beginning is humble, its end will be magnificent!"

"It's already fairly magnificent. Butler Kim, how much did it cost to purchase that lot?"

Butler Kim answered, "A little over two billion won[397] per pyeong.[398]"

"…Two billion won[399] per pyeong?[400]"

"Yes."

After a brief silence, I spoke.

"I believe the beginning is magnificent, but the end will be even more magnificent."

"…"

"…"

Team Leader Choi and Butler Kim's gazes pierced me like arrows. Just as they stared at me with expressions that seemed to ask, What kind of asshole is this? a sound rang out.

Screeeech. Crash!

Sooni's Super

The sign, whose decades-old lettering had been neatly written in Hancom Batang,[401] slammed into the ground.

---

[397] Two billion won is about $1.4 million or €1.3 million.

[398] A pyeong is a Korean unit of area equal to 3.31 m^2, or 35.6 ft^2.

[399] Two billion won is about $1.4 million or €1.3 million.

[400] A pyeong is a Korean unit of area equal to 3.31 m^2, or 35.6 ft^2.

[401] Hancom Batang is a Korean serif typeface distributed with Hancom's word-processing software.

"…It'll look fine once we remodel."

Team Leader Choi muttered in a tiny voice. Then the store door opened, and someone stepped out.

"Oh dear, it fell again."

Grumbling, the monstrously strong man lifted the fallen sign with one hand. At the appearance of this completely unexpected person, my mouth fell open.

"Uncle Kkeokjeong?"

The good-natured, middle-aged E-rank Hunter Im Kkeokjeong spotted us and waved with a bright smile.

"Hey, Taekyung!"

What the hell? How did this happen?

While I stood there dumbfounded, Im Kkeokjeong approached and patted me on the shoulder.

"You little punk. Been doing well? I heard you made C-rank."

"No, why are you here?"

"Hahaha! Why am I here? Is there something wrong with a Guild member being at the Guild house?"

After letting out a hearty laugh, he continued.

"I was stuck lying in the hospital when Team Leader Choi suddenly came to see me and asked if I wanted to join the Guild. I said yes without a second thought."

Team Leader Choi, who had been looking sadly at the fallen sign, added, "He seemed like someone I could trust."

"That young man knows what loyalty means. Mr. Kim over there doesn't say much, but he's a really good man. And Miss Song goes without saying."

"No, wait. Hold on."

What was going on here?

I asked as calmly as I could, "You joined recently?"

"Yeah."

Team Leader Choi cut in again.

"He seemed like someone I could trust."

"That young man knows what loyalty means. Mr. Kim over there doesn't say much, but…"

"I heard that part already. What about the others?"

"Huh?"

"Where are the other Guild members? Surely these four aren't everyone."

"Of course not."

Im Kkeokjeong answered firmly, then added, "Miss Song went grocery shopping. She said she'd throw you a welcome party."

“Miss Song? Don’t tell me she’s the last one.”

“Yeah. Including Miss Song, there are five of us. She left over an hour ago, so she should be back soon.”

I couldn’t hear anything after that.

Five people.

Is this a dream?

Im Kkeokjeong’s booming voice snapped me out of my daze as I stared blankly at the collapsing Sooni’s Super.

“Oh, there she is. Miss Song! Over here, over here! The newbie’s here!”

I followed his gaze and turned my head.

The final Guild member of the ultra-tiny Guild, and one of its founding members.

She was there.

Chapter 77

When two men sit around drinking, all kinds of topics are bound to come spilling out. Money, people, the future…

Of all those topics, Jinho hyung's[402] favorite was women.

Whenever he got drunk, he became the saddest man in the world and reminisced about his first love.

"I first met her when I was a high school sophomore."

"This guy's drunk again."

"It was March, the start of a new school year, and the flowers were in full bloom. She opened the classroom door and walked in, and then…"

"You must've been dazzled. The bells of heaven must've started ringing in your ears—ding, ding, ding?"

"Huh? How did you know?"

"Because I've heard this story more than a hundred times. The bells of heaven, my ass. Go write a novel."

"That's because you don't understand love, you punk. Then again, what would a lifelong single know?"

"It's not that I couldn't date. I chose not to."

"You lifelong-single bastards always say that. Is there some kind of guidebook? You've never even liked anyone, have you?"

"…I-I think I have."

"Oh, forget it. What good is telling you a hundred or a thousand times? You have to experience it yourself to understand. Pour me another drink."

The reason I suddenly remembered that drinking session from a few months ago was simple.

Hyung was right.

Ding—ding—

I could hear them. The bells.

Miss Song.

She had a slender figure and a tiny face. An angel with grocery bags dangling from both hands spotted me and stopped short.

"Who are you?"

[402] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or older male friend. Hyung-nim is a more respectful form.

Her captivating yet refreshing voice made my mind go blank, while her delicate, doll-like features set my heart pounding.

My God.

I swallowed hard. It felt as though I had spent the past twenty-seven years as a lifelong single just for this day.

A simulation was already running in my head.

We'll live in a country house with a yard. Two children and one cat. Perfect.

The dating cells that had never budged, even while I circulated my qi, were springing to life.

I opened my mouth, trying to make my voice as low as possible. Jinho hyung, a self-proclaimed master of romance, had repeatedly stressed that I should use a deep, resonant voice with a woman I liked.

"I'm…"

"This is Jin Taekyung. You've heard about him too, right, Miss Song? You know, the one I told you about last time. I said my beloved little brother had undergone reawakening as a C-rank Hunter."

"Oh, you're that person? You're younger than I expected."

"…"

I gently stepped on Im Kkeokjeong's foot for cutting in out of nowhere, then opened my mouth again.

"Yes. I'm the very…"

"Why did you buy so much? We have a restaurant reserved."

"It's expensive and the portions are tiny. Why go there? We can just grill some meat inside."

"…"

Team Leader Choi. I'm going to kill you with my own hands. I definitely will.

I glared at the meddlers one after another. Butler Kim had been about to say something, but under my murderous stare, he quietly closed his mouth.

This is my only chance.

The timing was perfect. No one was interrupting, and Miss Song was looking right at me. I spoke in an attractive, deep voice.

"Hello. My name is Jin Taekyung. I'm twenty-seven years old and recently became a C-rank Hunter. My birthday is April 22. I'm a Taurus, and my blood type is RH-positive, type A. My hobbies are reading and film criticism. I hope we get along."

"…"

"…"

"…"

In the still silence, no one said a word. At last, her red lips parted.

"Oh, yes."

Miss Song stared straight at me with her doe-like eyes. She looked completely spellbound by my cavernous voice. And I had even highlighted my intellectual side by mentioning reading and film criticism. This was a hundred-percent success.

Thank you, Jinho hyung. If this works out, drinks are on me.

Just as I was cheering inside, Team Leader Choi cut in with a stammer.

“W-Why don’t we take our time and talk over a meal? Song-i must be tired from grocery shopping.”

My anger at being interrupted again vanished without a trace the moment I heard her name.

“Song-i?”

“Song Song. My name is Song Song.”

Miss Song—or rather, Song-i—answered calmly before slipping inside the store. I stood there blankly, repeating her name to myself.

“Song Song…”

My God, even her name is beautiful. Charming. Dazzling.

She was my type from head to toe. I was half out of my mind at the thought that I had met my destined partner when Team Leader Choi’s voice snapped me out of it.

“Taekyung.”

“Yes, yes?”

“Um… Never mind. Take your time coming in.”

Team Leader Choi let out a deep sigh and turned away. What was wrong with him?

“Did I do something wrong?”

At my question, Butler Kim, who had been following Team Leader Choi, stopped short.

“Um… Stay strong.”

Once the two of them left, only Im Kkeokjeong and I remained.

“Hyung-nim. Did I make some kind of mistake?”

“A mistake? No. You committed a crime.”

“A crime?”

“Yes. A crime that can never be forgiven.”

“Gasp.”

Had I really done something wrong? Just as my heart sank, Im Kkeokjeong continued with a solemn expression.

“The crime of stealing a woman’s heart.”

“…!”

“You little punk. Even I almost fell for you. Did you see Miss Song’s expression? She was completely smitten. It’s over. You won!”

“R-Really?”

“Congratulations, Taekyung! Let’s eat noodles!”[403]

“Hyung-nim!”

I couldn’t contain my emotion and threw myself into Im Kkeokjeong’s arms. He laughed heartily and patted me on the back.

“How many kids are you going to have? What? Two? Don’t stop there—make it three! Hahahaha!”

Inside the store.

Team Leader Choi and Butler Kim, who had been pressed right up against the door, turned to face each other.

“What do you think, Butler Kim?”

“I can only admire the Young Master’s wise decision to block out the sound with a magic Item.”

“Right?”

“Precisely.”

As if they had planned it, the two men glanced over their shoulders. Song Song was bustling around, preparing the meal.

“If Song-i had heard that conversation just now…”

“Even if Miss Song quit the Guild on the spot, we would have to pay the penalty.”

“Where did he learn lines like that? Butler Kim, when you were younger, did you perhaps…?”

Butler Kim’s expression turned stern.

“Young Master, that remark was highly unpleasant to hear. Lines like that did not exist even before the Great Cataclysm.”

“Taekyung has been single his entire life, right?”

“If he isn’t, then as of today I’m no longer Butler Kim. I’m Butler Park.”

“Hunter Im seems to have problems too.”

“I hate to say this, but I wanted to put a muzzle on him.”

“Hunter Im is unmarried, right?”

“Unfortunately, he’s married. He even has two children.”

“How on earth…?”

“I wonder the same thing.”

The Guild’s future was bleak.

Just as the two men shook their heads with gloomy expressions, a voice came from behind them.

“Excuse me.”

[403] In Korea, “eating noodles” can refer to celebrating someone’s wedding.

Song Song stood there in an apron, one hand on her hip as she looked at the two men.

“What are you two whispering about? You haven’t lifted a finger to help while I’ve been preparing everything.”

“Oh, Miss Song. It’s just…”

“We’ll clean up after the meal.”

“Forget it. The food’s ready, so come and eat. And call Mr. Im and…”

Song Song continued with a sigh.

“That… Taurus, too.”

In front of the grill, which had been heated to just the right temperature, I opened my mouth with a solemn expression.

“Miss Song.”

Song Song stopped just as she picked up the tongs and scissors.

“Yes?”

“Give them to me. I’ll grill the meat.”

“It’s fine. You can help clean up afterward.”

“My hobby is grilling meat, and my specialty is cutting it.”

“…I thought your hobbies were reading and film criticism?”

“That was only the tip of the iceberg.”

I nudged Im Kkeokjeong’s foot under the table, and he immediately provided backup.

“You wouldn’t know this, Miss Song, but this guy can grill meat like nobody’s business. One time, he was working five grills at once, just—huh? And when you bite into it, the juices flood your mouth. Fireworks start going off in your head!”

I added one more point in a dignified tone.

“I’m a Taurus.”

“That’s right! A Taurus man grills meat well, and he’s pure-hearted, honest, and so steadfast…”

Crack.

Team Leader Choi set down the broken wooden chopsticks and muttered, “I’m sorry. I couldn’t control my strength.”

“Here.”

As if she had been waiting for that moment, Song Song handed him a fresh pair of chopsticks. My heart sank.

I hated to admit it, but the beautiful woman and the handsome man looked perfect together.

No way. It can't be.

I tried to deny it, but my heart felt heavy.

With a gloomy expression, I placed the meat on the grill.

Sizzle.

What kind of relationship did Song Song have with Team Leader Choi?

Sizzle.

It was obvious they had known each other for a long time. She wouldn't be a founding member of the Guild otherwise.

Sizzle.

Come to think of it, that bastard Team Leader Choi was suspicious. He'd been interrupting our conversation from the start. And why had he snapped a perfectly good pair of chopsticks and ruined the mood?

Sizzle.

A B-rank Hunter claiming he couldn't control his strength? What kind of bullshit excuse was that? Was he showing off how strong he was in front of Song Song? I could tie metal chopsticks into a knot too…

"Excuse me."

I looked up with a start. Eyes as clear as a lake were staring straight at me.

"It's burning."

"Yes, yes?"

"The meat. It's burning."

"Gasp!"

Sizzle-sizzle-sizzle.

I hurriedly flipped the meat, but it was already too late.

"I'll do it."

"No. I will."

"Come to think of it, since you're here for the first time today, it's only right that I grill the meat and serve you."

My God. She wasn't just an angel on the outside.

Oh, Miss Song. You're an ethics textbook.[404]

I fell for her nature, gentle as silk, all over again.

Slice. Slice.

Sizzle.

After taking the tongs from me, she grilled and cut the meat with practiced skill.

I watched her in a daze.

She even looks beautiful grilling meat.

[404] "Ethics textbook" is a Korean wordplay on a phrase meaning "what on earth are you?"

Her hair was loosely twisted into a bun, and her slender, pale hands moved busily. Every movement seemed to shine.

"Hmm."

How much time had passed? She had been watching the meat carefully when she spoke.

"It's done. Could you hand me a plate?"

"Yes, ma'am."

She neatly placed the fully cooked meat into a disposable container. I had noticed it earlier, but this was clearly not something she had done only once or twice.

"You must've done this a lot."

"Yes."

"Did you work part-time at a barbecue restaurant?"

"Yes."

"Wow. For how long?"

"Two years."

"Wow, when?"

"When I was in high school."

"Huh. Not many kids had part-time jobs back then."

"Oh, yes."

What am I going to do? Even her resourcefulness is exactly my type.

Her answers seemed strangely short, but that had to be my imagination. I kept showering her with enthusiastic little responses to keep the conversation going.

The conversation itself is going smoothly.

Jinho hyung had said that if you wanted someone to like you, you had to start by finding common ground. I launched into my story with enthusiasm.

"We're pretty similar. I used to work two or even three shifts in a day. One day, after I finished work and came home…"

"Oh, yes. But, um…"

"Yes?"

"You seem a little close. The grill is still hot…"

Without realizing it, I had leaned my entire body toward Song Song.

"It's fine. I'll just get a little burned. Hahaha!"

"You should still be careful."

"I'm really fine. You don't have to worry."

"…"

Song Song's expression seemed strangely dark.

Could it be…?

Is she worried I might get hurt?

I was stunned. She was thinking about me this much even though we had only met today.

And then I knew for certain. She was interested in me, too.

Jinho hyung's voice reached me from somewhere, like an auditory hallucination.

"Do you know what the most important virtue is when it comes to becoming a couple? Courage."

"Taekyung, remember this. A man with courage wins the beauty."

Hyung, I think I finally understand. And thank you.

That's right. Let's be brave.

I stared at her, my heart trembling. What I was about to say was something I had never once said in all twenty-seven years of my life.

"Miss Song. Starting today, you and I are on day one…"[405]

At that moment, Team Leader Choi shot to his feet and shouted.

"Day one! Today is Hunter Jin Taekyung's first day as a member of our Guild family! Butler Kim?"

"Yes, Young Master! The soju[406] is ready!"

The usually unhurried Butler Kim filled the shot glasses at lightning speed.

Glug-glug-glug!

Not a gentle trickle—it was pouring full blast.

Half of it spilled, and the other half was poured in with brute force. The sight left me speechless, but there was something I absolutely had to say.

"Miss Song. Let me say it again. You and I…"

Team Leader Choi raised his glass high.

"To our Guild!"

"Miss Song. Ignore them and listen to me."

Song Song answered.

"To our Guild!"

"…"

She didn't hear me, right? Yeah. She couldn't have heard me.

[405] "Day one" refers to the first day of a romantic relationship.

[406] Soju is a Korean distilled alcoholic drink.

Chapter 78

Hunters are all hard drinkers.

Even an F-rank Hunter—the lowest classification—has physical abilities and a metabolism far beyond those of an ordinary person.

There's a reason people say some Hunters don't drink, but no Hunter can't drink.

"Hic. One more glass."

Well, there was one here.

Miss Song-i's eyes were already half-glazed as she shook her empty glass furiously.

"One more glaaass!"

She's pretty even when she's drunk… No, that's not the point. Isn't this getting a little dangerous?

I looked at Miss Song-i with concern.

She must've drunk too fast.

The moment the drinking party had begun in earnest, she had chugged an entire bottle of soju[407] straight from the bottle and had been like this ever since. Every now and then, she slurred incomprehensible things about someone having no damn tact and rotten luck clinging like a curse.

Is something bad going on?

While Im Kkeokjeong was filling her glass, I leaned toward Team Leader Choi and whispered.

"Team Leader. Did something happen to Miss Song-i?"

Team Leader Choi answered with an awkward expression.

"…Something did happen."

"I knew it."

"Very recently, too."

"Oh. Ah."

Miss Song's misfortune was my misfortune. Just sitting there and watching her was breaking my heart.

"Whew. I hope things work out for her."

"…"

"…"

Team Leader Choi, and even Butler Kim, who was sitting beside him, stared at me with strange expressions.

This was starting to feel weird.

"What?"

"Nothing."

[407] Soju is a Korean distilled alcoholic drink commonly served with meals.

"People can be like that when they're young."

It was an oddly lukewarm answer, but that wasn't important right now.

Crack.

"Drink! Today, we drink ourselves to death!"

Miss Song had opened her third bottle of soju[408] and was going wild.

"Ha-ha-ha! This is why I like Miss Song so much!"

Like a fish in water—no, like a bandit who'd found booze—Im Kkeokjeong egged her on from beside her.

"Shouldn't we stop her?"

"Ah, Miss Song-i?"

"Yes."

Team Leader Choi shrugged.

"It's fine. It's not like I've only known her for a day or two. That's just how Miss Song gets when she drinks."

"Even so… No, wait a second."

I fixed Team Leader Choi with a penetrating stare.

He'd seemed suspicious for a while, and now I'd finally caught him.

"How do you know what Miss Song is like when she drinks?"

"Because I've drunk with her."

"…"

Was this bastard making fun of me? Did he think I was asking because I couldn't figure that out?

"That's not what I mean."

"Then what do you mean?"

"I mean…"

Now that he'd put it that way, I had nothing to say. When I thought about it, who was I to question the relationship between them?

Just as I found myself at a loss for words, Team Leader Choi suddenly spoke.

"You've heard of Ares, right?"

"Of course."

Ares, the god of war.

The name of a god from ancient Greek and Roman mythology. These days, though, it was famous for something else.

"Who in Korea doesn't know the Ares Guild?"

The pride and joy of Korea's Hunters.

[408] Soju is a Korean distilled alcoholic drink commonly served with meals.

Hundreds of Guilds existed in Korea, but only one stood at the top: the Ares Guild. From the early days of the Great Cataclysm to the present, their achievements had been too numerous to count.

They're legends. Plain and simple.

They appeared in educational comics, educational animations, movies, novels, and all kinds of other media. They had even made it into textbooks.

The Ares Guild held a position in Korea comparable to a living King Sejong[409] or an active Admiral Yi Sun-sin.[410] No, perhaps even higher.

They're famous all over the world, after all.

If you asked most foreigners, "Do you know King Sejong? King-God-General Yi Sun-sin?" they'd probably think, What the hell is this Asian bastard talking about? But the Ares Guild was different.

"Do you know Ares?"

"Oh, yes!"

Even a tough-as-nails Texas grandpa would slap his twin pistols and know what you meant. That was the accepted academic consensus.

"Why are you asking about the Ares Guild?"

Team Leader Choi swallowed a mouthful of beer before answering.

"Because I used to be there."

"Oh. I see… Huh?"

What had I just heard?

I blinked for a while before finally speaking.

"You used to belong to the Ares Guild?"

"I was a Team Leader. Though I was pretty far down the ladder."

The Ares Guild had high standards. They selected only the best and trained them to become even better. Team Leader Choi had called himself low-ranking, but the fact that he'd made Team Leader there was already incredible.

Though right now, he just looked like a lunatic to me.

"Then why did you leave?"

Money, honor, status.

It was the best job any Hunter—or any man—could dream of. And he had kicked it all away and left!

"Were you ostracized at work or something?"

Team Leader Choi thought about it for a moment before answering.

---

[409] King Sejong was a fifteenth-century Korean ruler best known for overseeing the creation of the Korean alphabet.

[410] Admiral Yi Sun-sin was a Korean naval commander celebrated for defending Korea during the Japanese invasions of the late sixteenth century.

“That might have been the case. Miss Song was the only person who treated me normally.”

“…Then was Miss Song in the Ares Guild too?”

“She was on my team. I found out about her drinking habits during team dinners.”

I swallowed hard.

These people are total elites.

My gaze moved back and forth between Team Leader Choi, who was sipping his beer, and Miss Song, who was drinking straight from the bottle, before stopping on one person.

“Could it be that Butler Kim also…?”

“Me?”

Butler Kim smiled kindly and waved a hand.

“I retired a long time ago. Ha-ha-ha.”

“What?”

So he was a former Hunter.

Suddenly, I remembered the sense of incongruity I had always felt whenever I dealt with Butler Kim. I had also never once tried to assess him with my Qi Sense.

Who is this man, really?

Just as I was about to raise my Qi Sense, Im Kkeokjeong, who had been enthusiastically inhaling meat and liquor whether or not we were talking, spoke up.

“Oh, the burner went out. Miss Song, do we have another gas canister?”

“Hic. That was the last one.”

“Aw, we can’t let the momentum die. Should we just eat it?”

Im Kkeokjeong grumbled as he flipped a piece of meat that was still mostly raw. Butler Kim smiled gently at him.

“That won’t do.”

The next moment, two things happened at once.

Snap!

Butler Kim snapped his fingers.

Fwoosh!

A wave of scorching heat burst forth. Blue flames surged precisely up over the grill, heating the plate and cooking the meat in an instant before vanishing.

“This is…”

Im Kkeokjeong and I shouted at the same time.

“A mage!”

“It’s cooked incredibly well!”

“…”

"What? Taekyung, hurry up and eat."

Forget it, old man.

I shook my head back and forth.

More importantly, who would've guessed Butler Kim was a mage? No wonder something about him had always felt strange.

"You really had me fooled."

Butler Kim picked up a well-cooked piece of meat.

"I had no intention of fooling you. As I told you, I'm already a retired has-been."

Has-been, my ass.

If Butler Kim was a has-been, half the mages still active today ought to bow their damn heads.

At least B-rank.

He could summon flames with a single snap of his fingers and control them precisely enough to cook the meat just right without burning or undercooking it. Judging from the circumstances, he had probably belonged to the Ares Guild as well before retiring.

If he had been active during the Great Cataclysm, too…

…This guy's a big shot.

On top of that, he was an incredibly senior one.

I asked cautiously, "Um, which Hunter training center did you graduate from?"

"Nonsan.[411] What about you, Mr. Taekyung?"

"Gasp. Me too. The 28th Regiment, 1st Battalion."

"Really? What a coincidence. I was in the 28th Regiment, 1st Battalion too. Which company were you in?"

"Second Company."

"Then perhaps it isn't a coincidence but fate. Ha-ha."

There was nothing more to discuss. I rose from my seat and bowed deeply at the waist.

"Nice to meet you, Senior."

There's a saying in Korea about school ties, regional ties, and blood ties.[412] Hunters were no different.

The chance of awakening was 0.1 percent—one in a thousand. With odds that slim, it was rare for anyone you knew from ordinary life to awaken. The Hunter training center might not seem like much, but it was where a Hunter's network began.

"You don't have to go this far. Please, sit down."

---

[411] Nonsan is home to Korea's main Army recruit training center.

[412] School ties, regional ties, and blood ties are traditionally regarded in Korea as major sources of social connections and influence.

“You can speak casually with me.”

“I don’t really stand on ceremony…”

Just as Butler Kim and I were creating a warm atmosphere between Senior and junior, Team Leader Choi, who had been watching quietly, suddenly cut in.

“Butler Kim. Why don’t you do as Mr. Jin Taekyung says?”

What an ill-mannered bastard. How dare he tell such a distinguished Senior what to do…

Hmm. I guess he can.

Come to think of it, Team Leader Choi was the bigger shot. He employed a former Ares Guild mage as his butler.

What kind of family does he come from?

Was his grandfather the President and his father the prime minister?

As my curiosity continued to grow, Team Leader Choi went on.

“I think it’s time we sorted out everyone’s forms of address. You’re the face of our Guild, after all. We can’t keep calling you Butler Kim or Uncle forever, can we?”

Butler Kim considered it for a moment before answering.

“I’ll follow the Young Master’s wishes.”

Team Leader Choi nodded and swept a stern gaze over everyone present.

“Then from now on, we’ll all address Butler Kim as Guild Master. No objections, correct?”

Im Kkeokjeong and Miss Song answered.

“Man, this meat is incredible. Is it because it was grilled with Magic?”

“The booze is going in. Booze! Down it goes, down it goes!”

“…”

Team Leader Choi gazed at the two of them with regret before turning his eyes toward me. I had raised one arm conspicuously.

“What does that mean?”

“I have a question.”

At least this guy is a little better.

Team Leader Choi spoke with an expression that seemed to say as much.

“Go ahead.”

“Wasn’t Team Leader Choi the Guild Master?”

“…”

Looking as if he had been betrayed, Team Leader Choi pulled something from inside his coat and handed it to me. I took it and examined it.

It was a business card.

“I have this.”

“What does it say?”

“Choi Minwoo, Team Leader of Team 1, Peace Guild.”

“Yes. I’m the Team Leader.”

“Oh.”

“Butler Kim is the Guild Master. I’m the Team Leader. The other three are team members. Do you understand now?”

I didn’t know whether Butler Kim was a boss in name only or a public figurehead, but I nodded anyway.

If I didn’t, Team Leader Choi looked like he might cry.

“Did everyone else understand?”

At Team Leader Choi’s question, Im Kkeokjeong and Miss Song answered.

“Wow, even the liquor tastes amazing. Is it because we’ve got magically grilled meat to go with it?”

“How long are you going to make me do the shoulder dance? It’s dislocated! Dislocated! Dislocated!”

“…”

Hey, are you crying?

Chapter 79

I woke with a dull headache and looked around. I was in an unfamiliar place—a spacious, clean hotel room.

Only then did the memories of last night gradually come back to me.

Right. We came to a hotel for the second round and had a champagne party.

Good God. A champagne party at a hotel.

Put that way, I felt like I'd become the third-generation heir to some chaebol[413] family. Then again, Team Leader Choi might actually be one.

"Khrrr-heeeurk. Khrrp!"

"…"

That man really was a bandit.

What kind of snoring sounded like someone shouting? Jinho hyung[414] was a champion snorer himself, but next to this guy, he might as well have been on mute.

If I were the hotel manager, I would've kicked him out long ago—

Knock, knock.

"Who is it?"

For a moment, I thought a hotel employee had come to inform us that we were being thrown out. But no. A clear, bright voice came from the other side of the door.

"It's me. Song Song."

Wait. Who?

"J-just a moment!"

I dashed to the door at the speed of light. Before opening it, I made sure to spray on some of the perfume provided in the room and straighten my clothes.

Click.

Miss Song-i's clear, lake-like eyes gazed steadily at me, setting my heart pounding. I barely managed to squeeze out a greeting in a trembling voice.

"G-good morning. Did you sleep well?"

"No. The snoring kept waking me up."

"Oh."

Not a good start. I blamed Im Kkeokjeong, who was still snoring ferociously, and quickly changed the subject.

"But what brings you here?"

"It's time for breakfast."

---

[413] A chaebol is a large, family-controlled South Korean business conglomerate.

[414] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or older male friend. Hyung-nim is a more deferential form.

"…Breakfast?"

Miss Song looked at me as if she couldn't see what the problem was.

"Yes. Why?"

Why? Because I'm happy.

Who would've thought I'd live to see the day I had breakfast alone with a woman? And not just any woman—one who was exactly my type. I could almost feel my eyes welling up.

At last, an oasis has appeared in my desert of a life.

I wouldn't have minded eating combat rations for breakfast as long as I was eating them with her. I answered with determination.

"I'll get ready right now."

"Then could you wake Uncle Kkeokjeong first?"

"…Why Kkeokjeong Hyung-nim?[415]"

"Didn't you check the chat?"

Miss Song held out her smartphone.

The Guild group chat we had created last night was open on the screen.

> Peace Guild
> Team Leader Choi: Is everyone awake?
> Butler Kim: I'm up.
> Song Song: I'm up too.
> Team Leader Choi: What about the other two?
> Song Song: They're snoring.
> Team Leader Choi: …Wake them up and come to the restaurant on the first floor.

"…"

Damn it. And just when I was getting excited. Story of my life.

Leaving me there dejected, Miss Song turned away.

"Then I'll go down first."

I stared longingly at her retreating back as she walked away on light, graceful steps.

"Even her back is pretty."

"Khrrp, khrrr-heeeurk!"

"…"

Is this guy really not a former bandit?

[415] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or older male friend. Hyung-nim is a more deferential form.

After barely managing to wake Im Kkeokjeong, I headed down to the first floor with him.

Team Leader Choi was sitting by the window. He waved when he saw us.

“I ordered ahead. Eat before it gets cold.”

Since it was a hotel breakfast, I had expected something like an absurdly tiny serving of pasta. Instead, a steaming bowl of haejangguk sat on the table.[416]

“Ah, now that’s Team Leader Choi!”

“You really know your stuff, Team Leader.”

I still had some of last night’s hangover left, but one bowl of haejangguk[417] seemed like it would make circulating my qi unnecessary.

Team Leader Choi shook his head at our reactions.

“Miss Song ordered it. I wanted pasta.”

“Miss Song did?”

“Yes.”

Judging by his dark expression, he must have really wanted that pasta.

Still, I never would’ve expected Miss Song to order hangover soup. Judging by her appearance, she looked like a pampered young lady from a wealthy family. But after what she had shown us yesterday, and now this, she had a surprisingly down-to-earth side.

Slurp.

“Ah, that hits the spot. What are you all doing? You should eat while the broth’s still hot.”

Watching Miss Song dig into her haejangguk[418] warmed a corner of my heart. Even the way she ate was delightful.

So this is what it means when simply looking at someone fills you up.

In a state where I could no longer tell whether the food was going into my nose or my mouth, the meal finally came to an end. While everyone except me sagged back in their seats, bloated with food, Team Leader Choi spoke.

“Now that we’ve eaten, shall we move somewhere else?”

What? Wasn’t this supposed to be the part where we went home and rested?

“Move where?”

Im Kkeokjeong cut in, patting his bulging belly.

---

[416] Haejangguk, literally “hangover soup,” is a Korean soup traditionally eaten after drinking to help ease a hangover.

[417] Haejangguk, literally “hangover soup,” is a Korean soup traditionally eaten after drinking to help ease a hangover.

[418] Haejangguk, literally “hangover soup,” is a Korean soup traditionally eaten after drinking to help ease a hangover.

“Where else? We’ve got to keep the party going from yesterday. How about makgeolli[419] today? I know a good place.”

“Oh, I really like makgeolli[420] too.”

Butler Kim, who had been quietly listening to us, smiled and continued.

“Unfortunately, I think we’d better save that for our next Guild dinner. We have something more important to take care of today.”

Butler Kim might have been the Guild Master, but someone else made the decisions.

With everyone’s eyes on him, Team Leader Choi opened his mouth.

“We’ve eaten, drunk, and rested. Now it’s time to work.”

It was the Peace Guild’s first raid.

The Great Cataclysm left humanity reeling in shock.

Gates appeared without warning one day, and unknown creatures came pouring out of them.

“W-what is that?”

“A monster! It’s a monster!”

People might have been less shocked if aliens with thin limbs and oversized heads had invaded instead. But these creatures hadn’t arrived in spaceships, nor did they fire guns.

“Skreeee!”

“Karuk! Krrruuuk!”

With their terrible stench and eyes gleaming with killing intent, the monsters tore humans apart like sheets of paper as they swept through cities and set them ablaze.

They were monsters that seemed as if they belonged in novels, movies, or myths.

The Minotaur was one of them…or so I had learned in history class.

“You know what a Minotaur is, right?”

Im Kkeokjeong answered proudly.

“Of course. I saw them in a Greek and Roman mythology comic when I was in elementary school. They were pretty cool—huge muscles and everything.”

“…What about you, Taekyung?”

“I’ve never even seen one.”

A Minotaur was among the stronger monsters in the B-rank category. It had been roughly five hundred light-years away from me, an eternal F-rank Hunter.

[419] Makgeolli is a traditional Korean rice wine with a milky appearance and a mildly sweet, tangy flavor.
[420] Makgeolli is a traditional Korean rice wine with a milky appearance and a mildly sweet, tangy flavor.

"That's all right. This is your chance to see one."

"…"

Is a Gate a zoo? Are we going there just to sightsee?

Team Leader Choi answered breezily, as if this had nothing to do with him, and handed me a tablet.

"Here."

"What is this?"

"It's a next-generation tablet powered by a C-rank Magic Gem. With its elegant design and outstanding performance, it's sold exclusively to a select number of VIPs…"

"Just give me the conclusion."

"I loaded some raid footage onto it. Watch."

He could've just said that from the start. Im Kkeokjeong and I put our heads together and watched the video stored on the tablet.

"All right, stay calm. Stay calm. Especially the tanks! Keep those shields up. If they break through, everyone here is dead. Of course, I'll kill you myself before that happens."

"Yes, sir!"

Around fifteen Hunters formed an orderly formation at the raid leader's command. Every one of them was visibly tense.

Four tanks, melee and ranged damage dealers. They've even got a mage and a healer.

Their teamwork seemed decent, and so did the team composition.

And then…

So that's a Minotaur.

A B-rank monster I had only ever seen in monster encyclopedias appeared on the screen.

"Moooooo!"

A cow's head on a human body. Seven half-human, half-beast Minotaurs advanced toward the intruders.

No—they charged.

"Mooooooo!"

Their bellowing echoed through the cave. Rock dust shook loose and fell in little showers as the battle began.

"Ranged! Fire!"

The raid leader screamed himself hoarse. At the same moment, around twenty mana-infused arrows struck the lead Minotaur in the head.

Fwish-fwish-fwish!

Focusing fire on one target instead of using a wide-area attack had been a good choice. Aiming precisely for its head had been especially effective.

No matter how strong a B-rank monster was, it couldn't reinforce its eyeballs.

The Minotaur clawed at its own face in agony. The finishing blow came from the companions following behind it.

Crunch!

A dark iron club smashed the cow's head apart.

And then—

Thud, thud, thud!

Huh.

They used the dead Minotaur's corpse as a shield and charged straight ahead. Arrows and magic rained down, but they only shredded the corpse. The Minotaurs hiding behind it were unharmed.

These bastards…

They knew how to use their heads. They were at least as intelligent as goblins and dozens of times stronger.

That made them all the more dangerous.

"Hold!"

"Urrrgh!"

At the team leader's shout, the tanks' veins bulged. Their shields, covered in hazy mana, blocked the iron clubs carrying tremendous force.

Wham! Wham! Wham!

A small shadow suddenly dropped out of the air between them. A stealth-type Hunter drove a black-painted dagger into another Minotaur's eye, then vanished.

"Moooo…"

B-rank monsters weren't invincible. With support from the other melee damage dealers, archers, and mage, two more Minotaurs fell in the blink of an eye.

But the crisis came quickly.

They're breaking through!

No sooner had the thought occurred to me than the wavering tank line collapsed.

Kra-koom!

"Graaagh!"

"Healer! Healer!"

Screams and roars filled the cave. Through the billowing dust, I could see the cow-headed monsters tearing through the formation and swinging their iron clubs.

"Moooooo!"

"Tanks, damage dealers! Ranged, don't hold back your mana—pour it all in! Ranged, open up some distance!"

Wham-wham-wham!

"Mooooooo!"

"Healeeeer!"

The video continued for about ten minutes before cutting off. The battle hadn't ended yet. The camera had simply been smashed by an iron club.

"Moooooooo!"

Bzzzt.

As the Minotaur's roar rang out, the screen filled with static and faded to black and white. Im Kkeokjeong swallowed hard.

"…This is no joke."

Of course it isn't, old man.

I handed the tablet back to Team Leader Choi and asked,

"What Guild was that?"

"It was footage of the Bucheon Terminal Guild's raid last week."

"…"

Whoever named that Guild had one hell of a sense for names.

Not that I had much room to talk as a member of the Peace Guild, but at least our name was better than Bucheon Terminal Guild.

"What was the result?"

"The Minotaurs were wiped out. Two Hunters died."

People dying during raids wasn't particularly rare. Being a Hunter meant repeatedly drawing close to death, then running away from it.

Even so, I couldn't help feeling heavy-hearted. It was a burden the survivors would have to carry for the rest of their lives.

Just as I did now.

"I see."

That was all I could manage. I pulled out my smartphone and searched for the incident. Several related articles appeared.

> A Bucheon Guild: The Sacrifice Brought on by a Reckless Raid
> On the sixteenth, C-rank Hunters identified as Mr. Lee and Mr. Park died in the B-rank Gate The Minotaur's Labyrinth. The Hunter Association authorities…

So the Hunters who died had been C-rank. That made sense. A small-to-medium Guild like that couldn't possibly have enough talent to fill all fifteen or so spots on a raid team with B-rank Hunters.

Then…

I quickly looked over the Guild members. The Qi Sense I had activated a moment earlier had already brought up their Level windows.

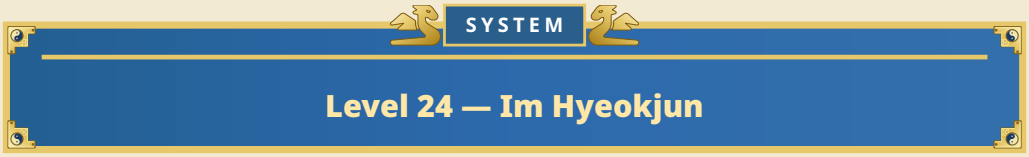
Ding. Ding. Ding.

The next moment, my eyes met Im Kkeokjeong's.

"What's wrong?"

"It's nothing."

I answered as casually as I could and turned away, but my thoughts were anything but casual.



This raid is dangerous.

Chapter 80

Gate Management Office.

A young man in gleaming armor scowled.

“So why isn’t it allowed?”

The public official in charge of the B-rank Gate The Minotaur’s Labyrinth looked troubled.

“I already told you. Because of the fatal accident last week…”

“You think I don’t know that? I’m asking why you’re being so uptight with someone you know.”

“It’s a safety-inspection period. If you’re short on personnel, I can’t exactly approve your entry.”

The official was at his wit’s end.

Any Gate where a fatal accident occurred was subjected to a week of safety inspections. The required number or level of personnel was raised to prevent another accident. But the young man in front of him refused to listen.

“I put in a little extra this time. Good enough?”

“What is this!”

The official jumped at the white envelope the young man thrust toward him and glanced around in alarm. A recent hire was staring at him with wide, round eyes.

“You—you can’t do this.”

“Can’t do what? You’ve been taking it just fine until now.”

“…”

“Being in charge of a Gate is supposed to have perks like this, right?”

At the young man’s blatant remark, the middle-aged official’s face flushed red. It wasn’t as if this was anything new, but what kind of disgrace was this in front of a new employee?

Still, the milk had already been spilled. His conscience grew thinner in proportion to the thickness of the white envelope.

“So… what’s your current team composition?”

“Ten, including me.”

“Ten?”

“Five B-ranks and five C-ranks. Why? Is there a problem?”

Of course there was. The Bucheon Terminal Guild, which had been involved in last week’s accident, had sent five B-rank Hunters and ten C-rank Hunters into the Gate. What happened to them had been plastered all over the front page of the local newspaper.

> The Tragedy Brought on by a Shoddy Raid
> Bucheon Terminal Guild Master to Cooperate Fully with Hunter Association Investigation

And now they were talking about going in with ten people. Just as the official was hesitating—

“Hey, mister. Hold on.”

The young man, who had been badgering him with a menacing scowl moments earlier, was now smiling.

“The numbers have to be roughly right anyway, don’t they?”

“Ah, yes. That would be good.”

“Then let’s take those guys along. Make it look good.”

The official followed the young man’s finger. A group of five had just entered the management office.

Two middle-aged men. Two young men. And…

One stunningly beautiful woman.

Judging by how the young man couldn’t take his eyes off her, his intentions were obvious.

“Good enough now?”

After quickly doing the math, the official picked up the envelope.

“No problem.”

The middle-aged official kindly explained the situation to us.

It was currently a safety-inspection period, which meant quite a few Guilds were facing delays in entering Gates. With our current numbers, we would either have to hire mercenaries or join forces with another Guild.

“You’re in luck. The people from Sangdong Guild are waiting, and they’re exactly five people short.”

“If we join them, how long will it take until we can enter the Gate?”

“We can process it immediately once you join.”

That worked great for us.

Team Leader Choi, who held the real decision-making power, nodded without objection.

“Then that sounds good.”

Just as Butler Kim, the Guild Master, signed the contract, an unexpected voice cut in.

“Nice to meet you. I’m Im Changsoo, the Team Leader from Sangdong Guild.”

His voice was smooth and easygoing, but his build was quite solid.

Unmistakable confidence radiated from him as he strode over.

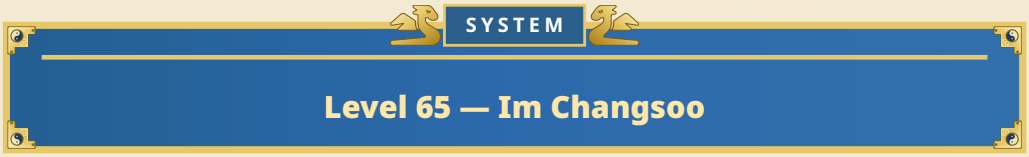
Someone from Sangdong Guild had every reason to be confident.

Sangdong Guild was one of the five leading mid-sized Guilds in the Bucheon area, with more than twenty B-rank Hunters alone.

He looked to be in his late twenties at most, yet he was already a Team Leader. That wasn't a position one could luck into over a game of cards.[421]

This guy's no pushover.

The Qi Sense I activated a moment later turned my guess into certainty.



And yet, his name sounded familiar. Where had I heard it before?

While I tilted my head, Butler Kim greeted him.

"Hello. I'm Kim Hwajong of Peace Guild."

We called him Butler Kim, Uncle, Kim Hyung,[422] and plenty of other things, and we knew he was only a figurehead Guild Master. But to an outsider, he obviously looked like the man in charge.

Im Changsoo answered with a bright smile.

"Ah, Peace Guild. I've heard quite a lot about you."

Im Kkeokjeong and Miss Song, who were standing nearby, whispered to each other.

"Miss Song, how long has our Guild been around?"

"Hmm. About two weeks, I think?"

"Raids? Have we done many?"

"What are you talking about? We haven't even started remodeling the Guild house yet. This is our first official raid."

"…"

A B-rank Hunter could hear everything, no matter how quietly someone spoke. Im Changsoo turned toward the two of them.

"And these people are?"

"They're members of our Guild."

His gaze passed over them—briefly over Im Kkeokjeong, then lingering a little longer on Miss Song.

"I see. I said something unnecessary, haha."

---

[421] Go-stop is a Korean card game played with flower cards.

[422] Hyung is a familiar term a younger man uses for an older man, often an older brother or close acquaintance.

“Not at all.”

“In any case, this must be fate. Since we’re on the same team now, I look forward to working with you.”

“All right, then. We’ll go change into our gear and be right back.”

“We’ll wait for you in front of the Gate.”

Team Leader Choi watched Im Changsoo’s back as he walked away, his gleaming chainmail clanking with every step. His face was serious.

“That man…”

“Is there a problem?”

“His equipment is limited edition. That stuff is incredibly hard to get.”

“…”

Oh. Right. It did look expensive.

Hunters were the envy of society. Partly because they were the guardians who had protected humanity from the Great Cataclysm… but mainly because they made a lot of money.

Even I made over 100 million won[423] a year as a lowest-rank Hunter by working my ass off, so that said it all.

The problem was that we spent a lot, too.

The single biggest expense was equipment.

Magic Gems went into equipment as a matter of course, so no matter how carefully you weighed cost against performance, you couldn’t avoid spending a fortune. Then there were the regular maintenance costs and repair bills whenever something broke.

The heartbreak was one thing. Your bank balance got ripped apart too.

There was a reason equipment insurance existed.

In that regard, Team Leader Choi was the best employer ever.

He loaned us high-end equipment for free.

Rumble, rumble.

Team Leader Choi entered the changing room, pulling a suitcase behind him, and called us over.

“I picked out some decent equipment suited to each of your positions. Take one set each.”

It was a small suitcase, the sort you might use for a short trip. Im Kkeokjeong muttered in disappointment.

“Guess there isn’t one for me.”

[423] 100 million won is about $71,000 or €65,000.

The corners of Team Leader Choi's mouth curled up.

"Of course there is. If you knew what this was, you'd be shocked…"

"Oh, this is a suitcase with a space-expansion spell on it."

"…"

Nailed it.

My accurate prediction briefly wiped the smile off Team Leader Choi's face. But he quickly composed himself and continued.

"That's right. A space-expansion suitcase made by K Company. Nicholas, known as the greatest craftsman in North America…"

Clatter!

"Wow, it really is! Taekyung, look at this. It's huge inside!"

"It is."

"World-renowned designers also participated…"

"Wow, I've never seen anything like this before. I could probably sleep in here."

"Once you close the suitcase, you won't be able to get out until someone opens it."

"Really?"

"This product keeps stored items in optimal condition through proper temperature control and ventilation at all times…"

Click, click.

"This is awesome. What do you think? Does it suit me?"

"It fits you perfectly. I thought it was a tailored suit."

"You look good too. What's that?"

"It says it's a Black Drake Leather Set. I mean, it's a leather set."

"Really? If it's Team Leader Choi's, it must be good. Hahaha! Thanks, Team Leader Choi!"

"…Don't mention it."

Team Leader Choi had completely lost the will to fight by then and changed into his equipment without another word. Meanwhile, I checked each piece of equipment I was wearing.

Item Check.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Item Window
Masterwork Black Drake Leather Set
Type: Armor
Grade: Peak
Description: An armor set made from the leather of the B-rank monster Black Drake. The work of a superb craftsman is evident.
Effect: Strength, Stamina, Agility, Toughness +10
— Full Set Effect is active.
Item Window
Masterwork Black Thorn Spear
Type: Spear
Grade: Peak
Description: A spear made from the spine of the B-rank monster Black Drake. It is both extremely hard and sharp. The work of a superb craftsman is evident.
Effect: Bleeding has a 90% chance to activate upon hitting an enemy.

After checking them, I had exactly one thought.

This is insane.

An armor set that gave me forty points simply by wearing it, plus a spear that could make an enemy bleed to death with nearly every stab.

The item information alone made it clear how incredible the effects were.

So this is what gear advantage feels like.

When I suddenly remembered my time in Murim, tears clouded my vision.

Armor, my ass.

I had fought in soft scraps of cloth and broken dozens of cheap spears. The people of Murim were the very definition of hard-boiled—the real tough guys.

“Maybe it’s because it’s designer gear, but it feels different right away.”

I turned my head and saw Im Kkeokjeong hopping up and down in place, his face flushed with excitement.

“It’s incredibly light, and I feel faster too. Is it just my imagination?”

“I doubt it.”

There was no way it was just his imagination. Team Leader Choi had prepared this equipment specifically for Im Kkeokjeong, a D-rank Hunter. Of course it was good.

Should I take a quick look?

Just as I was about to place my hand on the full plate armor Im Kkeokjeong was wearing, Team Leader Choi approached us, already fully equipped.

"If you're ready, let's head out."

"What about Butler Kim?"

"Out here, he's the Guild Master."

At Team Leader Choi's pointed correction, Butler Kim chuckled.

"It's fine. Besides… I'm always wearing my equipment."

As he spoke, he unbuttoned his suit jacket, revealing bracelets on both wrists and a necklace. They were no ordinary accessories, of course.

The necklace was set with a Magic Gem, while the bracelets were engraved with strange yet beautiful patterns.

"An artifact?"

"I find these more convenient than a staff."

Butler Kim answered modestly, but it was rare to see a mage dressed so lightly. Most wore at least some light armor or carried a staff for self-defense to improve their chances of survival.

Well, he's probably no ordinary mage.

Anyone from Ares Guild commanded respect.

I suddenly found myself curious about Butler Kim's past, but the question was wiped clean from my mind the next moment.

Knock, knock.

"Hey, guys. Are you still not done?"

"Ah, we're ready."

It was Miss Song's voice from outside the changing room. As soon as Team Leader Choi answered, the door eased open.

"Hurry up. People will be waiting."

"Whoa."

Her long, straight hair was tied up tightly, and she was wearing light leather armor. I swallowed a startled breath at the sight of her.

Can a person really be this beautiful?

It wasn't just love making me see her through rose-colored glasses. That was simply the truth. I knew that much just from seeing Im Kkeokjeong, who had treated her like a cute niece until now, swallow hard.

Gulp.

"…"

I'd better keep an eye on this guy.

If even Im Kkeokjeong was reacting like this, the other guys would be no exception. Any young guy who seemed even moderately capable would come by the truckload to hit on her.

Take Im Changsoo, for example. Im Changsoo, say. Or maybe Im Changsoo…

Im Changsoo. The young Team Leader from Sangdong Guild.

His face had been hovering in my mind since earlier.

I was sure I'd never seen him before.

And yet… why was he bothering me so much? Was it because that punk seemed interested in Miss Song?

"What are you doing? Aren't you coming out?"

"Ah, yes."

My thoughts were cut short. At Im Kkeokjeong's urging, I hurried out of the changing room.

Chapter 81

In front of the Gate, ten men and women dressed as Hunters were chatting in a friendly atmosphere.

“Oppas[424], we’re going to be okay, right?”

At the female Hunter’s question, a B-rank Hunter from Sangdong Guild thumped his breastplate.

“I told you not to worry. Don’t you trust us?”

“Of course I do. But I heard people died here last week.”

“Forget those idiots. They got themselves killed playing tough when they didn’t have the skills to back it up. Who else can they blame? Right, Changsoo hyung[425]?”

Im Changsoo, who had been listening quietly, blew a cloud of cigarette smoke into the air.

“If you’re nervous, go home. Don’t ruin the fucking mood.”

The atmosphere instantly turned cold. The female Hunter who had spoken first forced the corners of her mouth upward.

“No, oppa[426], I was just—”

“Shut up. What are you going to do?”

“…Sorry.”

“Then go curl up in a corner. I’ve got more than enough bitches to bring along without you.”

Despite his rough words and behavior, not one of them dared to object. They merely tried to lighten the mood with awkward smiles.

This sort of scene was both familiar and perfectly natural to Im Changsoo.

Idiots.

Gates were geese that laid golden eggs called Magic Gems, and Hunters were the laborers who harvested them. Born into a family of estate managers, he had started out on a completely different footing.

“If you’re not going to a hotel right now, quit hanging all over each other. It’ll be a pain in the ass if another shitty rumor starts spreading.”

“Hyung[427], you can trust these girls.”

“I don’t, asshole. Didn’t you say the same thing about the last ones?”

“Well, that was…”

---

[424] Oppa is a term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man she is close to. Oppas is its English plural.

[425] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older man he is close to.

[426] Oppa is a term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man she is close to. Oppas is its English plural.

[427] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older man he is close to.

Sangdong Guild might have been a respectable mid-sized Guild that threw its weight around locally, but it wasn't powerful enough to ignore public scrutiny. Im Changsoo had already received several warnings from his father, the Guild Master, after messing with the wrong women.

"Let's make sure there aren't any problems, okay?"

"Yes, sir. We'll keep that in mind. Loyalty!"

"Tsk. At least you're good at answering."

Im Changsoo flicked away his half-burned cigarette. As if she had been waiting for it, someone beside him called out a spell.

"Wind."

A magically generated breeze sent the cigarette butt and its smell flying far away. The female mage who had cast the spell gave him a charming smile.

"I did good, right?"

Im Changsoo looked her up and down. She had a sleek figure and was an alluring beauty, and the two of them had a sort of sponsorship arrangement.

Despite her outstanding looks, she was a C-rank Hunter with pathetic skills. But being the Guild Master's son's lover had been enough to get her into Sangdong Guild.

Her house, her car, and countless designer goods—all of them had come out of Im Changsoo's pocket. But he had never once thought it was a waste.

Well, that was true until now.

But today, his mind had changed. Her figure, her looks, her entire air—all of it seemed tacky and cheap compared to the woman he had met about thirty minutes earlier.

Was her name Song Song?

Just thinking about her made his lower abdomen feel heavy.

She was a flower far too precious for some pathetic new Guild. He intended to pull her out without damaging a single root and plant her in his own flowerpot.

"Oppa[428], did something good happen? Why are you smiling like that?"

Im Changsoo didn't answer. Instead, he waved toward the five people who had appeared in the distance.

"Ah, over here!"

Of course, he didn't forget to add a quiet remark to his ex-girlfriend.

"Who the hell are you calling oppa[429], you fucking bitch?"

[428] Oppa is a term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man she is close to. Oppas is its English plural.

[429] Oppa is a term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man she is close to. Oppas is its English plural.

Horndog—or rather, Im Changsoo—spoke with a bright smile.

“You’re here. Ah, these are my team members.”

The people who appeared to belong to Sangdong Guild bowed their heads.

Including Im Changsoo, there were exactly five men and five women. Every one of them wore expensive, gleaming equipment that clearly prioritized design over practicality.

Especially…

Oh, wow.

When it came to the female Hunters, I had no idea where to look. Im Kkeokjeong, a married man with two children, whispered with a stiff expression.

“They’re incredible.”

“…”

I almost nodded before managing to stop myself.

Miss Song was looking at us with a displeased expression.

That aside…

Was this a raid or a blind date? If a bunch of handsome men and beautiful women paired off and entered a Gate while laughing and chatting, they were liable to end up dead.

Well, judging by their Levels and equipment, they would probably be fine.

“Is everyone here?”

The middle-aged official in charge of the Gate checked our numbers and Hunter licenses. It was one of the mandatory procedures before entering.

“Sangdong Guild. Five B-ranks and five C-ranks. Correct?”

Im Changsoo gave him a courteous smile.

“That’s right.”

“Then Peace Guild. Two B-ranks, two C-ranks, and…”

The official’s hand paused as he flipped through the Hunter licenses.

“One E-rank? Where is he?”

Im Kkeokjeong thrust his hairy arm into the air.

“Uh, that’s me.”

“What’s your position?”

“You’re not very observant, sir. Would I lug around a great brute of a shield like this if I were a mage? Heh heh.”

“You’re a tank.”

The official furrowed his brow.

A tank was exactly what the name suggested: a human shield who stood on the front line and blocked monster attacks. Because of the danger, tanks were among the best-paid Hunters, along with healers. They also had a high fatality rate.

“Why would an E-rank come here? As a tank, no less. Good grief.”

“You can make a lot of money in one go. Who knows? If the Magic Gems come pouring out, you’ve hit the jackpot.”

“Oppa[430], we’re really going to be okay today, right?”

“Don’t worry, Hye-rin. This oppa[431] will protect you.”

Murmurs spread among Im Changsoo’s team members. The official who had to let us enter was no exception.

“An E-rank tank…”

Butler Kim stepped forward at the concern in his voice.

“He is a veteran with twenty years of experience. He is also wearing sufficient equipment to prepare for any danger, so I don’t believe there will be a problem.”

“Veteran is good, of course. But you know what happened last week. Two C-rank tanks died. In a situation like this, letting him…”

That was when an unexpected ally appeared.

“Sir, is there any way you could allow it?”

It was Im Changsoo. He continued in a soft voice.

“We’ve already signed the cooperative raid contract, and after meeting such fine people, it would be a shame to render it invalid.”

“Well, I mean…”

“We’d be very grateful if you could show us a little flexibility… Please.”

What a strange guy. The words coming out of his mouth were all gratitude and requests, but his bearing was stiff and his manner was high-handed.

The official flinched for a moment, then sighed.

“All right. But Team Leader, you’ll have to keep them under control.”

“Of course.”

Keep them under control. What an unpleasant way to put it.

With Im Changsoo’s help, permission was granted, but an ant seemed to be crawling around in one corner of my chest.

Well, better to let it go.

Even Im Kkeokjeong, the person involved, looked completely unfazed. It would be ridiculous for me to take offense on his behalf.

“You may enter, then.”

At the official’s words, everyone stepped in front of the Gate. Ten Hunters from Sangdong Guild and five from Peace Guild. Fifteen people in total, including no fewer than seven B-rank Hunters—a highly elite raid team.

---

[430] Oppa is a term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man she is close to. Oppas is its English plural.

[431] Oppa is a term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man she is close to. Oppas is its English plural.

“Well, then…”

Im Changsoo, who had naturally taken the lead, winked.

“See you inside the Gate.”

Whoosh!

As Im Changsoo disappeared beyond the field of magic, Miss Song muttered,

“What a creep.”

I agree.

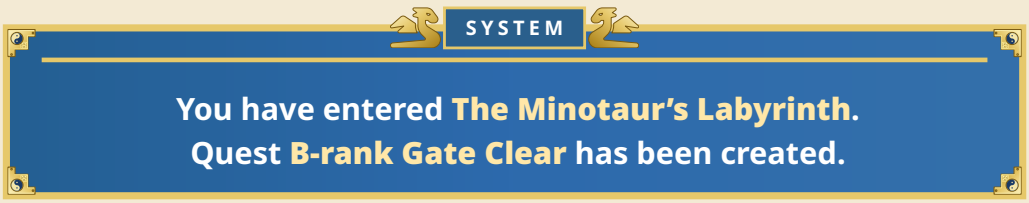
Whoosh.

The damp, sticky energy unique to magic wrapped around my body for a moment. When I opened my eyes, a new space unfolded before me.

The cavern was so vast that it couldn’t even be compared to an F-rank Gate. Three entrances gaped open like enormous maws. It was the same place we had seen in the video on the way here.

The only difference was…

Ding.



There was a System notification that only I could hear. And, on top of that, a Quest.

“All right, let’s check our numbers and equipment one more time before we go in.”

While everyone checked their belongings, I quietly moved to a corner of the cavern and muttered inwardly.

Check Quest.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Quest
B-rank Gate Clear
You have entered a B-rank Gate for the first time in your life. Upon successfully completing the raid, you will receive a corresponding Reward. This applies only once.
Grade: First Rate
Restriction: Jin Taekyung
Mission: Clear the B-rank Gate (Incomplete)
Reward: ???
Failure: ???

What a refreshing start.

I had just closed the Quest window with a warm smile when—

“What are you doing over here by yourself?”

A voice suddenly came from behind me. I turned and saw Im Changsoo walking toward me.

“Me?”

I thought he had mistaken me for someone else, but apparently not.

“You’re Mr. Jang Taekyung from Peace Guild, right?”

“I’m Jin Taekyung.”

“Yes, Mr. Jang Taekyung.”

I wasn’t sure whether he was deaf or there was something wrong with my tongue, but I nodded anyway.

We’ll probably only see each other once, anyway.

He had helped us with the issue concerning Im Kkeokjeong, so I still felt a little grateful to him.

“Did you need something?”

“Haha, it’s nothing I’d call business. This is fate, so I thought we could at least exchange names. You heard my introduction earlier, so you already know who I am. I look forward to working with you.”

Someone once said you couldn’t spit in a smiling face. It was a little awkward, but I clasped the hand Im Changsoo offered with a broad smile on his face.

“Ah, yes. I look forward to working with you too.”

A Team Leader from another Guild—someone I had never even met before—had offered me a handshake first.

I had participated in cooperative raids several times over the past seven years and had plenty of experience as a day-labor Hunter, but this was the first time something like this had happened.

Then again, I was an F-rank back then.

In those days, people had treated me like air. Maybe being a C-rank Hunter meant I was finally being treated like a person. It left me with a strange feeling.

But why me?

The question was answered almost immediately.

"That's a Black Drake Leather Set, right?"

"Ah."

This guy's a Designer-Brand Junkie too.

Im Changsoo looked my equipment up and down, exclaiming in admiration.

"Wow, I've only ever seen this in pictures. Where did you buy it? Did you order it from overseas? Or get it in Cheongdam-dong[432]?"

"I rented it."

"You leased it from a company, then. I heard you're a C-rank Hunter, but can you really afford to maintain something like this? Ah, I'm sorry. I absolutely didn't mean anything by that. Did I offend you?"

Of course I'm offended, you moron.

But I wasn't stupid enough to let my true feelings show so openly.

What Im Changsoo had said was also a cold reality.

Still, this guy really has no tact.

I waved a hand with deliberate composure, mixing in a little self-deprecating humor.

"It's already breaking my back. Every penny I earn goes toward maintenance. The people around me call me crazy."

"Haha, but is there anything more important than your life? Right?"

"That's true."

"Then I suppose the same goes for the others."

"Sorry?"

"The others. The Peace Guild members. Their equipment looked pretty good too."

"Did it? I don't know much about that sort of thing."

Im Changsoo laughed as if he had heard an amusing joke.

"Come on. That's not something a person who spends a fortune leasing equipment gets to say."

The equipment was leased, but it hadn't cost me a fortune. Team Leader Choi had loaned it to me free of charge. I briefly considered explaining that, but soon abandoned the thought.

What would be the point?

Explaining it would only waste my breath.

[432] Cheongdam-dong is a Seoul district known for luxury shopping.

I was already tired of talking about equipment, so I gave him a vague answer.

“They’re all about the same as me.”

“I see.”

At that moment, one of Im Changsoo’s team members ran over and told him that preparations were complete.

“Oh, dear. We’ve been chatting for too long. I’d better go. I need to check on my team members one last time, and then we should all move together.”

“Take care.”

“Yes.”

Im Changsoo bowed politely and was about to leave when he suddenly asked,

“Oh, right. There’s something I’ve been meaning to ask you.”

“…?”

“Have we met somewhere before?”

I would have been overjoyed if Miss Song had asked me that, but hearing it from a male in heavy armor left me feeling less than pleased.

“This is our first meeting.”

“Really?”

“Yes.”

I only thought his name sounded familiar. This was definitely our first meeting. At my firm answer, Im Changsoo’s smile deepened.

“All right, then. I’ll be going.”

What was that? Something about his final smile rubbed me the wrong way.

As I watched him walk away, Team Leader Choi approached without my noticing and asked,

“Do you know him?”

“No. He just said he wanted to be friends.”

“He didn’t make a recruitment offer?”

“Not at all. I think he only came over because he’s a gear nerd. He walked up out of nowhere and asked where I bought my equipment.”

“I bought it in Cheongdam-dong[433].”

“…”

I wasn’t asking.

“Changsoo hyung[434], why did you suddenly go talk to that bastard?”

“No reason. His equipment looked decent, so I sounded him out.”

[433] Cheongdam-dong is a Seoul district known for luxury shopping.

[434] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older man he is close to.

“Holy crap, it really does. Is that stuff really his?”

“Use your brain, asshole. How could a C-rank wear something like that?”

“Then he leased it? Crazy bastard. The maintenance costs must be insane.”

“Leave him alone. It’s cute, watching him overextend himself trying to make something of himself.”

Im Changsoo let out a quiet laugh.

As expected, they were nothing special.

Admittedly, he had felt a little uneasy when they showed up out of nowhere decked out in expensive equipment. If he messed with the wrong people, things could get out of hand.

But now that he had them figured out, he felt at ease.

Song Song.

Money and ability. With only those two things, he believed he could do anything. Getting his hands on one woman would be no trouble at all.

“Let’s get moving. Pass it on.”

“Yes, sir!”

Chapter 82

Fifteen people in total. With nearly half of them B-rank Hunters, it had turned into a lavish raid team—even taking the Gate's rank into account.

"Were B-rank Hunters always this common?"

I agreed with Im Kkeokjeong.

"Seriously."

Before, even when I went looking for them, I had been lucky to catch a glimpse of their coat tails. They had always lived in a completely different world from people like Im Kkeokjeong and me.

"But you don't seem all that impressed, Taekyung."

"Me?"

"Yeah. I saw you chatting pretty comfortably with that other Team Leader earlier."

"It happens. We were just making small talk."

"It happens, my ass. Not long ago, you would've broken your neck trying to look up high enough to talk to one of them."

Was it really that bad?

Come to think of it, he wasn't wrong. I was simply the one who had changed.

They say the scenery changes when you change where you stand.

B-rank Hunters. Mountain ridges I couldn't reach even with my hand outstretched now stood right before me.

But the scenery wasn't as beautiful as I had imagined.

They're around Supreme First Rate? No, maybe First Rate martial artists.

Both the Levels I'd checked with Qi Sense and the amount of mana I felt from them put them at about that level. Needless to say, I was a cut above them, armed with the System's cheat-like advantages. Even compared to martial artists of the same Level, they would probably be a step below.

That's the difference between martial artists and Hunters.

Both sides had their strengths and weaknesses, but if they fought with nothing but their bodies, the Hunter would lose every time.

Martial artists learned internal energy cultivation techniques that allowed them to efficiently use the qi within their bodies, then maximized its power through martial arts.

A Hunter would need proper equipment and magic to stand a chance.

The conclusion was simple. Martial artists had the advantage in individual ability, while Hunters were superior in group combat and tactics.

And…

I'm a total cheat character.

I was both a Hunter and a martial artist—a martial artist and a Hunter. I possessed all the advantages of two classes that were alike yet fundamentally different.

Even more frightening was the fact that I was still growing rapidly through the System.

I kind of feel like the protagonist of a novel.

Maybe I should write an autobiography when I got old and retired.

Login Murim.

Something like that for the title.

To anyone else, it would sound like a fantasy novel.

“Everyone, assemble! Move into the formation I call out!”

At the shout, Im Kkeokjeong took a deep breath.

“So it’s starting.”

Im Kkeokjeong’s position was tank. He had to protect the team from the front.

Maybe it was the pressure of a B-rank Gate, but his usually smiling face had gone stiff.

“Can I do this?”

I patted him on the shoulder.

“You can.”

I wasn’t just saying that to make him feel better. The System window floating before my eyes was proof.

SYSTEM

Item Window
Matador's Full-Body Armor
Type: Armor
Grade: Peak
Description: Armor of the matador, by the matador, for the matador.
Effect: Strength, Stamina, Toughness +10
Against bovine-type monsters, All Stats +20.
Item Window
Matador's Shield
Type: Shield
Grade: Peak
Description: A shield of the matador, by the matador, for the matador. Dyed red with bull's blood, it is eerie just to look at.
Effect: Strength, Stamina, Toughness +10
Against bovine-type monsters, has a chance to activate Taunt.
Against bovine-type monsters, has a chance to activate Hallucination.

Honestly, I thought it would be impossible at first.

But this was enough to put my mind at ease. At least here, in The Minotaur's Labyrinth, Im Kkeokjeong would be able to perform admirably as a tank.

"Hunter Im."

The sponsor—or rather, Team Leader Choi—approached quietly and spoke with a serious expression.

"Put it on carefully. It's part of my prized collection."

"..."

"..."

He sure knows how to say something nice.

Im Kkeokjeong took the lead as the tank. Once Butler Kim, the mage, and Miss Song-i, the healer, moved to the rear, only Team Leader Choi remained beside me.

"...Why are you looking at me like that?"

Why else? I wanted him to switch positions with Miss Song-i.

How nice would it be to walk side by side, enjoying a pleasant stroll through the Gate? We could even save each other if monsters showed up.

The heavens clearly aren't on my side.

Even when I raised my head in lament, all I saw was the damp cavern ceiling. Of course, it was incomparably higher than the ceiling of an F-rank Gate.

"It's definitely huge."

"It's a B-rank Gate."

The higher a Gate's rank, the larger its interior and the stronger the monsters that appeared within it. Of course, D-rank was as high as I'd ever gone, so this was my first time inside anything higher. That was what people said, anyway.

"In some cases, you even have to climb a snow-covered mountain. I went once two years ago. It was horrible."

"Oh, was there some kind of accident?"

"No. My boots weren't enchanted with waterproofing."

"…"

"I have cold hands and feet."

"…"

"Ah, both of those were jokes."

Of course they were jokes. How could someone above Level 60 have cold hands and feet?

I was staring at Team Leader Choi with an incredulous expression when—

Drrrk.

"Hm?"

"Is something wrong?"

"Wait. Just a moment."

Was I imagining things?

No.

A faint vibration had traveled through the cavern floor. It lasted only an instant, but I had definitely felt it.

Drrrk.

The second vibration was clearer and more obvious.

Several people had already noticed it and begun watching the area ahead. Im Changsoo was one of them.

"Prepare for battle!"

His short shout was quick and composed. With half his team being B-rank Hunters and excellent gear at their disposal, he had no reason to panic.

There was just one problem.

"Watch the holes!"

This was a labyrinth. There were five wide-open holes right in front of us.

It was difficult to determine exactly where the monsters were coming from based on the vibrations in the ground alone.

“Where are they?”

“…”

Who is Im Changsoo asking? It’s not like the Minotaurs are going to answer him.

“—Moooooo!”

“There! The hole on the far left!”

“…Is this for real?”

I could hardly believe the sight even as I watched it.

I clicked my tongue and gripped my spear. The Masterwork Black Thorn Spear—a vicious weapon with a high chance of putting an enemy into the Bleeding state.

“Doesn’t the grip feel great? I applied the finishing coat very carefully—”

There’s another vicious thing here.

If Team Leader Choi died, I had no doubt he would fall straight into the tongue-pulling hell.[435]

The next moment—

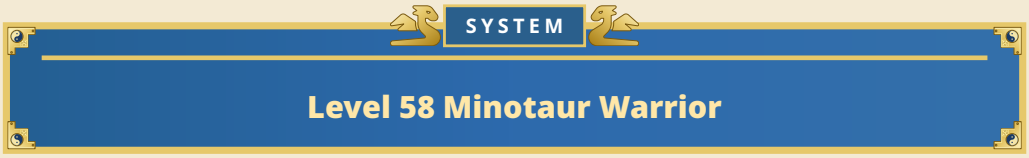
Boom. Boom. Boom.

“—Moooooooo!”

They burst out of the darkness.

Their bodies resembled humans, but their physiques were too massive to be human, and their muscles were grotesquely swollen.

A rectangular Level window floated above two horns stained with dust and someone’s blood.



“—Moooooo!”

They looked far more vivid and imposing in person than they had in the video, but…

“That’s all?”

“There’s only one?”

There really was just one.

Could that Minotaur have gotten lost in the labyrinth, too?

“At that level, we should be able to handle it without ranged support, shouldn’t we?”

“Hye-rin, I’ll be right back.”

[435]The tongue-pulling hell is a Buddhist hell where liars and slanderers are punished by having their tongues pulled out.

The Sangdong Guild members confidently stepped forward. Two tanks and two damage dealers, all of them B-rank Hunters.

Their intention to show off in front of the women was painfully obvious.

Oh, you morons.

Guys like that always fooled around and ended up dead. Of course, that probably wouldn't happen because of a single Minotaur.

"If you're going to do it, finish it quickly."

With Im Changsoo's permission, the four men drew their weapons and started toward the monster.

That was when—

Boom. Boom.

"Hm?"

"—Moo."

A Minotaur popped out of the second of the five holes.

"Oh, now there are two."

"That one's a little smaller. It looks weaker, so you take it."

"What the hell are you saying? Says the weakest bastard here."

Boom. Boom.

"—Moo."

The third hole.

"Oh, three. At this rate, this might actually be a pretty fun fight."

"Anyone who gets so much as a scratch buys drinks tonight. How about it?"

"I'm in."

"I'm in. The guy who suggests these things always ends up paying."

Boom. Boom.

"—Moo."

"Ah, shit. What is this?"

"Four might be a bit much."

"We should probably form up and take them out one at a time."

"Agreed."

Team Leader Choi, who had been watching the situation, scratched his neck.

"Maybe we should wait a little longer before coming up with a strategy."

"Huh?"

"The holes. Don't you get the feeling more might come out?"

"No way. It's not like they're introducing Olympic athletes."

Boom-boom-boom-boom!

He was right.

Lane five—no, the fifth hole—had news for us, too.

The only unexpected part was that this time, it wasn't alone.

"—Moooooo!"

Maybe it had a lot of friends. Four Minotaurs came stampeding out together.

Including the ones that had already appeared, there were eight in total. Four B-rank Hunters had no chance against that many.

Team Leader Choi spoke.

"What do you think?"

"It might be difficult."

Difficult, my ass. If you don't want to die, stay behind the tank.

I had toned it down for the benefit of the ears around us.

"What about you, Mr. Taekyung?"

"Me?"

"Yes. You, Mr. Taekyung."

"Hmm."

Minotaurs were B-rank monsters, and their Levels were in the mid-to-late fifties.

For a martial artist, that would be close to Supreme First Rate. But if I fought them, I would have to account for all sorts of variables.

Simply put, I would have to fight them to know.

"I'm not sure."

"You're not sure… Do you know something?"

Team Leader Choi stared at me with a strange look in his eyes.

"Most C-rank Hunters don't answer like that. They wouldn't take time to think about a question like that, much less take it seriously."

I felt a sudden twinge of unease.

I had no reason to hide my strength, but I also had no desire to brag about it to the whole neighborhood.

For now, I wanted to avoid attention and keep it as my own secret. A Hunter who was just a little more capable than everyone else. That was all.

"I've known this for a while, but you really are an interesting person, Jin Taekyung."

"No, wait, Team Leader. I think there may be some misunderstanding here."

I had just begun to speak when—

"Haha, I see. Listening to you, even I'm getting interested."

Im Changsoo suddenly cut in, his gaze sweeping over Team Leader Choi and me.

"You were having such an interesting conversation that I couldn't help overhearing some of it. You don't mind, do you?"

Was it my imagination, or did that sound like "If you do mind, what are you going to do about it?"

“For a C-rank with fuck-all to his name, you sure had a lot to say about Minotaurs and whatnot. You were practically writing a novel.”

Ah. So I wasn’t imagining it.

I looked at Im Changsoo with fresh eyes.

It suits him.

Everyone had clothes that suited them. The same went for smiles and attitudes.

That was how Im Changsoo looked to me now. The mockery gathered in the raised corners of his mouth suited him perfectly. It was practically made for him.

“I didn’t mean to offend you.”

At Team Leader Choi’s characteristically impassive expression and tone, Im Changsoo let out a short laugh.

“Why would I be offended? It’s the truth. These guys are fucking lousy. They only look impressive because people keep calling them B-rank. Among B-ranks, they’re complete bottom-of-the-barrel trash. But…”

Im Changsoo jerked his chin toward me.

“They’re still better than a C-rank. Isn’t that right, Mr. Jang Taekyung?”

I finally said what I had been holding back all this time.

“It’s Jin Taekyung.”

“Whether you’re Jin Taekyung or Jang Taekyung, I don’t care what your surname is.”

“Then should I call you Shit Changsoo?”

“What?”

“Im Changsoo or Shit Changsoo. I don’t care what your surname is either.”

The smile disappeared from Im Changsoo’s face.

Chapter 83

Im Changsoo's attention had been fixed entirely on Song Song for some time.

Damn, she sure knows how to play hard to get.

He had deliberately hovered around her and tried striking up conversations in passing several times, but Song Song's responses had been utterly flat.

"Oh, okay."

"Thank you."

"I understand."

For all his effort, the results were pathetic.

What a picky bitch.

They said women cared about a man's face when they were young, then his body and ability as they got older. Im Changsoo possessed all three, and he had never failed to pick up a woman.

There had been women who grew disgusted with his casual approach to relationships and left him first, and others he had grown tired of and dumped before they could leave.

But he had never encountered indifference like this.

She sure knows she's hot shit.

Even when irritation began to rise, it melted away whenever he looked at Song Song's sleek figure and dreamlike face. Her fragrant natural scent, worlds apart from the smell of other women's cosmetics, helped too.

Don't get impatient. She'll fall for me eventually.

There was still plenty of time. The Minotaur's Labyrinth was a labyrinth in the truest sense of the word. Raid times could stretch to twice as long as those of other Gates.

That was more than enough time to pick up one woman.

There was only one problem…

One guy keeps getting on my nerves.

Choi Minwoo, was it? He looked more at home in a fashion magazine than inside a Gate. His polished face, his long limbs—even his characteristically impassive expression irritated Im Changsoo.

The rest are just fucking idiots.

The old geezer who did nothing but chuckle and the bandit-like middle-aged man had been out of the running from the start.

There was one more young guy named Jang Taekyung, but he didn't even qualify as competition.

He's weirdly irritating, though.

A run-of-the-mill C-rank Hunter. He wasn't even part of a major Guild, just some small-timer scraping by with high-end equipment he'd leased despite it being above his station. Yet there was something strangely confident about his attitude and the way he spoke.

Toward the end of their conversation a moment ago, Taekyung had even seemed annoyed with him.

Trying to save face, are we?

With the two irritating bastards, Jang Taekyung and Choi Minwoo, standing together, it was only natural that Im Changsoo kept his eyes and ears trained on them.

—Mooooo!

It happened as the Minotaurs began appearing one after another.

"What do you think?"

"It would probably be difficult, wouldn't it?"

Well, look at these bastards.

Im Changsoo had just been about to call his men back, but he closed his mouth and listened instead.

"What about you, Mr. Taekyung?"

"Me?"

That alone was absurd enough, but the answer that came a moment later was even more ridiculous.

"I'm not sure."

A C-rank Hunter facing eight Minotaurs, and what? He wasn't sure?

The bastard would be a corpse within a minute even in a one-on-one fight. He was all mouth.

Crazy bastards. Go ahead and write a novel.

Im Changsoo let out a short laugh, then suddenly paused.

An idea had flashed through his mind. This was his chance to humiliate the two men he disliked in front of Song Song.

That was why he abruptly stepped between them.

"You were having such an interesting conversation that I couldn't help overhearing some of it. You don't mind, do you?"

He intended to make them apologize, laugh in their faces, and make it unmistakably clear who held the upper hand.

But then…

"Then should I call you Shit Changsoo?"

"What?"

"Im Changsoo or Shit Changsoo. I don't care what your surname is."

Shit Changsoo.

Im Changsoo's brain froze at an insult unlike anything he had ever heard in his life.

Silence fell all around us.

The Sangdong Guild. The Peace Guild.

Even the Minotaurs seemed to stop mooing.

In that suffocating silence, the man's tightly closed mouth finally opened.

"…You little shit."

At this point, using polite speech would have been ridiculous.

I gave him an equally breezy answer.

"What, you little shit?"

"You really… Are you insane?"

"Everyone on Earth is already spinning. Haven't you heard of geocentrism, you ignorant bastard?"

That was when Team Leader Choi cut in.

"That's heliocentrism. Geocentrism is the cosmological view that the Earth is fixed and unmoving at the center of the universe, while the Moon, Sun, and planets orbit around it, each traveling along its own celestial sphere…"

Smack.

Im Kkeokjeong's enormous, cauldron-lid-sized hand had approached so quietly that no one noticed it until it clamped over Team Leader Choi's mouth.

"Mmph. What are you doing? Mmph, mmph."

…

I wished he would just drop dead right there.

There was a limit to how oblivious one person could be. I was beginning to wonder whether the Sangdong Guild had paid him off.

"I can't believe I'm talking to people like you."

Im Changsoo stared at Team Leader Choi and me in baffled disbelief.

"How did airheaded bastards like you even become Hunters?"

"What, do they recruit based on school grades? Get a TOEIC[436] score of 900 and you're B-rank, and if you can speak Chinese, you're A-rank?"

"You'd better shut that mouth if you want to live a long time."

"Wow, threats now? I'm so scared I won't even be able to piss in the Sangdong Guild's direction."

Im Changsoo ground his teeth, sparks flying from his eyes.

[436] TOEIC is a standardized English-language test widely used in South Korea for employment qualifications.

"You seem to have forgotten… This is a Gate."

"I know, asshole. I also know there are eight Minotaurs coming toward us from over there."

Speak of the devil.

Right on cue, a bull's bellow echoed through the cavern.

—Moooooo!

"They're coming!"

"What do we do?"

"What do you think? Get back! Hurry!"

Boom. Boom. Boom.

The cavern floor shook with every step the Minotaur herd took.

Watching his team members come racing back at full speed, Im Changsoo spat out a wad of phlegm.

"Consider yourself lucky."

"I tend to be pretty lucky."

Thanks to the System, it wouldn't be an exaggeration to say I was living a second life. I'd been through hardships that could have killed me, but when it came to luck, mine was incredible.

"We'll settle this after I deal with those bastards."

"That works, too."

"I hope you're prepared to take responsibility for what you said."

"I think I can handle that."

I looked at the Level window floating above his head.

Level 65. High.

He was nearly ten Levels above the rest of his team, which meant he was probably quite capable even among B-rank Hunters.

Of course, he still wasn't as good as me.

Well, character and ability aren't proportional.

Hunters weren't selected based on TOEIC[437] scores, school grades, or personality-and-aptitude tests.

I shook my head and turned away.

"How about now?"

[437] TOEIC is a standardized English-language test widely used in South Korea for employment qualifications.

"…?"

"The Minotaurs. Didn't you say you were confident you could handle them alone?"

Ah. I had a rough idea of what he was getting at.

His intentions were obvious from his tone and expression, and a short laugh escaped me.

"I don't remember saying anything like that."

"You should take responsibility for what you said."

"You're too childish. I can't indulge you. If you have a problem, settle it one-on-one after the raid."

Butler Kim and Miss Song-i, who had been watching the situation with calm expressions, spoke up as well.

"It would be best if both of you calmed down."

"Excuse me, but don't you think this is a bad time?"

Boom-boom-boom.

Even now, the Minotaur herd was drawing closer by the second.

It was fortunate they were approaching cautiously. If they had wanted to, the battle could have started long ago.

"You heard them, right? Don't put innocent people in danger. We'll deal with this later…"

"Five bills."

"Huh?"

Im Changsoo spread all five fingers wide.

That wasn't five stars… it was five bills.

"Is that what I think it is?"

"The Minotaur herd over there. Take them down by yourself, and I'll give you five big bills per head."

"Big bills?"

"Yeah. Big bills."

That meant fifty million won[438] per Minotaur, or four hundred million won[439] for all eight.

Even for me, now that I was a C-rank Hunter, that was a considerable sum.

But…

I couldn't let everyone see how weak I was to money, especially Miss Song.

This was a matter of pride!

Miss Song-i. Can you hear my heart?

I gave her a soulful look and answered.

---

[438] Fifty million won is about $36,000 or €32,000.

[439] Four hundred million won is about $290,000 or €260,000.

"I refuse."

Im Changsoo's eyebrow twitched.

"Even if I give you all rights to the byproducts?"

"No."

"Magic Gems might come out of them."

"Still no."

My answer was as firm as a juvenile court judge's. Im Changsoo bit his lip.

"What a pointlessly proud bastard. I'm offering four billion won[440] and all rights to the byproducts, and you're refusing?"

"Get lost… Wait. What did you just say?"

Had I heard him wrong?

For several seconds, all kinds of thoughts raced through my mind. Only after sorting them out did I finally manage to part my lips.

"How much? Four billion won[441]?"

"Didn't I say? Five big bills."

"…"

"Then… five hundred million won[442] per Minotaur?"

You should've said five fucking huge bills.

Four billion won[443].

The mind-boggling sum left not only me, but Miss Song and Im Kkeokjeong gaping.

Why's this bastard such a big spender?

He was the team leader of a mid-sized Guild and a B-rank Hunter, so he probably earned a lot.

But casually offering billions of won[444] like this was absurd.

"You're giving me four billion won[445] just like that?"

"Just? That won't do. This is a bet."

"What kind of bet?"

"I need something to gain, too."

The corners of Im Changsoo's lips twisted upward.

"If you die or run away, every reward I've offered so far is void. On top of that…"

His head slowly turned.

His gaze stopped on one person.

"Me?"

---

[440] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[441] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[442] Five hundred million won is about $360,000 or €320,000.

[443] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[444] "Billions of won" here means roughly two to nine billion won: about $1.4–6.4 million or €1.3–5.8 million.

[445] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

"Yes. I'd like to invite Miss Song Song to join our Guild."

Im Changsoo bowed politely.

The sudden change in attitude was so different from how he had acted until now that it was downright creepy.

"Ugh, that's giving me goose bumps. Just act the way you were before. It looks much better than putting on a fake act."

"..."

"..."

Miss Song-i certainly had an honest personality.

She shuddered as if she really had gotten goose bumps, then folded her arms.

"Shit Chang—no, Im Changsoo, right?"

"...Yes."

"Okay. I'll be blunt. You're not my type."

Her blunt declaration came in like a 160-kilometer-per-hour[446] fastball, tight and inside. Im Changsoo's gaze wavered.

"You're tall and handsome, but you look exactly like the cheating type. And I hate wind, you see.[447] I finally got my hair looking nice, and if the wind musses it up... Ah, no, that's not what I meant, was it?"

"Y-yes? Yes?"

"Anyway, you're not my type. I absolutely can't stand womanizers who flaunt their money."

I had never seen Im Changsoo look so dumbfounded.

To anyone else, I probably had the same expression right now.

"Oh, that look you just had was kind of okay. But I've been watching you for a while, and your personality is kind of... You can tell that yourself, can't you?"

Im Changsoo barely managed to compose his expression before answering.

"We can work those things out one by one."

"Do you really have to taste something to know whether it's shit or soybean paste? You don't seem interested in anything but bumping bellies with me. Am I right?"

"...!"

"...!"

Everyone, myself included, was left gaping.

She toyed with her hair as if bashful while delivering one line after another, each blow landing like a nuclear bomb.

"It's not like I particularly dislike the Sangdong Guild."

Im Changsoo, who had been taking hit after hit without a break, brightened and asked:

---

[446] 160 kilometers per hour is about 99 miles per hour.

[447] The Korean word baram can mean either "wind" or an affair, making her next line a deliberate pun.

"Really?"

"Yes. I can always switch again anyway."

"…"

Miss Song, are you a genius?

After delivering a massive fuck-you with an innocent expression, Miss Song continued.

"But I'd need to ask permission before switching Guilds. Right, Guild Master?"

"Ah, of course."

Butler Kim had been watching with an interested look in his eyes. Miss Song turned toward Team Leader Choi.

"Team Leader, what do you think?"

"What do you mean? About you switching Guilds?"

"If we lose this bet, that's what will happen, right?"

Team Leader Choi calmly nodded.

"Go ahead."

"Isn't that a little too easy an answer?"

"It was an easy question, so I answered easily."

For just a moment, I thought I saw hurt in Miss Song's eyes.

No, surely not.

The emotion had passed too quickly for me to be certain.

Returning to her frank, easygoing self, Miss Song turned to Im Changsoo.

"Then I'm in on the bet. What about you, Mr. Taekyung?"

"I…"

I thought it over for a while.

From the moment I first heard Team Leader Choi's question, a strange certainty had already taken root deep in my heart.

The certainty that I was stronger than those bastards.

"I'll take the bet."

A smile spread across Team Leader Choi's lips.

"I'll join in, too. A bet is more fun when the stakes are high, isn't it?"

"Wow, look at you. A real gambler. How much?"

"Four billion won.[448] Of course, I'm betting that Jin Taekyung will take down all eight."

"What?"

Im Changsoo stared at Team Leader Choi for a moment, then let out a short laugh.

"You're an interesting bunch. One of you is desperate to get himself killed, and the other is dying to throw away his money."

[448] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

"So what's your answer?"
"Obviously, yes."
"Should we write up a contract?"
"A contract? What do you take me for? Once I give my word, I keep it. You don't have to keep yours. I'll make you keep it. Everyone, move back!"
At that moment, the enormous, damp cavern transformed into a Colosseum.
An arena with an absurd amount of money at stake.
And I was the gladiator who had to fight the Minotaur herd.
"Team Leader Choi. What will you do if I lose?"
"You will win."
Where did that confidence come from?
Faith in himself? Or faith in what he'd seen of me so far?
It didn't matter.
I would simply do my best to achieve my goal.
Boom-boom-boom-boom-boom!
—Moooooo!
Twenty meters[449] ahead, I could see every one of them clearly.
Hot breath steaming from their nostrils. Heat. Muscles. Weapons held high.
This is my first time fighting a cow.
It should be an interesting experience.
I gripped my spear and charged at the herd like a bullfighter.

[449] Twenty meters is about 66 ft.

Chapter 84

Im Kkeokjeong thought.

This is insane.

Jin Taekyung was a C-rank Hunter. A Minotaur, on the other hand, was a B-rank monster.

And there wasn't just one. There were eight. To Im Kkeokjeong, this went beyond reckless. It was hopeless.

What the hell does money matter?

Four billion won[450] was certainly enough to change a person's life, but it wasn't worth dying for. Im Changsoo had blinded Jin Taekyung with money, and Taekyung had lost his ability to think clearly.

I have to stop him. I have to.

Those vicious bastards from Sangdong Guild, Butler Kim for not stopping him, even Team Leader Choi—they were all insane. He had to keep his cherished little brother from dying a pointless death.

"Taekyung!"

It was at that very moment, when Im Kkeokjeong was about to reach out toward Jin Taekyung, who had just gripped his spear at the ready.

Whoosh—

"…Huh?"

With a rush of wind, Jin Taekyung vanished. He began sprinting at a speed Im Kkeokjeong, an E-rank Hunter, could neither match nor properly see.

It all happened in the blink of an eye. Im Kkeokjeong let out a dazed sound.

"Uh, uh-oh."

What was this? What was happening? Had Taekyung always been this strong? No, wait. Could a C-rank Hunter really move that fast?

Whooooooosh!

A black bolt of lightning shot across the cavern.

One step. Two steps. Three steps.

The distance of several dozen meters[451] vanished in an instant, and the spearhead flashed.

Swoooosh! Slice!

The Minotaur's enormous, over-three-meter-tall[452] body tilted to one side.

The thick neck that should have risen above its shoulders was already gone.

---

[450] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[451] Several dozen meters is roughly 100–300 ft.

[452] Over three meters is over 9.8 ft.

For one moment, it seemed as if the half-human, half-beast creature with a human body and a bull's head were nothing more than an ordinary person.

Thump.

The head, severed in an instant, dropped to the cavern floor.

Crash.

The headless monster collapsed. Blood gushed from the cleanly severed stump of its neck.

"What the…!"

Someone's voice spoke for everyone's thoughts.

Amid the invisible shock and stunned disbelief, one person grinned.

"This is doable."

That one remark delivered the final blow.

Im Kkeokjeong's legs gave out, and Im Changsoo muttered without realizing it.

"Fuck… my four billion.[453]"

Minotaurs had bodies specialized for close-quarters combat.

Like any medium-sized monster, they were huge, packed with incredibly dense muscle, and armed with heavy weapons such as maces and axes.

Boom!

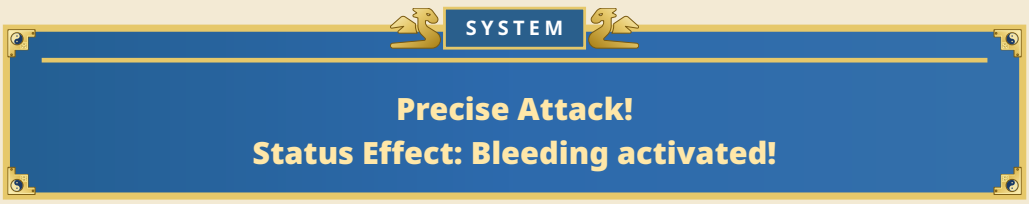
But what good was any of that if they couldn't land a hit?

No matter how hard they swung, all they could do was smash the innocent cavern floor.

I'll give them one thing. They're strong.

But strength alone didn't win fights. I slipped inside one monster's guard and drove my spear into its lower abdomen.

Schlk.



—Mooooo.

The Minotaur's cry was pitiful. It had already lost too much blood to charge in as ferociously as before. That attack moments ago had probably been the One Strike it made with the last of its strength.

—Moo. Mooooo.

[453] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

I approached the creature as it staggered backward.

Looking into those calf-like eyes almost made me feel sorry for it…

Like hell.

All I could see was a stack of five hundred million won.[454]

“In your next life, please be born in Hoengseong, Gangwon Province.”[455]

—Mooooo!

Slice.

The Minotaur breathed its last.

That made eight enormous pools of blood.

And eight monster corpses.

Ding.

The cheerful System notification was the movie’s background music. The real highlight of the movie was something else entirely.

I turned around with a wide smile.

“Now, for the fun part—the settlement.”

Among the people engulfed in shock and silence, one person stood out in particular.

I began settling the accounts loudly enough for the half-frozen Im Changsoo to hear.

“Let’s see. Five hundred million[456] per head to start with…”

He flinched.

“One, two, three, four… Eight of them. Four billion[457] in total. Wow, a few of them even dropped Magic Gems. You said all the byproducts were mine, too, right?”

He flinched again. And again.

“Changsoo. Why aren’t you answering? Don’t tell me you lied to me.”

Im Changsoo forced an awkward smile.

“Of course not.”

“Watch your tone.”

“How could that possibly be the case? I was just…”

“Just what?”

“Mr. Taekyung, if you could listen to me for a moment…”

---

[454] Five hundred million won is about $360,000 or €320,000.

[455] Hoengseong is known for its Korean beef cattle.

[456] Five hundred million won is about $360,000 or €320,000.

[457] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

“Mr. Taekyung? I’ve been meaning to ask you this for a while. How old is our Changsoo?”

“…I’m twenty-five.”

“Oh, my. What a cheeky little shit. You’re only twenty-five, and you’ve been acting that disrespectfully toward your elders?”

“…”

“Did someone cut your tongue in half? You kept spitting out casual speech, so I thought you were ninety-five. And why does your face look so weathered? You didn’t register your birth late, did you?”

As I kept going, Im Changsoo’s face flushed bright red with anger.

“Keep that expression under control. Turn into a Hongik Ingan one more time, and I’ll make you genuinely red.”[458]

“I’m… sorry.”

After barely managing to compose his expression, he cautiously opened his mouth.

“Um, may I ask you one thing?”

“Ask.”

“Are you really a C-rank Hunter…?”

“Yeah. I am.”

Im Changsoo looked back and forth between me and the sprawled Minotaur corpses, his eyes filled with disbelief.

“What? Why?”

“If you’d rather not reveal it, you don’t have to tell me.”

“Think whatever you want.”

“Oh, no. That’s not what I meant.”

He denied it, but there was no doubt his imagination was running wild.

He had thought I was an ordinary C-rank Hunter, yet I had just crushed eight B-rank monsters in a head-on fight.

That’s right. Imagine away.

There was nothing to gain from antagonizing Sangdong Guild for no reason. Since they were bowing their heads on their own, I was simply grateful.

“So, perhaps you’re laundering your identity—no, you aren’t. You wouldn’t be. Right.”

Im Changsoo had been about to spout some nonsense, but one sidelong glance at my spear made him change the subject.

This guy’s reactions were kind of fun.

“So?”

[458] Hongik Ingan, meaning “to broadly benefit humanity,” is Korea’s national founding ideal. Taekyung plays on hong, which can also mean “red,” to joke about Im Changsoo’s face.

“Pardon?”

“Don’t ‘pardon’ me. You have to pay me. Four billion.[459]”

To be honest, I was a little worried that he might tell me to go to hell.

Four billion won[460] wasn’t pocket change. It was a huge sum of money that ordinary people could hardly hope to lay their hands on even after working their entire lives.

But Im Changsoo was different.

“Ah, of course I’ll pay you.”

“…You’re sure?”

“Yes. I keep my promises.”

His answer was so straightforward that it was almost suspicious.

No matter how much money a B-rank Hunter made, there was such a thing as an average income. Yet Im Changsoo talked about several billion won[461] as casually as if it were a thousand-won bill[462] in his pocket.

“You’re not going to disappear after saying that, are you? If you pretend none of this happened because we didn’t sign a contract, I’ll be very disappointed.”

I casually stroked my spear, and he flinched violently.

“Absolutely not. Absolutely not. I can easily afford that.”

“Hmm. You must make pretty good money. Sangdong Guild treats you well?”

“No. I’m treated the same as everyone else.”

“Of course there isn’t. It’s not like you’re the Guild Master’s son or something. Why would they treat you especially well?”

“…”

“…?”

“…”

Something about the atmosphere felt strange.

After thinking it over, I asked, “What’s your father’s name?”

“Im Chunsu.”

“What’s the Sangdong Guild Master’s name?”

“Im Chunsu.”

What a strange coincidence. Im Changsoo’s father and the Sangdong Guild Master had the same name.

Then again, the world was a big place, and plenty of people shared the same name.

“Hey, I’m only asking just in case, so forgive me for prying… but what does your father do for a living?”

---

[459] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[460] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[461] Several billion won—roughly two to nine billion—is about $1.4–6.4 million or €1.3–5.8 million.

[462] One thousand won is about $0.71 or €0.65.

"He's a Hunter."

"Just a Hunter?"

"He runs a Guild."

"Oh, I see."

This bastard was the Sangdong Guild Master's son.

A brief silence passed, and in that short interval, I realized what had seemed so familiar about Im Changsoo.

"Are you that guy?"

"A dog?"

"No, I've heard about you before."

It was a story I'd heard around this time two years ago and let go in one ear and out the other.

The Sangdong Guild Master's only son, born late in his life, had awakened as a B-rank Hunter and secured a position in his father's Guild. But he was such a womanizer that he had become a constant headache.

And the nickname he had earned was…

"Horndog. Right?"

Im Changsoo answered by hanging his head.

It was an embarrassing nickname to hear in front of other people, to be sure.

But since I had to collect four billion won,[463] I comforted him in a warm voice.

"It's okay, man. Guys can be like that sometimes. I used to dream of living like you, too."

But reality was cruel, and that dream had seeped into a hundred-terabyte USB drive.

Jinho hyung,[464] a renowned authority in the world of porn, once borrowed my USB. When he showed up again, he had a hollow-eyed expression and left me with a one-line review.

This should be designated a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

Anyway.

Im Changsoo lifted his head at my warm consolation.

"Really?"

Of course not. Did I look like the kind of guy who hit on just any woman? I was the sunflower of this era, gazing at only one person in the entire world—Miss Song-i…

Wait a second. This bastard had hit on Miss Song-i earlier.

"You little shit."

"Ack!"

---

[463] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[464] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older male friend.

Frightened before I had even done anything, Im Changsoo reflexively placed his hand on his sword hilt.

Shing. Clack.

But the blade had barely made it halfway out before it was forced back into its sheath.

I had closed the distance like lightning, pressing down on his sword hilt as I kicked his legs out from under him.

Crash!

He lost his balance and fell. When I pressed down on his neck, his face went white.

“Ghk! Cough!”

“You little bastard. Where do you get off pulling that thing on me?”

Getting beaten by Jin Mukyung had certainly paid off.

In the past, I wouldn’t have been able to subdue a B-rank Hunter with such a simple, fluid movement. Im Changsoo was probably surprised, but I was even more surprised.

“This is a Gate, you idiot. You said so yourself earlier. Did you already forget?”

“I’m sorry! I’m sorry!”

I wanted to beat him senseless, but since it had only been an attempt, I decided to let him off.

It absolutely wasn’t because I hadn’t received the four billion[465] yet.

“Damages.”

“Ghk. What?”

“You drew your sword. Don’t you know that’s attempted murder? And you owe me and Miss Song-i—no, all our Guild members—a sincere apology.”

“What are you talking about?”

Im Changsoo looked around at the others with an aggrieved expression, but no one came to his aid.

His team members merely shrank back whenever my gaze landed on them. Meanwhile, our Guild members, who had been watching the spectacle, took it one step further.

“Drawing a sword on a member of a partner Guild. Well, I never.”

Butler Kim clicked his tongue as if he felt sorry for him.

“You’re only doing this because you don’t want to pay, aren’t you? My goodness, Changsoo, that’s so low. Isn’t it, Uncle?”

“Hmm? Uh-huh. What a nasty young man!”

Miss Song and Im Kkeokjeong delivered a lowlife-and-nasty-man combo.

Then Team Leader Choi dealt the final blow.

[465] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

“Now, would everyone take a look at my helmet? This product is a custom-made helmet produced by Xyliton, a famous Finnish equipment manufacturer. It has all sorts of functions, but most importantly, it has been enchanted with a video-recording spell…”

Im Changsoo stared at everyone with his mouth hanging open, betrayed and utterly dumbfounded. Then he let out a long sigh.

“I’ll do it.”

“What did you say?”

“I said I’ll do everything you tell me to!”

That was the answer I had been waiting for.

I happily helped him back to his feet.

“Good choice, kid. We can discuss the damages at our leisure.”

“…This is driving me crazy. If my boomer finds out, I’m dead.”

“Would you rather die here?”

“You don’t want the four billion?[466]”

“You’ve got some nerve.”

Im Changsoo let out another deep sigh before speaking.

“May I ask one question?”

“One hundred million[467] per question.”

“…”

“I’m kidding. Go ahead.”

“What do you really do?”

Was he really that curious?

I let out a quiet laugh and answered him.

“Someone with two jobs.”

A Hunter and a Murim martial artist.

The only two-job combination in the world.

[466] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[467] One hundred million won is about $71,000 or €65,000.

Chapter 85

"Changsoo hyung[468], are you okay?"

"Are you hurt?"

At his team members' questions, Im Changsoo clenched his teeth.

"Shut up, you bastards. After everything I've done for you, you just stood there and watched?"

"No, it's just…"

"Things were a little complicated back there. I'm sorry."

"You disloyal bastards."

They weren't bound together by loyalty, but Im Changsoo had always thought he gave them what they were due and received what he was owed in return. Who had forced those training-camp washouts into the Guild, bought them cars, and given them spending money?

He had received their loyalty in exchange…but being abandoned at the most important moment felt like a stinging blow to the back of the head.

Fuck, what kind of bullshit is this?

Several billion won[469]? It was certainly a lot of money, but not more than Im Changsoo could afford. Selling one or two of the buildings in his name would be enough to cover it.

But he could never tolerate having his pride trampled.

That bastard deserves to be beaten to death.

Im Changsoo glared at one person's back, his eyes wide.

That bastard in the black leather armor—Jin Taekyung—was the root cause of everything.

I don't know where he came from or what he was doing before this…but I'll make him pay for this humiliation.

He still didn't know exactly who Taekyung was. The one thing he knew for certain was that Taekyung was no ordinary C-rank Hunter.

There wasn't a single C-rank Hunter in the world who could crush eight B-rank monsters in a head-on fight.

Why is he hiding his identity? Is he a fugitive? Or someone with a fraudulent registration? The moment we get out of this Gate, I'll dig up every last thing about him.

Just as Im Changsoo was quietly stoking his thirst for revenge—

Whoosh!

---

[468] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

[469] Several billion won is approximately $1.4–6.4 million or €1.3–5.8 million.

Jin Taekyung suddenly turned toward him and narrowed his eyes. The gaze of a predator staring down its prey made Im Changsoo's heart drop.

"Hey."

"Y-yes?"

"You were just cursing me in your head, weren't you?"

"N-no, I wasn't."

"Don't give me that. The stammering says it all. No wonder the back of my head has been prickling this whole time."

Im Changsoo recalled the words of his father, a Hunter and war hero from the Great Cataclysm era.

The more dangerous the situation, the more calmly you must respond.

"I really wasn't."

"My mind-reading technique says you're lying."

"Mind-reading? There's no such thing."

"There's magic, so why can't there be mind-reading? Let go of your hidebound thinking."

"Either way, I swear I wasn't."

"No, I swear you were. And you've got one coming too."

Bonk!

Tears sprang to Im Changsoo's eyes.

It was a sharp rap on the forehead. Even his father hadn't hit him since he turned twenty. Yet here he was, suffering this humiliation at the hands of someone barely his own age—and in front of his team members and several women, no less.

"Not bad. Feels just like hitting Hyuk Mujin. Anyway, watch yourself, okay?"

Im Changsoo had no idea who Hyuk Mujin was, but he lowered his head anyway.

"…Yes."

"But this damn labyrinth never ends. Hey, how much farther is it to the Boss Zone?"

"I don't know. It's a labyrinth."

"And no more monsters are coming out. I'm bored to death."

"…"

Of course they aren't! You beat down every single one you see!

Im Changsoo and his team hadn't even needed to step in. Those five were more than enough. No, Jin Taekyung alone was enough.

What a monster. Is he really an A-rank Hunter?

Taekyung alone seemed to have brought down more than thirty monsters. Just when he appeared to be tiring, he would suddenly start tearing through them again.

The raid is getting faster.

Normally, a raid slowed toward the end as fatigue accumulated.

But the raid was getting faster even though they were fighting the same monsters…

Is he getting stronger the whole time?

Im Changsoo desperately rejected the thought that had flashed through his mind.

What is he, a game character leveling up? How could that make any sense?

Getting hit on the forehead must have broken his brain.

"Hoo."

As Im Changsoo let out a deep sigh, his team members approached him hesitantly.

"Changsoo hyung[470]…"

"Oppa[471], are you okay? Oh no, you've got a bump on your forehead."

"I'm in a bad mood, so get lost. The moment you leave, you're all fired. Got it?"

No matter how badly his dignity had been crushed, even a tiger with its teeth pulled was still a tiger.

His team members swallowed nervously at Im Changsoo's threat.

I haven't even finished paying off my car.

Who'll take me if I leave Sangdong Guild?

My credit-card bill this month…

They had been able to live so comfortably thanks to Im Changsoo's support. They were all Hunters, so they wouldn't starve, but they couldn't expect the same treatment anywhere else.

"You think it ends with getting fired? Just wait. Wherever you go, I'll make sure to place a call in Sangdong Guild's name. You know this field is small, right?"

Their expressions changed completely at the threat that he would not only drive them out but ruin their futures as well.

"Changsoo hyung[472], that's going too far."

"Hyung[473]? I'm only your hyung[474] when it suits you?"

"Oppa[475], do you really have to take it that far?"

"That's why you bastards should've picked the right person to hitch your wagon to."

He wanted to slap every last one of them across the face, but he forced himself to hold back.

---

[470] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.
[471] Oppa is a term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man with whom she is close.
[472] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.
[473] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.
[474] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.
[475] Oppa is a term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man with whom she is close.

If he raised his voice, there was no telling when Jin Taekyung might turn around again.

Fuck, how did I end up…

Too afraid of another rap on the forehead to even lose his temper properly. How pathetic could he get?

Im Changsoo spat on the floor and turned away.

That was when someone grabbed him.

"Changsoo hyung[476]. No, Team Leader Im, you can't do this."

"Please think it over one more time, oppa[477]. Okay?"

"Let go. I don't want to say it twice."

"This time, I mean it. I really will do anything you tell me. Okay?"

"…Anything I tell you?"

Im Changsoo stopped just as he was about to shake off his colleague's hand.

He glanced back. While he had been arguing with his Guild members, Jin Taekyung's group had pulled far ahead.

Even from that distance, Song Song's stunning figure from behind was impossible to miss.

Wait. Maybe there is a way.

To Im Changsoo, Jin Taekyung looked like a monster—but he seemed to have one weakness.

A woman named Song Song.

He was completely smitten earlier.

There was no need to be perceptive about it. Anyone could tell from a single glance that Jin Taekyung had feelings for Song Song.

She said she was a C-rank healer, right?

Subduing a healer would be easier than wringing a chicken's neck. If the woman he liked were taken hostage, Jin Taekyung wouldn't be able to move so freely.

Then it's over.

Apart from Taekyung, the other three weren't much of a concern.

The old man who was supposedly their Guild Master was a B-rank Hunter, but he was a mage, so close combat would be his weakness. The middle-aged E-rank tank wasn't even worth discussing.

The only person who bothered Im Changsoo a little was Choi Minwoo. That guy…

"Can I trust what you just said?"

"Of course."

"Just trust us."

---

[476] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

[477] Oppa is a term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man with whom she is close.

"Oppa[478], why don't you trust people at all? Are we really only this close?"

Im Changsoo had a raid team made up of four B-rank Hunters and five C-rank Hunters who would obey his commands. He had trained every one of them to eat only from his hand.

"Fine. Then listen carefully to what I'm about to say…"

After a short and simple explanation, the team members couldn't hide their nervousness.

"Will it work?"

"It does seem possible."

"Oppa[479], you're not suggesting what I think you are, right? If you mean killing someone, I don't know if I can do that."

"Didn't you just say you'd do anything I told you?"

"Even so, that's a little…"

"Forget it. I'd like to, but I'm not reckless enough to go that far. First, we take the camera. Then we put that son of a bitch through a humiliation he'll never live down."

"Whew. That's a relief. Then I'm definitely on your side, oppa[480]."

"Do it right. You know what happens if anyone hesitates this time or holds back even a little, right?"

"Of course."

"Just trust us, Team Leader. No, hyungnim[481]. Hehe."

A sinister smile spread across Im Changsoo's lips.

If he trampled on my pride, he has to pay the price.

In the Boss Zone ahead, he would make Jin Taekyung understand exactly who he had dared to cross.

There was even a monster there capable of standing against him.

The Minotaur Great Warrior.

The boss monster of The Minotaur's Labyrinth.

Despite being only a B-rank monster, it was a monstrous creature whose physical abilities rivaled those of an A-rank.

Once the Great Warrior wears him down, we'll make our move.

Set a barbarian against a barbarian.

Defeat a monster with a monster.

---

[478] Oppa is a term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man with whom she is close.
[479] Oppa is a term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man with whom she is close.
[480] Oppa is a term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man with whom she is close.
[481] Hyungnim is a more respectful form of hyung.

The moment both sides were exhausted would be their chance. In one stroke, he could recover both the money he was about to lose for nothing and the pride that had been dragged through the dirt.

“Hey, hurry up! It’s the Boss Zone!”

Jin Taekyung’s shout rang out the next moment.

Im Changsoo smiled broadly.

“Yes! Coming!”

His steps toward the Boss Zone were remarkably light.

“One Annihilation.”

Kraaaaaash!

The sound of the sky splitting erupted from the tip of my spear. A white vortex that tore apart and devoured everything it touched slammed into the Great Warrior’s muscular chest.

—Moo?

Crack-crack-crack!

There was no need to check whether it was alive or dead.

The moment I pulled my spear from its chest, the System notification rang out.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Defeated Lv. 70 Minotaur Great Warrior!
Level Up!
Quest, B-rank Gate Clear, completed!
Calculating your contribution... Complete!
The Quest Success Reward has been deposited into your Inventory!

“Whew.”

The last one should always end with one big hit.

My body was incredibly tired, though.

I shook the blood from my spear and turned around.

“Let’s collect the byproducts and get out of here. I’m starving to dea—why are you all looking at me like that?”

Im Kkeokjeong spoke for everyone.

“You really have to ask?”

He looked back and forth between the boss monster’s corpse and me.

His eyes demanded some kind of explanation for how I had finished off a B-rank boss monster with a single blow.

"Hmm. Let's just say I got lucky."

"Lucky?"

"Yes. Lucky."

It really was because I had been lucky.

Lucky that I had lived in a goshiwon.[482] Lucky that a capsule had been discarded in front of it.

All of it.

"Good grief. I'm too dumbfounded to speak. Fine."

The others reacted much the same way as Im Kkeokjeong. Even Team Leader Choi, who had already been on a raid with me, looked stunned.

"I didn't realize you were this capable."

"If you know now, that's enough."

"Could we discuss this?"

"Of course."

Not now. Later.

I still had something more important to take care of.

With my most charming smile, I approached one person.

"Miss Song, could I ask you for a heal—what are you guys doing over there?"

"Ah."

"What are you doing? Why are you here?"

"We're just…just standing here."

"I-I just think she's so beautiful."

The Sangdong Guild members clustered around Song Song jumped in surprise and began blurting out whatever came to mind.

What's with these guys?

I only meant that they should get lost because they were getting in the way between me and Miss Song.

Do I really look that scary?

"Where's Im Changsoo?"

At a single word from me, the Sangdong Guild members split apart like the Red Sea.

Im Changsoo answered from behind them, his face white as a sheet.

"I'm here."

"What's wrong with your face? Are you sick?"

[482] A goshiwon is a building of very small, inexpensive rooms, often used by students and people on tight budgets.

“I-I think I’m coming down with something.”

“Tsk, tsk. Take a potion, you idiot. Your family’s rich.”

“…”

“Anyway, hurry up and collect the byproducts. Let’s go. I’m tired.”

“Yes, yessir.”

Once Im Changsoo disappeared with the nuisances, the moment I had been waiting for finally arrived.

I flashed Song Song a bright smile.

“You’re hungry, right? How about steak at a nice restaurant for dinner?”

Song Song smiled back at me.

“I’m sorry, but I’m a vegetarian.”

“That’s strange. You seemed to eat meat just fine yesterday. How about a salad bar?”

“I’m a carnivore.”

“…”

I got rejected, right?

Chapter 86

“Oh, thank you for your hard work.”

The government official in charge came rushing out to greet us.

Well, more accurately, he came to greet Im Changsoo.

After meticulously checking all the byproducts and Magic Gems we had brought, he made a fuss.

“Wow, that’s an incredible haul. You must’ve wiped out every Minotaur in the labyrinth.”

“…”

Im Changsoo’s face was pale. He only nodded without answering, making the official glance around uneasily.

“Team Leader, are you feeling unwell?”

Since when did government officials start worrying about Hunters’ health?

Before he could say anything unnecessary, I jabbed Im Changsoo in the ribs.

“You have to answer him. Chang. Soo.”

“Um… No, I’m fine.”

“Ah, that’s a relief, then.”

Maybe he had sensed the strange atmosphere. The official gave me a suspicious look, but that was as far as it went.

“How would you like to handle the byproducts? As you know, there are two methods.”

As the official said, there were two ways to sell byproducts.

Private sales and consignment sales. With the former, the owner handled the transaction personally. With the latter, the goods were entrusted to the Administration—a government agency—to be sold.

Each method has its pros and cons.

Rare items were more profitable to sell privately. For everything else, handing them over to a government agency saved a lot of trouble. It was like the difference between a luxury auction and a market auction.

“What should we do?”

At Im Changsoo’s question, Butler Kim stepped forward. He hadn’t once taken the lead during this Gate raid, but he was still a veteran Hunter. When it came to this sort of thing, he probably knew more than anyone else here.

“We’ll sell them to the Administration.”

They said no part of a cow went to waste. The same was true of Minotaurs.

Their hides were used to make Equipment, their bones were simmered into restorative food, and their horns were popular collector’s items among enthusiasts.

"You've made the right choice."

The government official began calculating the value of the byproducts with an expression of pure delight. The Administration was the one buying them, so the reason he was so happy was obvious.

He must be getting a little something off the top.

Still, whatever the official skimmed off wasn't my concern.

The cut I was getting today was much bigger.

Tap, tap.

"What about the amount you promised?"

Im Changsoo answered with a rigid expression.

"I-I'll pay it."

"By when?"

"I'll send it by tomorrow."

Four billion won[483] by tomorrow? The son of a rich family certainly didn't mess around. I smiled broadly and handed him a slip of paper.

"Well, that works for me. Here's my account number. Treasure it like a family heirloom, then send the money tomorrow. It won't be funny if you claim you lost it later. Got it?"

"…Yes, sir."

That should be enough, right? I said goodbye by giving Im Changsoo a light pat on the back.

As I watched with satisfaction as he staggered away, Im Kkeokjeong asked me,

"Do you think that punk will actually pay?"

"And if he doesn't?"

"Well, you know… things could get a little messy. Sangdong Guild is a mid-tier Guild with some serious influence around here. If he just tells you to do your worst and refuses to pay…"

"Come on, we have video evidence. Surely he wouldn't."

"Evidence can be destroyed. More importantly, I've heard a few things."

"Like what?"

Now that he had put it that way, I was starting to get a little worried.

Kkeokjeong glanced around, checking everyone's reactions, then leaned in and whispered,

"You know who the Sangdong Guild Master is, right?"

"Yes. Though today was the first time I heard his name."

Im Chunsoo. For some reason, the name brought to mind a middle-aged man with a bulging beer belly, but the reality was the exact opposite.

[483] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

“He’s an A-rank Hunter who distinguished himself during the Great Cataclysm. What do people call him again? Fro… Fro… It’s suddenly slipping my mind.”

“Frozen.”

“Ah, right. Frozen. A mage specializing in ice magic.”

Famous Hunters were often given epithets that suited their abilities.

The same was true of Im Chunsoo. An A-rank Hunter, he was a mage who had played a major role in the Great Cataclysm, and his particular skill with ice magic had earned him the epithet Frozen.

“When it comes to ice magic, that man is one of the top five in Korea. He used that Fame to build Sangdong Guild into what it is today.”

When the brutal Great Cataclysm finally came to an end, the first-generation Hunters faced a choice.

Retire, or remain active.

Im Chunsoo chose the latter and founded Sangdong Guild.

“That’s impressive. His son doesn’t seem like much.”

Even among A-rank Hunters, it was rare for someone to survive the Great Cataclysm with nothing but their bare fists and gain both wealth and fame. Im Chunsoo’s present was the future many Hunters dreamed of.

“Impressive? Bloodlines certainly are.”

Kkeokjeong jerked his chin toward Im Changsoo’s retreating back.

“Don’t forget whose blood that punk inherited.”

“What do you mean…?”

“I’m not bragging, but I’ve been in this business for over twenty years. Sangdong Guild was founded when I was still a complete rookie.”

“And?”

“Bucheon was just as fiercely competitive between Guilds back then as it is now. There was no room for a new Guild to squeeze in.”

“But Im Chunsoo broke through anyway?”

“That’s right. That’s why he’s a frightening man.”

“Hmm.”

Did that really follow?

Competition between Guilds was nothing new, and in a meritocracy, it was only natural for the capable to survive.

“A man like him would have had excellent abilities as a Hunter and plenty of Fame. He must have had powerful connections, too.”

“Do you think the other Guild Masters didn’t?”

“What?”

"They might have had slightly less Fame than Im Chunsoo, but every one of them had been a war hero. They had entered the market several years before Sangdong Guild and occupied a substantial number of Gates."

Kkeokjeong continued in a low voice.

"It was a time when all kinds of illegal activity ran rampant because the system hadn't been fully established yet. The only reason Sangdong Guild exists today is that Im Chunsoo crushed every one of his competitors. He's no pushover."

A thought suddenly flashed through my mind.

What would happen if Im Chunsoo found out about what had happened today? How would he react to hearing that his only son had been utterly humiliated?

This could get complicated.

When it came to Korea, you couldn't leave out school ties, hometown ties, or blood ties.

Sangdong Guild had held its ground for twenty years. If it was a local power, our Guild was practically a newborn.

If Sangdong Guild came at us in earnest, they'd tear up our birth certificate before we even got started.

"Is the Sangdong Guild Master good-natured, at least?"

"I wouldn't know. I've only heard rumors."

"At least tell me what you've heard."

After thinking for a moment, Kkeokjeong answered,

"Seeing Im Changsoo today reminded me of an old saying: a tiger father and a dog son."

"A great father and a worthless son? That's still a compliment, isn't it? Is he someone you can reason with?"

"No. Interpret it literally."

"…A tiger for a father and a dog for a son?"

"If Changsoo's personality is that of a son of a bitch, then Im Chunsoo is a tiger. I hear his temper is absolutely fucking terrible."

"…"

"I've also heard he mellowed with age, but can a person's temper really change that easily?"

For fuck's sake.

The more I heard, the colder my spine felt. I had the distinct feeling that something was about to go horribly wrong.

Damn it. I shouldn't have made that bet.

My excitement at the thought of receiving several billion won[484] had lasted only a moment. Now I felt uneasy, like I'd taken a huge dump and forgotten to wipe.

[484] Several billion won is roughly $1.4–6.4 million or €1.3–5.8 million.

I could deal with whatever happened to me, but I absolutely refused to let the other Guild members get hurt.

"Taekyung, don't worry about it too much. I only brought it up just in case."

"I didn't just cause trouble, did I?"

"It'll be fine. Team Leader Choi thought it sounded fun and joined the bet, too."

"Oh, right."

"Exactly. And look at the way Im Changsoo acted. If I were his father, I would've beaten him half to death. I'd be too embarrassed to tell anyone what happened."

He had a point. What could possibly happen?

Hearing that made me feel considerably lighter. I even found myself smiling.

"Thanks, Kkeokjeong ajusshi[485]. No, hyungnim[486]."

"Then buy me some beef to celebrate becoming a rich man. Wait, no. You should eat it with Miss Song, not me."

"…Ah."

He was driving a nail straight through my heart.

As Im Kkeokjeong killed me with words for the second time, I swallowed my tears.

"What brings you here?"

The speaker was a man with a distinctive appearance.

He was nearing fifty, but his skin was taut and his black hair bristled like wire. His large, piercing eyes alone were enough to make anyone's knees go weak.

What the hell is with that look in his eyes…?

The manager of a K Bank branch was no exception. He had already met the man several times, but he was an ordinary person, while the other man was an A-rank Hunter—a living witness who had endured the Great Cataclysm with his entire body.

His tongue tied itself in knots, and cold sweat trickled down his back.

"Well…"

"If you came to waste my valuable time, go back. Otherwise, speak now."

The words were sharp, but his tone was fairly gentle.

The manager had heard the rumor that Im Chunsoo was trying to mellow his temper with age. Apparently, it hadn't been a complete waste of effort.

Damn it.

The branch manager squeezed his eyes shut and blurted it out.

"I'm sorry, Guild Master. I've come regarding your son."

---

[485] Ajusshi is a familiar way to address a middle-aged man.

[486] Hyungnim is a respectful form of "older brother" used by a man addressing an older man.

At the mention of his son, Sangdong Guild Master Im Chunsoo's eyebrow twitched.

"Changsoo? What about him?"

"Some time ago, you asked me to let you know whenever your son used any of the bank's services…"

Im Chunsoo nodded as if he understood where this was going.

"What is it this time? Did he steal my seal[487]? Or take out a secured loan?"

"He transferred a considerable amount of money all at once."

"He must be fooling around with women again. Obviously. How much?"

"Four billion won[488] to each of two accounts. Eight billion won[489] in total."

"How much?"

"Eight billion… Hup."

The branch manager hurriedly swallowed his breath. He had just watched the window behind Im Chunsoo rapidly freeze over.

Hiss.

It was late summer outside, but cold and frost now ruled the office.

Im Chunsoo motioned to the trembling branch manager.

"Anything else?"

"I-I brought the relevant documents."

With shaking hands, the branch manager placed a stack of papers on the desk.

"Good. You may leave."

"I-I'll see you next time."

After the branch manager fled the room, Im Chunsoo picked up the receiver. The phone had a cold-resistance function, so it transmitted the signal quickly without any problems.

Beep, beep. Click.

"—Yes, Guild Master. Team One's Leader speaking."

"Bring that bastard here immediately."

"—…Do you mean Team Leader Im Changsoo?"

"Team Leader, my ass. He's fired as of today. Bring that bastard here now!"

Bang!

The receiver's life ended there. It shattered into hundreds of icy fragments that covered the desk.

"What a pathetic fool. Even after I warned him…"

Im Chunsoo glared coldly at the wrecked office, then his gaze stopped on one spot.

The stack of papers left behind by the K Bank branch manager.

---

[487] A personal seal can be used in Korea to authenticate official documents and financial transactions.

[488] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[489] Eight billion won is about $5.7 million or €5.2 million.

There was no doubt that the documents contained the whereabouts of eight billion won[490].

You stupid bastard. Which bitch did you get taken in by this time?

He read through the papers, turning them one page at a time, for a little over ten minutes.

When Im Chunsoo closed the final page, the door flew open with the sound of someone being dragged along.

“Team Leader Im Changsoo. I brought him here.”

An affable-looking middle-aged man stood there.

Clutched firmly in his grasp was a young man.

“F-Father!”

“My proud son is here.”

At his son’s appearance, the father extended a hand.

Of course, it was not a gesture of forgiveness.

Crackle, crackle, crackle.

Cold surged from Im Chunsoo’s grasp. It changed from gas to liquid, then from liquid to solid, completing its transformation into an ice club as hard as steel.

“I have a lot to ask you, but first, you’re getting hit.”

“Father!”

“Shut up, you little shit!”

The middle-aged man who had brought Im Changsoo—the Team Leader of Sangdong Guild’s Team One—quietly closed the door.

The room would be off-limits for the next half day.

[490] Eight billion won is about $5.7 million or €5.2 million.

Chapter 87

"Achoo!"

Patter-patter!

Jinho hyung[491] calmly wiped the ramen and grains of rice from his face with a wet tissue.

"If you don't like it, say so. Use your words."

"It's not like that. It just came out of nowhere."

"Don't make excuses. You only look more pathetic."

But I was telling the truth. Instead of answering, I rubbed my nose.

Is someone badmouthing me?

Come to think of it, there is one guy with good reason to.

If it was Im Changsoo, he had more than enough motive. Still, he was the Santa Claus who had given me four billion won,[492] so I was happy to take a few insults.

I wasn't sure he would, but the bastard actually kept his promise.

I remembered the text message I had received that morning. The banking app installed on my smartphone notified me of every deposit and withdrawal without exception.

> 4,000,000,000 won[493] has been deposited into Jin Taekyung's account, 110--.

The only minor mishap was that Jinho hyung[494] had discovered it before I did. Leaving my smartphone in the room when I went to take a shower had been a mistake.

"You've got plenty of money, and you're eating ramen? Ramen?"

"You sure talk a lot. I put beef in it. Don't you like beef ramen?"

"That's not what I mean, you punk."

Bang!

Jinho hyung[495] roughly set down his utensils.

Of course, he hadn't done it to make a point. He was just full.

"I mean, you've got four billion won[496] in your bank account, so why are you eating ramen in a goshiwon?[497]"

"What's it to you? I'll do what I want."

---

[491] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.
[492] Four billion Korean won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million at the project conversion rates.
[493] Four billion Korean won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million at the project conversion rates.
[494] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.
[495] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.
[496] Four billion Korean won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million at the project conversion rates.
[497] A goshiwon is a tiny, inexpensive room-for-rent housing arrangement, often with shared facilities.

"…Fair enough."

"And the money only came in an hour ago, all right? I don't know what to do with it either, so be quiet and let me think."

I was pretending to be fine, but I had been dazed for a while now. I had worked myself to the bone like a worker ant, but there had always been somewhere the money needed to go.

Then a fortune had dropped out of the sky.

Four billion won[498] was enough to do a lot of things. Naturally, it gave me a lot to think about.

"What are you thinking so hard about? There must have been something you wanted to do first as soon as you got money."

The first thing I wanted to do…

There is one thing.

Slurp.

I sucked down the last strand of noodles and rose from my seat.

Before leaving the room, I made sure to give Jinho hyung[499] one last parting remark.

"Thanks."

"Don't mention it."

"Don't forget to wash the pot. I'm off."

"Hey! Hey!"

"Huh?"

Hayeon's eyes went round when she saw me outside the front door.

"So it really is you. I saw you on the intercom and thought, no way."

"…If it wasn't really me, what would I be?"

"Hmm. Computer graphics?"

"Is that any way to talk to your older brother after not seeing him for so long?"

"What are you talking about? You were here the day before yesterday."

Oh, right. Hardly any time had passed in the real world.

The time difference was so large that even I got confused sometimes. I took off my shoes and asked, "What were you doing?"

"Studying."

"Come to think of it, what about school? It's a weekday."

Hayeon answered in a nasal voice.

---

[498] Four billion Korean won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million at the project conversion rates.

[499] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

"They said my fever was thirty-nine degrees Celsius.[500] I stuck it out until second period, then left early. Summer vacation starts tomorrow anyway, and we've been doing nothing but self-study lately."

"You're already on vacation? No, wait. You left school early because you were sick, and you're studying?"

Somehow, she seemed even more impressive than a Peak master. Whenever I got really sick at school, my illness mysteriously vanished the moment I left early and got home.

She had a raging fever, yet she was still studying. Did we really have different DNA?

"There is no end to learning."

Leaving Hayeon, who sounded like a school disciplinarian, behind, I entered the living room. Apart from the two of us, there wasn't a sign of anyone else in the house.

"Where's Mom?"

"The bank."

"You had that answer ready."

"It's true."

"Did Mom tell you to say that?"

"Huh? Tell me to say what?"

I wondered who she took after. Her acting was so natural that if I hadn't already known the truth, I would have fallen for it completely.

I should've told Mom sooner.

A bitter smile escaped me before I could stop it. As I turned back toward the entrance, Hayeon grabbed me.

"Where are you going?"

"To find Mom."

"There are tons of banks around here. I'll make you something to eat, so stay here. She'll be home soon."

"It's fine. I'm not going to the bank."

"What?"

"The restaurant at the intersection in front of the supermarket. Right?"

The strength slowly drained from Hayeon's hand.

"…You knew?"

"Yeah. For a long time."

"Mom asked me to keep it a secret."

"I know that too."

[500] Thirty-nine degrees Celsius is about 102 degrees Fahrenheit.

"Oppa,[501] can't you stay?"

It was one of Hayeon's longtime habits. Whenever she had an important favor to ask, she always put oppa[502] first.

"I'll be back."

I ruffled Hayeon's hair and left the house.

As the elevator carried me down, I quietly thought about her warmth still lingering in my hand—and why she was studying even while her forehead was burning up.

A person had only one name on their resident registration card, but they went by many names over the course of their life. Kim Jeonghee, who had turned exactly fifty that year, was no different.

"Ajumma,[503] two more servings of pork belly over here."

"Yes, just a moment."

The name she was called most often these days was ajumma.[504] Before that, it had been "Hayeon's mom." Before that, "Taekyung's mom." Once the children had grown up and work had become busy, she had stopped hearing those names.

The one person who had called her by her real name had passed away long ago.

"Jeonghee-ssi."[505]

She had met him when she was twenty-two. He had been kind and affectionate. Amid the chaos of the Great Cataclysm, a man and a woman met in a shelter and fell in love at once.

Their marriage had been a happy one. Even as the years passed, he continued to call her by name.

"Jeonghee."

Sometimes, embarrassed to hear him call her by name in front of other people, she had asked him about it.

"Why do you only call me Jeonghee? Other husbands call their wives 'so-and-so's mom,' 'honey,' or 'the missus.' That's what everyone else does."

"You don't like it?"

"No, it's not that. I was just curious. We're getting older too, you know."

"What does age have to do with it? I call you Jeonghee because I love Jeonghee more than I love Taekyung's mom."

---

[501] Oppa is a term a woman uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

[502] Oppa is a term a woman uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

[503] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a married or middle-aged woman, commonly used to address service workers.

[504] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a married or middle-aged woman, commonly used to address service workers.

[505] -Ssi is a polite Korean suffix attached to a person's name.

“Why are you acting like this in front of the kids?”

“Huh? Mom’s cheeks are red. Mom, do you and Dad wrestle in the mornings too? You do it every night.”

“…Taekyung, starting today, go to bed early.”

Their parting came sooner than expected. A Gate opened in the middle of downtown without warning, and the two children lost their father while she lost her husband—the only person who had called her by name.

“Ajumma![506]”

Kim Jeonghee jolted back to reality. A middle-aged woman with permed hair and flashy earrings was glaring at her.

“Oh, yes, ma’am.”

“What were you doing that you couldn’t even hear me calling you?”

“I’m sorry.”

“What about the grill plates? Are you done washing them?”

“Well, the thing is…”

Her hands had stopped while she was lost in thought. The owner checked the sink and glared at her.

“Ajumma,[507] is this how you’re going to work?”

“…”

“Honestly. If you’re going to work like this, I might as well do it myself. Why would I pay good money to hire you? Am I wrong?”

Kim Jeonghee bowed her head while the other kitchen workers kept working, pretending not to hear the owner.

Good money, my ass. She works us at minimum wage during the busiest hours.

She’s old enough to know better. She knows perfectly well that no amount of caked-on makeup and dressing up will make her a match for Jeonghee ajumma,[508] so she’s taking it out on her.

She should watch the counter properly herself in the first place. How many orders did Jeonghee take while she was off having fun?

They had plenty to say, but they could only keep it to themselves. The kitchen ajumma[509] who had finally lost her patience and stood up for Kim Jeonghee had been fired the previous week.

“How am I supposed to feel comfortable leaving this place in your hands?”

---

[506] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a married or middle-aged woman, commonly used to address service workers.

[507] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a married or middle-aged woman, commonly used to address service workers.

[508] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a married or middle-aged woman, commonly used to address service workers.

[509] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a married or middle-aged woman, commonly used to address service workers.

"…I'm sorry."

"I heard your son is a Hunter. He should be making decent money, so why don't you just stay home and cook? Why come all the way here and be a nuisance to someone else's business? Ah, is his income not very good because he's an F-rank Hunter?"

The moment a sneer appeared at the corners of the owner's mouth, Kim Jeonghee slowly raised her bowed head.

"Boss. You've gone too far."

"What?"

"I said you went too far."

"Are you saying I said something wrong?"

"Yes."

The unfamiliar sensation left the owner speechless. Kim Jeonghee had always been quiet and gentle, but now her eyes had sunk into a deep stare.

"Please apologize for what you just said."

"A-apologize?"

"Right here. Right now."

"O-oh my. Fine, then. What part of what I said was wrong? Your son really is an F-rank Hunter!"

"Is his rank really that important?"

"Of course it is. What good is an F-rank Hunter? You have to be at least my son's caliber to make good money and have women lining up for you. This shop, too…"

"Your son, the D-rank Hunter, opened it for you. I know. I've heard it dozens—no, hundreds—of times."

The employees, who had pricked up their ears, unconsciously nodded.

The owner's bragging about her son was a familiar routine they heard several times a day.

How much he made, how big his house was, what kind of car he drove, and how filial he was—so filial that he had even opened a shop for his mother to have something to do. She had repeated it so often that even the regular customers were sick of hearing it.

"Then you know all about it. I run this place as a hobby, but you're different, aren't you? You're working in the kitchen because your son doesn't make enough money, aren't you?"

"No. That's not why."

Kim Jeonghee continued calmly.

"Our Taekyung grew up right. He never once caused his parents any trouble, even when he was little. He's still working hard for his family. Money? He earns more than enough."

"That's all an excuse."

"An excuse? This is money my child earned by risking his life. How could I, as his parent, accept it and spend it?"

"Ajumma,[510] was that meant for me to hear?"

"That depends on how you choose to take it. And since we're on the subject, when does that amazing son of yours ever show his face?"

"Wh-what?"

"I've worked here for over a year, but that devoted son of yours hasn't visited even once. He does at least call you, doesn't he?"

The kitchen fell deathly silent. The owner's face turned bright red, and her eyes bulged.

"Where does a bitch with such a pathetic son get off—"

The employees knew what was coming next. Along with the owner's machine-gun burst of abuse, the word "fired" was bound to come flying out.

But none of them could have predicted Kim Jeonghee's reaction.

"Watch your mouth, you goddamn bitch."

"…!"

"…!"

It was as if a bomb had gone off.

A deathly silence descended as everyone's eyes trembled with disbelief. Every person in the kitchen wondered if they had heard correctly.

What did I just hear?

Did Jeonghee ajumma[511] just swear? My God.

Kim Jeonghee had always been gentle and quick to smile. Even when the owner picked fights with her day after day, she had bowed her head without a single word of complaint.

Now she glared at the owner with eyes as cold as ice.

"W-what did you say? What did you just call me?"

"I called you a goddamn bitch, you fucking bitch."

"F-fucking bitch?!"

Before the shock had even faded, a second bomb went off. The owner's shriek rang all the way out into the dining area.

"Did someone just swear?"

"You heard that too? I think someone just called somebody a fucking bitch."

"What the hell? Are the employees fighting?"

---

[510] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a married or middle-aged woman, commonly used to address service workers.

[511] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a married or middle-aged woman, commonly used to address service workers.

The murmuring grew louder. Customers and employees alike turned their attention toward the kitchen.

That was when it happened.

Thud. Thud.

A large young man with his cap pulled low. No one had noticed when he entered, or how long he had been standing there. Not until he started walking toward the kitchen.

“S-sir. I’ll take your order…”

The young man smiled faintly at the male employee who hurried to block his path.

“It’s all right. I’m not here to order.”

“No, but still, right now…”

“Excuse me.”

Tap.

It was only a gentle push, but the burly employee staggered and fell. Without hesitation, the young man shoved the half-open kitchen door wide.

And then…

“Mom.”

He came face-to-face with the person he loved most in the world.

Chapter 88

"Son?"

Her eyes widened when she saw me.

She wore an apron printed with the restaurant's name and rubber gloves smeared with grease.

My mother.

Her surprise quickly turned to bewilderment.

"Ta-Taekyung, what are you doing here?"

I flashed my flustered mother a broad grin. Just then, a shrill voice pierced my ear.

"So you're Kim ajumma's[512] son?"

A middle-aged woman looked me over warily.

There was no need to ask who she was or what she did. I already knew.

"Hello. My name is Jin Taekyung."

"Huh? Ahem. Yes."

The owner gave an unnecessary cough after seeing me bow politely from the waist.

"But what brings you here all of a sudden?"

I answered with a pleasant smile.

"Does a son need a reason to visit his mother?"

"A reason?"

The owner narrowed her eyes.

"Maybe it's because you're young, but you're awfully thoughtless. If someone showed up out of the blue like this, how do you think I'd feel as the owner?"

"Hmm. I suppose you'd be upset."

"Exactly!"

"It's lunchtime, the restaurant is packed, and everyone in the kitchen and dining area is so busy they can barely see straight."

"…That's right."

"And then an employee's son suddenly shows up without saying a word? From your perspective, Boss, I can understand why you'd be upset. Completely."

"Y-you do understand."

What the hell is with this kid?

That was probably exactly what the owner was thinking.

Ignoring her confused reaction, I pulled my mother by the arm.

"In that case, we'll be going now. Mom, go change so we can leave."

---

[512] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a married or middle-aged woman.

“What?”

“S-son?”

The two of them stared at me in bewilderment.

I asked with an innocent expression,

“Why?”

“What do you mean, why? Why?!”

“Is there some kind of problem?”

“You little punk, are you making fun of an adult? Did you already forget everything you just said?”

“Oh, you mean when I said you might be upset if someone came by while you were busy?”

“Yes! You said yourself that I might be upset, and now you’ve forgotten already? Are you making fun of me right now?!”

“Oh, come on. I’m not making fun of you.”

“Then what is this?”

“I meant every word. From your perspective, Boss, you have every right to feel that way. But…”

I continued with a bright smile.

“My mother isn’t your employee anymore.”

“What?”

“Is that hard to understand? She’s quitting. Starting right now.”

A heavy silence descended.

My mother stared blankly at me, while the owner’s face turned dark red before she shrieked.

“Who said you could do that?!”

“We did.”

“You think I’ll just let you take her away?”

“What happens if you don’t?”

“Y-you!”

“Th-three, three! F-four, four!”

That was as far as the owner’s patience went.

“Hey, you fucking son of a bitch!”

The hand she raised along with her vicious curse never reached its target.

Grab!

Someone caught the owner’s wrist in a single motion and glared at her.

My mother spat the words out, radiating an aura fierce enough to make even a First Rate master flinch.

“Whose son do you think you’re laying a hand on, you fucking bitch?”

Good Lord.

I had heard her swear once earlier in the dining area, but this was the first time in my life I had seen my mother curse like this. She never even spoke ill of other people in front of her children, and yet…

“And who are you calling a son of a bitch? Your son is the son of a bitch, you pig!”

“You’ve been getting on my nerves from the start! Hey!”

The owner charged at my mother, but I stepped between them.

I was big enough to stand out wherever I went. Simply standing between the two middle-aged women was more than enough.

“Now, now. Calm down. Please calm down.”

“Move! Are you going to move or not? Do you think you’ll get away with this?”

“Yes. I think we’ll live quite comfortably.”

“Gaaaah!”

The owner’s eyes rolled back as she began wildly swinging her arms with a scream.

Of course, none of her attacks posed the slightest threat to me.

It’s embarrassing to even call that an attack.

Compared to the enemies I had faced inside Gates and in the Murim, it was no more dangerous than a fly beating its wings. Now that my bones and muscles, Sinews and Meridians, and Toughness had all improved dramatically, even a punch from an ordinary adult man would only tickle.

“Please stop. You look like you’re having a really hard time.”

As expected, the owner’s struggle ended quickly.

She was in her fifties and morbidly obese. Her body clearly had its limits.

“Huff, huff! You Hunter bastard, are you bullying a civilian?”

That she could come out with a line like that—I had to marvel at how the owner’s brain worked.

“Me? Bullying you?”

“Can’t you see I’m hurt? My fingernail broke, and it’s bleeding!”

“You hurt yourself hitting me. I’ve just been standing here, so why are you trembling all by yourself?”

“Whatever!”

This was a bumper crop of bullshit.

I glanced around. The kitchen staff and the customers in the dining area were all watching the owner’s stand-up routine with disgusted expressions.

“If you can’t accept what happened, call the police. There must be about fifty witnesses here, so that works out nicely.”

“…”

"Not going to call? Since you were injured and bled because of a Hunter, you should go to the police station, give a statement, file a complaint, and hire a lawyer. You'll be busy starting tomorrow."

I had intended to tease her a little longer, but the more we talked, the more I felt I was wasting my time. I clicked my tongue.

"What are you, the mayor? You're only the owner. Don't make everyone around you miserable, and try to have a better attitude. We're leaving."

I was about to turn away when the corners of the owner's mouth twisted with resentment.

"You live in Bucheon, don't you?"

"So?"

"Which Guild in Bucheon are you with?"

"Would you know it if I told you?"

"My son would. Our Minsu is a Hunter in Bucheon, too."

"Oh, really?"

"I hear Hunters all know one another after only a degree or two. I wonder how long you'll last if you get a bad reputation in that line of work."

"I have a reputation for being hardworking and skilled, so I'll be around for a long time. Happy?"

"Do you know Kim Minsu? My son must be famous in Bucheon."

Kim Minsu?

Sure. Over the past seven years, I had probably crossed paths with more than thirty people named Minsu.

I answered indifferently.

"Do you know Seong Jinho? He's the most famous person in our goshiwon.[513]"

"Pfft, a goshiwon? I suppose that's the level you'd expect from an F-rank Hunter. Is your income really that bad?"

"It's kind of you to worry, but I make a decent living. I made four billion won[514] just yesterday."

"How much?"

"Four billion won.[515]"

I hadn't wanted to boast about money like a child, but she just had to tug on a sleeping lion's nose hairs.

There was one thing I had forgotten, though.

People always judged everything according to their own common sense.

---

[513] A goshiwon is a small, inexpensive room for rent, often with shared facilities.

[514] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[515] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

"Four billion won?[516] An F-rank Hunter made that much?"

"Obviously, he's bluffing. A Hunter I know said an F-rank Hunter has to work like hell to make even a hundred million won.[517] And didn't you hear him? He said he made four billion won[518] in a single day, not in a year. It's not like he won the lottery. Does that make any sense?"

"Geez, I almost thought he was telling the truth."

The customers in the dining area and even the kitchen staff, who had quietly seemed to be rooting for me, began looking at me doubtfully.

Well, even I had to admit it sounded absurd.

"Son, is that true?"

My mother's eyes went round.

The owner snorted.

"As if it's true. Even my Minsu can't make that much."

"I've been wondering. What rank is this famous Minsu of yours? A-rank?"

"He's a D-rank Hunter."

"…"

"What? Are you stunned because it's so high?"

"No, well… I'll admit I'm a little surprised."

She had sounded so confident that I thought her son was at least Monkey D. Minsu.[519]

Where is there a famous D-rank Hunter in Bucheon?

Perhaps she mistook my momentary silence for shock. The owner let out a series of derisive chuckles.

"You have to be a D-rank Hunter like my son to get respect wherever you go. An F-rank Hunter must be too embarrassed to even admit what he does for a living."

"I wasn't that embarrassed. I spoke just fine."

"You still get looked down on. Among Hunters, rank is everything."

"Ah, yes. Rank is everything."

"If I make one phone call, Minsu will…"

"Yes, yes."

As I answered halfheartedly and rummaged through my pocket, the owner raised her eyebrows.

"An adult is talking to you. Do you want my Minsu to teach you a lesson?"

"I'm just looking for something. Ah, here it is."

---

[516] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[517] One hundred million won is about $71,000 or €65,000.

[518] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[519] Monkey D. Luffy is the protagonist of the Japanese manga One Piece. Taekyung substitutes Minsu's name for Luffy's.

"What is that?"

"If you're curious, take a look."

I had so many point cards and discount coupons in my wallet that finding anything was a chore. When the owner examined the thin silver card I handed her, her mouth fell open.

"…C-rank Hunter?"

"Personally, I think rank is everything for Hunters. What do you think, Boss?"

"N-no way. I heard you were F-rank…"

"I was F-rank. I'm C-rank now. You're pretty slow about updating your information."

"I-isn't this fake? The color is completely different from my Minsu's license!"

"His license is brass-colored, right?"

"…"

"I used one of those myself in the past. Lower-rank Hunters have brass-colored licenses, while mid-rank Hunters have silver ones. You didn't know that?"

Suppressed laughter erupted from all around us.

The atmosphere had flipped in an instant.

My mother slipped her arm through mine with a proud smile, while the owner's face turned bright red and she began making excuses.

"D-does a Hunter's rank really matter? C-rank and D-rank are only one step apart. They're practically the same."

Was that supposed to be an argument or a fart?

All I could do was laugh hollowly at her absurd struggle.

"That's not something a person who looked down on someone for their Hunter rank should be saying."

"Is a person's title all that matters? The company they work for matters more. People respect an Assistant Manager at a major corporation more than a section manager at a small company. Am I wrong?"

"I don't know about that, but the customers here don't seem to agree with you."

I gestured toward the customers filling the dining area.

Dozens of office workers from small and midsize companies were glaring at the owner without bothering to hide their displeasure.

"What's with that ajumma?[520]"

"My appetite's completely gone."

"The food hasn't even come out yet. Should we just leave?"

"Yeah. Let's go."

[520] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a married or middle-aged woman.

"Everyone, let's eat somewhere else. There's a decent set-meal place right up ahead. I may not be an Assistant Manager at a major corporation, but I'm a section manager at a small company, so lunch is on me."

Scrape.

At the middle-aged man's words, five or six of his subordinates stood and followed him.

Similar scenes began unfolding throughout the dining area.

"Customers, that's not what I meant. Customers!"

"What do you mean, it's not? Just watch me never come back here."

"But your orders have already gone in. If you leave like this…"

"Looking at that kitchen, it'll take an hour anyway. Forget it. We're leaving too."

Despite the dining staff's attempts to stop them, the customers streamed out like the receding tide.

Barely a minute later, fewer than ten customers remained in the dining area.

Damn. I can already hear the sound of this place going under.

The owner was trembling with anger and bewilderment.

"You… You people…"

"So which Guild did you say your son was with?"

"Our Minsu is a real hotshot Hunter in Sangdong Guild! Someone like you…"

"What? Which Guild?"

"Sangdong Guild! They even gave him a house and a car."

"Oh, Sangdong Guild. Could you wait just a moment?"

What an incredible coincidence.

Holding back my laughter, I pulled out my smartphone and made a call.

Beep. Beep. Beep. Click.

"Uh, what is it?"

"What do you mean, what is it? Are we only supposed to call each other when we have business?"

"…I sent you the promised four billion won,[521] though."

"Ah, I checked that. It came through fine."

The conversation continued over speakerphone, loud enough for everyone to hear.

Four billion won.[522]

The moment it became clear that what I had said earlier was true, everyone's eyes nearly popped out of their heads. I ignored all the stares and got to the point.

"Do you happen to know a Kim Minsu?"

"Kim Minsu? That's the first I've heard of him."

---

[521] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[522] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

“You’re a Team Leader in Sangdong Guild, and you don’t even know him? Apparently, he’s a D-rank Hunter in your Guild.”

“D-rank Hunters are a dime a dozen. How am I supposed to know all of them? Is that why you called?”

“Yeah. Bye.”

Getting Im Changsoo’s business card in case he tried to stiff me had been a stroke of genius.

Click.

As soon as I hung up, the owner asked in a faltering voice.

“W-who was that?”

“Didn’t you hear? He’s a Team Leader in Sangdong Guild. Put simply, he’s Mr. Minsu’s boss.”

“…Team Leader? His boss?”

“Oh, and one more thing. He’s also a future employer Mr. Minsu will want to impress. His father is the Guild Master of Sangdong Guild.”

“…”

Her face went white as a sheet.

There was no longer any reason or need to exchange another word with her. I turned toward my mother.

“Let’s go now.”

“Shall we, son?”

My mother, Kim Jeonghee, flashed a broad smile and shoved her work clothes into the sink.

Of course, she didn’t forget to leave the owner with one final remark.

“If you’re a parent, act like one and live right, you ajumma.[523] Where do you get off casually running your mouth about someone else’s precious child?”

The final blow.

The owner lowered her head without answering, and we left the restaurant with light steps.

“Son, have you eaten? There’s cheonggukjang[524] and kimchi pancakes at home.”

“Wow. What a feast.”

The weather was beautiful.

[523] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a married or middle-aged woman.

[524] Cheonggukjang is a Korean stew made with fermented soybeans.

Chapter 89

"Son, slow down. You're going to make yourself sick."

"You could quit being a Hunter and become a mukbang[525] streamer."

I finished my meal amid Mom's concern and Hayeon's admiration.

By then, I had polished off five heaping bowls of rice, an entire pot of cheonggukjang,[526] and dozens of kimchi pancakes.

"Whew. I'm finally starting to feel full."

"…You're insane. How much do you normally eat?"

"If it's tasty, it just keeps going in."

I had always eaten a lot, but never this much.

Maybe it was because my metabolism and internal organs had improved beyond comparison. These days, I could put even professional food fighters to shame.

"Maybe I really should become a mukbang[527] streamer."

"No. Those people need to make a living too. Let the humans compete among themselves."

"Are you saying I'm not human?"

"Yeah. To me, you're beyond even a pig."

Hayeon shook her head in disbelief and put down her spoon. I sneaked a look into her rice bowl. Half of it was untouched.

"You'll be punished for wasting rice."

"You sound like an old man."

"Don't you know Koreans run on rice even at death's door? You have to eat if you want to get over your cold faster."

"I don't have an appetite. My head hurts too."

"Did you go to the hospital?"

"Yeah. I took the medicine they prescribed too."

I stared at Hayeon in silence. Her face was flushed, and beads of sweat dotted her forehead. She had left school early, then stubbornly tried to study anyway. It looked like her fever had risen even higher than before.

The medicine doesn't seem to be doing much.

Honestly, there was a much simpler way to cure an illness.

She could be treated by a professional healer or drink one of the potions sold on the market. But most ordinary people avoided both because of the cost.

What a fool.

---

[525] Mukbang is a broadcast in which the host eats while interacting with viewers.

[526] Cheonggukjang is a Korean stew made with fermented soybeans.

[527] Mukbang is a broadcast in which the host eats while interacting with viewers.

The reason I had worked nonstop was so my family could live safely, happily, and without getting sick.

Even though I knew why they couldn't spend money so easily, I couldn't help feeling frustrated. How much could one lousy potion cost?

At the very least, circulating qi once would make her feel much better… Huh?

A thought suddenly flashed through my mind, and I stopped.

Wait. Could this actually work?

"Give me your hand for a second."

"Huh?"

"Tsk. I said, give me your hand."

Hayeon looked me up and down as though she had discovered some rare creature.

"What is happening here? Why are you being so gross?"

"You'd rather die than listen to a word I say."

I grabbed her hand.

"We're siblings, okay?"

"Stop talking nonsense."

More carefully than ever, I drew up my internal energy. Slowly—very slowly—I sent a single thread of it through my hand and into Hayeon's body.

"Ah!"

Hayeon cried out. She had clearly noticed the strange sensation caused by my internal energy.

For a moment, I worried it might scatter, but the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique had already reached a realm stage. It obeyed my control without resistance, even inside someone else's body.

This much should be enough.

The trial run was over. Now came the real test.

This time, I guided my internal energy toward Hayeon's dantian.

Normally, that would have been as easy as breathing. Hayeon's body, however, was different. Her acupoints were narrow, and her insides were clogged with waste.

This might be tough.

Even if I separated the modern world and the Murim and considered them independently, I possessed a body far beyond that of an ordinary person.

Hayeon, on the other hand, was an ordinary high school student. It was only natural that nineteen years' worth of waste had accumulated inside her.

Still, I should do as much as I can.

I could attempt this only because I trusted the stability of the Jin Family's Cultivation Technique and my own control.

I also remembered to warn Hayeon in case anything went wrong.

"It might hurt a little, so bear with it. Got it?"

"What? What are you doing?"

"Hmm. I suppose you could call it a particularly stable form of traditional Korean medicine."

Mom's eyes widened as she washed the dishes.

"Oh my, traditional medicine? You know how to do that too?"

"I just learned a little."

"That's wonderful. Give it a try."

Hayeon, on the other hand, looked less than enthusiastic.

"Why traditional medicine? I'm not really into that stuff."

"Then trust me and put up with it for a little while."

"Mom, thank you for raising me all these years. Your useless daughter is leaving this world without ever repaying you."

"…"

What the hell, you little shit?

I almost lost control of my internal energy. I could run around for an hour without sweating a drop, but I was starting to feel a little hot now.

"I'm kidding. It's not like you'd do anything bad to your only little sister, right?"

"Then shut up and stay as still as you can, even if it hurts."

"Okay."

I took a deep breath. From this moment on, I was going to clean out Hayeon's acupoints.

The cleaner was me.

The broom was fifteen years of internal energy.

"Ready?"

"Yes, yes, Doctor. But when exactly are we starting?"

"Right now."

The moment I answered, I sent my internal energy flowing.

Whooosh.

A wave of gentle yet powerful internal energy began sweeping through the minor meridians throughout Hayeon's body, washing away the waste that had built up inside her…

"Hoo."

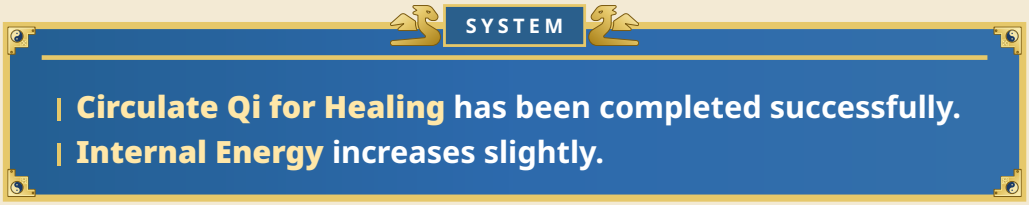
"Phew."

The moment I released her hand, we both exhaled, but for entirely different reasons.

Mine was a sigh of relief.

Hayeon's was one of refreshment.

Ding.



Just as the System said, Circulate Qi for Healing had ended successfully.

The Jin Family's Cultivation Technique accumulated internal energy slowly, but its stability was exceptional. The process had taken a while because so much waste had built up inside Hayeon, but I completed it without any serious trouble.

"Oppa,[528] what was that?"

The fact that she called me Oppa[529] so naturally showed how surprised she was. I wiped away the sweat brought on by the tension and answered.

"I told you. It's a stable traditional medicine treatment."

"That worked just from holding my hand?"

Would it? It only worked because your brother is amazing.

I smoothly changed the subject.

"So? How was it?"

"It hurt at first, but the longer it went on, the better it felt. My body feels lighter, and my headache's gone. How should I put it…"

Hayeon furrowed her brow, then summed it up in a single phrase.

"Like I was reborn? Like all the bad energy inside me got washed away. Ah, damn it. I don't know."

That sounds pretty accurate to me.

In any case, seeing how much better her complexion looked made all the effort worthwhile. I let out a short laugh and said,

"Yeah. Now go wash up."

"Huh?"

"What do you mean, 'huh'? Is your nose stuffed up? You reek, so go take a shower. Now."

"I washed this morning. What smell are you talking abou—Aagh!"

Hayeon realized that a terrible stench was radiating from her own body, grabbed her nose, and began making a huge fuss.

It's only natural.

---

[528] Oppa is a Korean term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man she is close to.

[529] Oppa is a Korean term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man she is close to.

Where else would the waste inside her body go? It had to come out somehow. Through sweat, for example, or maybe…

Grrrble. Pffft.

Well, it could come out that way too.

"…"

Maybe it was because there had been so much waste, but the stench was unbelievable.

At this point, I had to wonder if she had actually crapped herself.

"Ugh."

As if the sweat soaking her body wasn't enough, her stomach began sending strange signals. Hayeon practically crawled to the bathroom, while Mom stood there with her mouth hanging open.

"My goodness."

"Pretty effective, right?"

"It certainly is. I went to a traditional medicine clinic a few times when I was young, but this is incredible."

"I learned properly. If you ever want to go to a traditional medicine clinic, just come to me. You can do it right now, if you want."

"Should I? Come to think of it, I've been having trouble digesting lately…"

Mom smiled brightly and held out her hand.

That was when—

Bwaaaang. Frrt. Frrt.

"…"

"…"

Mom quietly withdrew her hand.

"…Should we start when Hayeon comes out?"

"…Yes."

Our house had only one bathroom.

Whooosh.

Some time after the sound of the toilet flushing, Mom emerged with the most refreshed expression in the world.

"How do you feel?"

"I feel ten years younger."

That was no exaggeration.

Even nineteen-year-old Hayeon had taken more than an hour to expel all the waste from her body.

Mom was middle-aged, and the amount of waste she had accumulated matched the years she had lived. After more than two hours of Circulate Qi for Healing, her condition must have improved beyond comparison.

"See? Until a little while ago, I had a headache and felt dizzy, but now I'm completely better. I checked my temperature as soon as I came out of the bathroom, and it was normal."

Hayeon stared at me in wonder. As soon as she had emerged from the bathroom, she had polished off two bowls of rice as though she had never complained about having no appetite.

"Where did you learn something like this? Were you a healer, Oppa[530]?"

"A healer? No. I just happened to learn it."

"Which traditional medicine clinic did you learn it at? If it's nearby, I'll go there too."

"…You'd be in big trouble if you went there."

"Why?"

"You don't need to know. Just know that there are lots of scary men there."

"Do they stick the needles in painfully?"

"…They do tend to."

What kind of face would she make if she knew those "needles" were actually knife stabs?

I pushed Hayeon away as she kept peppering me with questions and slipped a hand into my pocket.

Open Inventory.

A translucent inventory window appeared along with the familiar System notification.

If I had been in the Murim, it would have been packed with the spoils I had obtained after defeating Jopil and various weapons.

But this was reality.

It would be nice if the inventories were integrated.

The more I thought about them being separate, the more disappointing it seemed.

Taking just a few high-grade potions to the Murim would be no different from bringing along a few extra lives.

Well, I guess I should be satisfied that leveling up restores me to some extent.

I clicked my tongue inwardly and pulled my hand from my pocket. Two small bottles filled with sloshing red liquid rested in my palm.

[530] Oppa is a Korean term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man she is close to.

SYSTEM

Item Window
Lesser Potion

- Type: Medicine
- Grade: Third Rate
- Description: A liquid infused with weak healing magic. Readily available on the market.
- Effect: Restores the body when consumed. The effect is minimal.

They had been issued as raid supplies yesterday. Since I had no particular use for them, I had put them in my Inventory and left them untouched.

Technically, I'm supposed to return them.

Even lesser potions cost more than 200,000 won[531] apiece. Employers generous enough to hand them out as freely as Team Leader Choi were hard to find.

"Take one each."

"Huh? It's a potion."

"Why go as far as using a potion? I'm perfectly fine now."

"I'm worried there might be side effects. If you don't drink it now, it'll cost you more later."

In truth, I was only offering them as a tonic. Circulate Qi for Healing had no side effects.

"Drink up. You too, Hayeon."

Mom hesitated, then took hers first. Hayeon cautiously took her cue from Mom and followed suit.

Gulp. Gulp.

"How do you feel?"

Hayeon downed hers in one shot and tilted her head.

"Maybe I feel a little stronger. Or maybe not. How should I know? It's not like I've ever had a potion before."

"I guess I don't really know either."

"You'll definitely notice the effect when you're tired or sick. I'll buy a box and keep it here, so drink one whenever that happens."

"A box? How many come in a box?"

"Fifty, if you buy the large one?"

[531] 200,000 won is about $140 or €130; the potion costs more than that.
[532] 200,000 won is about $140 or €130; the potion costs more than that.
[533] Ten million won is about $7,100 or €6,500.

"They're about 200,000 won[532] each, so fifty would be… ten million won[533]? Oppa,[534] are you insane?"

Hayeon smacked my forearm.

"Just because you made some money this time, are you really going to spend it so recklessly? If you keep overspending like that, that 300 million won[535] will disappear in no time."

"It's fine. I've been making good money lately."

"I looked it up online. Once you become a C-rank Hunter, you have to replace your equipment and everything, right? They said you can blow through hundreds of millions[536] like it's nothing."

"I told you, it's fine. I made four billion won[537] yesterday, too."

"If you have four billion won,[538] then spending like this… Wait. How much did you say?"

"Four billion won.[539]"

"…"

Hayeon went completely rigid.

She stared blankly at me, then turned toward Mom.

"Mom, Oppa[540] says he made four billion won.[541]"

Mom gave an awkward smile and nodded.

Only then did Hayeon ask in a trembling voice,

"Is that true?"

"Yeah."

"Four billion won?[542]"

"I told you."

Determination filled Hayeon's eyes.

"Oppa.[543] Can I drop out of school?"

"…"

Didn't you say there was no end to learning?

---

[534] Oppa is a Korean term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man she is close to.

[535] 300 million won is about $210,000 or €190,000.

[536] Hundreds of millions of won refers to roughly 100–999 million won, or about $71,000–$710,000 and €65,000–€640,000.

[537] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[538] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[539] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[540] Oppa is a Korean term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man she is close to.

[541] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[542] Four billion won is about $2.9 million or €2.6 million.

[543] Oppa is a Korean term a woman uses for an older brother or an older man she is close to.

Chapter 90

"A week off?"

"Yes. Exactly as you heard."

Team Leader Choi's call that evening came as a surprise.

A whole week off? Had something happened to the Guild?

That thought reminded me of something troubling.

"Uh, this isn't because of some problem with Sangdong Guild, is it?"

"Sangdong Guild?"

"You know, because of the whole Im Changsoo thing…"

"Ah, you don't need to worry about that. The Guild house remodeling is supposed to be finished in a week."

It was a relief to hear that nothing had happened. But did people really stop raiding because of Guild house remodeling?

Still, a whole week off sounds nice.

For the past seven years, I had lived with my eyes fixed straight ahead, running without rest. Lately, I had been going back and forth between Murim and reality, spending my days without a moment to breathe.

Honestly, I wanted to re—no. Times like this called for working even harder. My voice rang with determination.

"Team Leader. I want to work."

"Ah, but you'll still receive your full salary during your vacation."

"Then I'll see you in a week."

"…"

"I'm hanging up. I need to eat dinner."

"…Yes."

As soon as I ended the call, Hayeon hurried over and bowed politely.

"Oppa.[544] The evening meal has been prepared."

"…Could you stop talking like that? It's giving me goose bumps."

"Switching to casual mode requires a paid purchase."

"You sure found a complicated way to ask for allowance."

I held out two fifty-thousand-won[545] bills, and Hayeon grinned.

"Mom says dinner's ready."

"Oh, what's on the menu?"

"Beef bulgogi.[546] And bean sprout soup that I made."

---

[544] Oppa is a form of address a woman uses for an older brother or an older man close to her. Hayeon uses an unusually formal version of it when she bows.

[545] Each 50,000-won bill is about $36 or €32; the two bills total about $71 or €65.

[546] Bulgogi is thinly sliced meat marinated and then grilled or pan-cooked.

"Beef bulgogi[547] sounds good."

"Mom says my bean sprout soup is good. She praised me."

"Mom's homemade beef bulgogi[548] never lets you down. It's always fresh, the best, thrilling."

"…"

My thoroughly pissed-off little sister and a table laden with Mom's cooking.

What was so special about vacation? I would eat and sleep to my heart's content at home.

Tap.

Choi Minwoo set down his smartphone after the call ended. Butler Kim, seated across the table from him, asked,

"What did he say?"

"He was already worried about Sangdong Guild."

"The more I see of him, the more interesting that young man becomes. He seems to act without thinking, yet he's quick to grasp the situation."

Choi Minwoo drummed his long fingers on the table.

Even now, some time after Jin Taekyung's sudden appearance, his existence remained a mystery.

When they had first met, Taekyung had seemed like nothing more or less than a diligent F-rank Hunter. Yet yesterday, he had single-handedly swept through a B-rank Gate.

He's getting stronger.

As of yesterday, his suspicions had turned into certainty.

Jin Taekyung was getting stronger. And he was doing so incredibly fast.

"Is there no additional information about Jin Taekyung?"

"No. I've repeatedly reconfirmed everything, but nothing has turned up."

Butler Kim was a man who handled his work thoroughly. But this time was different. Choi Minwoo carefully opened his mouth.

"Butler Kim."

"Yes, Young Master."

"Could you perhaps look for cases of Hunters who awakened a third time?"

"What?"

Butler Kim's eyebrows twitched.

---

[547] Bulgogi is thinly sliced meat marinated and then grilled or pan-cooked.

[548] Bulgogi is thinly sliced meat marinated and then grilled or pan-cooked.

A third awakening? It was a term he had never heard or seen in his entire life. If a Hunter like that had existed, no one would have used the word reawakening.

A reawakening was called a reawakening because there was nothing after it.

“Young Master, that…”

Just as Butler Kim was about to express his difficulty, a name flashed through his mind.

Jin Taekyung. If it’s that young man, who knows?

Butler Kim was a living witness who had experienced the Great Cataclysm firsthand. He had accomplished brilliant feats and participated in countless battles.

Yet even to his eyes, Jin Taekyung was special.

Those movements… They were truly remarkable.

Sometimes forceful, sometimes fluid. His transitions between offense and defense were efficient, and he possessed an innate combat sense that told him when to advance and when to retreat.

Watching Jin Taekyung fight, Butler Kim could think of only one word: overwhelming.

A third awakening, huh.

It would take time, but it was worth investigating.

Butler Kim bowed his head.

“I’ll look into it.”

“Thank you. Ah, what are Sangdong Guild’s movements like?”

“They’ve deployed surveillance agents. They’ll probably obtain most of the information within a few days.”

It had not even been half a day since word came that Im Changsoo had been summoned to the Guild Master’s office and beaten like a dog, yet Sangdong Guild’s watchers had already latched on. They were moving faster than expected.

“Their target must be Jin Taekyung.”

“They’ve likely marked him as a key figure, though they’ll begin by thoroughly investigating the entire Guild.”

“What about the other Guild members?”

“I’ve warned them in case someone follows them. But…”

Butler Kim hesitated before adding,

“Shouldn’t we tell Jin Taekyung as well?”

“It’s fine. In fact, I hope Sangdong Guild’s intelligence network is far superior to ours.”

The person who was hardest to understand—and the person about whom the most had already been revealed.

It was like looking into a clear spring and still being unable to see what lay inside.

Even if it meant using Sangdong Guild's power, Choi Minwoo wanted to get closer to Jin Taekyung's true identity.

"More importantly, it seems Sangdong Guild's Master is extremely angry."

"He seems to have grown much more cautious. In the old days, he would have stormed in and caused a scene by now."

"Ah. Could it be?"

Butler Kim smiled at Choi Minwoo's reaction and nodded.

"I'm acquainted with Sangdong Guild's Master."

"An ill-fated relationship?"

"Who knows?"

Butler Kim's smile deepened.

"What can I do for you?"

I answered the real estate agent, a man whose forehead shone brightly.

"I'd like to look at a house."

"Are you looking for a monthly rental? A jeonse lease?[549] Or perhaps…"

"I'm buying."

"Well, well. So you're a young Boss. Sorry, but wait just a moment. Let me take care of this and I'll be right back. It's so urgent I can barely hold it."

I wondered what he needed to take care of, then noticed the toilet paper in his hand.

If that was the issue, he definitely needed to hurry. When I nodded, the real estate agent dashed into the bathroom.

"Have something to eat while you wait on the sofa. There's some mocha bread on the table. Gnnngh…"

Pfft. Pffft.

"…"

I'd never be able to eat mocha bread again.

I lamented inwardly and leaned back against the sofa. On the television, which had already been turned on, a documentary about the Great Cataclysm was playing.

> "Aaaah!"
>
> "Crash! Boom!"

[549] Jeonse is a Korean housing lease in which the tenant pays a large lump-sum deposit instead of monthly rent. The deposit is generally returned at the end of the lease.

> “This is an emergency bulletin. Unidentified phenomena are currently occurring across the country. In response, the government has declared martial law effective immediately…”

People scattered, screaming. Buildings collapsed, flames soared, and news reports announcing the beginning of the Great Cataclysm flashed by one after another. Then the haggard face of the President of the United States filled the screen.

> “We have yet to determine their identity, but one thing is certain: they are our enemies. Not only the enemies of the United States, but of the entire world and all humanity. Even now, countless monsters are passing through Gates and invading Earth.”

Gate.

A Gate meant a door, quite literally. The Demon King Asmodeus had opened that door from beyond another dimension and descended upon Earth with an innumerable army of monsters.

After that, it went exactly as written in the textbooks.

Humanity had been helpless. Downtown areas, rural villages, mountains and seas, jungles… Gates appeared regardless of time or place, and the monsters pouring through them committed murder and destruction.

By the end of the hellish period known as the Bloody Week, which began when the Gates first opened, casualties had reached the tens of millions. The property damage was too vast to calculate accurately.

> The Great Cataclysm: The Most Horrific Ten Years in Human History.

By the time the documentary reached its midpoint alongside the caption, the bathroom door flew open.

“Whew. Now I feel alive.”

The real estate agent plopped down after wiping his sweat-slick forehead.

“Sorry to keep you waiting. You said you were looking to buy, right?”

“Yes.”

“Did you stop by anywhere else before coming here? There must’ve been plenty of real estate offices along the way.”

“No, this is my first stop.”

“Really?”

Judging by the way his eyes rolled around, he seemed to be deciding whether or not to take me for a sucker. I pretended not to notice and held out the note I had prepared.

It had the address written on it.

“I’d prefer to see a property around this address, if possible.”

“This address… That’s in a safe zone.”

“Yes.”

“You really said you wanted to buy, right? Did I hear you wrong because I had to take a dump so badly?”

When I nodded, the man’s eyes traveled subtly up and down.

Jeans and a white T-shirt. Twenty-thousand-won[550] sneakers bought at a market or online. No matter how you looked at me, I wasn’t dressed like a man with money.

“What do you do for a living?”

“I run Gates.”

“Oh, a Hunter? I thought so. You’ve done well for yourself at such a young age.”

A bright smile blossomed across the man’s face. Hunters were one of the most prominent high-income professions. It was hardly unusual for young, successful Hunters to buy expensive houses and cars.

He asked in a much friendlier tone,

“Have you checked the market prices?”

“I searched online on the way here.”

“Then you’re in luck. There actually happen to be a few listings available. Let’s see…”

Perhaps he was excited by the prospect of a sale, because the man began making calls to one person after another.

He spent about five minutes hanging up and dialing again before putting away his smartphone and turning to me.

“I found a listing that’s perfect for you, Boss. If you’re not busy, how about we go see it now?”

“Sure. Why not?”

I was on vacation, so I had no reason to refuse. As I rose, the man beamed.

Vroom.

I sat in the passenger seat of the sedan and watched the scenery pass by. Detached houses stood in rows, shops dotted the streets here and there, and playgrounds and schools appeared along the way.

[550] 20,000 won is about $14 or €13.

"It's changed a lot…"

The agent glanced sideways at me.

"Did you used to live around here?"

"When I was a kid."

I had been in my third year of middle school—sixteen years old—so it had been exactly eleven years since then. I had been born and raised here, so in a way, this was my hometown.

"This area was redeveloped about ten years ago, so it must look pretty different. It used to be an old apartment complex, but when they heard an Association branch was going to be built within thirty minutes of here, they tore the whole thing down."

"I see."

I already knew. Housing prices had skyrocketed as soon as news of the redevelopment broke. The jeonse[551] deposit had risen by hundreds of millions of won,[552] far more than we could afford, so we decided to move.

It wasn't long after Dad died.

On the night before we moved, I saw Mom crying silently.

It was several years later that I learned the place had been my parents' newlywed home.

"We're here."

The agent's voice pulled me from my thoughts. I opened the door and stepped out to find a detached house with a yard.

"This is the address you gave me, Boss. The owner happens to be out, so let's have a quick look and be on our way."

"Ah, just a moment."

Maybe it was nostalgia. The old apartment complex had already been demolished, but the area still felt strangely familiar.

Still… I'm glad it hasn't changed completely.

Some traces of the old scenery remained even after the redevelopment. The real estate agent smacked his lips as he watched me look around, lost in nostalgia.

"You must be happy to be back after all this time. Why don't you take a lap around the neighborhood while you're at it?"

"Is that okay?"

"You're going to sign the contract. Aren't you?"

"No. I mean, yes."

I had to buy this house, no matter what.

---

[551] Jeonse is a Korean housing lease in which the tenant pays a large lump-sum deposit instead of monthly rent. The deposit is generally returned at the end of the lease.

[552] "Hundreds of millions of won" is roughly 200 million to 900 million won: about $140,000–$640,000 or €130,000–€580,000.

The agent chuckled and took out a cigarette.

“Then I should accommodate you. It won’t take long to walk around the neighborhood. I’ll stay here and smoke while I wait, so don’t worry about me.”

After offering him a brief word of thanks, I began walking slowly.

Is this the right way?

I passed through an alley and spotted the supermarket I’d often visited as a child.

“When Oppa[553] was a kid, this place was his hangout. Back when he smoked like crazy in middle school, the old lady here was so old that…”

A gleaming foreign car was parked in front of the supermarket. A man and woman who had been talking together stopped when they saw me.

No—the man was the one who stopped.

He tilted his head, approached me, and asked, “Do you know me?”

[553] Oppa is a form of address a woman uses for an older brother or an older man close to her. Hayeon uses an unusually formal version of it when she bows.

Chapter 91

“Do you know me?”

I answered the man striding toward me with a question of my own.

“Who are you?”

Shouldn’t you at least introduce yourself before asking me that?

My bewilderment must have shown on my face, because the man slid his dark sunglasses down, revealing handsome features and a lightly tanned face.

“Park Jihoon.”

Park Jihoon? Well, it wasn’t as if I had only met one or two people over the years.

More importantly, he didn’t look familiar at all.

“I’m sorry, but I think you have me confused with someone else.”

“No, I’m sure it’s you. Didn’t you go to Garam Middle School?”

“Huh?”

That was the school I had attended. I’d moved away before graduating and lost touch with everyone there, but I still remembered it vividly.

“Right? Garam Middle School. And you’re twenty-seven this year.”

“Yes, that’s true, but…”

“I knew it! Jin Taekyung, third year, Class Six!”

He even remembered my year, class, and name when the first two were hazy even to me.

At that point, I couldn’t deny it. I asked the sunglasses-wearing man, who was grinning from ear to ear,

“…You really know me?”

“I’m Jihoon. Park Jihoon! We played soccer together all the time in middle school! We were both terrible students, so our homeroom teacher was always calling us in and smacking us around. You don’t remember?”

Soccer? Getting smacked around by our homeroom teacher?

I opened my mouth, wondering if it could really be him.

“Park Jihwang?”

“That’s right, you punk. I’m Park Jihwang! Oh, right. You wouldn’t know I changed my name.”

“Of course I wouldn’t.”

I didn’t know Park Jihoon, but I knew Park Jihwang.

I never expected to run into an old middle school classmate here. A smile spread across my face.

“Wow, of all places. Some guy I’d never seen before came over acting like he knew me, so I was wondering what was going on.”

“You still should’ve recognized me. It’s not like we knew each other in kindergarten. It was only ten years ago.”

“Even if it had only been five years, I wouldn’t have recognized you. Your face has changed too much.”

“Has it? Ha-ha.”

There was no denying it. The scrawny kid with the dark complexion had turned into someone who could be called handsome wherever he went.

“You didn’t just get better-looking. You filled out, too.”

“Oh, good eye.”

“That’s basic.”

As I recalled, he had been about a head shorter than me. Now our eye levels were roughly the same.

“Damn, you really made it big.”

An unrecognizably changed face, a solid build, a pretty girlfriend, and a foreign car that looked like it would easily cost well over a hundred million won.[554]

Jihwang—or rather, Jihoon—had changed a great deal in the ten years since I’d last seen him, and I knew why.

This guy’s a Hunter, too.

Now that my Qi Sense had reached a higher realm, I could assess people even without using the System.

I guess you could say I can feel his qi.

He was definitely a Hunter. He seemed about as strong as Im Changsoo, perhaps even stronger.

A friend I haven’t seen in ten years turns out to be a Hunter. How strange.

I could even use Qi Sense to read his Level, but I didn’t feel like going that far.

I had met an old friend in a place filled with memories. Right now, I was neither a Hunter nor a martial artist.

I was just an ordinary Jin Taekyung.

“Anyway, it’s really good to see you. You know I was really upset when we lost touch right after you transferred, right?”

“Were you? Things were pretty chaotic back then.”

I had been sixteen, right in the middle of adolescence, and my father had just died. My head had been a mess.

Once I entered high school, I devoted myself to training so I could attend a physical education college. Naturally, I lost touch with all my old friends.

“Ah, right. Things were like that back then. I’m sorry.”

[554] Well over a hundred million won means more than about $71,000 or €65,000; the phrase gives no upper limit.

Maybe he thought he had made a mistake, because Jihwang's—or Jihoon's—smile turned awkward.

"What are you apologizing for? It's my fault for not getting in touch sooner. Do you still live around here?"

"My whole family lives in Seoul now. My girlfriend and I were on our way back from a trip, and I stopped by because this place came to mind."

"Wow. What a triumphant return."

"Don't make it sound so embarrassing. I still have a long way to go before I can call myself successful."

"You've already succeeded plenty. What more could you want?"

We kept talking and laughing. Most of our conversation was about memories from middle school, but that alone made for an enjoyable time.

A considerable amount of time passed before Jihoon's girlfriend subtly hinted that her legs were hurting.

"Oppa,[555] my legs hurt."

"Hm? Then do you want to wait in the car? I'll talk a little longer and be right there."

"…Is that really what you should be saying?"

I had no intention whatsoever of interfering with my friend's love life, so I took the hint and waved him off.

"No, let's talk about the rest next time."

"Next time? Didn't you say something like that ten years ago, too? 'I'll contact you next time.' Then you left and never contacted me once."

Put that way, I had nothing to say. As I smacked my lips, Jihoon held out a business card.

"Forget it. Call this number right now."

> Myeongdong Guild, Team 1
> Hunter Park Jihoon

Myeongdong Guild might not have ranked among Korea's top ten Guilds, but it was easily in the top twenty. It was a major Guild.

And being in Team 1 meant he was recognized as an elite even there. He was good enough to transfer to any decent mid-sized Guild and easily land a Team Leader position.

I figured he was doing well, but this is more than I expected.

Hiding my surprise, I called the number on the card.

Bzzzz.

[555] Oppa is a Korean term a woman uses to address an older man, including her boyfriend.

Jihoon checked his smartphone and grinned.

“I’ll call you. We have to grab a drink sometime.”

“We’ll see. If I’m busy, I can’t make it. If I’m free, I’ll come.”

“What kind of answer is that? You came up at the last class reunion. People were asking what you were up to.”

“They talked about me?”

“Why do you sound so surprised? You were popular with the other kids.”

“Was I? I spent all day on the field, so I guess I was friendly with the boys, at least.”

“You were popular with the girls, too. A few of them had crushes on you. You seriously never noticed?”

“…Really?”

“Everyone in the class knew. Why were you the only one who didn’t?”

Damn. They should’ve told me sooner… No, wait.

Not that it mattered now that I had Ms. Songi. I was a one-woman man. Now that I’d met my destined partner, none of that mattered.

“We’re planning to get together soon, so come if I call you. You can see your fan club’s faces, too. Okay?”

“O-Okay.”

Yeah, I’m only going to see their faces. They’re just old classmates.

Jihoon gave me a quiet laugh, then stopped as he was opening the driver’s-side door.

“It was good seeing you.”

“Huh? Oh, yeah.”

“See you again.”

Vroom.

As I watched the car disappear with the roar of its large engine, a thought suddenly occurred to me.

“Were we really that close?”

“You two really looked like childhood best friends.”

“Who? Oh, Taekyung?”

“Who else would I mean?”

“What’s with that tone? You didn’t like him?”

“Yeah. I didn’t want to say it because he’s your friend, Oppa,[556] but honestly, he was kind of off.”

“That’s strange. He was really popular when he was young.”

[556] Oppa is a Korean term a woman uses to address an older man, including her boyfriend.

"Why?"

"Plenty of reasons. He was tall, well-built, and great at sports. He was fairly handsome, too. His only problem was that he was completely oblivious when it came to romance."

"Hmm. I didn't care for him. Doesn't he look too much like a complete unemployed bum? What does he do for a living?"

"Hmm. I forgot to ask. He dreamed of becoming a physical education teacher when he was young, so maybe he went into that field."

"He's a twenty-seven-year-old man, so… Is he still in college? Studying for an exam?"

"I don't know either."

"Maybe it's because I'm dating you, but other men just don't measure up. You're handsome, sweet, and incredibly capable."

"Even if it's only lip service, it's nice to hear."

"It isn't. You're a hundred times better than that friend of yours who has nothing going for him but his looks."

"Don't say that. He's a good guy."

"You said you hadn't seen him in ten years. He was even the one who cut off contact. Were you really such close friends that you'd still defend him?"

Park Jihoon smiled gently.

"No. Not at all."

"What do you think?"

The real estate agent's voice was thick with phlegm. He had chain-smoked for an hour while waiting for me, and his complexion looked awful.

"It's nice."

I wasn't just being polite. The two-story detached house with a broad lawn was better than any house I had seen so far.

Four bedrooms, two bathrooms, and a spacious living room.

It looked like something straight out of a fairy tale. I toured the house while half-listening to the real estate agent's detailed explanations, then stepped out through the front gate.

"Listings like this are hard to find. The current owner has several buildings, but he's putting this one up as a quick sale because he's planning to put up another building in Incheon."

"So what's the market price?"

"Exactly what you saw online. 3.38 billion won.[557]"

It was still an amount that made me want to swear, but the house was worth every bit of it.

For my family's safety, and because this place held special meaning for us.

"Please contact me."

"Then…?"

"I'll buy it."

"Oh, you've made an excellent decision, Boss!"

I firmly clasped the hand he offered me.

"Since we're on the subject, would it be all right if I took another look around the neighborhood?"

"…"

"I'm joking."

Look at how hard he was squeezing my hand over one little joke.

"Have a safe trip home."

"Thanks. Take care."

I left the real estate office after putting down a ten-percent deposit. The owner and I had agreed to set a date soon and proceed with the formal purchase. Since he needed cash quickly, everything had been settled without delay.

I'll have to put off moving for a while.

The new house was about an hour from where my family currently lived. Even after buying it, moving in right away would be difficult.

More importantly, Hayeon had her college entrance exam this year.

I would surprise them with the news immediately afterward.

I'll need to remodel the place, too.

I intended to make it as similar as possible to our old home. It had happened a very long time ago, but perhaps because we had lived there for sixteen years, I remembered the layout perfectly.

I'll sign the formal contract and find an interior contractor… What else is there?

I knew how to thrust a spear inside a Gate, but I was a complete novice when it came to any of this. I had no idea where to begin.

I was turning into a dark alley while thinking about this and that when—

Hm?

The back of my neck prickled. My fine hairs stood on end, and the air seemed to shift.

[557] 3.38 billion won is about $2.4 million or €2.2 million.

I sensed someone secretly watching me from behind.

Open Inventory. Summon.

I spun around like lightning, a dagger already in my grip. But…

Meow.

“What? A cat?”

Meow.

A mottled cat jumped down from the wall.

It glanced at me, then slowly wandered away.

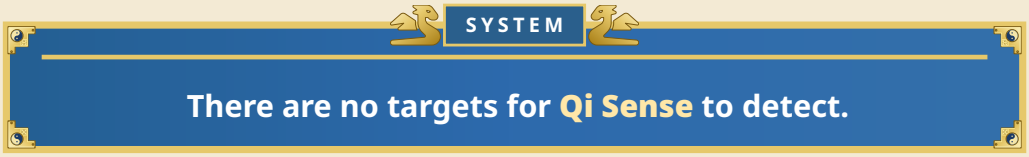
Did I overreact?

My senses had become more acute as they improved. Normally, I would have grown accustomed to them gradually as I developed, but I was progressing too quickly for any adjustment period to matter.

No. Something felt strange this time.

I belatedly raised my Qi Sense, but there was nothing in the deserted alley.

Beep.



If the System said there was nothing, then there was nothing. I must have been especially tired lately.

“Ah, now I suddenly have a craving for samgyetang.[558]”

Since I had thought of it, maybe I should go out to eat with the whole family.

The thought of tender chicken and piping-hot broth put a spring in my step.

In a dark, cramped room, a young man deep in meditation snapped his eyes open.

“Gasp!”

His hair stuck out in every direction, soaked with sweat, and his breathing was ragged. He hurriedly gulped bottled water, then let out a relieved sigh.

“Fuck, that scared me.”

Everything had gone smoothly. In fact, it had been downright boring.

The investigation target happened to be on vacation, and his movements were predictable. Home, convenience store, home. Today, he had traveled as far as an hour away, but tracking him had still been no trouble.

But then…

[558] Samgyetang is a Korean chicken soup made with ginseng.

“What the fuck was that? Why did that bastard suddenly turn around and start pulling that shit?”

The moment he saw that sharp gaze, his heart had dropped. If he had not hurriedly severed the Link with the cat, he might really have been discovered.

“He didn’t know, did he?”

The target was only a C-rank Hunter. Compared to the people he had investigated before, the man was far beneath them.

There’s no way. Who do you think I am?

Hong Woojin, a B-rank mage and information broker, shook his head.

He was a master of tracking and surveillance magic. He couldn’t cast flashy offensive spells, but in this particular field, he prided himself on being the best.

“That’s right. There’s no way. It was just a coincidence. A coincidence.”

Hong Woojin muttered the words like a mantra. Anxiety lingered in his voice.

Chapter 92

> Target Report
>
> Name: Jin Taekyung
>
> Age: 27
>
> Residence: Address xxx-xxx, Hope Goshiwon[559]. Living separately from his family.
>
> Family: Eldest son in a family of one son and one daughter. Father died in an accident eleven years ago. Information on his mother and younger sister attached separately.

Im Chunsoo received the report three days after ordering the investigation. After reading through five densely packed pages, he spoke.

“Hey, Team 1 Leader.”

“Yes, Guild Master.”

The Team 1 Leader sitting across from him answered. Aside from Guild Master Im Chunsoo himself, he was Sangdong Guild’s only A-rank Hunter and Chunsoo’s loyal right-hand man.

“Have you read this report?”

“Not yet.”

“Why not?”

“Because of your instructions, Guild Master. You told me to pass along any new information exactly as it came in, without filtering it first.”

“Then read it now.”

The Team 1 Leader respectfully accepted the report Im Chunsoo held out. His eyes raced across the pages. About ten minutes later, he looked up and muttered,

“This is a little…”

“What do you think of the report?”

“I’ll defer to your judgment, Guild Master.”

“No. Speak frankly.”

After a brief hesitation, the Team 1 Leader answered.

“I think the information is incorrect.”

“Which part, exactly?”

“The subject of the report, Jin Taekyung, was an F-rank Hunter until just two weeks ago. However, he successfully reawakened as a C-rank Hunter. That much is rare, but not impossible.”

---

[559] A goshiwon is a small, inexpensive room-for-rent lodging arrangement, originally associated with students preparing for exams.

“Go on.”

“But according to the testimony of Team Leader Im Changsoo—no, Hunter Im Changsoo—and the others who participated in the raid, Jin Taekyung single-handedly defeated a group of B-rank Minotaurs.”

“At least five. As many as ten, if I remember correctly?”

“Yes. They even said he brought down the boss monster with a single strike.”

“Right. Some measly C-rank Hunter took down a Minotaur Warrior in one blow. Does that make any sense?”

“I don’t think it does.”

“Then what is it?”

He was not asking because he genuinely did not know. He only wanted to confirm once again whether the Team 1 Leader was thinking the same thing he was.

“There are three suspicious possibilities.”

“Let’s hear them.”

“First, the report may be wrong.”

“Who wrote this report? Hong… What was it? Definitely not Hong Gil-dong[560].”

“Hong Woojin. He’s still young and relatively inexperienced, but his skills are well regarded.”

“Right, that Hong Woojin—or Hong Gil-dong[561], or whatever the hell his name is. Check with that bastard again. Put some pressure on him, too. Anyway, what’s the second?”

“Second, Hunter Im Changsoo and the others may have coordinated their stories and lied.”

“Changsoo may be an idiot with his head screwed on wrong, but he’s never lied to me in his life. Continue.”

“The last possibility is that Jin Taekyung is an A-rank Hunter who has not yet been confirmed, or perhaps…”

A troubled look crossed the otherwise composed Team 1 Leader’s face. After a moment, he spoke hesitantly.

“Could he be a third-awakening Hunter?”

“Third awakening?”

“…Yes.”

“Team 1 Leader. It sounds absurd even to you, doesn’t it? A third-awakening Hunter? Does that make any sense?”

The Team 1 Leader lowered his head in lieu of an answer.

Im Chunsoo clicked his tongue at the sight and picked up the report. Extreme cold began to flow from his fingertips.

---

[560] Hong Gil-dong is a legendary Korean outlaw and folk hero.

[561] Hong Gil-dong is a legendary Korean outlaw and folk hero.

Crackle. Crash!

“Rewrite the report. Finish it by the end of this week and put it on my desk when you come in on Monday. Make it nice and clean.”

“Yes, sir.”

“And what about the others from that Peace Guild—or was it Love Guild?”

“…I was just about to report on that.”

“What? You haven’t found out anything?”

“We’ve finished identifying everyone except for three people.”

Im Chunsoo frowned.

“Three? One must be Jin Taekyung. Who are the other two?”

“The Guild Master and Team Leader of Peace Guild.”

He had heard about them from his son. The young Team Leader was an insolent brat, while the middle-aged Guild Master was a clueless man who had done nothing but chuckle throughout the entire raid.

“Why those two?”

“There was a Lock on them.”

“What?”

“Exactly as I said. Not only their personal information, but even their account details are all under security restrictions. The Audit Team is at a loss as well.”

“Did you skimp on the money?”

Running a Guild required help from government agencies. The corrupt officials who worked for them had no qualms about accepting bribes in exchange for information.

“I already gave them plenty…”

“And yet?”

“They seem very reluctant on their end as well. They said an upper agency had placed the security lock, making it difficult for them to touch.”

Im Chunsoo was dumbfounded.

The Guild had existed for less than a month. Its entire membership was too small to fill a single raid team. At that size, it would hardly be strange to call it a social club instead of a Guild.

And yet, who the hell were those bastards to have a Lock placed on them?

“Huh. Look at these bastards.”

“What should we do?”

“Don’t dig any deeper into that for now. Leave it alone. And make damn sure the people we paid this time keep their mouths shut.”

During the Great Cataclysm, Im Chunsoo had been famous for his fiery temper. But running a Guild had taught him one important lesson.

To achieve a goal—and to gain results beyond that goal—one had to remain calm and cautious.

"So aside from those three, you've identified everyone?"

"Yes. Completely."

The Team 1 Leader's meticulous nature had earned Im Chunsoo's trust. Chunsoo nodded.

"Deal with those two locked targets as I said. For now, focus only on Jin Taekyung. Mobilize a few people from the Guild Audit Team and increase the surveillance separately."

"Separately…?"

"Yeah. This report is no good. And when you think about it, our Guild Audit Team is no slouch either, is it?"

"That's true, but…"

The Team 1 Leader faltered. He remembered what Hong Woojin had repeatedly stressed when he commissioned the investigation.

> "The moment I accept this assignment, it becomes my job. Got it? Within a week, I'll find out what color underwear the bastard wore that day, so leave it to me. If you start something on your end and the surveillance target catches on, you'll ruin my job."

Hong Woojin had little experience, but word had spread that he was good at his job. His arrogant tone aside, his professionalism had inspired confidence, and the Team 1 Leader had personally given him his word.

I should probably tell him.

But the objection he was about to raise slipped straight back down his throat at Im Chunsoo's next words.

"Why? Something else you want to say?"

"Oh, no, sir. I'll relay it exactly as you said."

"Good. You can go."

Im Chunsoo had been in a bad mood lately. It was the Team 1 Leader's job to keep him appeased as much as possible and guide him in a favorable direction.

It'll be fine, right? It'll be fine.

Even after leaving the Guild Master's office, the Team 1 Leader could not shake his unease.

Home. Vacation.

Just thinking about those two words made me happy. The reality was every bit as wonderful.

Except…

Bzzzz. Bzzzzzz.

“Ah, this is driving me crazy.”

I swatted a fly with lightning speed. Not with an ordinary palm, either, but one charged with internal energy. I tossed the fly, dead in one strike, into the trash and returned to the sofa.

“Why the hell are there so many fucking flies?”

Hayeon, who had briefly come out into the living room to get a drink of water, let out a deep sigh.

“It’s summer, you idiot, Oppa[562].”

“I’m telling you, this is more than that.”

“How many could there possibly be? There was only one just now.”

“That’s the problem. They keep coming in one at a time. Every time I kill one, another shows up from somewhere.”

“How many have you killed?”

“I swear to heaven, I’ve killed at least a hundred since this morning.”

“Look at you exaggerating. This is why men are…”

“I’m serious!”

“Okay, okay.”

Wow. This was driving me insane. I tore at my hair and swatted another fly. A hundred? That was no exaggeration. What the hell was wrong with this neighborhood that one house could be overrun with so many flies?

Did someone smear honey on the windows?

At first, they had merely been annoying. Like Hayeon said, I assumed they were only around because it was summer.

But the more time passed, the more I realized that something was strange.

It was after I’d killed about thirty of them.

These damn things kept coming in without a break! I would kill one, then another would come in. I would kill that one, and a different fly would take its place.

Even after I closed every window and searched the whole house with Qi Sense, the nightmare of the fly army continued.

Bzzzzzz.

“See? Another one came in before we could even turn around. Where the hell are these things coming from?”

[562] Oppa is how a younger sister addresses an older brother in Korean.

I carefully searched for some tiny gap I had failed to notice, but I could not figure it out. They seemed to be coming through spaces barely large enough for a single ant to pass through.

“Stop swatting them and leave them alone. Then they’ll quiet down.”

“What kind of creative bullshit is that? You think they’ll sit still just because you leave them alone? We obviously won’t be able to sleep with them buzzing all night.”

“The flies in my room stay still.”

“What?”

“There are about three in my room, too. They bothered me at first, so I thought about killing them, but when I left them alone, they stopped flying around and just sat on my desk.”

“That’s only temporary. They probably fly around like crazy when you’re not looking.”

“I think they’re just lazy flies. They haven’t moved even once.”

“Say something that makes sense.”

“I’m serious. Want to bet a hundred thousand won[563]?”

“You even have a hundred thousand won[564]? You’re supposed to be studying for exams.”

“Of course I do. It’s the money you gave me last time.”

“You’re going to bet against me with the allowance I gave you?”

“If you’re scared, you can just die.”

“…Deal.”

Shit. So this was how money went around in circles.

We went straight to Hayeon’s room. She pointed at a fly sitting quietly on her desk and grinned triumphantly.

“See? I was right, wasn’t I? Hurry up and hand over the hundred thousand won[565].”

“Hand over what? We need to run an experiment first.”

I brought my palm down over the fly. I struck at an ordinary person’s speed, slow enough for the fly to dodge easily. But then…

Flinch. Scramble.

The fly jumped in alarm and scurried away as fast as its legs could carry it.

I was dumbfounded. Hayeon looked just as baffled.

“Sis.”

“Y-Yeah?”

---

[563] 100,000 Korean won is about $71 or €65.
[564] 100,000 Korean won is about $71 or €65.
[565] 100,000 Korean won is about $71 or €65.

"Are all flies these days like that?"

"M-Maybe they do? Anyway, give me the hundred thousand won[566]."

"I'll give it to you. I will. But isn't that fly strange?"

"A fly is a fly. That one's just a little strange."

"What kind of fly acts like that? I've seen goblins and Minotaurs in my life, but I've never seen a fly that flies around so little."

The instant I finished speaking—

Bzzzzzz—

"…"

"…"

Suspicious. Way too suspicious.

The timing was questionable enough, but the way its wings moved—as if it were trying hard to look ordinary—was even stranger. Even its flight was awkward and unsteady.

Never mind that. It gives me the creeps. This feeling is weirdly familiar.

Where had I felt something like this before?

Oh, right. That alley I had walked through two days ago, on my way home from viewing the house.

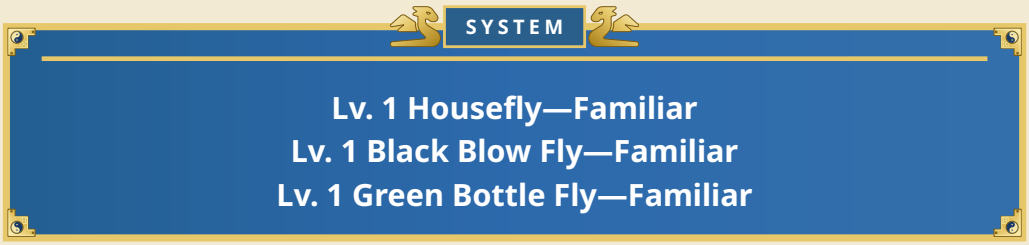
That strange sense of déjà vu, as though someone were watching me.

Am I really just being oversensitive?

I glared at the fly and raised my Qi Sense. Its activation range now extended to a radius of seventy meters[567], spreading into every corner of the house.

And then something no one could have expected happened.

Ding. Ding. Ding.



"…?"

What the hell is this?

[566]100,000 Korean won is about $71 or €65.

[567]Seventy meters is about 230 ft.

Chapter 93

What a bunch of amateurs.

Hong Woojin was furious enough to burst. If he had entered the cat's body like last time, he would have puffed up its fur and hissed.

But right now, he was a rice weevil smaller than a fingernail. The most he could do to express his anger was hide in the gap beneath the refrigerator and wriggle.

Bzzzzzz.

That bastard's coming in again.

The target of his anger was the flies that kept entering the house.

Woojin did not know who was behind them, but whoever it was seemed to think they were being careful by sneaking the flies in one at a time. Instead, they were only putting Jin Taekyung further on guard.

"Ugh, these damn flies."

Whoosh. Smack!

A predictable end. Hong Woojin grew anxious, worried that Jin Taekyung might notice him.

Bastards like that have no professional courtesy, and they're stupid on top of it.

Most Hunters would never have noticed, but he recognized it immediately.

That fly was a Familiar being controlled by a mage. The proof was the incredibly faint mana that only another mage could sense.

Who hired the bastard? Was it Sangdong Guild after all?

If that was the case, he would have to quit this assignment right away. He was a professional with immense pride in his abilities.

He could not tolerate an intruder interfering with his sacred workspace.

I warned them over and over…

No matter how well you handled a job, there were times when a single loach released by an impatient client muddied the water. Just like now.

"Are all flies like that these days?"

"Th-They could be, couldn't they? Anyway, give me the hundred thousand won[568]."

"I will. I'll give it to you, but… don't you think that fly's a little strange?"

Damn it. He knew this would happen.

Swallowing his curses, Hong Woojin wriggled with all his might. He was crawling deeper into a place no human eyes could reach when—

A jolt.

…Huh?

[568] 100,000 won is about $71 or €65.

A strange sensation seized him, as though his body had suddenly floated into the air. It had never happened once since he began using Familiar magic.

Is it because this Familiar is too small?

The sensation lasted only an instant, but Hong Woojin could not shake off his unease. For a moment, he wondered whether it had been some kind of detection spell, but he soon shook his head.

It definitely wasn't magic.

That was not merely because Jin Taekyung was a non-mage Hunter. After all, this was a world where anyone could obtain magical equipment if they had enough money.

But mages recognized their own kind. As a B-rank mage, there was no way he could fail to distinguish a detection spell.

The connection must have weakened for a moment. Yes. That has to be it.

What finally convinced him that he had imagined it was Jin Taekyung's reaction.

"Maybe its wing's injured. This fly's looking pretty weak."

Smack!

With a crisp sound, Jin Taekyung returned to the living room and sprawled out on the sofa. He chuckled at a variety show for a while, but soon the house was filled with loud snoring instead of laughter.

Hrrrnk. Hrrrnk.

Only then did Hong Woojin relax.

Of course. What could a C-rank Hunter who was an F-rank until recently possibly know? What happened two days ago must have been a complete coincidence, too.

The incident from two days ago still lingered in the back of his mind. He had been watching Jin Taekyung through a cat Familiar and had been startled by what happened. For some reason, it had continued to bother him ever since. Now, at last, he felt he could breathe a little easier.

If he can't even recognize a shoddy Familiar like that, then that says it all.

There was only one problem: the lazy bastard had no intention of moving at all…

I'll have to monitor him a little more boldly from now on.

Hong Woojin had chosen a rice weevil from among all the living creatures in the world because he still harbored a sliver of caution toward Jin Taekyung.

But now, it seemed safe to leave the body of this tiny, painfully slow insect.

Let's meet in a different form tomorrow, Jin Taekyung.

Pop.

Hong Woojin severed the Link. The creature hiding beneath the refrigerator was no longer a Familiar. It was nothing more than a small, fragile rice weevil.

And then—

Hrrrnk…

Jin Taekyung's snoring gradually faded before stopping altogether.

A faint presence disappeared. I could sense the change only because I was focusing every one of my senses.

Did he leave?

I opened my eyes while pretending to stretch. The first place I looked was the gap beneath the refrigerator.

Only ten minutes ago, its Level window had carried the tag "Familiar." Not anymore, now that the Link had been severed.

"Yaaawn. Is there anything to eat…?"

I got up from the sofa and casually wandered around the house. Only then could I be certain.

There aren't any Familiars left.

The only things caught by my Qi Sense were a few ordinary flying insects. There was not a Familiar among them.

The incessant buzzing of wings had stopped, too.

They had probably gotten spooked by what just happened, so at least they would not show their faces for the rest of the day.

Damn it. A Familiar?

Familiar magic.

It was a kind of mental magic used by mages. The caster formed a mental connection with the creature chosen as a Familiar and, depending on the caster's skill, could even control it at will.

That was my first time experiencing it firsthand.

A melee Hunter was not automatically a master of every weapon, and mages were the same. Mental magic, in particular, was said to be among the more difficult branches.

Why would people like that come after me?

The reason I thought of them as "people" rather than "someone" was that there had been two Familiars. The two could have been working together, or they might not have been.

Still, I had a rough idea of who had sent them.

Who else could it be but Sangdong Guild?

The only place I had formed some kind of grudge against in the real world was Sangdong Guild. More precisely, Im Changsoo.

When you mess with someone's child, the father comes running.

Im Chunsoo, the A-rank Hunter known for being cold-blooded and foul-tempered.

If what happened today was his order, this would not end easily.

But…

I can't just sit back and take it.

I could let the fact that they had followed me two days ago go. I could tolerate that.

But I could not tolerate what happened today. This was my home, the place where my beloved family lived. They had crossed my one inviolable boundary.

How should I screw these bastards over…?

I was thinking about it when Hayeon's bedroom door flew open.

Her face was stiff. Had they used a Familiar to pull something behind my back? My thoughts grew frantic.

"Oppa[569]."

"What is it? What happened? Is there something strange in your room?"

"No, it's not that."

"Then what is it?"

"Why haven't you given me the hundred thousand won[570]?"

"…"

Right. I had been underestimating you far too much.

The next morning, I left the house as soon as dawn broke.

My eyes felt gritty from staying alert with Qi Sense all night in case another Familiar intruded, but I shook off the fatigue by circulating my qi.

"Where should I take you?"

"Ilsan Lafesta, please."

The taxi sped along the wide-open roads without a hitch, reaching the destination much faster than I had expected.

Is this my first time coming to the Store since I visited once a few years ago?

The Store, located in the center of Ilsan, stood out clearly even from a distance. For one thing, it was overwhelmingly larger and more splendid than the shops around it.

There was another thing that set it apart from ordinary stores. At the entrance, guards in suits were screening the customers.

---

[569] Oppa is a Korean term a woman uses to address an older brother or an older man close to her.

[570] 100,000 won is about $71 or €65.

“Sir, we’re adults, I’m telling you!”

“No.”

“We’re adults, so why aren’t we allowed inside?”

“Because the fingerprint scanner says you’re not adults.”

“Isn’t it broken?”

“No.”

“Ah, shit, just let us in!”

“‘Shit’?”

Five or six teenagers who looked obviously young flinched and took a step back.

“…What?”

“Is that any way to treat customers?”

“Customers? Ha. You little shits, seriously.”

The guard rubbed the corners of his eyes with a weary expression. He was not an ordinary adult man but a hired guard Hunter. Even if a whole crowd of professional fighters came instead of five or six minors, they would not be able to force their way in.

“My customers are Hunters or civilian adults who’ve been issued membership cards. Not high school punks like you.”

“…”

“Are you leaving while I’m asking nicely, or should I call the police?”

People like that existed everywhere. Especially in a Store filled with all kinds of goods ordinary people could never access.

“…Hey, hey. Let’s go.”

Only after the kids loitering out front had left did the guard notice me. He addressed me politely.

“What brings you here?”

“I’d like to purchase something.”

“Please present your membership card or Hunter certification.”

“Here.”

“I’ll need to complete the verification process.”

Only after my certification had been checked and my fingerprints scanned was I given an admission pass.

“As a C-rank Hunter, you may access up to the third floor.”

The Store stocked different items on each floor. I had visited once when I was an F-rank Hunter, but the second floor had been the highest I could access at the time. I had never even gotten to look around above it.

“Have a pleasant time.”

“Thanks. Take care.”

Once I passed through the doors, I saw endless rows of glass display cases.

The space was incomparably larger than an ordinary shop, yet there were only a handful of customers in sight.

Well, it would be strange if this place were crowded.

Only a tiny minority could shop here: Hunters, who made up just 0.1 percent of Korea's population, and civilians with enough social influence to be issued membership cards.

They were the Store's main customers.

"This item was manufactured by domestic S Company and has a built-in alarm spell, making it useful for security…"

"This brooch was made by overseas M Company. With its beautiful, tasteful design and built-in shield spell, it's perfect for your wife's personal protection…"

The employees were busy explaining their products to customers.

That was right. The Store was a kind of luxury department store where people could buy expensive magical goods that were difficult to obtain through ordinary channels.

"Then I'll take that one and this one. Bring me that, too."

"Don't you have anything with better performance? Don't worry about the price. Bring me some options."

There might not have been many customers, but their purchasing power was unmatched.

I was staring blankly at people buying goods that cost at least several million won[571] when a pretty female employee approached and bowed.

"Hello. I'm Assistant Manager Kim Seonhee from the Ilsan Store. I'll be assisting you today."

"Ah, yes."

They had treated me politely the last time I visited, too, but not to this extent.

Now that I was a C-rank Hunter, the customer service was considerably more attentive.

"Is there a particular product you're looking for?"

"I'd like to buy some raid equipment."

The employee's expression brightened. The Store carried countless magical goods, but Hunter equipment was among the most expensive of them all.

And I was a C-rank Hunter. Even a mid-level Hunter could spend hundreds of millions of won[572] on a single piece of equipment.

---

[571] Several million won is roughly 2–9 million won, or about $1,400–$6,400 or €1,300–€5,800.

[572] Hundreds of millions of won is roughly 100–900 million won, or about $71,000–$640,000 or €65,000–€580,000.

Naturally, a sales employee would be delighted at the thought of adding that kind of sale to her record.

"I'll show you to the third floor."

As she turned toward the escalators, I spoke.

"No, please take me to the second floor."

"Pardon? But to purchase C-rank Hunter equipment, you'll need to go to the third floor…"

"It's fine. I'm looking for weapons for low-rank Hunters."

I pretended not to notice her expression darkening and stepped onto the escalator first.

I wonder if they have anything useful for killing rats.

The time had come to fill my Inventory.

"It's fine. I'm looking for weapons for low-rank Hunters."

Assistant Manager Kim Seonhee secretly sighed at the customer's words. As someone unusually concerned about her sales numbers, this was far from welcome news.

I need a good sales record this month if I want to get promoted.

The colleague who had joined the company at the same time as her and worked at the Seoul branch was already a Team Leader. Whether it was luck or business savvy, every customer she encountered was apparently a big spender.

Compared to her…

"This one looks good."

"Ah, yes. This product was manufactured using an F-rank Magic Gem…"

Kim Seonhee quickly pulled herself together and began her explanation. The customer had picked up a dagger with a black-painted blade.

Compared to the other weapons, it was nothing special. It did not even have magic embedded in it. It was just an ordinary consumable.

"How much is it?"

"It's currently on sale as part of our summer promotion, so we're offering it at the low price of 520,000 won[573]."

"Hmm. That's expensive."

"…"

[573] 520,000 won is about $370 or €340.

[574] Several hundred million won is roughly 200–900 million won, or about $140,000–$640,000 or €130,000–€580,000.

How much did a C-rank Hunter make a year again? Didn't their basic allowances alone amount to several hundred million won[574]? Kim Seonhee found it ridiculous, but silently waited for the customer to make his choice.

"Ah, well, I guess it can't be helped. I'll buy it. Give me one."

"…Yes."

The look on his face, as if parting with the money were killing him, was utterly obnoxious. Kim Seonhee swallowed a curse as she picked up the dagger when—

"No. Not that one."

"Excuse me?"

"The one next to it."

Her gaze shifted to the side. One hundred daggers were neatly arranged inside a storage box.

"They're the same product, sir."

"I know. Give me one of those."

"…Are you referring to that storage box?"

"Yes. Give me one box of those. And one box of that, too. And that one…"

That was the moment Assistant Manager Kim Seonhee's worries about her sales numbers disappeared.

Chapter 94

"Three hundred fifty million won[575]."

The employee's voice trembled as she processed the payment, and my hand shook as I passed her the card.

Good lord. Three hundred fifty million won[576]? In barely an hour, I had blown through three years' worth of salary from back when I worked like a dog.

No. Let's look on the bright side.

This was money spent to protect my family from the people watching us.

I could keep earning money anyway, and the things I bought today would last me a long time.

Beep.

- Approval complete.

"Your payment has gone through."

Thanks to me, this young lady was the only one who had hit the jackpot. I took my card back from Assistant Manager Kim Seonhee, whose smile stretched from ear to ear.

"So that's everything, right?"

"Ah, if you give us your address, we can have everything delivered."

"That's all right. I have somewhere to go right now."

Delivery, my ass. The moment I got out of everyone's sight, I could just store everything in my Inventory.

The System sure is convenient at times like this.

With that thought, I accepted enough shopping bags to fill both hands. Of course, they weren't ordinary paper bags. They were tough, sturdy leather shopping bags supposedly made from ogre hide. They had been free gifts, but instead of making me happy, they just made my stomach hurt.

"Take care."

"Please be sure to visit us again!"

"…Ah, yes."

She bowed at a perfect right angle as she held out her business card, and I accepted it.

One obsessed with sales figures. Their name: salesperson.

[575] About $250,000 or €230,000 at the project conversion rates.
[576] About $250,000 or €230,000 at the project conversion rates.

I stopped by a nearby restroom and stored the things I had bought at the Store in my Inventory before hailing a taxi. These days, I regretted never getting my driver's license.

"Apartment A in Ilsan, please."

The moment I sat down in the passenger seat, I pulled out my smartphone and searched for information.

The search term was…

Familiar.

The instant I tapped the search button, related results flooded the screen.

A considerable amount of it was restricted information that ordinary people couldn't access without Hunter certification. One title in particular caught my eye.

No Joke: Don't Use Familiar Magic. It Made My Hair Fall Out.

It was a title that resonated with the soul. How could I not click it?

Ah, so this is where it was posted.

The post was on a famous Korean Hunter forum.

It had made the monthly best list and racked up over a hundred thousand views and more than two thousand comments.

Let's see what it says.

Click!

No Joke: Don't Use Familiar Magic. It Made My Hair Fall Out.

I'm an active B-rank mage.

I've been around for a while and make pretty good money as a freelance Hunter. Please understand that I can't reveal my exact stats.

Anyway, I'm writing this for exactly the reason in the title.

Familiar magic hit me with the hair-loss beam…

I'm still in my twenties, but the top of my head is classmates with a two-thousand-year-old mummy. Fuck me.

Before any assholes start arguing, let me make one thing clear: My family has always had thick hair. I've even seen a picture of my great-grandfather from the Japanese occupation[577], and the man looked like the Rapunzel of Joseon[578].

Anyway, Familiar magic. This shit is a real double-edged sword.

Any of you guys who are mages will know this, but mental magic isn't exactly common. Even civilians can make a living if they learn a single skill, right?

For a mage, mental magic is exactly like that. If you have this one thing, you can live well no matter what.

But fuck, your hair falls out. And it keeps falling out.

Anyone here ever washed their hair with a Superior Potion? I have.

---

[577] Japan ruled Korea from 1910 to 1945.

[578] Joseon was a Korean dynasty that lasted from 1392 to 1897.

You crazy bastards, I spent tens of millions of won[579] washing my hair just once. I tried every kind of crazy shit imaginable, but even that only worked for a little while.

When nothing worked, I finally went to a regular doctor. The bastard let out a long sigh and asked me:

“You’re a mental-magic mage, aren’t you?”

That’s exactly what he said, word for word. I nearly jumped out of my skin and asked how he knew. Then he told me something truly horrifying.

More than ninety percent of mental-magic mages suffer from hair loss. Among the ones who use the more difficult Familiar magic, it’s one hundred percent.

Apparently, we work our brains so hard that sooner or later, even people with thick hair end up bald.

At first, I thought he was talking out of his ass, but I looked into it and found out it was true.

I hurriedly joined a mental-magic mage café[580] and searched for people like me, only to find that ninety-eight of its one hundred members suffered from hair loss.

When they heard about my situation, they said it was already too late. Potions only restore cells temporarily, so using them too often ends up killing the hair-follicle cells instead.

The café[581] offered to upgrade my membership if I posted a review of my medical consultation. I ignored them, quit the café[582], and am now searching for my own cure…

Three-line summary:

1. Mental-magic mages are great. But you lose your hair instead.
2. Potions are useless. Use hair-loss-prevention shampoo and go to a regular hospital instead. Hair must be treated with heart and desperation, not magic.
3. I will not give up.

That’s all.

“…”

By the time I finished reading, my vision had blurred. So even the mages I had always envied—the people who seemed to have everything—had hardships of their own.

“Are you all right, sir?”

---

[579] “Tens of millions of won” is roughly 20–90 million won, or about $14,000–$64,000 and €13,000–€58,000.

[580] A Korean online café is a membership-based internet community, often organized around a shared interest.

[581] A Korean online café is a membership-based internet community, often organized around a shared interest.

[582] A Korean online café is a membership-based internet community, often organized around a shared interest.

“I’m fine… Hngh.”

“What’s wrong?”

“Ah, it’s nothing. I’m fine.”

Of all things, the taxi driver happened to be bald, too. Feeling like a sinner, I lowered my head toward my smartphone.

Below the post, I found more than two thousand comments.

> ㄴ Anonymous#232: Give us the one-line summary.
>
> ㄴ Author: [Comment hidden due to severe profanity.]
>
> ㄴ Anonymous#112: Is the first commenter even human? I cried. I’m rooting for you. Stay strong.
>
> ㄴ Author: Thanks…
>
> ㄴ Anonymous#1512: I don’t know about the rest, but the second commenter seems to be suffering from hair loss, too. But after reading the whole thing, it sounds like you make a lot of money. Can’t you live without some hair? Just wear a good wig.
>
> ㄴ Author: [Comment hidden due to severe profanity.]
>
> ㄴ Anonymous#4885: Wow, I’m seeing a Familiar mage here. You guys don’t realize it, but the author is a real aristocrat. Even among B-ranks, the income doesn’t compare. Neither does the treatment.
>
> ㄴ Author: What good is money when you don’t have hair?
>
> ㄴ Anonymous#4885: Now that I think about it, you’re right.
>
> ㄴ Author: If you’re going to comfort me, see it through, you son of a bitch.
>
> .
>
> .
>
> .
>
> ㄴ Moderator: Congratulations! Your post has been selected as a popular post!
>
> ㄴ Anonymous#5252: □□□□□□□□□□
>
> ㄴ Anonymous#8984: □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□
>
> ㄴ Author: Am I supposed to laugh at this or not?
>
> ㄴ Anonymous#2652: How can you laugh when you don’t have any hair?
>
> ㄴ Author: [Comment hidden due to severe profanity.]
>
> ㄴ Author: Thanks for the overwhelming support. Looks like I’m about to make the monthly best list and enter the Hall of Fame. If you have any questions, leave them below. I’m working right now, but I’ll drop in and answer them whenever I get a chance.

> ㄴ Anonymous#9665: You said you're a freelancer. What kind of work do you mainly do?
>
> ㄴ Author: Freelancer is a nice way of putting it. What I do is similar to running a private detective agency. I've tracked high-level criminals—Hunters, of course—and I've also taken on an affair case at a nouveau riche family's house.
>
> ㄴ Anonymous#915: Oh… You must make a lot. How much?
>
> ㄴ Author: Depends on the job, obviously. Still, after working for a few years, I put up a building in Seoul. The house I live in is in my name too.
>
> ㄴ Anonymous#5252: Show us proof of your house.
>
> ㄴ Author: I'm outside working right now. I'll post proper proof later, so wait until then.
>
> ㄴ Anonymous#9882: What does being at work have to do with it? Familiars are remote-controlled anyway, aren't they?
>
> ㄴ Author: Remote control still has a range limit, dumbass. Do you use your home Wi-Fi while you're traveling in the US?
>
> ㄴ Anonymous#9882: Sry.
>
> ㄴ Author: Five hundred meters[583] is the maximum range for a Familiar connection. I've been increasing it little by little, but it's hard. If the Link gets forcibly severed, my stomach churns and I feel like I'm going to puke. There's also a risk of mana backflow.
>
> ㄴ Anonymous#9882: So you have to stay within five hundred meters[584] no matter what.
>
> ㄴ Author: Yeah. To work safely, maybe three hundred meters[585]? You have to prepare for anything that might happen. Most people probably do the same.

I was scrolling through the comments when I suddenly stopped.

Had I just stumbled across something important?

The connection to a Familiar breaks beyond five hundred meters[586]?

The maximum distance was that much, and the safe working distance was three hundred meters[587].

In other words, if the author's comments were true, then the people who had controlled the Familiars yesterday had been somewhere not far from my house.

And they'd be going bald, too. Maybe completely bald.

[583] Five hundred meters is about 1,640 ft, or 0.31 mi.
[584] Five hundred meters is about 1,640 ft, or 0.31 mi.
[585] Three hundred meters is about 980 ft, or 0.19 mi.
[586] Five hundred meters is about 1,640 ft, or 0.31 mi.
[587] Three hundred meters is about 980 ft, or 0.19 mi.

There was a strong possibility they were wearing wigs, but knowing that couldn't hurt.

I kept searching for information about Familiar magic and managed to put together a few facts.

For a B-rank mage, the maximum Familiar connection distance is five hundred meters[588]. The safe distance is three hundred meters[589]. If a Familiar dies, the Link is forcibly severed, and the caster also takes a slight hit.

And I realized one more thing: why they had gone out of their way to use an expensive Familiar mage to watch me.

What the hell? Tiny Familiars can slip past most detection magic?

It was like this: detection magic was a net, while tiny Familiars like flies and rice weevils were too small to get caught in it.

Of course, there were products with built-in top-of-the-line detection magic capable of catching even those. But when I looked them up, they cost five hundred fifty million won[590]—and that was the summer special price.

"…"

What part of that was supposed to be a summer special? I already had plenty of expenses coming my way. Five hundred million won[591], my ass.

One more reason to catch them myself.

My thoughts suddenly turned to the other Guild members, too. Had Familiars been attached only to my family?

I still didn't know the exact identity of the person who had commissioned this. Sangdong Guild was only the prime suspect.

"That'll be 8,400 won[592]."

"Ah, yes. Here you go."

I paid the taxi fare and got out. The entrance to the apartment complex, which had always looked exactly the same, seemed a little unfamiliar today.

The watcher's presence bothered me like a thorn caught in my throat.

Should I contact Team Leader Choi?

I was looking at his number saved on my smartphone when—

"Oppa[593]!"

A familiar swan[594] in a green tracksuit and round glasses waved at me, her greasy hair tied tightly back.

"Oh, y-yeah."

---

[588] Five hundred meters is about 1,640 ft, or 0.31 mi.
[589] Three hundred meters is about 980 ft, or 0.19 mi.
[590] About $390,000 or €350,000 at the project conversion rates.
[591] About $360,000 or €320,000 at the project conversion rates.
[592] About $6 or €5.40 at the project conversion rates.
[593] Oppa is a term a girl or woman uses to address an older brother or an older man she is close to.
[594] In Korean slang, a "swan" is an unemployed woman.

"What's with that reaction?"

"I guess I'd rather not acknowledge knowing you in public. You could say I'm embarrassed…"

"You're embarrassed by your one and only little sister? Huh?"

"Go buy some clothes. What are you doing wearing a tracksuit again when you left the clothes you bought at the department store last time at home?"

"You should worry about yourself. You're one to talk, when you go around wearing the same kinds of clothes every day."

Hayeon's pointed remark left me speechless for a moment. I had paid three hundred million won[595] only an hour or two ago, but I was still wearing nothing but jeans and a T-shirt. Apparently, the old grime of being an ordinary little citizen, caked on over twenty-seven years, had not yet completely washed off.

"A-Anyway. Where are you going?"

"Where am I going? The convenience store!"

Hayeon, who had been sulking until just now, began grinning foolishly.

What's gotten into her?

I asked in a bemused voice.

"Why are you so excited? Is your heart already pounding at the thought of raiding the convenience store?"

"Raiding, my ass. I'm going to buy canned tuna."

"Canned tuna? Are we having tuna kimchi stew for lunch today?"

"No! We're not!"

"…What's with you today, seriously? Have you been drinking?"

"You'll be like this, too, when you see this little one."

Despite my reaction, Hayeon only continued to grin strangely, unlike her usual self. Then she lowered the zipper of her tracksuit and pulled something out from inside her clothes.

A tiny ball of white-and-yellow fur wriggled in her palm.

Meeoow.

"…A kitten?"

"Cute, right? I went out to sort the recycling earlier, and someone had abandoned it in a box. It had been left there for anyone who wanted to raise it."

"…"

"I don't know what kind of bastard abandoned it, but it's pitiful, isn't it? What did it ever do wrong? Right, Oppa[596]?"

"…Yeah. It's not the animal's fault."

---

[595] About $210,000 or €190,000 at the project conversion rates.

[596] Oppa is a term a girl or woman uses to address an older brother or an older man she is close to.

“I got Mom’s permission to foster it, even if it’s only for a little while. You’re okay with it, too, right?”

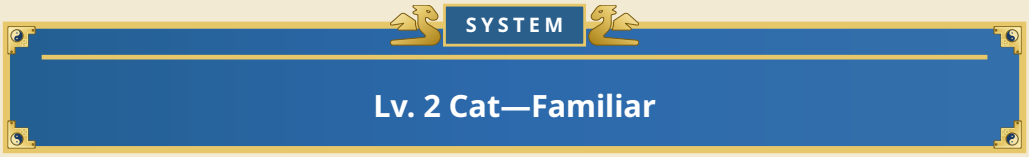
“Me?”

“Yeah. You know how our Lady Kim melts for her eldest son. She told me to get your permission, too, so put in a good word for me when we go inside later.”

“We’ll see.”

“What? You liked animals when you were little.”

I did. I still do, in fact. But this little thing sitting quietly in Hayeon’s palm was…



A little different.

Chapter 95

Heh heh heh. Success.

Hong Woojin smiled smugly. He was a veteran at monitoring his targets' every move and extracting every bit of information from them.

The information that Jin Taekyung's younger sister was crazy about animals—cats in particular—had proved especially useful.

"Meow-meow, answer me. You like being inside the house, don't you?"

The infiltration had been natural and successful. Inside the kitten's body, Hong Woojin let out a roar of joy.

"Miaowww."

"Ahh, so cute! Oppa[597], did you hear that just now? You heard it, right?"

"Yeah. I heard it."

"How can you be so indifferent to such a cute little creature? Are you even human?"

"Then what am I, a beast?"

The problem was Jin Taekyung.

Even the most emotionally dried-up person tended to soften in front of a cute animal, especially a tiny one, but…

"Move over a little. You're blocking the TV."

This guy had none of that. His sensitivity was drier than the Sahara Desert, and his younger sister, Jin Hayeon, grumbled.

"Good grief, there's a limit to how bleak a person can be. Right, Yeoreum?"

"Yeoreum?"

"Yeah. Born in summer, so Midsummer. Pretty, right?"

"Midsummer, my ass. Judging by the size, the kitten looks about three months old. That means it was born in late spring, so call it Late Spring or something."

"…Was that a comment or a fart? Anyway, this kitten's name is Yeoreum from today onward. Right, Yeoreum?"

"Mrowww."

As far as Hong Woojin was concerned, Jin Hayeon deserved most of the credit. Thanks to her, everything was going smoothly.

"Ahh! She answered! Yeoreum, you just answered your big sister, didn't you? Didn't you?"

"Miaow."

"Eek, my heart!"

---

[597] Oppa is a Korean term a girl or woman uses for an older brother or a close older man. Hayeon uses it for her brother, Taekyung.

Heh. What an easy one to handle. A few meows were all it took to make her lose her mind.

This is why high-school girls are… No, wait. It's because my choice of Familiar was excellent.

Hong Woojin was grinning contentedly when—

Jin Taekyung, who had been staring blankly at the TV, casually tossed out a remark.

"Isn't that one male?"

"Huh? Well, that…"

"We don't know yet, do we?"

"Come to think of it, I haven't checked."

"Let's take a look. We can find out."

Huh?

Things were taking a strange turn. His body might currently belong to a cat, but Hong Woojin was still a vigorous young man. As Jin Taekyung's large hand approached, a wave of shame suddenly washed over him.

That filthy bastard is going to look at my junk?

Strictly speaking, it wasn't Hong Woojin's body. They were different species, so naturally their anatomy was different as well.

However, Familiar magic made the caster and Familiar share everything. He couldn't help feeling disgusted.

Absolutely not!

Hong Woojin hurriedly burrowed into Jin Hayeon's arms.

"Mrowww."

"Oh my, I don't think she likes that."

"That's how the world works. Who gets to live doing only what they want?"

"But Yeoreum's a cat."

"Cats are the same. If you want warm feed and even a can of treats, you have to put up with this much."

What a lunatic. He was spouting utter nonsense just because he wanted to check a cat's sex. Grinding his teeth, Hong Woojin clung to his only hope, Jin Hayeon.

He rubbed his entire body against her arm and gave her a pitiful look. Her eyes slowly softened.

"What am I going to do? Yeoreum's so cute I could die."

"Yeah, it's cute. So let's take a look."

"Do it next time. You're scaring her."

"That's just your imagination."

"I'm telling you, Yeoreum doesn't like you, Oppa[598]."

The trick was to let out a whimper at exactly the right moment.

"Mnyaa. Mngh."

"See? I'm right, aren't I?"

"…Then I guess it can't be helped."

"Don't you dare manhandle the kitten. Kittens are sensitive, so you have to be careful with them."

Good. He had gotten past the immediate crisis. Jin Taekyung seemed like a lunatic who lived in his own world, but he was weak when it came to his family.

Having fully absorbed all the background information Sangdong Guild had given him, Hong Woojin thought he was one step ahead.

This is why information matters. You've already fallen right into my trap.

But there was one fact Hong Woojin had never imagined.

"Hey, Sis."

"Yeah?"

"Do you need more spending money?"

"…Are you trying to bribe me so you can have your way with our Yeoreum?"

"Yeah. A hundred thousand won[599]."

"Deal. But be gentle so she doesn't hate you too much, okay?"

"My wallet's on the desk in my room. Go get it."

"Eek!"

"Miaow?"

Jin Hayeon disappeared like a bullet. Hong Woojin let out a cry filled with disbelief.

You said she was so cute you could die! You called her our Yeoreum!

What a shameless little brat.

One minute she had acted ready to give Yeoreum her liver and gallbladder, and now she was abandoning "our Yeoreum" for a mere hundred thousand won[600]?

But he was given no time to lament the realities of capitalist society.

"Come on. Let's play."

Grab.

Jin Taekyung restrained all four of his limbs with lightning speed, a revolting smile on his face.

Hong Woojin screamed desperately.

Let go! Let go, you son of a bitch!

---

[598] Oppa is a Korean term a girl or woman uses for an older brother or a close older man. Hayeon uses it for her brother, Taekyung.

[599] 100,000 Korean won is about $71 or €65.

[600] 100,000 Korean won is about $71 or €65.

"Hiss! Hissss!"

The kitten's fur stood on end as he hissed, catching the attention of his only hope as she rummaged through Jin Taekyung's wallet.

"Oppa[601]!"

"Yeah, take another hundred thousand won[602]."

"Thanks!"

Hey! Hey!

His only hope had fallen and become a slave to capitalism!

Before the shock had even worn off, Jin Taekyung's hot breath swept over him.

"Our Yeoreum, shall we take a look at your little peepee?"

At that desperate, life-or-death moment—

Sever Link!

"Miaowww!"

With a sorrowful cry, all the strength drained out of the kitten's body.

Then Hong Woojin opened his eyes somewhere dark and let out a breath.

"Puhack!"

Since starting work as a Hunter, he had handled around a hundred assignments, large and small, but this was the first time he had ever felt his life was in danger.

He looked down at his forearms, which were covered in goose bumps, and began to gag.

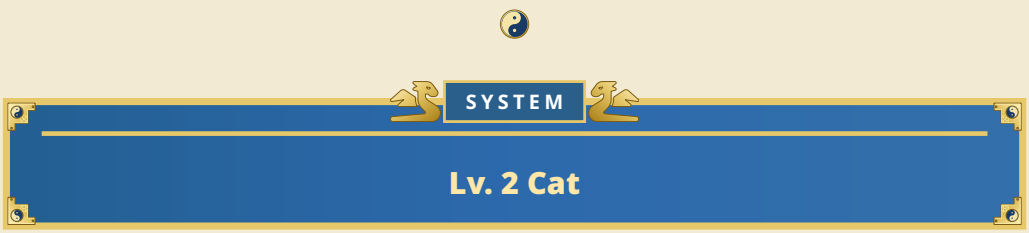
"Urgh."

His stomach churned, and his head throbbed.

It was a side effect of the sudden Link severance. Only after he gulped down the potion he had prepared in advance like cold water could Hong Woojin finally catch his breath.

"Jin Taekyung, that fucking bastard…"

It was the moment he first regretted ever accepting the assignment.



"There he goes."

[601] Oppa is a Korean term a girl or woman uses for an older brother or a close older man. Hayeon uses it for her brother, Taekyung.

[602] 100,000 Korean won is about $71 or €65.

Clicking my tongue, I released the kitten. Was it even three months old? The little thing, smaller than my two palms put together, backed away with a bewildered look.

"Miaow."

Hayeon was leaving my room when she spotted what had happened.

"You didn't do anything mean to our Yeoreum, did you?"

"And you're the one who sold Yeoreum for 200,000 won[603]?"

"…Ahem. Ahem."

"Whatever. Good grief. Of all the things you could've picked up, you had to bring home that."

"What are you talking about? Look how cute she is."

"That's not what I meant… Never mind. Forget it."

The whole story was too long and complicated to explain piece by piece. Besides, I had no intention of telling her.

Imagine telling her that some sinister bastard had entered the body of a cat and was watching us. It was obvious how anxious she would become. My family couldn't find out about what was happening.

Besides, I was the one who had allowed it.

The reason I had let a Familiar into the house wasn't because Hayeon had asked or because Mom had given her permission.

It was because I wanted it.

I didn't know who had hired them, but even if I drove them off now, they would keep trying.

It didn't matter whether the Familiar took the form of an insect like last time or a cat like today.

What mattered was that I already knew what the Familiar was and could swat it away whenever I wanted.

They're definitely somewhere around here.

Within 500 meters[604] of the house. Somewhere inside that radius was a mage controlling the Familiar. If I shook him down, I was sure I'd find the connection.

First I'll punch him in the mouth. Then I'll ask questions.

He had illegally surveilled a civilian, so there was no way he could report me even if I beat him. Just thinking about teaching him a proper lesson made my fists itch.

How dare they snoop around my house?

---

[603] 200,000 Korean won is about $140 or €130.
[604] 500 meters is about 1,640 ft, or 0.31 mi.
[605] 300 million Korean won is about $210,000 or €190,000.

They had interrupted my first vacation in a long time, and thanks to these bastards, I had already spent well over 300 million won[605]. In every respect, this was a losing proposition.

I was watching TV with my face twisted into a scowl when Hayeon cautiously studied my expression and spoke.

“Oppa[606], are you mad?”

“No. What would I be mad about?”

“I’m sorry.”

“…What’s gotten into you? You’re starting to scare me.”

I wasn’t joking. I was more startled than when I had first discovered the Familiar. Since when could she say something like that?

I asked seriously.

“Are you sick?”

“No, it’s just…”

“Then are you hungry?”

“That’s not it…”

Just as Hayeon hesitated, about to say something, a stomach growled from somewhere.

It wasn’t mine. Mom had stepped out to run an errand.

“You’re hungry.”

“Mm, a little?”

“Right. You’re so hungry you’re starting to spout nonsense. You know where my wallet is, right? Order anything you want to eat.”

“Really?”

“Yeah. Up to a hundred thousand won[607].”

“Wow, now that you’re making money, you’ve gotten generous. Our Oppa[608].”

I never thought I’d live to hear her call me “our Oppa[609].” It was the first time I’d heard it since Hayeon had been in middle school, and it gave me goose bumps.

“You’re the Familiar, you little bastard!”

“What are you talking about? Anyway, I can order whatever I want as long as it’s under a hundred thousand won[610]?”

“Yeah. No, wait. Fine. Order everything you want.”

“What about the money left over?”

---

[606] Oppa is a Korean term a girl or woman uses for an older brother or a close older man. Hayeon uses it for her brother, Taekyung.

[607] 100,000 Korean won is about $71 or €65.

[608] Oppa is a Korean term a girl or woman uses for an older brother or a close older man. Hayeon uses it for her brother, Taekyung.

[609] Oppa is a Korean term a girl or woman uses for an older brother or a close older man. Hayeon uses it for her brother, Taekyung.

[610] 100,000 Korean won is about $71 or €65.

"…Did you leave your money with me?"

"The more, the better."

Her shamelessness left me dumbfounded, but at the same time, I was happy.

She had never once asked me for spending money. Judging by the clothes she wore and how she usually looked, she was far more modest than the kids her age I occasionally saw on the street.

What an old soul.

Come to think of it, Hayeon had been like that since she was little. She rarely cried, and she didn't often express her feelings honestly. Her current personality had only developed after she entered high school.

She ought to be allowed to act spoiled once in a while… She grew up too soon.

Maybe even far sooner than I did.

Was that why? None of her actions or words annoyed me in the slightest. If anything, I found her admirable, and I was happy.

"Fine. Take it all. Take everything."

"Really?"

"Yeah."

Hayeon beamed at my words.

"That's a relief. I almost felt bad for nothing."

"What's there to feel bad about?"

"I took three hundred thousand won[611] from your wallet earlier."

"…Huh?"

"But when you said I could have whatever was left after eating within the 100,000-won[612] limit, I felt better."

"Hold on. Didn't I tell you to take two hundred thousand won[613]?"

"It was an impulsive accident."

"…Don't you mean an impulsive crime?"

I take back what I said earlier.

The sight of her back as she hummed her way into her room couldn't have been more irritating.

The head of Sangdong Guild's Security Team frowned.

"A Cat Familiar?"

"Yes, I'm certain."

[611] 300,000 Korean won is about $210 or €190.
[612] 100,000 Korean won is about $71 or €65.
[613] 200,000 Korean won is about $140 or €130.

The person who answered in a firm voice was a member of the Security Team and the Guild's only Familiar mage. He was only a C-grade Hunter, but as a rare mental mage, he was also a core member of the Security Team.

"The target's younger sister is a cat fanatic. Hong Woojin took advantage of that opening perfectly."

"Can't you read the room? You're praising that bastard to my face?"

"I-I'm sorry."

"Team 1 Leader said Hong Woojin called and went ballistic, saying he nearly got exposed because of us."

"…"

"Come to think of it, that bastard is technically on our side, too. But can we afford to be outdone by a freelancer? Don't you know the Guild Master is taking a special interest in this?"

Six people had been assigned to the operation, including the Security Team Leader. One was the Familiar mage. Four were close-combat Hunters specializing in tracking and stealth. The last was the Security Team Leader himself, a B-grade Hunter.

"You seem to be misunderstanding something… We didn't come here just to dig up dirt on one C-grade Hunter."

The Security Team Leader glared menacingly at his team.

The Guild Master had personally ordered this operation. They had to produce results that went beyond the direct order, no matter what.

"Let's do this properly. This came straight from the Guild Master. Are you going to end here? You should get bonuses and promotions too."

The team members silently lowered their heads.

The person most desperate for a bonus and promotion was the Security Team Leader himself. The hysteria of a middle-aged family man whose retirement was slowly approaching was nothing new by this point.

"And you."

The Security Team Leader pointed at the Familiar mage.

"You do the cat, too."

"The cat? They already did that over there."

"What, then? Are you going to put on another pathetic act with a tiny Familiar you can't even control and die like last time?"

"…"

"Do as you're told. The girl's a cat fanatic, isn't she?"

If he was told to use a cat, then he had to use a cat. What choice did he have?

After the Security Team Leader stormed out, the Familiar mage immediately turned on his smartphone and began searching.

Tap. Tap. Tap.

> ### Cats for Adoption in Ilsan

“…Will they let me expense this?”

Chapter 96

Kim Junsu was a C-rank Hunter in Sangdong Guild's Security Team.

He didn't have an ounce of talent for elemental magic, but fortunately, he had awakened as a rare mental mage and was doing pretty well for himself.

Except I can never go home.

What good was owning a house of more than 330 square meters?[614] As Sangdong Guild's only Familiar mage, he never ran out of work.

Raid teams at least got to go home after running a Gate. The Security Team had no such luxury. They had to stay up all night in a different hideout each time.

"Junsu, did you pull an all-nighter?"

"Yes."

A Security Team colleague clicked his tongue at Kim Junsu's hollow-eyed face. He was the one person who had stayed behind to protect their valuable Familiar mage.

"You've got it rough. How does that bastard not set one foot outside?"

"Tell me about it. We've been watching him for days, and he's only gone out twice. Twice. Once to a real-estate office in Goyang, and once to the Ilsan Store."

"This is why smokers make better targets. At least they come outside for a cigarette."

They had acquired a new cat to use as a Familiar and waited all night at the entrance to the apartment building, but the target hadn't budged.

The only incident had come when the cat, tired of waiting, started yowling and nearly got chased away by a security guard.

"Peace Guild? It looked pretty small. Do they even go on raids?"

"They're on vacation right now."

"Vacation?"

"Yeah. A buddy of mine in Team 2 is watching the other Peace Guild members, and he said they're all taking time off."

"Ah… How are things going over there?"

"They pulled out yesterday. There was one woman and one middle-aged man, but it ended quickly. Judging by the Team Leader's reaction, it seems like they turned up something over there, but I don't know the details."

"Phew. We should just do enough to get by and pull out, too."

His colleague gave Kim Junsu a pitying look as he heaved a deep sigh.

"There has to be a reason they specially assigned the Guild's only Familiar mage, right?"

---

[614] 330 square meters is about 3,550 square feet.

“He’s still only a C-rank Hunter. Don’t you think this is going a little overboard?”

“What can we do? When they say jump, we jump. If the Team Leader keeps riding you like he did yesterday, just put up with it.”

“He could stand to ease up. This would’ve been over ages ago if he’d talked things through with that Hong Woojin guy and cooperated properly.”

“He wants to show off for the Guild Master. ‘Our Security Team is far better than Hong Woojin. Look at my outstanding leadership.‘ Besides, it’s almost time for the second-half personnel reshuffle. No wonder the Team Leader’s sweating bullets.”

“…This is driving me insane.”

“Sure is.”

Kim Junsu wanted to tear his hair out, but he held himself back. If he did, the hair that had only just begun sprouting like fresh spring shoots might come right out.

Ah, the doctor said stress makes hair loss worse.

The doctor was a civilian who couldn’t even use the simple Light magic, but if he could give Kim Junsu a full head of hair, Junsu would worship him as Jesus.

Come to think of it, maybe I haven’t lost much hair today.

Kim Junsu was cautiously reaching up to feel the crown of his head when—

“Target confirmed. Target confirmed. Moving!”

A low but urgent voice came through the radio.

The two men in the room—and even the Security Team Leader, who had been snoring in the next room—bolted upright.

Slurp.

The Team Leader wiped the drool from his mouth and shouted, “Hey! Kim Junsu!”

Damn it. I haven’t even had breakfast yet.

Using Familiar magic makes my hair fall out again!

Fuck this. The moment my contract ends, I’m quitting the Guild.

Swallowing back his tears, Kim Junsu drew up his mana. His head grew hot as his consciousness was sucked inward.

Faithful servant, answer my call. Link!

Whoosh!

The next moment, a kitten lying beneath a car snapped its eyes open.

“Myaow.”

I stopped walking.

A black ball of fur had suddenly popped out with a cry.

SYSTEM

Lv. 2 Cat—Familiar

"…"

Another cat. Did these bastards have no creativity at all?

Well, one thing was different. This one's fur was pitch-black.

"Miaow. Miaowww."

The kitten approached with a surprisingly bold stride for something so young, then rubbed its whole body against my slipper. Whoever was controlling it clearly knew how to work a club.

Man. I'm not into getting attention this way.

But the appearance of this new Familiar allowed me to make a new guess.

These guys aren't working together, are they?

Two conspicuous Familiars, both in the form of cats, appearing a day apart? It was hardly a good approach. If anything, it felt like someone had hurriedly copied the first attempt.

"Meow!"

The cat cried as if demanding my attention, and I let out a quiet laugh.

"You little thing. You're cute."

Should I take it with me or not…?

My mind was racing when—

"That cat's pretty affectionate. Is it yours, sir?"

A man approached, dragging his slippers. He looked to be in his early forties, with an utterly ordinary face. His stretched-out T-shirt and soccer shorts stained with ramen broth gave him an approachable air.

"No. I think it's a stray, but it suddenly started acting affectionate."

"Wow, this is totally one of those. A dog-cat."[615]

"Exactly. Just like yesterday. I guess the cats in this neighborhood are pretty affectionate."

"Yesterday?"

"Yeah. I picked one up yesterday too. Another dog-cat."[616]

"Well, that's something."

The man took a drag from his half-smoked cigarette.

"Times like this make you think even animals are brought together with people for a reason. It must think you'd make a good owner. That's why it's cozying up to you."

---

[615] A Korean term for a cat that acts like a dog—friendly and affectionate.

[616] A Korean term for a cat that acts like a dog—friendly and affectionate.

"Come on, what do you mean, a good owner? I think it just has this kind of personality."

"Is that so? Hey, hey, come here."

The cat didn't budge at the man's beckoning.

No, it burrowed between my legs instead.

"Well, look at this one. Young as it is, it already knows how to pick its people."

I only smiled without saying anything, so the man asked, "So, are you going to keep it?"

"I'm not sure. I have something urgent to take care of. If it's still here when I get back, maybe I'll look after it for a few days."

"Who knows if it'll still be here by then. Right, Nabi?"[617]

"Mrow."

"I won't be long. I'm just going to the real-estate office right over there."

"Really? Oh, come to think of it, I've never seen you before, young man. I've lived here a long time, so I know just about everyone. Since you're going to a real-estate office, are you moving into the neighborhood?"

"I live somewhere else. I only come by once in a while to see my family. I just have something to take care of at the real-estate office."

"Ah…"

Phew.

His last breath of smoke scattered in the wind. The man flicked his cigarette butt onto the ground and said, "Well, look at me, holding up a busy man. You're not offended, are you?"

"Not at all."

"Then that's good. If we meet again, let's say hello. We're neighbors, after all."

I answered, "Yes. We're neighbors."

"Then I'll be off. The weather's nice, so I should take a lap around the neighborhood."

The man gave me a good-natured smile and started walking. I watched his retreating back for a moment as he moved away with a loose, swinging gait.

He's a good actor.

"Meow."

Right. You're here, too.

The moment I left the house, I met two actors. Actors wearing the guises of a stray cat and a neighbor.

"I'll be back soon, so wait here quietly, okay?"

The cat tilted its head as if it had no idea what I was talking about.

---

[617] Nabi means "butterfly" in Korean and is also a common name for a cat.

But I knew. It had understood me, and it would still be sitting here even if several hours passed.

And there was one more thing.

There weren't any Hunters living in the building next to ours.

Just as I thought. They aren't working together.

The appearance of the two actors was enough to turn my guess into certainty.

My steps grew even lighter as I headed toward the real-estate office in front of the house.

Late that morning, a middle-aged man in shabby clothes dragged his slippers along while humming to himself. He looked like someone you could see anywhere.

The moment he rounded the corner, he pulled out a cigarette and stuck it between his lips.

"Let's see. Where's my lighter…"

His hand rummaged slowly through his pocket, but his eyes darted around.

Once he had confirmed that no one was nearby, he pulled out something other than a lighter: a miniature radio.

"How was my acting? Maybe I should've become an actor instead of a Hunter. Seems like I'm better at acting than fighting."

"It's me, the Team Leader."

Plop.

The cigarette fell from his mouth. His now-free lips moved soundlessly.

Fuck. I'm screwed.

Kim Gwondong, a C-rank Hunter in the Security Team, hurriedly collected himself and answered.

"Ah, yes, Team Leader."

"Kim Gwondong's pretty good at acting, huh? You could quit the Guild and go to Hollywood."

"I-I'm sorry."

"Don't get scared. That was a compliment. Anyway, how's the target? He didn't catch on, did he?"

"I don't think so."

The Team Leader had already heard the conversation through Kim Junsu, but there was a simple reason he was asking again.

A cat's eyes could not capture everything about the target clearly.

"Are you sure? One hundred percent?"

"Ninety percent."

"You little shit, is ninety percent certain? At times like this, you're supposed to say it confidently and go for it."

"It's dangerous to jump to conclusions."

Kim Gwondong cursed the Team Leader inwardly.

What good would that do? If something goes wrong later, you'll be the first one to rip me a new asshole.

He had to leave himself an escape route. Kim Gwondong's ninety percent would only be complete once the Team Leader supplied the remaining ten.

"That's exactly the attitude I like to see. You know what to do next, right?"

The pleasure in the Team Leader's voice signaled that they had finally reached one hundred percent.

Kim Gwondong subtly changed direction to avoid a resident approaching in the distance.

"Yes. I'll circle the area naturally and keep watch."

"Right. Report immediately if anything unusual happens."

"Yes."

"Keep up the good work, then."

No one overheard the conversation, which lasted just over a minute.

This time, Kim Gwondong took out a real lighter and lit his cigarette. He inhaled deeply.

"Fuck. Lung cancer's going to kill me before a monster does."

The Security Team Leader got busy. There were three external surveillance personnel in total. He had to give instructions to the other two and make sure every precaution was taken.

"Number One."

"Number One here."

"You were listening on the all-team channel, right? What's the situation with the real-estate office the target is heading to?"

"There are two in the nearby shopping district. We've installed magical eavesdropping Equipment in both."

"Good. Where's the target?"

“We haven’t seen him yet… Ah, there he is. He’s approaching from about 300 meters away.”[618]

“Leave your position. We already installed the Equipment, so there’s no need to make contact for no reason.”

“Yes. I’ll report immediately if anything unusual happens.”

“Okay. Number Two?”

“Standing by at my current position.”

A deep voice came over the radio.

The Security Team Leader nodded at the reply from another team member concealed in a nearby shop.

“That bastard might veer off and take another route, so keep a close eye on him.”

“Yes.”

Four C-rank Hunters specializing in stealth and tracking, plus a Familiar mage.

They lacked combat power, but every one of them was a veteran with extensive experience in this field.

It’s overkill for one C-rank Hunter.

At first, he had been somewhat wary. The Guild Master had given them a special warning about the target.

They said he cleared a B-rank Gate alone, I think.

But the more information he gathered about the man, the more he watched him, the more he felt that was not the case at all. The fact that the information had come from Im Changsoo finally put an end to his doubts.

That good-for-nothing bastard made it all up because he didn’t want to get beaten to death.

An ordinary C-rank Hunter you could find anywhere.

In his eyes, that was all Jin Taekyung was.

Beep.

“Target entering the real-estate office.”

A report came over the radio from the team member keeping watch.

Sangdong Guild’s Security Team went on full alert.

[618] 300 meters is about 980 feet.

Chapter 97

"Oh my, welcome!"

An ajumma[619] who looked to be in her forties greeted me in a nasal singsong.

Maybe it was because the real-estate office was so close to home, but she looked vaguely familiar, like someone I'd passed once or twice on my way home.

"A young man! What would you like to drink? Coffee? Yulmu tea?[620] Cola?"

"Coffee, please."

"Black, creamer, or…"

"Black."

"Well, look at you. A young bachelor who knows how to drink his coffee."

I let her rapid-fire chatter go in one ear and out the other as I took a seat. There was something else I needed to pay more attention to than the talkative real-estate ajumma.[621]

This is…

The familiar energy flowing through the real-estate office.

Mana.

Eavesdropping magic?

There was almost no chance it was security magic installed by the owner. Who would put an expensive magic product in a real-estate office instead of their home?

The people watching me had clearly made preparations in advance.

Well, I expected as much.

They were using Familiars, after all. Eavesdropping magic was nothing by comparison.

The question was how many of them there were and where they were hiding…

"Here you go. One coffee."

I accepted the cup with a polite smile.

"Ah, thank you."

I meant it sincerely.

After all, she was about to tell me where their base was.

"So, what brings our handsome boss here?"

"I'm looking for a place."

---

[619] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a middle-aged or married woman.

[620] Yulmu tea is a sweet Korean grain beverage made from roasted Job's tears.

[621] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a middle-aged or married woman.

The eavesdropping magic transmitted their voices with perfect clarity. Kim Junsu, who had briefly deactivated his Familiar magic, exchanged looks with another team member and the Security Team Leader.

“Didn’t that bastard go to a real-estate office recently, too?”

“Yes. He went to one in Goyang. That was before we were assigned to him, so the Team 1 Leader got the information from Hong Woojin and passed it on to us.”

“Junsu’s right. We went to the real-estate office afterward and dug around a little. Apparently, he even put down a deposit.”

“How much does he have in his account right now?”

The Security Team already knew Jin Taekyung’s account balance inside and out.

At the Security Team Leader’s question, a team member quickly pulled out a tablet and brought up the report.

“About 3.7 billion won.[622] Three billion won[623] of that will go toward buying the new house.”

“Are you sure he’s going to buy it?”

“We even heard that he’s planning to set a date with the owner and sign the contract soon, so he definitely intends to purchase it. We looked into it, and apparently it’s the neighborhood where the target lived as a child. It seems to have some special meaning to him.”

“I see…”

The Security Team Leader frowned.

The man was about to pour most of his fortune into a new house. So why was he looking into another house in this neighborhood now?

His Guild is in Bucheon, too.

Whatever he was thinking, the whole thing left him feeling uneasy.

“Hey, turn up the volume a little.”

“Yes, sir.”

The conversation continued to flow into the three men’s ears.

“What kind of conditions are you looking for?”

“Either monthly rent or a jeonse lease.[624]”

“I do have a few, but… as you know, this neighborhood straddles a safety zone, so it’s a little expensive.”

“That’s fine. I’m a Hunter.”

“Oh my, you’re a Hunter? No wonder you’re so fit. What rank are you? Ah, am I being nosy asking something like that?”

“Nothing special. It’s not very high. C-rank.”

---

[622] 3.7 billion won is about $2.6 million or €2.4 million.

[623] Three billion won is about $2.1 million or €1.9 million.

[624] Jeonse is a Korean lease arrangement in which the tenant pays a large lump-sum deposit instead of monthly rent.

“Oh my, oh my. You must make good money. Can I feel your arm? Oh-ho-ho!”

“Ha-ha. Show me some good listings and I’ll think about it. Actually, show me everything you’ve got. Jeonse,[625] places for sale, all of it. If I find something I like, I’ll just buy it.”

The three men listening were dumbfounded.

“That bastard’s having the time of his life.”

“Can you blame him? He lived as an F-rank Hunter, then after his reawakening, big chunks of money started rolling in. Of course his ego’s through the roof.”

“Hmm, true. That’s the age for it.”

They all knew from experience. The feeling of stepping into a new world.

Luxury goods that had once been too expensive even to look at suddenly seemed laughable, and people began looking at you differently.

“That bastard’s right in the middle of it.”

“‘If I find something I like, I’ll buy it,‘ my ass. Once you pay the balance on the house you already contracted for, your account will barely cover a jeonse deposit,[626] you idiot.”

“Still, I’m jealous. What does he eat to have hair that thick?”

Watching Jin Taekyung’s childish, cocky behavior was pathetic, but a quiet laugh escaped them anyway.

Before they knew it, the three men had relaxed. Their ears were still open, but they felt as if they were listening to a radio broadcast.

“How about this place? Around five hundred million won[627] for a jeonse lease?[628] Considering it’s in a safety zone, it’s listed well below market price.”

“Not bad. Are there any others?”

“Of course there are. There’s another listing two buildings over from the one I just showed you… Oh, this one was taken recently. It was monthly rent, but the terms were exceptionally good.”

“Oh, really?”

“Yeah. If you’d come a few days earlier, young man, you could’ve snagged it. The place wasn’t well maintained, but the rent was cheap. Of course, if you have money, remodeling can solve that problem.”

“That’s a shame.”

---

[625] Jeonse is a Korean lease arrangement in which the tenant pays a large lump-sum deposit instead of monthly rent.

[626] Jeonse is a Korean lease arrangement in which the tenant pays a large lump-sum deposit instead of monthly rent.

[627] Five hundred million won is about $360,000 or €320,000.

[628] Jeonse is a Korean lease arrangement in which the tenant pays a large lump-sum deposit instead of monthly rent.

“I’m disappointed too. Some scary-looking man came by and spoke to me in this commanding tone. Did he think he’d left a house in my care or something? I’d much rather hand it over to a young, handsome bachelor, you know. Right?”

“Ugh, sounds like a total boomer.”

“I thought he might be a gangster, so I couldn’t so much as squeak. The smell of an old bachelor was practically pouring off him. I thought I was going to die. Ho-ho-ho.”

Grrrind.

Teeth ground beside them. Kim Junsu and the other team member fought back the laughter threatening to burst out.

It’s the Team Leader.

Definitely the Team Leader.

A gangster-like impression and the smell of an old bachelor. Just hearing that much was enough to identify the Security Team Leader.

His expression was so frightening that there was even a rumor that when he first joined Sangdong Guild, the interviewer had been too scared to look any further and hired him on the spot.

“Has that ajumma[629] lost her mind…?”

The Team Leader ground his teeth and whipped around. The other two men, red-faced from holding back their laughter, hurriedly lowered their heads.

“You two look like you’re having a hard time holding it in.”

“Oh, no, sir.”

“Nothing of the sort, sir.”

They tried desperately to deny it, but the Team Leader was already thoroughly offended. He rose from his seat.

For a single man in his mid-forties, the words old bachelor touched on a subject that absolutely should not be touched.

“I’m going to the sauna to wash off this old-bachelor smell, so have the transcript ready for me to read as soon as I get back.”

“What?”

Kim Junsu and the other team member were dumbfounded.

A C-rank Hunter showing off at a real-estate office and a scatterbrained ajumma.[630] Why would anyone write up a transcript of their completely unremarkable conversation?

“Team Leader, it’s all being saved automatically…”

“Prepare a full-page A4 statement of your individual opinions, too. He’s an important target, so we should gather the team’s input.”

---

[629] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a middle-aged or married woman.

[630] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a middle-aged or married woman.

"…"

"…"

Since when had he ever asked for their opinions? And how could it make sense for the Team Leader to go to a sauna while they were dealing with such an important target?

Their expressions twisted at the narrow-minded superior's petty retaliation.

"Didn't you hear me? Repeat the order back. Execute!"

"…Yes."

"…Execute."

"You bastards have gotten way too lax. You treat your Team Leader like dog shit."

The Security Team Leader glared at his subordinates, snorted angrily, and stormed out of the room.

Bang!

The apartment's front door slammed shut. The two men left behind immediately spat out everything they had been holding in.

"Man, fuck this."

"Isn't this taking things way too far?"

"Why is he taking it out on us because he has an ugly face and can't get married?"

"Is his face the only problem? That ajumma[631] said he spoke in a commanding tone. His personality's rotten, too."

"I'm so damn sick of this. I can't keep doing this."

"Ah, I really can't afford to get stressed out. It'll make even more of my hair fall out."

Kim Junsu muttered in a voice thick with tears and felt the top of his head. He couldn't be sure, but it seemed like at least ten hairs had fallen out in the last few moments.

"What do we do about the transcript and the statements?"

"What do you think? If you don't want to watch the Team Leader throw a fit, you have to write them. Want to go to the hospital and get a medical statement?"

"…"

"Just slap something together. I'll cover for you and say you couldn't write yours because you were using Familiar magic."

After heaving deep sighs, the two men began cursing the Team Leader in earnest.

All the while, the conversation continued through the transmitter.

"It's nice. It faces south, so it gets plenty of sunlight. What about the building next to it? Don't tell me that one's gone, too?"

[631] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a middle-aged or married woman.

“Huh? No, it’s still available. Business has been slow lately, so the places that went recently were… Wait, young man.”

“Yes?”

“Your arm is really firm. Goodness, just look at those muscles and veins.”

“…”

“Young man, come again! Come twice!”

I left the real-estate office with the ajumma’s[632] regretful farewell behind me.

Goose bumps had risen all over the arm her hand had just brushed.

Whether it’s an ajumma[633] or an ajusshi,[634] people who grow old without growing up are all alike when it comes to hitting on younger people.

I left as if fleeing her sticky gaze, but I had already accomplished what I’d gone there to do, so I had no regrets about leaving.

Confirm the listings that were recently sold or leased.

Today was exactly five days after the raid with Im Changsoo.

In other words, the surveillance team couldn’t have been assigned to me more than five days ago.

I tried to act and ask about it indirectly without making it obvious, but…

Knowing that eavesdropping magic was in place, every word and action had been deliberate. I wanted to come across as an unremarkable C-rank Hunter packed full of arrogance and extravagance.

Whether they fell for it or not was another matter.

My conversation with the real-estate ajumma[635] had given me an important clue. I silently muttered the addresses I had memorized in advance.

Building 5, Unit 901. Building 4, Unit 302. Building 3, Unit 202.

These were the three listings that had changed hands in the past five days.

I had used our house as the center point and set the range at a maximum of five hundred meters[636]—the distance Familiar magic could reach.

The watchers were definitely somewhere within that range.

The problem is how to find them.

My goal wasn’t to drive them away. I wanted to catch them, beat the hell out of them, and find out who was behind them.

If I went after the wrong place too soon, they might catch on and run.

---

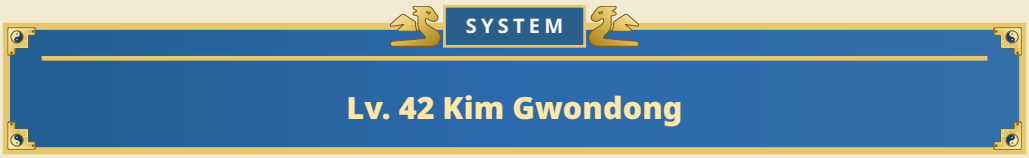
[632] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a middle-aged or married woman.
[633] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a middle-aged or married woman.
[634] Ajusshi is a familiar Korean term for a middle-aged man.
[635] Ajumma is a familiar Korean term for a middle-aged or married woman.
[636] Five hundred meters is about 1,640 ft.

They could be hiding in a car, so I should check the parking lot too.

Searching the nearby homes would tip them off, but I could search the parking lot without looking suspicious.

All I had to do was pretend to take a walk while sweeping the area with Qi Sense.

Game over.



“Oh, we meet again.”

Just like this guy.

I greeted Kim Gwondong when he called out to me.

“Indeed. We meet again.”

“You said you were going to the real-estate office. Finished already?”

“I just asked a few questions. But when I actually went there and looked into it, the house prices weren’t exactly cheap. I ran right back out.”

“That’s this neighborhood for you. Still, you’re doing well for yourself, young man. At your age, all I did was sit at home and eat my parents’ food.”

“Doing well? Ha-ha.”

If he knew what real ability looked like, he’d faint.

Kim Gwondong laughed along, unaware of my thoughts, then spoke.

“Well, I should get going. I need to walk to the park over there and back.”

“You must like taking walks.”

“Huh? It’s not that I do it because I like it. I do it because I need to. You’ll have a hard time too once you reach my age.”

He conspicuously waved his thin arms and legs.

To all appearances, he was just a scrawny, potbellied middle-aged man.

He certainly looks like a civilian.

Anyone else would have fallen for it completely.

But there was no such thing as a Level 42 civilian.

Probably a C-rank Hunter. Judging by his build, he likely specializes in stealth and pursuit.

Once you knew someone was a Hunter, there was plenty you could infer.

I said goodbye to Kim Gwondong.

“Then I’ll see you next time.”

“Maybe you will, maybe you won’t. Ha-ha.”

Well, I definitely wanted to see him.

Of course, when that happened, I wouldn't be parting from him with a smile and a laugh like I was now. I wanted to knock him flat right then and there, but it wasn't time yet.

I gave him a slight bow and turned to leave when his voice came from behind me.

"Oh, right. That cat seemed awfully smart. I saw it on my way over, and it was still there."

He had even given me a friendly reminder not to forget to pick up my Familiar.

And just as he said, the cat was waiting for me in the same spot as before.

"Meow."

Right. Hyung's[637] here, you punk.

[637] Hyung is what a man calls an older brother or an older man he is close to.

Chapter 98

Hong Woojin regretted it.

I didn't think this through.

The intrusion itself had gone perfectly. He had approached the target's cat-loving younger sister and won her heart with a pair of pitiful yet sparkling eyes.

The problem was…

"What does our Yeoreum eat to be this cute? Hmm? Hmm-hmm?"

Meow.

"Yeoreum, why do you keep trying to get out the door? Stay here and play with Sis."

Meow.

"Eek, you're so cute!"

Hiss! Hissssss!

"Oh no, is Yeoreum mad? I'm sorry. Did Sis pet you too much? Okay, I'll stay still, so play on the bed, all right?"

This damn younger sister had absolutely no intention of letting him out. Thanks to her, he had spent more than a day and a half trapped in Jin Hayeon's room.

I should've gone with a dog.

If he had been a dog, getting inside wouldn't have been this easy. But once he was in, he wouldn't have been practically held captive, either. At the very least, they would have taken him out for walks.

This is getting me nowhere.

Swept up by a sense of crisis, Hong Woojin attempted to escape.

Let's see who wins—you or me!

He had begun with that fierce resolve, but then…

Scritch, scritch-scritch-scritch.

"…"

Meow. Myaaaaaow.

"…"

His first attempt failed. He scratched desperately at the door and even yowled as loudly as he could, but Jin Hayeon didn't react even once.

She wasn't even wearing earphones. She simply continued working through her workbook with a fierce look in her eyes and swift movements of her hands.

So this is what it means to be in the top 0.01 percent nationwide.

He had seen it in the initial investigation report. Ever since middle school, she had routinely ranked first or second in her entire school and had earned countless awards in academic competitions. It was hard to forget a record like that.

Only today did Hong Woojin understand why.

Sitting at her desk, she displayed a truly terrifying level of concentration.

Someone like this would make the perfect mage… No, that's not the point.

He continued trying everything he could to disrupt her studies. He pawed at her feet without pause and kept acting cute.

But Jin Hayeon's response was simple.

"Big sis is studying right now. Don't bother me."

She pulled her feet up onto the chair and sat cross-legged, putting them completely out of reach of his tiny body.

That was the limit of being a kitten.

This operation has failed.

Since his plan to disrupt her studies had gone up in smoke, he had no choice but to play his final card. It would deal a serious blow to his human dignity, but this was no time to be picky.

Let's see if you ignore this, too.

Sssssssss.

The pristine white duvet turned yellow.

When nature called, it was best to take care of both kinds of business at once. Having finished both simultaneously, Hong Woojin made a solemn decision.

Fine. Since things have come to this, I might as well do it properly. Like a professional.

He rolled over and over.

It had been five years since he started using Familiar magic. This was the first time he had ever sunk this low.

He kept brainwashing himself.

I'm a professional. I'm a professional. I'm a professional…

A little while later, Jin Hayeon noticed a strange smell and turned around.

By then, it was all over.

Meow.

A duvet stained with urine and feces, and a kitten likewise covered in filth.

"Eek, Yeoreum!"

Startled, Jin Hayeon moved quickly. She pulled off the dirty duvet, then carefully grabbed the kitten by the scruff and lifted it up.

"What are you doing going to the bathroom here when your litter box is right there? We need to wash our Yeoreum."

Yes, go to the door! The door!

This was the moment he had been waiting for.

Even though he was covered in filth and dangling from the hand of a girl who wasn't even twenty, Hong Woojin was filled with joy.

Click.

The door was opening!

The living room he hadn't seen since yesterday came into view!

Meow! Myaaaow!

"That's strange. Why does it seem so happy?"

Jin Hayeon tilted her head.

That was when the front door opened with the familiar electronic tones of someone entering the passcode.

"I'm ho—… What is that?"

"Where have you been—… What's that?"

The siblings stared at each other in bewilderment.

More precisely, they stared at the creatures in each other's hands.

Meow.

Myaow.

The two cats exchanged equally bewildered looks.

That's Hong Woojin?

That guy is the Sangdong Guild's amateur?

And then came the next thought.

Why is he covered in shit from head to toe?

Ah, fuck.

It was the moment the last shred of Hong Woojin's human dignity came crashing down.

"He got poop all over the duvet?"

"Yeah. I guess he had an accident while I was studying for a bit."

An accident, my ass.

Hayeon had kept him in her room, petting and cuddling him nonstop, so he'd put his brain to work trying to escape. That was all.

Myaow…

The cat—no, there were two of them now, so I supposed I should call them by their names.

Anyway, Yeoreum let out a feeble cry, and Hayeon asked worriedly, "He's been listless for a while."

"Hmm. That can happen."

I couldn't say for sure, but his self-loathing had to be off the charts.

He had run into both a fellow professional and his surveillance target while covered in shit.

"Don't worry too much. Cats hate getting wet, you know."

"Is that why? No, he didn't even resist when I washed him earlier. He was completely docile."

"Oh, really?"

"I don't know if it's just my imagination, but he seems kind of out of it. Maybe he knows he made a mess and feels sorry?"

Our Yeoreum had a serious case of post-nut clarity.

I swallowed my laughter and said, "Who knows? Anyway, what are you going to do about the duvet? You'll have to change the sheets, too."

"It's fine. It was an animal, not a person. What's the big deal?"

They said a thoughtlessly thrown stone could kill a frog.

This was exactly that kind of situation. Hayeon's offhand remark turned into a dagger and plunged into someone's heart.

Flinch.

The kitten trembled violently in silence, unable to even cry out.

Meanwhile, the other one was having the time of its life.

Purr. Prrrr.

The black cat made happy noises as it rubbed its face against my leg over and over, and Hayeon gazed at it with utter adoration.

"Where did you bring him from?"

"The entrance to the apartment complex."

"Is he a stray?"

"I guess so. He was alone."

"What? Then his mother might be nearby. You're supposed to watch a kitten for about a day before bringing it home."

"Some man told me he'd been crying alone since yesterday."

"Oh, then he doesn't have a mother."

Flinch!

Its purring and attempts to act cute stopped dead. Without realizing it, Hayeon had scored two kills, and she smiled brightly.

"There, there. You don't have a mother, either. It's okay. From today on, Sis will be your mommy."

"…"

For my little sister, she certainly had a talent for screwing people over with a smile.

The black cat seemed torn between professional duty and the cheap shot at his mom, but soon accepted reality.

Meow.

The sight of it acting cute for its mother's enemy was downright pitiful.

That's the hardship of being a working stiff.

Watching them, I suddenly thought of Mom.

"Where's Mom?"

"I don't know. She went out for an important appointment."

"An appointment?"

"Yeah. She's been going out a lot lately."

What's going on?

Mom had been leaving the house frequently these days. Now that she had some free time after quitting her job, was she finally finding a life of her own?

Come to think of it, she had been acting strange.

Sometimes she would sit there looking as though she had something to say. Other times, she would jump whenever I suddenly spoke to her.

Something had definitely changed around Mom.

She'll tell me when the time is right.

My mother was the person I loved and trusted most in this world. As always, all I could do was trust her and wait.

Of course, listening to her and talking things over at the right time was also a child's duty.

"What are you thinking about so hard?"

"It's nothing. By the way, aren't you going out?"

"What? You sound like you want me to leave."

"Not exactly."

"Hmm. Suspicious. You're not planning to bring a girlfriend over, are you?"

"…"

I wish I had a girlfriend to bring over.

My expression must have revealed my thoughts, because Hayeon hesitated.

"Ah, I'm sorry."

"Don't apologize. It makes me twice as pathetic."

"I'm really sorry."

"You're doing this on purpose, aren't you?"

"Come to think of it, I have some books to return to the library."

She sprinted into her room, threw on her backpack, and came back out at the speed of light.

The front door slammed shut, and the house fell silent.

She really went and gouged out a single man's heart.

A corner of my chest felt hollow, but the stage I had been waiting for had finally been set.

This was a problem I needed to deal with while my family was out of the house, if possible.

Myaow.

Meow.

The two cats, one black and one white, crept toward me and began circling.

Bright eyes. Perked-up ears.

I left the Familiars, who were dying to learn more about me, behind and stepped onto the balcony.

The first thing I saw was the parking lot, where hundreds of cars were lined up.

The parking lot is clear.

Before returning home, I had carried the Familiar in my arms and taken a lap around the apartment complex. To everyone else, I probably looked like an idler out for a walk on a pleasant day.

My real purpose had been to check the vehicles.

The result was nothing suspicious.

Then it has to be one of those apartments.

That confirmed the watchers had made one of the recently sold or leased apartments their base. I recalled the information I had obtained from the real-estate office once more.

Building 5, Unit 901. Building 4, Unit 302. Building 3, Unit 202.

Coincidentally, all three were positioned around our apartment, forming a ring. Their windows also overlooked the building entrances, making them ideal for surveillance.

The watchers could have been in any one of them.

The question is which one they're hiding in…

They were cautious enough to use a Familiar instead of magical Equipment to avoid being discovered.

If I approached recklessly, I would lose them. To make a definite capture, I had no choice but to throw out equally substantial bait.

Time to get started.

Swish. Rustle.

First, I drew every curtain in the house. Though it was the middle of the day, the living room grew dim. Standing in its center, I reached into my pocket.

Inventory open. Mana-detection Equipment.

At the same time, my hand closed around a lump of metal half the size of my palm.

As its name suggested, it was Equipment that could detect mana. I had paid twenty million won[638] for it at the Store.

Next step: search.

I carefully swept through the house with the detection Equipment. After confirming that no mana was being detected inside, I took out my smartphone and called someone.

Beep. Beep. Click.

The call connected, and the other person answered.

“Hello?”

I replied, “It’s me, Jin Taekyung.”

The two Familiars watched me without even seeming to breathe.

The moment Kim Junsu opened his eyes, he shouted.

“He’s here! He’s here!”

The Security Team members, who had been huddled together writing their assessments, jumped in surprise.

“What?”

“Who’s here? Our Team Leader?”

“Or could it be…”

Kim Junsu nodded at the team member who had trailed off.

“The target. This bastard reeks of something rotten.”

“Seriously?”

“Yes. I got a bad feeling when he drew all the curtains as soon as the house was empty, and then he even used detection Equipment to inspect the inside.”

That wasn’t something an ordinary C-rank Hunter would do, especially while on vacation.

Everyone in the room swallowed hard.

“Th-then what?”

“He pulled out his phone and made a call.”

“A call? To whom?”

“I don’t know.”

Kim Junsu furrowed his brow.

“The call was so short that it didn’t even last three minutes. But more than that, I could tell he was being extremely careful about how he addressed the other person.”

“That’s enough. We’ll report it up the chain and have them pull that bastard’s call records.”

[638] Twenty million Korean won is about $14,000 or €13,000 at the project conversion rates.

“Right. Was there anything else?”

“Of course there was. Do you know what he said?”

Ahem. After clearing his throat, he lowered his voice.

“The plan is proceeding without a hitch. Yes, yes. The Sangdong Guild hasn’t noticed anything yet. I have the item with me.”

The team members listening slapped their knees.

“This is it!”

“We finally got something!”

“Wow, I just got chills. What is he, some kind of secret agent?”

At that moment, Kim Gwondong, who had been listening quietly, suddenly spoke.

“Junsu, didn’t that bastard say he had some kind of item?”

“Good observation.”

Kim Jinsoo smiled meaningfully.

“That guy has a USB.”

Chapter 99

The Security Team Leader received a phone call just after finishing up at the sauna.

“Team Leader, it’s me, Kim Gwondong.”

“Yeah. You finish the transcript and assessment?”

“No, sir. That’s not it…”

“You little shit. I cut you some slack because you’re the most senior one there, and now you’re getting careless? Write up that assessment and send it to me within ten minutes.”

“Come on, that’s not it. I’m calling to report something unusual.”

A moment later, the Security Team Leader dropped the roasted egg he was holding.

“He had a USB?”

“Yes. We don’t know who he was talking to, but he said he was keeping the item safe, and he even slipped it out and checked it himself. Junsu saw it with his own eyes, so we’re certain.”

“Th-then what?”

“The target is keeping it on him, apparently… Junsu has no way to do anything about it for now, so I’m reporting it.”

“Junsu—where’s Junsu? Put him on right now.”

“He’s monitoring the target through his Familiar, so that might be difficult.”

The Security Team Leader bit down hard on his lip. His head was a complete mess after hearing the report.

Who was on the other end of that call? Who is the target really? And what the hell is on that USB?

The Security Team Leader’s instincts began to stir.

“Gwondong. This was a special order from the Guild Master. You know that, right? I’ve told you so many times.”

“Everyone knows.”

“If we manage to get even one thing out of this, we all hit the jackpot. I’ll move up, and you’ve put in enough years that you ought to make Team Leader yourself.”

“…It’s not as simple as wishing for it. You know perfectly well they won’t make someone a Team Leader unless they’re at least B-rank.”

“I think this is more than enough to make a real score. I don’t know where that Jin Taekyung bastard crawled out from, but the picture’s obvious. You can tell just by listening to him talk about our Sangdong Guild. Right?”

“I was thinking the same thing.”

The plan was proceeding without a hitch. Sangdong Guild still hadn't noticed anything. And the item was being kept safe.

The conversation between Jin Taekyung and the unidentified person on the other end of the line was meaningful enough even to a third party.

To Sangdong Guild's Security Team, it was unmistakably significant.

"That USB is the key. To put it bluntly, whether it's the Peace Guild Jin Taekyung belongs to or some rival Guild, if they're making a move to bring down our Guild…"

"Then that's seriously high-value intel."

The bonus was a given, and promotion was an option. If he caught the Guild Master's eye, he might even be able to aim for a position among the Guild executives.

At that very moment, the Security Team Leader imagined himself as the Guild Master's right-hand man, while Kim Gwondong became lost in a dream of becoming Sangdong Guild's first C-rank Team Leader.

"Keep watching him. I'll report this up the chain and start by checking Jin Taekyung's call records."

"Yes, sir!"

"I'll change and head over right away. We'll know who the target spoke to by dinner at the latest, so let's work out a plan before then."

The Security Team Leader was about to run to the changing room when Kim Gwondong spoke again.

"Ah, Team Leader. There's one thing I'm worried about…"

"What?"

Anxiety could be heard in Kim Gwondong's voice. And his ominous premonition proved accurate.

"There's Hong Woojin."

"Ah, damn it."

It was a mistake. He had been so excited that he had briefly forgotten about Hong Woojin's existence. The Security Team Leader grew impatient.

It'll be a problem if that bastard moves first.

The Guild Master he knew, Im Chunsoo, was a man who made rewards and punishments absolutely clear.

If a newcomer proved their ability, he would pave the road to advancement for them. But if he decided someone was no good, he would cut them loose without hesitation—even if they had been a Guild member for ten years.

I've seen it more than once or twice.

This wouldn't end with Hong Woojin merely stealing the credit. The Security Team Leader's own position was at stake.

Money? That wasn't the issue. He had devoted half his life to this Guild, and he wanted to see how high he could climb.

"Gwondong."

"Yes."

"That bastard's home alone right now, isn't he?"

"Team Leader, surely not? We can't!"

"I'm not finished."

Unlike Kim Gwondong, whose voice had grown loud, the Security Team Leader remained calm.

"If we subdue the target, take the item, and leave, this ends cleanly. He's only C-rank, after all. There's nothing to be afraid of."

"He's a C-rank who reeks of trouble. If we make the wrong move, we could be the ones who get taken down."

"Taken down? Me, a veteran B-rank, by some rookie who only just awakened as a C-rank? Now that hurts my pride."

"…"

"You don't actually believe what Im Changsoo said, do you? If that were true, it would mean Jin Taekyung was really an A-rank Hunter… If that's the case, you might as well say the Guild Master is a spy. Huh?"

"Come on, why take it that far?"

"Enough. Are you in or not?"

"Fuck, this is driving me crazy."

Kim Gwondong heaved several deep sighs. After a moment, he made his decision.

"If we get caught, we're criminals. You know that, right?"

"I do. I also know we're innocent if we don't get caught."

"Team Leader, you've really got some nerve."

"That's why I'm the Team Leader. What about the others?"

"They're all gathered right now. We mapped out the CCTV coverage on the first day we were deployed, and we have some simple disguise Equipment, too."

"Good."

"When do we start?"

The Security Team Leader licked his dry lips.

"The moment I arrive."

As the old saying went, you had to pull the ox's horn while it was hot. To him, a C-rank Hunter was a soft horn he could yank out one-handed.

It didn't take long for me to realize that the bait had worked.

Meow.

Myaow.

The two Familiars showered me with affection, trying to win me over. But this time was different.

They had struggled up onto the sofa with their short legs, then settled down—not just anywhere, but on my thighs.

They took the bait.

The USB in my pocket was the bait. By now, the watchers must have been dying of curiosity.

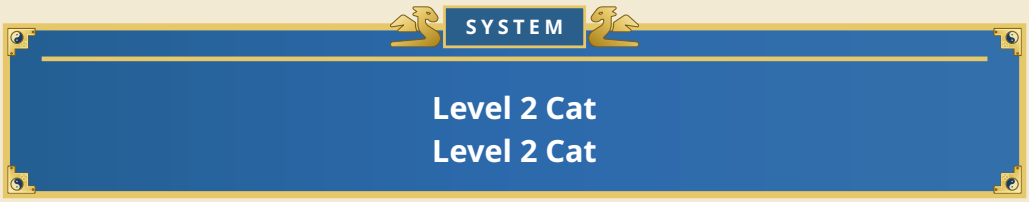
What was the plan I'd mentioned on the phone? Who had I been talking to? And what the hell was on the USB?

I hope they're more daring than I expect.

Neither they nor I stood to gain anything by dragging this out. It was a weekday afternoon, the apartment complex was quiet, and the TV was showing a boring documentary about moving to the countryside to become a farmer.

"Ah, maybe I should visit the hill out back for the first time in a while…"

I muttered to myself and was about to step through the front door when the change I had been waiting for finally came.



The Familiar magic had been dispelled. The meaning was obvious.

They're finally making their move.

In a kitten's body, they couldn't steal the USB from me. But if I, their target, went somewhere secluded on my own, that changed things.

Anyone looking at me would see some middling C-rank Hunter. They'd think they could take it without worry.

Of course, I fully expected a certain amount of violence and intimidation in the process.

But the watchers had gotten one crucial thing wrong.

Me.

They had always been the perpetrators. It had never occurred to them that they might become the victims.

I'm looking forward to this. What kind of bastards are they?

I was going to show them exactly what happened when they stalked someone illegally and without permission.

The information Jin Taekyung had obtained from the real-estate office was only half right. Unlike Sangdong Guild's Security Team, Hong Woojin's hideout was somewhere Taekyung had never expected.

The rooftop of the apartment building where Jin Taekyung lived.

"Whew."

After severing his Link with the Familiar, Hong Woojin opened his eyes inside the tiny supply closet attached to the rooftop.

By slipping the security guard a little money, he had secured the ideal space—roughly five pyeong[639]—for several days.

"This job got horribly tangled up."

Jin Taekyung's suspicious phone call. A USB with unknown contents.

He had finally uncovered something worthy of being called intelligence, but Sangdong Guild had discovered it too.

Hong Woojin stepped out of the supply closet and looked down from the rooftop. Far below, he could see Jin Taekyung just leaving the apartment entrance.

Should I follow him or not?

Considering the job, he should. But something about this felt wrong.

Hong Woojin was watching Jin Taekyung recede into the distance, his eyes conflicted, when—

"Well, look at this."

One person, then another. The way they slowly crawled out was no different from snakes stalking their prey.

Six of them in total.

Each wore different clothes and behaved like an ordinary civilian, but Hong Woojin was in the same line of work. He saw them for what they were.

"Sangdong Guild bastards."

Not one or two, but six of them had come out.

What was more, the target's destination was a deserted hillside. Realizing what was about to happen, Hong Woojin furrowed his brow.

"They're really pulling every dirty trick in the book."

Using force crossed Hong Woojin's line. He should have quit when they deployed the Security Team, despite his repeated warnings when he first accepted the job. But this had gone too far.

I wanted to uncover Jin Taekyung's secrets myself.

He was a man whose identity had made Hong Woojin curious, but this was where it ended. He had a feeling that he shouldn't get involved any further.

---

[639] Pyeong is a traditional Korean unit of floor area. Five pyeong is about 16.5 m^2, or 178 ft^2.

Sangdong Guild, you goddamn thugs.

Clicking his tongue, Hong Woojin pulled out his smartphone and sent a text.

The recipient was the Team 1 Leader. The message was short and simple.

> Team 1 Leader
> I'm dropping the job.

Before leaving the rooftop, he didn't forget to pray for the already-vanished Jin Taekyung's soul.

Well, that was filthy. Let's never see each other again.

In every possible way, the job had brought him nothing but bad luck.

I climbed the mountain path in silence. I had left the hiking trail behind long ago.

But I didn't stop. I kept walking deeper and deeper into the mountain.

At some point, a broad clearing came into view. Weeds had grown thick there, reaching up to my knees. I slowly turned around.

"Looks like you're still out for a walk?"

Kim Gwondong, the middle-aged man I had run into twice before, said nothing. His face hardened.

"No answer? Who's the man beside you?"

"A friend."

If Kim Gwondong had the sort of ordinary face you could see anywhere, the man who answered was his complete opposite.

He was huge, with a vicious face fierce enough to make gangsters cry. A gravelly voice rumbled from between his lips.

"You already know everything, so why did you come all the way here?"

"You kept trailing me from behind, so I wanted to see how far you'd follow. Think of it as training a mutt."

The man burst into a hearty laugh.

"Young punk's got nerve. How old are you?"

"Yeokmasal."[640]

"You've got a real talent for asking for a beating."

"Thanks for the compliment, Mr. Choi Byungil."

The man, Choi Byungil, closed his mouth. His eyes wavered.

"…How did you know?"

[640] Yeokmasal is a traditional Korean notion of a fate that compels someone to wander. The answer also plays on sal, the Korean word used when asking someone's age.

“That’s a trade secret. But are you and Mr. Kim Gwondong really friends? Judging by appearances, you two don’t exactly look like a matching pair.”

This time, it was Kim Gwondong’s turn to panic. But I wasn’t finished.

“Is that hard to answer because you’re not friends? Then I’ll ask the other four. Mr. Park Hyungjin, Mr. Oh Gyuhyeon, Mr. Lee Mincheol, and Mr. Kim Junsu, I’d appreciate an honest answer.”

Bzzzzzz.

The air rippled, and four people dropped straight down.

Each had a Level window floating above his head, and all four looked like they’d seen a ghost.

“Why is everyone so surprised? I was just being considerate so you could breathe easy.”

Choi Byungil gritted his teeth. All traces of his earlier composure had vanished, leaving his face colored by anxiety and bewilderment.

“What the fuck… What kind of bastard are you?”

He had cursed first, so that was the end of respecting my elders. I gave a quiet laugh as I looked at Choi Byungil.

“You still don’t know? You must have dug up every scrap of information about me. If you went so far as to attach Familiars, that says everything.”

“…!”

“I could’ve let it go if I’d been alone at home. But the thought of my family being watched too pissed me off. So I threw out some bait, and you snapped it right up.”

The six watchers trembled.

“Th-then the USB…”

“Oh, that? It’s the porn collection I’ve spent my whole life assembling.”

A treasure of humanity, carefully preserved in my Inventory.

“No way! I definitely had a feeling!”

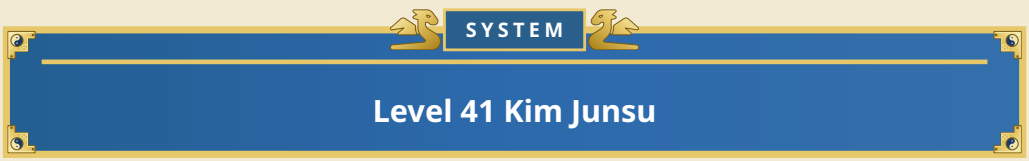
“Well, there are plenty of works in there that defy belief. And any man would get a gut feeling about it.”

I addressed the six of them as they stood there looking utterly crushed.

“You answered honestly, so let me ask you one thing, too.”

One by one, they flinched whenever their eyes met mine.

At last, my gaze settled on a painfully skinny man in his twenties. He was probably the Familiar mage.



“Junsu. Sangdong Guild sent you, didn’t they?”

“Shut your mouth!”

Choi Byungil shouted, but Kim Junsu had already answered.

His bloodless, ashen face was answer enough.

“Okay, Sangdong Guild. I figured as much.”

Choi Byungil’s face stiffened at my words.

“You shouldn’t have said that name out loud.”

“Why? You going to kill me?”

“…I’ll capture you first. Then I’ll think about it.”

“That’s going to be pretty hard.”

Choi Byungil’s Level was in the mid-sixties. His aura was comparable to Im Changsoo’s, while the rest were unremarkable C-ranks around Levels 30 or 40.

The odds of a group that wasn’t even a professional raid team managing to capture me were extremely low.

“Come at me prepared to die. That’s the only way you’ll manage to tie so much as a butterfly knot around my wrist.”

“Get him!”

At Choi Byungil’s shout, the Sangdong Guild watchers began charging at me from all directions.

Whoosh!

The opening move was a dagger dropping toward my shoulder.

I reached toward the trajectory that looked slow to me.

At the same time…

Inventory open. Equip.

Crunch!

The blade, brimming with internal energy, shattered the enemy’s dagger. Shards of metal and someone’s blood spilled across the nameless weeds.

“Come on, you stalker bastards!”

Ssshhhhh!

Chapter 100

Everyone had at least one hobby. Im Chunsoo was no different.

The first thing Team Leader 1 saw when he entered the Guild Master's office was a golf ball rolling toward the door.

Roll, roll. Thunk.

The ball had rolled far wide of the hole and only stopped after striking Team Leader 1's shoe. As he bent down to pick it up, Im Chunsoo waved him off.

"Leave it. Come have some tea."

"Yes, sir."

A brief silence passed between them. After savoring his tea, Im Chunsoo suddenly spoke.

"Smells good, doesn't it?"

"Ah, yes. I suppose it must be good tea."

"This is Longjing tea.[641] I received it as a gift, but to be honest, I don't really know what it is. It's just filthy expensive."

"What?"

"Why are you so surprised?"

"I thought you liked tea."

"Not at all. I only pretend to savor it because I want to look sophisticated. At home, I drink instant coffee."

Team Leader 1 let out a quiet laugh. Im Chunsoo's love of tea was famous among the Guild executives. They had even begun competing to see who could give the Guild Master the better tea.

"A few people are going to be surprised."

"For example?"

"Team Leader 3. He's been bragging that he'll bring back some famous tea from his upcoming business trip to China."

"Fire that bastard. He's lost his mind thinking about gathering weeds instead of doing his job."

"Are you serious?"

"Of course I'm joking. Am I not allowed to joke?"

A light laugh passed between them. Im Chunsoo gulped down the rest of his tea as if it were cold water, then smacked his lips.

"So, when are you going to tell me?"

"Tell you what?"

[641] Longjing, also called Dragon Well, is a Chinese green tea.

“You brought news. I even went out of my way to tell you a secret because you were having trouble spitting it out…”

“Was it that obvious?”

“Look in a mirror before you come in next time. Anyone could tell with a face that grim.”

It wasn’t long before Team Leader 1 finally managed to speak.

“The investigation into the Peace Guild that you ordered previously… has failed.”

“Both of them?”

“Yes. I’m sorry.”

“Explain in more detail.”

“They approached carefully, but they say it would be better not to provoke the Peace Guild Master or Team Leader.”

“I expected as much. I should have made the request personally. In the end, I stayed out of it because of my useless pride, so some of the blame is mine.”

“No, sir. It was my own inadequacy.”

“That’s true, too. Even if those locked-down bastards were out of reach, you should have succeeded with that C-rank Hunter, Jin Taekyung.”

Im Chunsoo shot him a cold glare.

“Why exactly did you fail? I gave you a Familiar mage hired from outside and even assigned the Guild’s Security Team to him.”

“Well, that…”

Team Leader 1 hesitated, then finally forced out the words he had been unable to say.

“We lost contact.”

“Hm? That bastard Hong Woojin?”

“Hong Woojin left a single text message and disappeared. It’s the Security Team we lost contact with.”

“Why the Security Team? Don’t they report in regularly?”

“Yes. Reports come in every two hours, but… the last one was four hours ago.”

“Are you saying the entire Security Team deserted?”

“No. Judging by the circumstances, it’s highly likely Jin Taekyung got to them.”

“What?”

What was that supposed to mean?

As Im Chunsoo stared at him in disbelief, Team Leader 1 handed him a printout.

“Today’s report.”

Only certain sections were printed in red, marking it as an emergency report rather than a routine one.

Im Chunsoo’s eyes raced across the page.

The target had spoken on the phone with an unidentified person, and both the contents of the conversation and the target's actions were suspicious. After reading the report from beginning to end, Im Chunsoo let out a sigh.

"Hah. He's more interesting than I expected. What happened next?"

"The Security Team Leader contacted me directly. He said they needed to pursue the target immediately, so he would act first and report afterward."

"And then they lost contact…"

Deep in thought, Im Chunsoo tapped the table.

Tap. Tap. Tap.

By the time he raised his head, the high-quality wooden table had frozen solid.

"Who did Jin Taekyung call? You must have at least gotten the man's full name, or you wouldn't be showing me this."

"Seong Jinho. A thirty-year-old exam candidate living in Bucheon."

"…Team Leader 1. Did I hear that wrong? An exam candidate, not a Hunter?"

"I checked again myself, but there's no mistake. He's the manager of the goshiwon[642] where Jin Taekyung lives. They're supposedly like sworn brothers."

"Hah. Today keeps surprising me."

Im Chunsoo had expected him to be at least an A-rank Hunter. But what was this? A civilian exam candidate?

Shaking his head, Im Chunsoo rose from his seat.

"Ugh, we really got played. Why does a Guild with only five people have so much to hide?"

"What should we do?"

"What do you mean, what should we do? It's almost dinnertime. We should go have a meal."

"…Sir?"

Im Chunsoo clicked his tongue at the bewildered Team Leader 1.

"Stop talking and follow me."

He was thinking of having dinner in Ilsan that evening.

The six-on-one fight ended in an instant.

To begin with, Choi Byungil was the only one who could exchange blows with me. Even he didn't last long before dropping to his knees.

Well, obviously.

But it seemed to have been a tremendous shock to someone.

[642] A goshiwon is a residence of small, inexpensive rooms, originally associated with people studying for competitive exams.

With both ankles broken, Choi Byungil kept talking to me, his face white as a sheet.

“An A-rank Hunter? Were you hiding your identity?”

“No. I never hid my identity.”

“Tell me your real affiliation! Is Ares Guild making a move against our Sangdong Guild…?”

“I’m with the Peace Guild. And Ares Guild probably doesn’t care about your Guild. You’re in completely different weight classes.”

“Then who was the person you called?”

“How many times do I have to tell you? He’s my goshiwon[643] manager hyung.[644] Would you know him if I said his name was Seong Jinho?”

“This can’t be. This can’t be happening.”

In the end, I had no choice but to use the Mouth-Sealing Technique. I tore strips from his clothes and gagged him, then treated all the remaining wounded, including him.

Of course, I didn’t use the potions I had bought from the Store.

“Wow, Sangdong Guild really gives you guys some serious support.”

Even after looting only what they had brought with them, the quality and quantity of their Equipment and consumables were nothing to sneeze at. I used some of them for treatment, and the rest…

“I’m confiscating this for now. Anyone have a problem with that?”

Naturally, no one raised a hand.

They must have been thoroughly cowed by my overwhelming strength. Even after their injuries were treated, none of them dared to attack me again. They were pretty smart.

“Now, who wants to tell me all about your mission?”

Once again, nobody raised a hand, so I had to choose someone myself.

The choice was easy.

“You.”

“M-me?”

“Yeah, you.”

Kim Junsu, the Familiar mage, flinched before declaring with a resolute expression,

“I’m with the Security Team. I cannot carelessly disclose the Guild’s confidential information to an outsider.”

“Oh.”

I was impressed. At the same time, I grabbed him by the hair and yanked.

---

[643] A goshiwon is a residence of small, inexpensive rooms, originally associated with people studying for competitive exams.

[644] Hyung is a term a man uses for an older brother or an older male friend.

A small sound like tape being ripped came from somewhere, and his wig came clean off. The gleaming bald crown hidden beneath it was exposed.

“What the—!”

“From now on, every time you lie or pretend not to know the answer to one of my questions, I’ll pluck out a handful of hair.”

“…!”

Everything went smoothly after that. All kinds of information poured from the mouth of a balding man desperate to protect his hair at any cost.

“Hong Woojin?”

“Yes. He’s a B-rank mage Team Leader 1 hired from outside. Like me, he specializes in Familiar magic.”

“Really?”

What a waste. I should have caught that bastard and beaten the information out of him, too.

I’ll run into him someday. If it takes too long, I can always track him down myself.

Smacking my lips, I continued extracting information. Whenever Kim Junsu seemed to hesitate, I encouraged him by fiddling with what little hair he had left.

“That’s everything. I swear, that’s all. I may be on the Security Team, but I really don’t know anything else. So please, just spare my hair…”

His tone was full of both resentment and sincerity. The final words in particular struck a chord with me.

That should about wrap things up.

The mastermind behind it was, as expected, the Sangdong Guild—or, more precisely, Im Chunsoo.

After seeing that his spendthrift son had been shaken down for a hundred million won[645] in income, he had immediately started digging into our Guild.

Well, in the end, I turned the tables and robbed him instead.

“The Guild Master won’t let this go.”

“Is that some stock line reserved for weaklings? Forget about invoking your Guild Master and worry about cleaning up your own shit.”

“…Tch.”

At my sharp retort, Choi Byungil lowered his head in frustration. Still, he wasn’t entirely wrong.

The Sangdong Guild Master is going to be pretty pissed when he finds out.

He had sent his subordinates to watch me, only for them to get robbed and captured instead. For the Guild Master—and the Guild as a whole—this was about as fucking humiliating as it got.

[645] One hundred million Korean won is about $71,000 or €65,000 at the project rates.

Given the seriousness of the matter, I could only hope they would quietly bury it and move on.

Should I call Team Leader Choi?

I was holding my smartphone, still deliberating, when it happened.

010-xxxx-xxxx

A call from a number I didn't recognize.

What was this?

For some reason, I felt strangely tense as I answered.

"Hello?"

"Come down. I'm waiting below."

"Huh? I think you have the wrong number."

"Jin Taekyung. That's you, isn't it?"

"Well, yes, but… who are you?"

"My name is Im Chunsoo. I heard you have a few of my people with you."

"…"

"Are you listening?"

I was listening. I just couldn't speak.

The Guild Master of a mid-sized Guild had come all the way here himself to meet me. And it was Im Chunsoo, of all people—the man notorious for his temper.

"Come down. We can clear up any misunderstandings over a meal."

There was no misunderstanding to clear up, but I had no idea what would happen if I said, "No."

Hadn't the man already found out my location?

In the end, I had only one option.

"I'll come down now."

Im Chunsoo made a powerful first impression. He was younger than I had expected, and although his eyes seemed gentle, they burned with heat.

Fiery.

Ironically, that was my first thought upon meeting a master of ice magic.

"Hello. I'm Jin Taekyung."

"I'm Im Chunsoo."

Unlike his burning gaze, his voice was cold. At last, he seemed like someone who deserved the nickname Frozen.

"It's strange seeing in person a face I've only seen in report photos."

There were actually people who could admit so bluntly and without embarrassment that they had dug into my background.

“What about my people?”

“They’re upstairs.”

“Any fatalities?”

“Of course not. I’d hate to become a criminal.”

“I appreciate that.”

Im Chunsoo gave me a slight nod.

“My people got impatient and made a mistake. Can you let it slide?”

“If there’s reasonable compensation.”

Im Chunsoo gave a short laugh, while the man beside him, who looked like a Team Leader, frowned.

“Young man, you have no manners.”

“I can be like that… but it feels a little strange hearing it from the people who put me under surveillance.”

“Even so—”

The man couldn’t continue. Im Chunsoo raised a hand to stop him.

“Team Leader 1, go upstairs and release my people.”

“…Yes, Guild Master.”

If Kim Butler possessed a gentle charisma, this man possessed a rough one. Maybe it was because they were both mages. Somehow, the two men overlapped in my mind.

“Come take a walk with me.”

Im Chunsoo went ahead, and I followed behind him.

“Do you know something?”

After walking briskly for a while, Im Chunsoo suddenly spoke.

“Once I have a grudge against someone, I have to see it through to the end. I don’t know about you, but that’s the kind of person I am.”

Very Murim of him.

The strong devour the weak. Survival of the fittest. It seemed this man had the blood of a Murim tough guy running through his veins, too.

“That’s how I built the Sangdong Guild. I climbed higher by stepping on what I had brought down and salvaging whatever I could.”

“I see.”

“What about the Peace Guild?”

“…What do you mean?”

“The past decade has been dull. We’re allies with every nearby Guild, and we haven’t had a rival for a long time. Then you people appeared.”

I looked into his eyes, where curiosity and passion seemed to boil, and had only one thought.

This is dangerous.

Im Chunsoo continued, regardless.

“Your Guild Master and Team Leader are people even I can’t easily access information on… But more than anything, your existence has stirred me up.”

We were climbing a hill now. Despite his considerable age, Im Chunsoo didn’t seem short of breath.

“Do you know why I came all the way here?”

“To see me.”

“You’re only half right.”

Im Chunsoo’s footsteps stopped. Slowly turning around, he released a frigid chill from his entire body.

“At my age, time is money. I’m not so extravagant that I’d come all the way here just to see your face.”

Frozen. The seasoned A-rank mage who had fought his way through the Great Cataclysm himself.

The moment he extended his hand toward me—

Hissssss.

A dozen or so ice spikes formed in the empty air above my head. The midsummer air froze, and frost settled over the scorching dirt path.

I’d been well and truly caught.

I had thought he was an old man with some sense of propriety. I never imagined he would launch straight into something like this.

“Do you really have to go this far?”

“I’m going this far because it’s you.”

“I’m only a C-rank.”

“Exactly. Let’s see what that C-rank Hunter can do.”

The moment he finished speaking, Im Chunsoo clenched his fist. The ice spikes, streaming with biting cold, shot toward me.

Whoosh!

But they couldn’t even touch the hem of my clothes.

“Rise up. Fire Wall.”

At the sound of a clear voice, the mana permeating the air began to churn. The ground, which had been frosted over by Im Chunsoo’s magic, melted as flames surged upward.

Fwoosh! Roar!

It was a wall of fire in the most literal sense. Blue flames swallowed the ice spikes and split the space between Im Chunsoo and me.

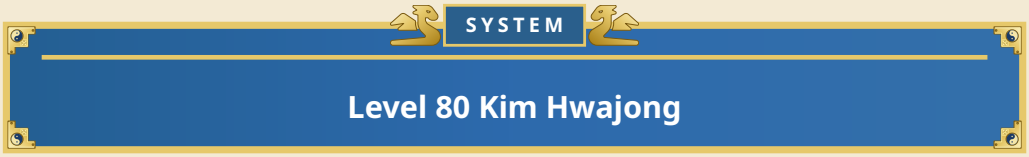
Beyond the wavering flames, Im Chunsoo cried out in shock.

“This is…!”

But I wasn’t looking at Im Chunsoo.

A man standing behind him at the entrance to the hiking trail greeted us in a gentle voice.

“I’m glad I’m not late. You too, Chunsoo.”



Kim Hwajong.

Kim Butler had arrived.

Chapter 101

What the hell is this?

I was dumbfounded. Butler Kim's appearance was unexpected, but that was nothing compared to the words he had directed at Im Chunsoo.

Chunsoo? You?

Did these two know each other?

Come to think of it, Butler Kim and Im Chunsoo had a lot in common. They were around the same age, and both had long careers as Hunters.

Now that I think about it, Butler Kim was active as a Hunter during the Great Cataclysm, too.

I had never heard it directly from him, but I had suspected as much. Looking back and forth between the two men, I carefully asked,

"Are you two close?"

Im Chunsoo's pupils quivered.

When Im Chunsoo first received the report on the Peace Guild, he had doubted his own eyes.

There, in the photograph, was a face from his hazy memories—a face he had been certain he would never see again.

"Wh-who did you say this man was?"

"Peace Guild Master Kim Hwajong. He's fifty-five years old and a B-rank Hunter."

"Kim Hwajong? A B-rank Hunter?"

"Yes. Is something wrong?"

"No, no. He looks like someone I used to know. I mistook him for that person."

That figures.

Im Chunsoo let out a sigh of relief.

The face did resemble him a little, but that was all. More importantly, hadn't that man died over thirty years ago?

No matter how bizarre the world had become, the dead could not come back to life.

Even if that bastard had come back to life, he wouldn't be rotting away in a place like this. I simply mistook him for some washed-up old B-rank Hunter.

That day, Im Chunsoo drank a glass of soju[646] for the first time in a long while and tried to shake off his uneasy feelings. It was an attempt to cast off the terrible memories that had clung to his ankles even after he turned fifty.

[646] Soju is a Korean distilled alcoholic drink, commonly made from rice or other starches.

Damn. I'm this old, and I'm still like this.

Later, when he heard that Kim Hwajong's information was protected by airtight security, he had even felt a chill run down his spine.

Could it be? No. There's no way.

But then… why did ominous premonitions never turn out to be wrong?

"Rise up. Fire Wall."

A quiet voice chanting a spell rang out, and a wall of fire surged upward.

Fwoosh! Fwoosh!

Blue flames burning at an extreme temperature vaporized the ice spikes, which were harder than steel, without leaving a trace.

And then—

"I'm glad I'm not too late. You too, Chunsoo."

The moment he heard the voice he could never forget, not even in his dreams, Im Chunsoo remembered.

The terror of being under that man's thumb.

The humiliation of rolling around on the ground just to survive.

Fuck… I'm screwed.

As he stood frozen like a stone, Jin Taekyung asked him,

"Are you two close?"

What? Close?

Im Chunsoo swallowed the torrent of curses rising from deep in his lungs and turned around.

There stood the man he had believed long dead.

"I-Instructor."

Butler Kim smiled gently. It was the smile of a demon still deeply engraved in Im Chunsoo's mind, even after all these years.

"Twenty-eighth Regiment, First Battalion, Second Company. Im Chunsoo. Yes, I recognized you the moment I saw you."

The words resonated in his very soul.

Im Chunsoo's hunched back straightened. His heels came together at a forty-five-degree angle, and his gaze turned fifteen degrees upward toward the front.

After a series of movements as fast as lightning, a thunderous shout burst out.

"Trainee Number One! Im! Chun! Soo!"

The mountain shook as he bellowed out his military identification for the first time in thirty years.

When Team Leader 1 reached the top of the mountain, he found grass splattered with blood in several places and the Security Team trussed up in magical ropes.

What a disgraceful sight.

Clicking his tongue inwardly, he drew his sword and cut them loose.

They had all shed some blood, but none of them appeared seriously injured. Jin Taekyung seemed to have shown them at least the bare minimum of consideration.

At this level, he's either a top-tier B-rank… or an A-rank Hunter.

That was Team Leader 1's assessment of Jin Taekyung's strength.

For one man, the walk back down the mountain was sheer hell.

"Why did you do it? We might have been able to smooth over the surveillance, but what happened today could amount to attempted murder. Did you even consider the consequences before resorting to violence?"

"…I'm sorry."

At Team Leader 1's words, the Security Team Leader hung his head.

He had gone so far as to make a reckless show of force, only to have Jin Taekyung wipe the floor with them. Even if he had ten mouths, he would have had nothing to say.

"The Guild Master is deeply disappointed."

"Th-then?"

"A written apology and a pay cut are a given. Be prepared for worse."

"Are you talking about resignation?"

"That's up to the Guild Master."

"Team Leader, perhaps…"

"Let me tell you up front: don't ask me for any favors. I don't have any interest in taking the side of someone who smeared the name of the company I work for. And I have no intention of going against the Guild Master's wishes."

"…"

"Whew."

Team Leader 1 let out an irritated sigh.

That was when a booming shout echoed from far away.

—Trainee Number One! Im! Chun! Soo!

"…"

"…"

What was that? Were they hearing things?

Team Leader 1 and even the Security Team members, who had all looked ready to die, jumped in surprise. The first to recover his composure was the Security Team Leader.

“Team Leader 1, I’m sorry to bring this up in this kind of atmosphere, but I think I just heard the Guild Master’s voice.”

Team Leader 1, who had been cleaning out his ears, opened his eyes wide.

“…You heard it too?”

“We heard it, too.”

“We couldn’t tell whether it was the Guild Master’s voice, though… I think we heard his name.”

“That was a person’s name? I thought it was just someone screaming.”

“Really? I thought it sounded like someone giving their name and rank.”

Team Leader 1’s face hardened as he listened to the Security Team whispering among themselves.

“Who just said that? What was that about giving a name and rank?”

To him, Im Chunsoo was a respected Senior as well as his superior.

He was a peerless Hunter who had been active since the Great Cataclysm—a war hero. And they were saying he had suddenly reported his military identification?

Team Leader 1 had never imagined such a thing. He couldn’t imagine it.

“Do you still have the leisure to spout this kind of nonsense? Do you think this is something people in their right minds would say?”

“S-sorry.”

“We must have misheard.”

“Get a grip, all of you. Understood?”

Team Leader 1 had just resumed walking after delivering the warning when it happened again.

—No, sirrrrr!

“…”

—I’ll correct it, sirrrr!

“…”

It was the soul-deep roar of a private second class.

A moment later, Team Leader 1’s tightly sealed mouth finally opened.

“From this moment on, we run at full speed. Move!”

“M-Move!”

Everyone gathered there was at least a C-rank Hunter. They were superhuman beings who had already far surpassed the limits of ordinary people.

They thundered downhill like runaway locomotives and reached the hiking-trail entrance in under five minutes.

“Slow as hell. You’re only getting here now?”

“Guild Master!”

“Keep it down. You’ll burst my eardrums.”

Team Leader 1 sighed in relief when he saw Im Chunsoo looking the same as ever.

“I thought something might have happened…”

“Something? Was there anything strange?”

“N-no, sir. But where did that Jin Taekyung bastard go?”

“I gave him a talking-to and sent him on his way. After speaking with him, I found out he was a better fellow than I expected. Why?”

“I thought he might have caused some kind of disturbance.”

“Oh, you mean the guy who was shouting earlier?”

“Yes, that’s right. But the voice sounded exactly…”

He couldn’t bring himself to finish.

Exactly like yours, Guild Master.

Im Chunsoo glared at him.

“Exactly like what?”

“Oh, it was nothing.”

“How bland. Some greenhorns were playing army down there, so I chased them away. Do colleges still have hazing culture these days?”

“Ah, I see.”

“What was it? I made them do some PT exercises for a while, and they looked ready to die.”

Team Leader 1 felt all his lingering suspicions disappear.

I must have been out of my mind. How dare I even think such a thing?

While he reflected deeply on his mistake, Im Chunsoo laid into the Security Team.

“Security Team Leader.”

“Y-yes, sir!”

“Well, look at that. You certainly know how to answer. After causing this mess, are you still a Team Leader just because you’re technically still a Team Leader?”

“I’m sorry!”

“Are the others keeping their mouths shut because they did such a good job? Do you want me to make my sword dance today?”

“We’re sorry, Guild Master!”

Team Leader 1 watched the scene with a pleased smile.

Every so often, there were people who spread the rumor that Im Chunsoo had a godawful personality. But after watching him up close, Team Leader 1 knew better. He was a charismatic superior and an outstanding Senior in life.

Guild Master. I’ll follow you forever.

As he gazed at Im Chunsoo’s back with boundless respect, Team Leader 1 suddenly cocked his head.

…But why is there dirt on the Guild Master’s back?

He must have scolded those kids rather intensely.

“We’ve arrived.”

At Butler Kim’s words, sitting in the passenger seat, I came to my senses with a start and looked around. Through the window, I could see the entrance to an apartment complex.

When did we get here?

“Th-thank you.”

“Don’t mention it.”

A smile appeared on his handsomely lined face. He looked like a middle-aged actor who had once ruled an era.

No, this man really did rule an era, too.

Until now, I had thought of him as nothing more than a Senior Hunter from a distant generation. But that meant I hadn’t understood Butler Kim at all.

He worked an A-rank mage like a dog—and Im Chunsoo, no less.

He had made a former war hero do a hundred sets of PT Exercise No. 8[647], then later kicked him in the shin with his dress shoe. Even now, the way he had calmly berated Im Chunsoo in that gentle voice sent chills down my spine.

“Trainee, who uses mana during PT exercises?”

Whack!

“Trainee Number One Im Chunsoo. S-sorry, sir.”

“Does it hurt? Now that you’ve gotten older, has your voice gotten quieter, too?”

“No, sirrrrr!”

“Attention. At ease. Attention. At ease.”

Snap-snap-snap-snap!

“On your backs. On your fronts. On your backs. On your backs.”

Gasp.

“Trainee, didn’t you hear this Instructor say on your backs? Get your head straight.”

“I’ll correct it, sirrrr!”

“And why are you bullying an innocent junior? Hasn’t this Instructor told you time and again that Seniors and juniors should help each other?”

“S-sorry, sir.”

“Repeat after me. Cherish your junior on the way down. Cherish your junior on the way up. One. Two.”

“Cherish my junior!”

[647] PT Exercise No. 8 is a numbered physical-training drill in Korean military-style calisthenics.

"Trainee, I remember you're Class 25. Am I right?"

"Trainee Number One Im Chunsoo. Yes, sir."

"This Instructor is Class 3. If what happened today gets out or happens again, Classes 4 through 24 will assemble without exception."

"…"

"Why aren't you answering? Prepare for squat jumps."

"P-prepare, sir…"

He worked him over, and over, and over again.

It was the kind of sight you couldn't see even if you paid for it. If the Sangdong Guild members had witnessed it, the Guild might have had to close its doors that very day.

Who the hell is Butler Kim, really?

Being Class 3 at the Hunter Training Center meant he could line up every Guild Master in the country on a parade ground and beat every last one of them with a bat.

And he had been an Instructor, no less.

It wouldn't be an exaggeration to say that nearly every mage from the early days of the Great Cataclysm had passed through his hands.

He's at least A-rank as a mage, too.

I could tell just by watching Im Chunsoo take his punishment without daring to make a peep. Butler Kim surpassed him in both seniority and skill.

There was probably also an elemental advantage between ice and fire. You could say Butler Kim was the one who taught Im Chunsoo and raised him to his current position.

But…

Why was someone that accomplished working as a butler?

I stole a sidelong glance at Butler Kim, only for our eyes to meet.

"You seem to have a lot you want to ask."

"To be honest, I do."

My curiosity was killing me.

Seeing my thoughts written plainly across my face, Butler Kim curled up the corners of his mouth.

"It's a long story."

"That's fine. I'm on vacation, so I have plenty of time."

"Ah, then this is a good opportunity to hear your story as well, Mr. Jin. I already have more than one or two questions myself."

"Now that I think about it, it's already dinnertime. Tomorrow is the last day of my vacation, so I have to sign a real-estate contract, too. Hahaha."

"…"

Chapter 102

Everyone has their own area of expertise.

I knew Gate formations, how to respond in a crisis, and the weaknesses of various monsters like the back of my hand. By the same token, I knew next to nothing about legal matters.

“Thank you for your hard work.”

“You too.”

The man in the angular horn-rimmed glasses was the judicial scrivener[648] I had hired to handle the purchase of the house. Across from me, the homeowner and the realtor were exchanging farewells and getting to their feet.

“Congratulations on the contract. You’ve done well for yourself at such a young age.”

“Ah, yes. Thank you.”

As I shook hands with the homeowner, something finally sank in.

This is my house now.

And it was my family’s house.

A home we had reclaimed after no less than eleven years.

I looked around the cramped room.

The bed whose springs had given out long ago. A small wardrobe that could barely hold a few outfits. A desk with paint peeling off in places, with a small TV sitting on top.

Once I packed my clothes and assorted belongings, aside from the things I had to leave behind, they filled a single cardboard box.

Just one box.

The past seven years were contained inside it. I was staring around the room, my chest strangely tight, when a voice came from behind me.

“You leaving?”

I knew who it was without turning around.

He was someone I couldn’t leave out of my seven years.

“Yeah.”

“What about the house?”

“I found one, so I’m moving out.”

“Bastard, that was fast. Has your family already moved into the new place?”

[648] In South Korea, a judicial scrivener handles legal and registration work for matters such as real-estate transactions.

"No. It's still a secret. I'm planning to move in first and tell them after my sister finishes her college entrance exam."

"Fair enough. She's at an important stage."

"Yeah. I need to remodel the place first, too."

A brief silence followed. We were comfortable enough not to need conversation, the kind of people who could read each other's thoughts from a look alone. But right now, neither of us seemed to know what to say.

"Hyung[649]."

"Hey, hey. That's enough. Don't make this all sentimental."

Jinho hyung[650] slapped me hard on the back.

"You're not some elementary school kid transferring schools. Just because you're moving, you're not going to stop seeing me, are you?"

"Of course I'll see you. I definitely will."

"Then it's fine. Besides, I'm moving my stuff out by the end of today, too."

"You are?"

"I told you last time. Don't you remember?"

"Oh, right. You did."

I had felt bad about leaving Jinho hyung[651] alone in the goshiwon[652] after all the years we had spent living together. Now I finally felt a little more at ease.

"Where are you moving?"

"Well, I ended up crashing at someone I know's place. Where did you say the house you bought was?"

"Goyang. It's only thirty minutes from here, so it's not that far."

"Goyang?"

Jinho hyung's[653] eyes widened.

"I'm in that area too, you punk!"

"Huh? Really?"

The unexpected news secretly pleased me. By now, I missed his face if I went even a day without seeing it. If we lived close by, we could still meet often.

"Hyung[654], then what's the exact address—"

Just as I was about to ask, the smartphone in my pocket rang. When I answered, a gravelly voice came through the receiver.

---

[649] Hyung is a term a younger man uses to address an older brother or an older male friend.

[650] Hyung is a term a younger man uses to address an older brother or an older male friend.

[651] Hyung is a term a younger man uses to address an older brother or an older male friend.

[652] A goshiwon is a building of small, inexpensive rented rooms, originally intended for students preparing for exams.

[653] Hyung is a term a younger man uses to address an older brother or an older male friend.

[654] Hyung is a term a younger man uses to address an older brother or an older male friend.

"Hello, is this Mr. Jin Taekyung? I'm in front of the goshiwon[655] right now."

"Ah, yes. Driver."

It was the private moving-truck driver I had called in advance. I glanced out the window and saw a blue light truck waiting in front of the goshiwon[656].

"Do you have a lot of stuff? If anything's heavy, I can help you carry it."

"No, it's fine. I'll carry it myself."

I only had two things to move.

A cardboard box filled with small belongings, and…

The capsule.

Now that the Logout function had been activated, I no longer needed the capsule to travel between Murim and the modern world.

It had become nothing more than a bulky nuisance, but it meant more to me than anything else. It was the only reason I had called a moving truck despite having so little luggage.

What would have happened if it weren't for this capsule?

I slowly ran my hand over its surface. The coldness of the metal and its rough texture traveled through my fingers.

This one old capsule had completely changed my life.

Oh, right. Someone else played a big part in that too.

"Jinho hyung[657]."

"Yeah?"

A laugh escaped me at his puzzled expression.

If Jinho hyung[658] hadn't gotten plastered that day, I never would have entered the capsule in the first place.

"Never mind. It's nothing."

"You're no fun. Anyway, shouldn't you get going? There's a truck waiting outside."

"Yeah. Since you're here, carry that box down for me. I have to carry the capsule, so I don't have a free hand."

"Uh, what?"

"What's with that reaction? Can't you carry one box for your little brother who's moving away?"

"That's not it… Ah, now that I think about it, I need to pack my own stuff too. Even if it's a hassle, just make one trip back and forth. Well, good luck!"

"…"

---

[655] A goshiwon is a building of small, inexpensive rented rooms, originally intended for students preparing for exams.

[656] A goshiwon is a building of small, inexpensive rented rooms, originally intended for students preparing for exams.

[657] Hyung is a term a younger man uses to address an older brother or an older male friend.

[658] Hyung is a term a younger man uses to address an older brother or an older male friend.

Look at him slithering away like a loach.

I watched Jinho hyung's[659] back inch into the distance, then finally picked up the box myself.

The moving driver, tired of waiting, honked the truck's horn. The sound struck my ears.

Honk, honk!

"Yes, I'm coming down!"

"Are you a Hunter?"

The moving driver, who had been sneaking glances at me, finally spoke. With the box and capsule loaded in the back, the truck followed the navigation toward my new home.

"How did you know?"

"You can tell at a glance. I used to be a Hunter, too. F-rank."

"Oh, really?"

"I'm probably your Senior by training-center class. Ah, I'm not trying to pull rank. It'd be ridiculous for a guy who quit after exactly one month and handed back his license to act like some old-timer."

The driver continued as though airing a long-held grievance.

"Being a Hunter at the training center was manageable. Even though I was only F-rank, I took pride in becoming a Hunter. But the moment I joined a Guild after graduating, an accident happened."

An accident at a Gate was synonymous with death.

Even if someone lost an arm or a leg, they could recover as long as they had enough money. Hunters didn't call something like that an accident.

"He was one of my training-center classmates, and he joined the Guild at the same time as me… Before I knew what was happening, he was dragged away and died just like that. I should have chased after him and saved him, no matter what it took, but I couldn't make my feet move. After his funeral, I applied for retirement. Someone like me had no business going on raids."

He tried to sound calm, but he couldn't hide the slight tremor in his voice.

"Listen to me saying something so ominous in front of a Hunter customer. It's not even a pleasant story. Sorry about that."

"Don't worry about it."

I understood how he felt.

[659] Hyung is a term a younger man uses to address an older brother or an older male friend.

I had experienced something similar. If I hadn't felt responsible for my family, and if Jinho hyung[660] hadn't been there to comfort me, I might have retired two years ago.

Then my life would have turned out completely differently.

Being a Hunter was a brutal profession. The media praised them as humanity's guardians and shields, but they lived with death always at their side.

"Turn right in fifty meters[661]."

The driver paused at the navigation's voice, then muttered, "Oh, come to think of it, this is a safe zone."

"That's right. Just keep going."

"Ah, yes."

The truck arrived at its destination soon afterward.

A two-story detached house with a blue roof. A low stone wall and a yard covered in grass. It felt different from when I had first seen it a few days ago.

It must be because it's ours now.

Our house.

The more I repeated those words in my head, the better they sounded. Of course, the fact that the house itself was beautiful probably helped.

"Wow… It's a nice house."

The driver climbed out of the cab and clicked his tongue in admiration. Praise always sounded sweeter coming from someone else. No matter how hard I tried to suppress it, the corners of my mouth kept rising.

"You must be a successful Hunter. Living in a house like this was my dream."

"Mine too."

"Your wish came true. You must be happy."

Of course. I was ecstatic.

The driver continued exclaiming over the place, touching the stone wall and looking over the lawn, before asking,

"Would it be all right if I took a quick look inside? I can help move the capsule while I'm at it."

"Sure. Go ahead."

The moving driver became the new house's first guest by accident as he climbed into the truck bed to move the capsule.

"That thing must weigh quite a bit."

"It's fine. I've moved plenty of them, so I know. Game capsules all weigh about the same."

"No, it's seriously heavy."

---

[660] Hyung is a term a younger man uses to address an older brother or an older male friend.

[661] Fifty meters is about 164 ft.

I knew because I had lifted it myself earlier. It had felt reasonably hefty even to me, with my Strength stat in the triple digits. For the driver, it would be a different story entirely.

“Boss, I’ll move it myself.”

The driver wrapped his arms around the capsule and grinned.

“Come on. You’re underestimating me. I was a Hunter back in the day. Something like this is—nnngh!”

“Oh, wow.”

As expected of a former Hunter, he did manage to lift it in one go.

The only change was that the smile had vanished from his face.

“Go ahead and open the doors. Quickly!”

At the urgency in his voice, I dashed ahead and threw open the front gate and the front door. I had no idea why I was getting nervous too.

“I can carry it—”

“Move!”

“Ah, yes.”

He barreled into the living room at a speed fit for an alarm and screamed, “Which room?!”

“I was going to put the capsule upstairs…”

“What?!”

“…but just leave it in the nearest room.”

Fortunately, the door to one of the rooms was already open. The driver set the capsule down with a thud and began panting.

“Why… is this… huff… so heavy?”

“…”

Hadn’t I told him it was heavy?

As soon as the moving driver left, I dropped onto the living room sofa.

It was one of the pieces of furniture the previous owner had transferred to me on the condition that I pay the remaining balance all at once.

I’ll have to live alone for a few months.

I had told my family that I was going back to Bucheon.

Until Hayeon finished her college entrance exam, I planned to eat and sleep here while commuting to work.

I need to remodel the house and buy a car too. Ah, the Guild said they’d provide me with a car anyway, so I need to get my license first.

There was a mountain of other things to do. But instead of feeling tired, I felt energized. These were all things I hadn't been able to do before, no matter how much I wanted to.

It had only been a few months since I had done nothing but suffer while going back and forth between Gates and the goshiwon[662], yet so much had changed.

You've come a long way, Jin Taekyung.

One person suddenly came to mind.

A man who had always smiled like a boy despite his age. A man who had done his best for his wife and children and approached them like a friend.

Dad, I bought a house. The place we used to live in was already gone. But I did well enough, right?

I wanted to brag about it like a child, but the person who would have praised me had passed away long ago. All I could do was repeat words in my heart that would never reach him.

How much time passed like that?

When I came to my senses, it was already eight in the evening. The summer sun was slowly setting.

So this is how my last day of vacation ends.

An entire week of vacation. It had been hectic because of everything involving the Sangdong Guild, but it was still the best rest I had enjoyed since becoming a Hunter.

Now it was time to return to my daily life.

In exactly twelve hours.

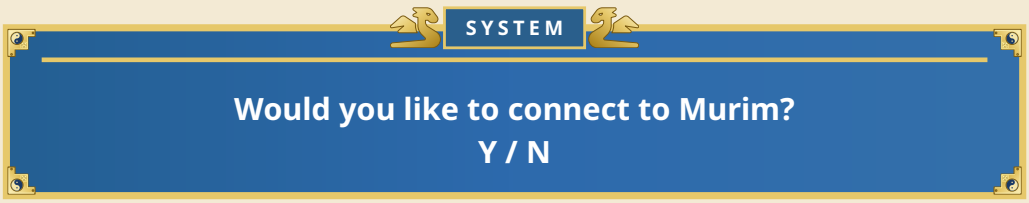
I lay flat on the sofa where I had been sitting. I briefly considered entering the capsule, but soon dismissed the thought.

After eleven years, I finally had a home again. Just this once, I wanted to wake up in our living room instead of inside that stuffy capsule.

Login.

The System responded to my call.

Ding.



Of course, my answer was yes.

[662] A goshiwon is a building of small, inexpensive rented rooms, originally intended for students preparing for exams.

Long after Jin Taekyung lost consciousness, something no one could have expected was happening in the room beside the front door.

Hissssss.

The door of the metal object that looked like a gigantic egg—the capsule—slowly began to open.

The first thing to emerge was a pair of feet.

Red letters were printed across a pair of long athletic socks that reached up to the calves.

Hope Goshiwon[663] Early-Morning Soccer Club

Next came sweatpants rolled up halfway, followed by a pair of pale, skinny hands. The cover of the book he clutched tightly, as though it were scripture, gleamed in the sunset pouring through the window.

Complete Mastery of the Civil Service Exam

And finally, his face emerged.

After enduring several long hours of agony, he looked as haggard as Crown Prince Sado[664] yet as relieved as Park Hyeokgeose[665] emerging from an egg.

A parched voice slipped between his bone-dry lips.

“Is this my new nest…?”

As Seong Jinho gazed around the spacious room, a satisfied smile spread across his lips.

[663] A goshiwon is a building of small, inexpensive rented rooms, originally intended for students preparing for exams.

[664] Crown Prince Sado was an eighteenth-century Joseon royal who died after being confined in a wooden rice chest.

[665] Park Hyeokgeose is the legendary founder of the ancient Korean kingdom of Silla, said to have been born from an egg.

Chapter 103

Clatter, clatter.

The carriage lurched dangerously under the hands of an inexperienced coachman.

Though it was a fairly well-maintained makeshift road, several days of heavy snow had frozen the whip into an icicle that kept jabbing the horses in the rump.

And then, at last, trouble struck.

Thud!

Neigh!

The four fine horses, which had been moving their hooves quite quickly despite the slippery snow, suddenly stopped.

“Gah!”

The coachman nearly pitched forward but somehow managed to regain his balance. Yet more than the relief of avoiding a fall, he was consumed by fear of what was about to happen.

Please, Jade Emperor, Primordial Heavenly Venerable.[666]

Had his desperate prayer been answered? He cautiously peeked inside the carriage, but the two young men sat there as though nothing had happened.

Well, technically, one of them is asleep.

One young man was buried in fur until only his forehead peeked out. Perhaps someone had pressed a sleep-inducing pressure point, because he showed no sign of waking. The other sat cross-legged, utterly absorbed in circulating his qi.

Sssssip. Hooooo.

If anyone had witnessed the scene, they would have been surprised twice.

Once by the young man’s handsome features, and once again by the formless qi of a Peak master pouring from his body.

Even Hyuk Mujin, the coachman, who thought he had grown somewhat accustomed to him by now, was no exception.

What kind of bullshit is this?

His envy had gone beyond envy and reached the point of anger.

A handsome face and genius-level martial talent. If he possessed even one of those, he would have no other wish in the world. But that young man, Jin Mukyung, had both.

And there’s even another one.

The same went for the other young man, Jin Taekyung, who had said he would circulate his qi only to fall asleep like the dead.

No, he might be an even greater monster than his older brother, Jin Mukyung.

---

[666] The Jade Emperor and Primordial Heavenly Venerable are major figures in Daoist cosmology.

After all, only a few months ago, he had been a Third Rate wastrel who did nothing but visit pleasure houses. Now he was the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi.

How can two brothers be this alike?

They had fully inherited the looks of their mother, once known as Shanxi's foremost beauty. Their talent was extraordinary enough to inspire jealousy.

And lastly…

They're both assholes.

Hyuk Mujin glared at the brothers in turn.

One had taken all the fur for himself to keep warm, without caring whether his subordinate froze to death on the driver's bench. The other had given him hell for a full shichen[667] because he couldn't drive a carriage properly, and now he was comfortably circulating his qi.

They really are perfectly matched.

That phrase was supposed to describe brothers whose excellence made them impossible to rank, but these two were the exact opposite.

Hyuk Mujin was carefully considering which brother had the worse personality when it happened.

"Hey."

A chilly voice. Irresistible formless qi poured from the eyes of the man who had just finished circulating his qi, binding Hyuk Mujin in place.

"What are you doing? Why aren't you driving?"

"Well, a problem came up for a moment."

"What problem?"

"Well…"

What would happen if he said the horses were angry because the frozen whip kept stabbing them in the rump? Hyuk Mujin made the wise choice.

"My body is frozen, so I can't drive."

He also wanted a break. Didn't the backside that had been suffering on the driver's bench deserve some rest?

But Jin Mukyung's response was simple.

"Hand."

"Pardon?"

"Give me your hand."

Hyuk Mujin reflexively held out his hand like a mutt. Jin Mukyung grabbed it and casually said,

"Bear with the heat."

[667] A shichen is a traditional Chinese time unit of approximately two hours.

Before Hyuk Mujin could understand what he meant, an enormous surge of qi rushed through his fingertips. The fire qi was so intense that his entire body seemed to catch fire, and his breath caught in his throat.

Gah!

The shock was too great for a scream to come out. It lasted no more than an instant, but Hyuk Mujin stood there with his mouth hanging open, his body trembling violently. He did not even realize that Jin Mukyung had already let go of his hand.

"How is it? Better?"

Only then did Hyuk Mujin come to his senses. He barely managed to open his mouth.

"W-what was that just now?"

"A simple type of heat-yang technique."

"That didn't look simple… I thought I was going to burn to death."

"Really? I suppose I'm still unskilled since I only learned it superficially."

Jin Mukyung's offhand tone left Hyuk Mujin dumbfounded.

Why would you use something you only learned superficially on me…?

Perfectly matched? When it came to being an asshole, the older brother won by a mile.

Jin Taekyung had beaten him up before, but he had never tried to burn him to death with a heat-yang technique.

"Now that you've thawed out, go drive the carriage. We still have a long way to go."

"…"

He hadn't been thawed out so much as roasted, but the effect was undeniable.

"Then I'll get us moving again."

When Hyuk Mujin returned to the driver's bench, his body radiating heat, Jin Mukyung turned his gaze forward.

Jin Taekyung was buried so thoroughly in fur that it was difficult to tell whether he was a bear or a person.

He said he was going to circulate his qi, but he's sprawled out asleep.

Mukyung had thought he was talking nonsense, but he hadn't expected him to sleep so brazenly. A martial artist was supposed to constantly ponder martial arts and train without rest.

Jin Mukyung roared with a stern expression.

"You rascal! Will you not get up this instant?"

His voice boomed so loudly that Hyuk Mujin on the driver's bench and even the horses flinched. Yet Jin Taekyung himself did not stir.

Snnn. Snnn.

"You rascal!"

Jin Mukyung sprang to his feet and struck his younger brother's forehead with his palm. With a sharp smack, the skin turned bright red.

Let's see if this wakes you up.

Smack, smack, smack.

Snnn. Snnn.

"…"

His forehead had gone beyond red. A lump had risen and looked ready to burst, yet he didn't so much as twitch.

Jin Mukyung was overwhelmed by shock. Even a commoner without a shred of internal energy should have screamed awake from this. Yet this guy, supposedly a Supreme First Rate martial artist and the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, did not move an inch.

Jin Mukyung had never seen anyone so defenseless in all his life.

And that guy is my younger brother.

Just as the training he had put Taekyung through over the past several days was beginning to feel like a complete waste of time—

"Hmm."

The eyes that had seemed destined to remain closed forever slowly opened.

Before I even opened my eyes, I realized that I had returned to Murim.

The cool air against my cheek. The rattling interior of the carriage.

And pain.

"…?"

Wait. Why was I in pain?

When I opened my eyes, a fairly familiar face was looking down at me.

Jin Mukyung.

I ignored the look on his face, which seemed to say What kind of guy is this?, and straightened my slumped body. Only then did I identify the source of the pain.

"Ow."

My forehead. When I carefully touched it, I felt a lump and the heat radiating from the surrounding skin.

What the hell is this?

What could I possibly have done here to get a lump on my forehead?

For a moment, I wondered if I had slammed my head against the wall. But with the bones, muscles, and toughness I had steadily built up, that wouldn't even leave a scratch.

Someone hit me on purpose. No question.

As it happened, there were two suspects right in front of me.

Jin Mukyung and Hyuk Mujin. Even a three-year-old could tell who the culprit was.

“What did you do while I was asleep?”

“While you were sleeping? Didn’t you say you were circulating your qi before that?”

“…I did?”

It had been so long that I couldn’t even remember. But that wasn’t important right now.

“You hit someone while they were sleeping?”

“You looked so pathetic that I did. A martial artist like you sprawled out asleep instead of training.”

“You call yourself a martial artist, yet you underhandedly attack a defenseless opponent?”

“Then shall we get off right now and have a bout? Like true martial artists?”

We both sprang to our feet and glared at each other without waiting for the other to move first. Jin Mukyung spoke in an ominous tone.

“Hyung Mujin.”

“It’s Hyuk Mujin. Second Young Master, please.”

“Stop the carriage.”

“…Yes, sir.”

The carriage slowly began to decelerate. Now it was my turn. I met his gaze and spoke.

“Hyuk Mujin.”

“Ah, why me this time, Captain?”

“Keep going.”

“Haah, this is driving me crazy.”

The carriage began to speed up again. As I slowly sat back down, Jin Mukyung asked incredulously,

“Didn’t I suggest that we have a bout like martial artists?”

“How pathetic. The mission comes first, and fighting comes after. And…”

“And?”

“I never said we should fight. I only said you were underhanded.”

“…”

I said it as confidently as possible, but there was no hiding how lame it looked.

I snuck a look at Jin Mukyung’s Level window.

SYSTEM

Lv. ??? Jin Mukyung

Right. Come on, fighting him the moment I got back would be a bit much.

Check the Quest window.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Quest

Yesterday's Enemy, Today's Ally

Now that all the truth has been revealed, the Mount Heng Sword Sect is no longer an enemy but an ally you must join forces with. Invite them to the Jin Family of Taiyuan for the upcoming New Year's Day.

Grade: First Rate

Restriction: Jin Taekyung

Mission: Deliver the invitation (Incomplete)

Reward: ???

Failure: None

I took another look at the last Quest I had received.

It was an easy mission. The Quest's Grade wasn't particularly high, and there was no penalty for failure. All I had to do was deliver the invitation to the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect…

The current Mount Heng Sword Sect had been reduced to its bare bones. Once Lee Seogeun was poisoned and the pillar known as Lee Cheonbaek fell, its collapse had been swift.

The battle at Eight Spring Gorge was the fatal blow.

They say words without feet can travel a thousand li.[668]

That day's battle, watched by countless eyes and ears, spread rapidly through messenger pigeons and word of mouth. With nearly all its main forces gone, the Mount Heng Sword Sect became easy prey for someone.

Wandering martial artists. And mounted bandits.

They said as many as two hundred attackers had suddenly raided the Mount Heng Sword Sect. After two days and nights of fighting, the attackers were driven off.

[668] A Chinese li is approximately 500 m (0.311 mi); a thousand li is about 500 km (311 mi).

Lee Seogwang, who had remained at the sect after being placed under disciplinary confinement, ultimately fell in battle.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect needed a new rallying point, and one person emerged.

Lee Seowol.

Lee Cheonbaek's last surviving descendant and the current Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

We had to deliver this invitation to her.

The problem was…

Things between us were seriously awkward.

Actually, "awkward" was putting it mildly, at least from my perspective.

In a way, the two of us had been at the starting point of all this.

I think it was right after I came out of the training hall.

I remembered Wipeng's words exactly, down to the last syllable.

"Is it true that you tried to force yourself on the daughter of the Mount Heng Sword Sect?"

These days, everyone knew I was innocent. But back then, I had been treated like the worst bastard under heaven.

Lee Seogeun, who had come to pressure the Jin Family of Taiyuan with fabricated evidence, was poisoned on his way home, and that was the beginning of everything.

It's only been a month or two.

The Third Rate wastrel despised by his own family had become the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, while the woman whose name I hadn't even known was now the new Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

We had both gone through so many changes in that time that, in a sense, we had something in common.

Our positions are very different, though.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan was now, by everyone's admission, the foremost family in Shanxi.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect, on the other hand, was nothing more than an empty shell. In truth, this invitation was practically an offer to surrender and come under the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

I would have to experience it firsthand to know how Lee Seowol would react.

I just hope she doesn't suddenly stab me.

Just as I closed the Quest window, sunlight streamed in and the sound of a boisterous crowd drew closer. Hyuk Mujin looked at me, his face flushed with excitement.

"We're at Honju."

The distance between her and me had narrowed to two days.

Chapter 104

A city that never sleeps.

That was my first impression of Honju. Even though it was a dark night, the streets lined with countless pavilions were bright with lanterns, and the sound of people laughing and talking never stopped.

More than I expected.

It wasn't quite as lively as a modern city at night, but it was still a well-developed commercial district.

How should I put it? Maybe the culture of this era had a unique charm all its own.

Oh, that looks pretty cool.

Unlike me, who was gazing out the window with interest, Jin Mukyung looked unimpressed.

"It's noisy. We'd be better off camping outdoors."

"Come on, we're only passing through. Why complain?"

Hyuk Mujin's cheeky reply made Jin Mukyung's eyebrow twitch.

"If you'd driven the carriage properly, we would have passed through long ago."

"If the Second Young Master hadn't chased away the coachman in the first place…"

"What?"

"Nothing. I'm the one who deserves to die."

Wincing at the sharp glare, Hyuk Mujin began rambling excuses.

"Still, we're representing the family. Shouldn't we eat something good at a good place? And let the horses rest, too."

"Food need only stave off hunger. Besides, who told you to do any of that?"

"The Lesser Family Head."

"…Brother did?"

"Yes. He repeatedly told me that since we were traveling without any attendants, we should at least take care of our meals and lodging somewhere decent."

I should've been that bastard's older brother.

Jin Mukyung had a terrible personality and never listened to anyone, but he was completely helpless in front of his only older brother. After hesitating for a moment, he sighed.

"Fine. Just hurry up and go."

"Yes, sir."

Hyuk Mujin had finally won one battle. With the corner of his mouth twitching, he began driving the carriage.

The carriage stopped in front of a massive four-story wooden building.

The Phoenix Inn. Its signboard, written in elegant calligraphy, was striking.

“This place looks incredibly expensive.”

“Of course it is. This is where the Young Masters of the great Jin Family of Taiyuan will be staying. The Lesser Family Head told me repeatedly—we have to choose the absolute best!”

“…”

He’s awfully excited when it’s someone else’s money.

I shook my head and climbed down from the carriage. An inn boy who looked about middle-school age scurried over and bowed at the waist.

“Welcome!”

He had quite the service ethic for someone so young. Hyuk Mujin stepped forward and asked in a dignified voice,

“Do you have any rooms available?”

“Of course, sir. What kind of room would you like?”

“Give us the largest one.”

“Ah, you mean the private annex?”

The inn boy looked us over. Perhaps because all three of us wore martial robes, he chose his next words carefully.

“I’m sorry, but half the fee for the private annex must be paid in advance.”

“Well, aren’t you a shrewd little bastard.”

Hyuk Mujin deliberately hardened his expression and pulled a heavy money pouch from inside his robes. It appeared to be the expense money Jin Wikyung had given him.

“Fine. How much?”

“Fifty nyang[669] for one night, sir.”

How much was fifty nyang?

I had never used money here and didn’t know how the currency worked, so I could only leave it to Hyuk Mujin.

Well, he’ll handle it somehow.

I glanced to the side. Jin Mukyung seemed to be thinking the same thing as me.

Then again, he was a martial arts fanatic and the young master of a wealthy family. Nothing about his background suggested he would have any sense of money.

Hyuk Mujin, a member of the working class, reacted differently.

“What? How much?”

“Fifty nyang, sir.”

[669] A nyang is a historical unit of currency. Here the payment is in silver nyang, contrasted with lower-value iron coins.

"…Iron coins?"

"Excuse me?"

The inn boy looked Hyuk Mujin up and down, then gave a short laugh.

"Would you like a different room?"

"…!"

The mockery was unmistakable. Hyuk Mujin's lips trembled before he burst into hearty laughter.

"Ha ha ha! Impressive business sense for such a little brat. A different room? Don't be ridiculous. Hurry up and show us to the private annex."

"You'll have to pay twenty-five nyang first."

"You little—!"

"Whoa!"

The inn boy flinched at Hyuk Mujin's bluster.

That guy only got bullied when he was with us. Despite appearances, he was a First Rate martial artist and a candidate to become the next Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

A commoner who knew nothing about martial arts—and a child barely into his teens at that—could only be frightened.

"I-I'll show you the way right away!"

We followed the thoroughly tense inn boy to the private annex. Along the way, we saw a garden that was, with a little exaggeration, the size of a soccer field, as well as a pond where carp swam.

The annex was divided into three large rooms and decorated with objects that looked expensive even at a glance.

"Wow, this room is nice."

Jin Mukyung nodded as well.

"Not bad. At this size, training won't be a problem."

"…"

Is martial arts the only thing in that guy's head?

While I wandered around sightseeing in the annex, Hyuk Mujin returned after paying for our stay.

"Aren't you two going to eat?"

"I'm fine. Enduring hunger is a form of training, too."

Jin Mukyung answered firmly, then left the annex and disappeared into the garden.

"What about you, Captain?"

"Do I look like that lunatic to you? I'm starving to death. Let's hurry up and order everything they have."

Was it my imagination, or did Hyuk Mujin's face suddenly darken?

The Phoenix Inn was one of Shanxi Province's most famous establishments. There were three reasons for that.

First, it was large enough to accommodate hundreds of people. Second, its dishes were prepared by a former imperial-court chef. And third, there was the beauty of its proprietress.

Despite its steep prices, the Phoenix Inn never lacked customers.

Of course, Hyuk Mujin, who had been born into a family of tenant farmers, had never even dreamed of visiting a place like this.

When else would someone like me ever get the chance?

Half a shichen[670] ago, Hyuk Mujin's mood had reached its peak. A fine room, delicious food, and even the beauty of the proprietress, whom people said could only be seen on lucky days.

And I get to enjoy all of this with someone else's money!

Is this a dream or reality?

Then he heard the price of one night in the private annex and wondered again.

Is this a dream or reality?

The same words. A completely different feeling.

He wished it were a dream, but by the time he came to his senses, it was already too late. He had fallen completely for the inn boy's mockery and even paid the advance fee. It was all over.

All I was given for expenses was fifty nyang.

Fifty silver nyang.

Considering that a family of four could generally live for a year on a little over ten silver nyang, it was an enormous sum.

The problem was that the Phoenix Inn's prices were on an entirely different level from ordinary prices.

I paid twenty-five nyang in advance, so exactly half is left.

Even that money would be gone once the sun rose. Hyuk Mujin was about to spend all the expense money Jin Wikyung had given him on a single night's lodging, and sweat dampened the small of his back.

If that damned inn boy hadn't laughed at me…

Regret always comes too late.

Hyuk Mujin hurriedly began working the abacus in his head.

The expense money is gone. But I brought some emergency savings just in case, so maybe I can somehow manage.

[670] A shichen is a traditional time unit of about two hours; half a shichen is about one hour.

Five silver nyang. Every coin he had saved until now. He had brought it in case of an emergency, never expecting to actually spend it.

If I don't indulge too much, I should be able to hold out until we return.

But there was one thing Hyuk Mujin had failed to consider.

Jin Taekyung's appetite.

Slurp. Gulp. Munch, munch.

"Wow, this really melts in your mouth."

"…"

Beggar's Chicken,[671] Fish-Fragrant Shredded Pork,[672] Maechae Guyuk,[673] scallion tofu, Kung Pao chicken[674]… Every time one of those dishes—or any of the dozen others—arrived at the table, Jin Taekyung's hand moved like lightning.

"Wow, this is really good. So juicy."

"…"

"You're not eating? Then I'll finish the rest too."

"…"

"Wow, this broth is incredible."

"…Please, eat as much as you like."

At some point, a single tear rolled down Hyuk Mujin's cheek.

The dishes served so far already cost five silver nyang.

His last hope was gone. Judging by the way things were going, that pig looked ready to devour another twenty plates.

Hyuk Mujin wanted to smash a plate over the pig-like bastard's head, but he restrained himself. He didn't want to lose his life on top of his entire fortune.

Jade Emperor,[675] Primordial Heavenly Venerable.[676] Please, stop that bastard.

Just as he cursed the heavens—

Crash!

The hardest parts of life in Murim were, first, survival and, second, the food. For some reason, everything was spicy, salty, and greasy, leaving me craving soup at every meal.

In that sense, the dish just placed on the table held special significance.

---

[671] Beggar's Chicken is a Chinese dish traditionally made by wrapping and baking a whole chicken.

[672] "Fish-fragrant" names a Chinese seasoning style; the shredded pork dish does not necessarily contain fish.

[673] Maechae Guyuk is an abbreviated name for pork belly steamed with preserved mustard greens.

[674] Kung Pao chicken is a Chinese stir-fry of diced chicken, commonly made with peanuts and dried chilies.

[675] The Jade Emperor is a ruler of heaven in Daoist tradition.

[676] The Primordial Heavenly Venerable is a high deity in Daoist tradition.

Chicken-and-corn soup.

It was a kind of corn soup with egg whisked through it until silky smooth.

I lowered my head slightly and smelled it. The distinctive savory scent of corn lingered at the tip of my nose.

Yes, this is it.

A smile rose naturally to my face. My stomach had already started feeling greasy. Once I settled it with the chicken-and-corn soup, I could probably clear another ten plates.

All right, then, now…

Just as I grasped the hot ceramic bowl with pleasant anticipation—

Crash! Clatter, clatter!

"…Huh?"

It happened in an instant. A liquor bottle shattered in the middle of the table, exploding into hundreds of ceramic shards that flew in every direction.

Along with them came the little liquor left inside.

Pitter-patter.

Drenched by the sudden shower, I was left speechless.

How could this happen?

The chicken-and-corn soup I had been eagerly awaiting—the warm, savory broth that would gently soothe my stomach—was no longer there.

What now filled the ceramic bowl was nothing more than food waste mixed with liquor and pieces of pottery.

Across from me, Hyuk Mujin stared with his mouth hanging open.

"Oh, Jade Emperor. Primordial Heavenly Venerable."

Ignoring his nonsense, I slowly turned toward the direction the bottle had come from.

Five men were looking our way and snickering.

"Oh, Brother. Sorry about that."

"Who can you blame when your hand slips? We can just order him another one."

"Hey, don't say anything crazy. Didn't you see how much that bastard's been eating?"

I watched them snicker among themselves, then crooked a finger.

The one who had apologized first. That bastard was the culprit who had ruined my chicken-and-corn soup.

"What, you want me to come over?"

He gave a short laugh, rose from his seat, and strode toward us.

His martial robes reeked of sweat and blood, and a curved saber hung from his left hip. That was the source of his confidence.

All right. Let's handle this rationally.

I spoke calmly.

"The ancient sages said that even a dog shouldn't be disturbed while it's eating. Apologize properly and order the food again. Starting with the chicken-and-corn soup."

"Well, listen to the little brat lisp."

"What about the apology?"

"Come on, kid. Stick out your tongue. I'll pull it out for you."

He grinned, revealing teeth rotted black.

The horrific stench of his breath wiped away my appetite as if it had been washed clean. I supposed I would have to eat the chicken-and-corn soup later.

"Open your mouth. My fist is going in."

As the words left my mouth, I drove my fist into his face.

Crack!

There were three reasons the Phoenix Inn was famous.

But the third was why so many people—men in particular—flocked there.

The beautiful proprietress, whom one could only meet on a lucky day.

And today was that day.

"It's noisy."

The proprietress's clear yet languid voice was not directed at herself. The presence outside her door vanishing proved it.

A moment later, a quiet voice came from beyond the door.

"A fight has broken out between martial artists."

The proprietress clicked her tongue softly before speaking.

"Did anyone die?"

"One man subdued the other six."

"Who is he? Where is he from?"

"He's the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi."

The proprietress laughed soundlessly.

"What a welcome name. I should go see his face after all this time."

She rose from where she had been reclining. Moonlight filtering through the window gleamed upon her slender, long-stemmed tobacco pipe.

Chapter 105

Crack!

The instant my fist sank into that foul-smelling snout, I knew.

The only thing that bastard would be able to eat from now on was chicken-and-corn soup.

Crash! Bang!

The first man shot straight backward and lost consciousness before he even hit the ground.

Level 31. He was a martial artist who had just entered the First Rate, but he still couldn't dodge my punch.

"Where the fuck do you get off breathing that stench all over the place and ruining my appetite?"

Every sound in the inn stopped.

But only for a moment.

"Gwangsu's down!"

"You little bastard!"

"Kill him!"

Shing, shing, shing!

Five curved sabers were drawn at once. Five pairs of eyes gleamed with killing intent. The inn's guests scattered, screaming.

I suddenly remembered the smell of blood coming from the man who had just fallen.

Huh. Look at these bastards.

They were used to killing. I could tell from the way they had started the fight, yet hadn't hesitated for a moment to draw their weapons.

"What are you people?"

"The Grim Reaper."

The answer came as they charged.

Four curved sabers thrust toward my limbs, while the remaining one aimed precisely at my chest.

Whoosh, whoosh, whoosh!

Too slow.

One of the five was First Rate. The other four were Second Rate.

Their plan to take me down was ambitious, but their feet were slow, and the net of sabers they spread from the front was full of gaps.

"Next time, at least try surrounding your opponent."

With that friendly advice, I flicked both hands toward them.

In a very brief instant, two daggers summoned from my Inventory sliced through the air.

Whoosh!

Dagger throwing. Do they call it flying-dagger arts in Murim?

I had never learned it for actual combat, but that was fine. Blade or hilt, all that mattered was hitting them.

Crack! Thud.

Yes, just like that.

The hilt of a dagger split one man's forehead, and he crumpled without even managing to scream.

What about the other one?

Clang!

"What a cheap trick!"

Whether he was lucky or had sharper eyes than I expected, he somehow managed to block it.

I gave him a broad smile.

"Is that dagger yours?"

"You threw it at me! What kind of bullshit are you talking about?"

"What an honest boy. As a reward, I'll give you both of them."

Thud, thud!

"Ghk. But your hands were clearly empty…"

Thud.

"My daggers multiply infinitely."

Stopping by the armory before leaving the Jin Family of Taiyuan had been a good idea.

I had gone in empty-handed and come out empty-handed, but my Inventory was now filled with dozens of weapons looted as spoils.

"What… what is this?"

It had all happened in the blink of an eye. The remaining three men stopped midcharge, faltered, and backed away.

"Not coming? Then I'll come to you."

"W-Wait, Young Hero! We were rude. We sincerely apologize and will compensate you…"

Look how quickly they changed their tune.

A moment ago, they had been calling me a little bastard. Now I was Young Hero.

"An apology?"

"Yes, yes!"

"Don't need it!"

I clenched my fist and charged at them. I didn't need martial arts to deal with bastards like these.

"Damn it! Get him!"

Whoosh!

One step to the side.

I dodged the curved saber chopping straight down at the crown of my head, then drove a single punch into the opening at his side.

Crunch.

Leaving him to collapse with a strangled groan, I charged at the next opponent. A System window above his head displayed Level 35.

"You bastard!"

Whoosh!

As befitted a First Rate master, he had clearly learned a fair amount of martial arts. His movements were clean, and his curved saber swept precisely toward my vital points.

But…

All of it is useless against overwhelming strength and speed.

My level and internal energy were low, but my stats far surpassed those of a First Rate martial artist. Add the combat experience I had built up in Murim, and this man was no match for me.

Crack!

The focus vanished from his eyes. The curved saber slipped from his grip before he could finish his swing.

Clang.

The last man, who had watched everything unfold, was half out of his mind.

"T-The Captain fell in a single exchange… Who are you?"

"You should exchange names with my fist. Here, this one's called Right Hand. And you?"

I raised my clenched right fist and approached. The man swung his curved saber wildly through the air.

"D-Don't come any closer!"

"You should ask more politely."

"Please, don't come any closer!"

"You actually did it."

Well, if he was going to ask that politely, I ought to grant his request.

When I stopped walking, color returned to the man's face.

"T-Thank you! I'll live a good life from now on!"

"No need to thank me. And you don't have to live a good life."

"Huh?"

"Turning over a new leaf isn't that easy. Right, Mujin?"

Hyuk Mujin was standing behind the man before I knew it.

"Of course."

"Gasp!"

The man sucked in a startled breath and turned around, but it was already too late.

Hyuk Mujin was in the middle of bringing the wooden chair in his hands down on the crown of the man's head with all his strength.

Crack!

The last man collapsed with a heavy thud. Hyuk Mujin set down the chair and muttered,

"Thanks, and sorry."

"What are you thanking those bastards for?"

"There are things."

That look in his eyes was awfully cocky.

I was wondering whether I should give him a smack after such a long time when Hyuk Mujin, who had been searching through the fallen men's clothes, tilted his head.

"Huh? Captain, there's something suspicious about these men."

"What?"

"Look at this."

Hyuk Mujin rolled up one man's sleeve, revealing what looked like a scar left by a branding iron.

No, it wasn't just a scar.

It looked like…

"A tattoo?"

Crude and savage as it was, it was definitely a kind of tattoo.

One shaped like a running horse.

"Is he the only one with it?"

"I don't know. I haven't checked them all yet."

"Check the others."

"Yes, sir."

Hyuk Mujin gathered the unconscious men in one place and stripped off their shirts.

Arms, chests, necks. The locations differed slightly, but every one of them bore a horse tattoo.

So they belong to some kind of organization…

I already knew they weren't simple thugs. Two of them were First Rate masters, and the word the last man had let slip without meaning to kept bothering me.

He definitely said Captain, didn't he?

Were they martial artists from another sect?

No. Their aura was too rough for that, and their clothing wasn't uniform.

A sizable band of wandering martial artists seemed more likely.

A horse tattoo. A horse tattoo…

Then a word suddenly flashed through my mind.

It was a name I had first heard during the war with the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

"Mounted bandits?"

Someone answered my mutter from somewhere nearby.

"There are dozens of mounted-bandit groups in northern Gaoyuan. It was a great mistake for Lee Cheonbaek to hire them."

I turned toward the owner of the languid yet alluring voice.

A woman stood on the stairs leading to the second floor, a veil draped across her face.

"Long time no see, our Young Master."

Our Young Master?

The moment I heard those words, I knew who she was.

Wolhwa.

It was her.

Hyuk Mujin and I were led to a guest room on the top floor of the Phoenix Inn.

Calling it a guest room hardly did it justice. It occupied the entire floor, so penthouse would have been more accurate.

"It's my first time bringing a man here. And two of them, no less."

Bathed in the soft light, Wolhwa's smile was dazzling.

I had felt it from the moment we first met, but she was the very definition of a femme fatale.

Even after meeting her several times, the sight of her was enough to make my stomach churn. Hyuk Mujin was beyond saving.

"I-It is the honor of three lifetimes."

"…"

Look at that bastard's glazed eyes.

He was completely smitten.

Wolhwa gave him a smile, then turned her gaze toward me.

“Have you been well, Young Master Jin? Ah, perhaps I can’t call you Young Master the way I used to anymore?”

The mischief in her expression made it obvious what was coming. I hurriedly waved my hands.

“Just call me whatever you like. Like before.”

“Hmm. Then how about Young Master Sleeping Dragon?”

“…That’s horrible.”

“Oh my, why? Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi sounds wonderful. If you’ve earned that much martial fame at such a young age, you could stand to be a little prouder.”

Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, Flaming Charisma Taekyung—six of one, half a dozen of the other.

Seeing my expression, Wolhwa chuckled and put her long-stemmed tobacco pipe to her lips.

“I’m only joking. Anyway, teasing Young Master Jin is so much fun.”

“Excuse me for interrupting.”

Hyuk Mujin had regained some of his senses. He looked back and forth between Wolhwa and me.

“May I ask what kind of relationship the two of you have?”

“None of your business.”

Our relationship was too embarrassing to explain in detail.

I cut him off sharply and glanced at Wolhwa, signaling for her to play along.

Quick on the uptake, she nodded.

“He used to be a regular at my establishment. Not anymore, though.”

“…”

Like hell she understood.

Then again, after how openly she had acted in front of Jin Wikyung and Wipeng, it would have been ridiculous for her to hide it now.

Hyuk Mujin, meanwhile, seemed only half-convinced by Wolhwa’s answer.

“By ‘establishment,‘ do you mean the Phoenix Inn?”

“No. This is just a side business. My real profession is something only a beautiful and charming woman like me can do.”

“Then perhaps…”

“It’s probably exactly what you’re imagining, Young Martial Artist.”

“A pleasure house?”

“Correct.”

Hyuk Mujin’s eyes widened.

“So the proprietress of the Phoenix Inn, whom I had only heard about in rumors, was a courtesan.”

“Young Martial Artist, you should watch your words. That isn’t very pleasant to hear.”

“If I offended you, I apologize. However, your words and behavior don’t exactly appear in a favorable light either.”

His sudden seriousness caught me even more off guard.

“Hey, what’s with you?”

“Captain—no, Young Master—is a direct descendant of the Jin Family of Taiyuan. Even the most beautiful woman under heaven has no right to treat him so casually. As a retainer of our family, I could not simply stand by and watch.”

“A moment ago, you said this was the honor of three lifetimes.”

“…In any case, how dare a mere courtesan treat the Young Master—agh!”

I gave him a satisfying whack on the back of the head.

“She’s the Shanxi Branch Leader of the Lower District Sect.”

“Shanxi Branch Leader or not—what? What did you say?”

“Are your ears clogged? I said she’s the Shanxi Branch Leader of the Lower District Sect. She gave us extremely—very, very—decisive help in the recent war with the Mount Heng Sword Sect.”

“I’m fine, Young Master Jin.”

Wolhwa lowered her eyes sadly.

“I’m only a mere courtesan, after all.”

Hyuk Mujin fell silent for a moment, then bowed his head.

“Young Lady—no, Branch Leader. I apologize…”

“Then keep your mouth shut.”

“Yes, ma’am.”

Wolhwa let out a quiet laugh.

“You have an interesting subordinate.”

As the saying went, it was the squid that disgraced the fish market. That bastard Hyuk Mujin was disgracing the entire Jin Family of Taiyuan all by himself.

I was too embarrassed to even look Wolhwa in the eye.

“…I apologize for all of this.”

“You’re not the one who needs to apologize, Young Master. And he wasn’t entirely wrong.”

Thankfully, she let it slide without a fuss.

After exhaling a stream of smoke, Wolhwa spoke.

“You’re on your way to the Mount Heng Sword Sect, aren’t you?”

“Yes.”

“May I ask what your purpose is?”

“You already know, don’t you?”

She was the greatest source of information in all of Shanxi Province. There was no need to ask how she knew.

“I wanted Young Master Jin to tell me himself… I’m disappointed.”

“Business and personal matters should be kept separate.”

“How cold. Then may I make a proposal? Or a deal, if you prefer.”

“I’ll decide after I hear it.”

Wolhwa tapped the ash from her pipe.

“Let’s go together. To the Mount Heng Sword Sect.”

“What?”

What the hell was she talking about?

Chapter 106

“Let’s go together. To the Mount Heng Sword Sect.”

“What?”

“You heard me, Young Master Jin. I have business at the Mount Heng Sword Sect too.”

“What kind of business?”

“I don’t think I can tell you that. I’m rather clear about keeping business and personal matters separate myself.”

Talk about getting paid back tenfold.

My own words had come straight back to bite me. Wolhwa’s smile deepened as she watched me grow awkward.

“I’m only joking. I happen to have something to collect from the Mount Heng Sword Sect. More precisely, something I’m supposed to receive from the Jin Family of Taiyuan.”

“What… Oh.”

A memory suddenly came to me. Back when the war with the Mount Heng Sword Sect was in full swing, the Jin Family of Taiyuan and the Lower District Sect had made a secret pact.

Hadn’t we promised them ownership of the Mount Heng Sword Sect’s properties and other holdings in exchange for information?

The Lower District Sect—or rather, Wolhwa—had kept her promise. It was thanks to her help that we had been able to annihilate the Mount Heng Sword Sect’s vanguard early in the war.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan had continued receiving help from the Lower District Sect afterward and eventually won the war, but that was when the trouble began.

“As you know, Young Master Jin, our position has become rather awkward. We won the war, but we can’t lay our hands on the spoils.”

The strong devouring the weak. That was the law of Murim.

But the appearance of the Head Elder had ruined everything. The moment it came to light that the Jin Family of Taiyuan and the Mount Heng Sword Sect had both been manipulated by him, the justification for claiming the spoils had grown faint.

So that’s why we’re pursuing a merger.

Now was the time to sheathe our swords and negotiate with a brush. Jin Wikyung’s vision was to quietly and amicably absorb the Mount Heng Sword Sect within limits that would keep the world from condemning us.

Wolhwa wanted her reward before that happened.

“If the Mount Heng Sword Sect accepts our proposal, couldn’t you demand your reward then?”

"That would only be possible if the Jin Family of Taiyuan were Shanxi's hegemon rather than its Alliance Leader. If you tried to seize anything rashly in the current situation, the other small and mid-sized sects would pull out too. Besides…"

For a moment, she gave me a meaningful look, then shook her head.

What was that supposed to mean?

"Besides what?"

"No, it's nothing. Anyway, I did receive a proposal from the Lesser Family Head."

Wolhwa took a puff from her long-stemmed tobacco pipe before continuing.

"He said he would transfer wealth equivalent to what he had promised, or hand over some of the areas managed by the Jin Family of Taiyuan."

That sounded reasonable enough, but it looked different from the perspective of someone leading an organization rather than acting as an individual.

She wants to expand her territory.

Wolhwa was neither a courtesan nor an innkeeper at heart. She was an information merchant.

She clearly wanted to use this opportunity to expand the Lower District Sect's influence into northern Shanxi, where the Mount Heng Sword Sect's blockade had kept it relatively weak.

Jin Wikyung, naturally, wants the Jin Family of Taiyuan to encompass all of Shanxi.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan had already wielded enormous influence over central and southern Shanxi for a long time. Handing over a few prime territories wouldn't diminish what they had built.

This is exactly like a redevelopment zone.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect, which had held the north in an iron grip and blocked outside forces from entering, was collapsing. The greenbelt had been lifted and the area opened for redevelopment, kicking off a tug-of-war between Jin Wikyung and Wolhwa.

They're both something else.

Yesterday's ally had become today's competitor.

Once again, I was reminded that there was always more to people than met the eye.

"So I thought I'd meet our adorable new Sect Leader and collect what I'm owed while I was at it. How about we travel to the Mount Heng Sword Sect together?"

I answered without another thought.

"I'll have to decline."

"Wow, aren't you being a little too decisive? You cut me off without even hearing the terms."

"As his younger brother, I can't go around splashing filth on my hyung's[677] path."

[677] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses for an older brother or a close older man.

We might not have shared a drop of blood, but I had long since accepted his existence—and this Murim—as my own.

"Hmm."

Wolhwa stared at me for a moment before setting her pipe down with a sharp tap.

"All right, then."

"Ah. Yes."

I had expected her to tempt me a few more times, but she gave up right away.

Well, I was glad the conversation had ended quickly. That made things easier for me.

"Then we'll be going."

I gave Hyuk Mujin, who was still sitting there with his mouth sealed shut, a light tap and rose from my seat. That was when Wolhwa smiled strangely and spoke.

"Oh, could you tell Jin Mukyung something for me? The old pines in the rear courtyard are expensive, so please ask him to be careful while training."

This was an inn run by the greatest information merchant in Shanxi. Ever since we entered this place, she had probably seen right through us, down to our innards.

"Sure."

"And tell me if you need anything. It's a request from our Young Master Jin, so I have to procure anything you might need."

She winked. I glanced at her and left the room, only to remember something I had momentarily forgotten.

"Mujin, why do you run your mouth so carelessly?"

Whack! Whack! Whack!

"Argh! Argh! Argh!"

One of us hit, and the other took the hits.

When we returned to the private residence, several old pine trees stood neatly severed, with Jin Mukyung waiting beside them looking thoroughly satisfied.

"There's a certain satisfaction to cutting."

"…"

"…"

One day, I really want to cut that bastard down.

The guest room fell quiet. Wolhwa smoked her long-stemmed tobacco pipe for a long while, and it was only well after Jin Taekyung had left that she finally spoke.

"Did you look into what I instructed you to investigate?"

A member of the Lower District Sect who had been waiting outside the room answered in a low voice.

“What you confirmed four days ago is all we have. We’re still gathering additional information, but…”

“Nothing else is going to turn up?”

“It’s unlikely.”

“Unlikely? Then there’s still a chance. Keep digging. I’ll give you plenty of time, so don’t rush. You know we won’t come out of it well either if we provoke the Jin Family of Taiyuan right now.”

“Yes, Branch Leader.”

The Lower District Sect member was about to withdraw when Wolhwa stopped him with one more question.

“A Third Rate wastrel became the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi in less than two months. What do you think?”

“It’s possible, if the rumors are true.”

“Ah, that.”

Wolhwa let out a short, incredulous laugh. The rumor had begun spreading after Jin Taekyung defeated Jopil, One Question, One Kill.

According to the rumor, everything Jin Taekyung had shown until then had been an act. In truth, he had trained in martial arts from childhood with the family’s full support.

By now, the story had spread so widely that there was hardly anyone in Shanxi who hadn’t heard it.

“Do you believe it?”

“It’s ridiculous nonsense. But…”

“People believe it. Not because they’re stupid, but because they have no choice but to believe it. But we’re different.”

Shanxi was a remote frontier the Central Plains barely even acknowledged, but the Lower District Sect had never stopped gathering information there.

That went without saying when it came to the direct descendants of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, one of Shanxi’s most powerful families. Their only mistake had been failing to accurately assess the Head Elder, who had been active during the chaotic period of war.

But their information on Jin Taekyung was nearly perfect.

“Alcohol, women, gambling. He was lazy from childhood and cared about nothing but having fun. He was so out of place that you had to wonder whether anyone like him had ever existed in the history of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.”

“That was the first order you gave after taking office as Branch Leader two years ago.”

"That's right. Monitor the entire situation in Shanxi. And investigate Jin Taekyung in depth."

Talent tended to run in families. The direct descendants of the Jin Family of Taiyuan had possessed exceptional martial talent for generations, and the current Family Head and his two sons, all regarded as eccentrics, were no exception.

Jin Taekyung stood out among them as something almost alien. That was why the Lower District Sect had begun its investigation.

"The result was anticlimactic."

"He was exactly what he appeared to be."

Other than slightly superior bones, sinews, and meridians—perhaps thanks to his bloodline—there was nothing special about him.

"Did we miss something back then?"

"He was the kind of bastard who spent every other night at a pleasure house. Martial arts take more time than anyone has, even if they cut back on sleep."

"I know. I know very well."

Wolhwa had cultivated her martial arts to a fairly mature stage even within the First Rate realm. There was no way she didn't understand that.

She drew repeatedly on her pipe in frustration, then released a long breath.

"In the end, there's only one answer."

"That's right."

Jin Taekyung had gone from Third Rate to a Supreme First Rate master in a little over two months. Wolhwa was dumbfounded by the conclusion she had reached herself, but there was nothing she could do about it.

"Forget the order I gave earlier. Don't ask about him anymore, and don't try to learn anything else. Issue a gag order and make sure no one even mentions this."

"Yes, Branch Leader. I'll make sure they understand."

"Oh, and one more thing. I'll be leaving early tomorrow, so make the preparations."

"Who are you planning to take with you?"

"No one. I'll go alone."

"Branch Leader, that…"

"It's an order."

"Understood."

Once her subordinate withdrew, silence settled over the guest room. Wolhwa tapped the blackened tobacco leaves from her pipe and thought.

Jin Taekyung.

If everything he had done until now was true, then the northern interests she needed to extract from the Mount Heng Sword Sect were nothing.

Has anyone in all history ever grown this quickly?

Her gaze darkened as she stared at the place where Jin Taekyung had been sitting.

The next morning.

I began to feel that something had gone wrong after meeting the person in charge of the private residence.

“The lodging fee is twenty-five nyang,[678] the food comes to five nyang,[679] and the property damage fee is fifty nyang.[680] The total is eighty silver nyang.[681]”

Hyuk Mujin, who had been celebrating yesterday after emptying those mounted bandits’ pockets, gaped.

“Property damage? Fifty silver nyang?[682]”

“When I went to the rear courtyard, I found that five old pine trees had fallen.”

They were the trees Wolhwa had said were expensive.

Hyuk Mujin and I turned our heads at the same time. Jin Mukyung, whose eyes met ours, flinched before opening his mouth.

“I got carried away while practicing my swordsmanship.”

“…No, fuck. If you get carried away, does that mean you can cut down anything in your way? Huh?”

“Hoooo.”

Hyuk Mujin couldn’t say anything. He merely let out one furious sigh after another.

One look told me the bill exceeded the money we had left. If it had only been a little over, maybe we could have talked it out and found some middle ground…

“Mujin, how much do you have right now?”

“Forty nyang.[683]”

Middle ground, my ass. We’re nowhere close.

“Could we put it on credit?”

That was the exact moment the kind smile around the private-residence manager’s lips disappeared.

“Young Master Jin, what are you doing here?”

---

[678] A nyang is a traditional unit of money. Here, the bill distinguishes silver nyang from the amount owed in lower-value iron coins.

[679] A nyang is a traditional unit of money. Here, the bill distinguishes silver nyang from the amount owed in lower-value iron coins.

[680] A nyang is a traditional unit of money. Here, the bill distinguishes silver nyang from the amount owed in lower-value iron coins.

[681] A nyang is a traditional unit of money. Here, the bill distinguishes silver nyang from the amount owed in lower-value iron coins.

[682] A nyang is a traditional unit of money. Here, the bill distinguishes silver nyang from the amount owed in lower-value iron coins.

[683] A nyang is a traditional unit of money. Here, the bill distinguishes silver nyang from the amount owed in lower-value iron coins.

A beautiful woman in a light, flowing palace-style dress was approaching us.

Right now, Wolhwa's appearance was nothing short of a lifeline.

I felt bad about turning down her proposal so decisively the night before, but this was no time to be picky.

"Well, you see…"

When I explained the situation, Wolhwa's eyes grew round.

"Eighty nyang?[684] That can't be right."

"Exactly. I knew something was wrong."

"Give me that."

She took the bamboo slip from the manager and began to read.

The deeper her frown grew, the clearer it seemed that the arithmetic had been badly botched.

Knew it.

At last, Wolhwa finished reading the bamboo slip. A chill entered her voice.

"Are you not doing your job properly?"

"I-I'm sorry."

"Do you have any idea who these gentlemen are? How dare you pull this kind of stunt? Write down the correct prices."

Hyuk Mujin whispered to me.

"What a relief."

"Yeah. We almost had to wash dishes before leaving."

"Why do we have to suffer because of the Second Young Master?"

"Don't even mention that man. Just hearing about him gives me cancer."

"What's cancer?"

"…Something bad."

Meanwhile, the manager revised the prices, sweating profusely. Then he bowed deeply and apologized to us.

"I'm sorry. I acted thoughtlessly and committed a grave discourtesy."

Hyuk Mujin accepted the apology with an arrogant air.

"Don't do that again. You have to know who you're dealing with before pulling a prank. So how much is it?"

"One hundred and five silver nyang[685] and twenty-three nyang[686] in iron coins."

"…?"

"…?"

---

[684] A nyang is a traditional unit of money. Here, the bill distinguishes silver nyang from the amount owed in lower-value iron coins.

[685] A nyang is a traditional unit of money. Here, the bill distinguishes silver nyang from the amount owed in lower-value iron coins.

[686] A nyang is a traditional unit of money. Here, the bill distinguishes silver nyang from the amount owed in lower-value iron coins.

What the hell? Is this a dream?

My head turned toward Wolhwa of its own accord.

“What is that supposed to mean?”

“He arbitrarily lowered the prices because you were my acquaintances. How dare he look down on the young masters of the great Jin Family of Taiyuan? Apologize again.”

“I’m sorry for failing to recognize your identities!”

“But…”

I asked in a thoroughly choked voice.

“We can put it on credit, right? Of course.”

“No, you can’t. Of course not. We haven’t allowed that even once in the past two years.”

“How about making an exception and setting a precedent this time?”

“I don’t have any plans to do that yet. You’ll have to aim for the next opportunity.”

Wolhwa added with a radiant smile,

“Was there something else you wanted to say?”

“…M-Mount Heng.”

“What was that?”

I squeezed my eyes shut and continued.

“Would you like to come with us to the Mount Heng Sword Sect?”

“Wow, I’d love to.”

That hateful smile.

At Wolhwa’s gesture, the manager snatched up the bamboo slip and vanished at the speed of light.

“We won’t have to worry about travel expenses anymore.”

While Hyuk Mujin was the sort of person who simply accepted reality, someone else was shouting vehement opposition.

“Nonsense! How can you bring a woman along while carrying out a family mission?”

“Then stay here and wash dishes.”

“…”

“Who here cut down the old pine trees? Raise your hand.”

Jin Mukyung didn’t raise his hand. Wolhwa slightly lifted the hem of her skirt and greeted him.

“Please take good care of me, Young Hero Jin.”

Chapter 107

The four-horse carriage rolled smoothly toward our destination. Though the horses and carriage were the same as yesterday, the difference in ride quality was night and day.

We had a new driver.

Having finally escaped the driver's seat and settled beside me, Hyuk Mujin said with a carefree expression, "I guess everyone has their own natural talents. I'm hopeless at driving a carriage."

Hopeless, my ass.

This was a man Wolhwa, the Lower District Sect's Shanxi Branch Leader, had brought with her. Naturally, he was no ordinary coachman.

The man silently holding the reins was a Level 50 First Rate martial artist. A coachman and a bodyguard—the picture fit perfectly.

"Mujin."

"Yes?"

"Please, just keep quiet. Then you'll at least do okay."

"…Why am I always the one you pick on?"

"Because you're always spouting nonsense, you idiot."

Wolhwa, who was sitting across from us and watching, let out a quiet laugh.

"It's nice to see how comfortable you two are with each other."

"He just has no respect."

"No respect? I wasn't going to bring this up, but I'm two years older than you, Captain. Some of my friends already have children."

"You don't."

"Well, no. That's true."

"And even if you were twenty-two, you'd still be younger than me. Anyway, you're younger."

"What are you talking about? Even the stray dogs of Shanxi Province know you've only just turned twenty."

"If you don't believe me, fight me."

"…Since we have company, I'll leave it at that."

Wolhwa beamed at Hyuk Mujin's ugly excuse.

"Oh, I don't mind. Though I can't speak for Jin Mukyung over here."

Everyone's eyes naturally turned toward one person.

Jin Mukyung, who had kept his mouth firmly shut until now, flinched before speaking.

"I-I don't mind."

"…?"

What the hell? Did he just stutter?

My eyes widened at the unexpected response, and Jin Mukyung subtly looked away.

Oh, this is getting worse.

He wasn't usually like this. Normally, he would have glared and demanded to know what I was staring at.

I asked him sincerely, "Are you sick?"

"…Not at all."

"You should look people in the eye when you talk to them."

"…Shut up. Don't talk to me."

He was acting really strange today.

There was no way a Peak master like him had gotten motion sickness.

He had been full of energy until this morning, but now he was clearly not himself.

Come to think of it, he seems to have been like this ever since we got into the carriage.

Just as I was narrowing my eyes and watching Jin Mukyung—

Poke, poke.

Hyuk Mujin nudged me in the side and whispered so quietly that only I could hear.

"Look at the Second Young Master."

"What about him…? Ah."

Only after hearing Hyuk Mujin did I notice the bizarre sight.

I couldn't believe I had missed it until now.

What is he doing?

The four-horse carriage brought from the Jin Family of Taiyuan was quite luxurious. The interior was about the size of an ordinary room, with seats spacious enough to accommodate twice our number without trouble.

And yet…

Why is he sitting like that?

Despite all the available space, Jin Mukyung had crammed himself into the farthest corner of the carriage. No, crammed didn't quite cover it. He was practically compressed.

What is this, Platform Nine and Three-Quarters?

Was he attending a magic school instead of Heaven's Gate Temple?

Hyuk Mujin and I weren't the only ones watching his strange behavior.

"Young Hero Jin, you look very uncomfortable. Why don't you come over here? There's plenty of room."

Jin Mukyung went rigid at the sound of Wolhwa's alluring voice.

His creaking reply came a moment later.

“I-I’m fine.”

“…”

He didn’t look fine at all.

I quietly whispered to Hyuk Mujin, who wore an expression much like mine.

“You think he’s acting strange too, right?”

“This goes beyond strange.”

“Yeah, that’s what I thought.”

We exchanged meaningful glances.

“My goodness. Who would’ve imagined?”

“Exactly. Who knew the great Heaven Shaking Sword was so shy around strangers?”

“That’s exactly what I—huh?”

“Why are you reacting like that? You shouldn’t criticize someone for their personality. If there are thick-skinned bastards like me, there can be timid people too.”

“No, wait. Just wait a moment.”

Hyuk Mujin stumbled over his words.

“What exactly are you talking about?”

“Obviously, Jin Mukyung…”

An eerie voice suddenly cut in.

“Shut up.”

No matter how spacious it was, we were still inside a carriage. Everyone could hear us.

Faced with Jin Mukyung’s murderous glare, Hyuk Mujin and I shut our mouths at the same time.

Wolhwa was the one who dispelled the grim atmosphere.

“Where are my manners? I haven’t properly introduced myself yet. I’m Wolhwa, Shanxi Branch Leader of the Lower District Sect.”

“…I am Jin Mukyung of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.”

“What a dull reaction. Young Master Jin over there was extremely surprised when he first learned who I was.”

“I heard the general details from him. I also heard that you rendered our family a great service.”

Jin Mukyung politely clasped his hands.

“Though it comes late, allow me to express my gratitude.”

“Not at all. It was a fair transaction.”

Wolhwa smoothly added, “Though I have yet to receive proper compensation.”

“Our family will not forget the Lower District Sect’s goodwill.”

His behavior and manner of speaking were still awkward beyond belief, but he was doing much better than when they had first met.

Looking at the handsome man and beautiful woman sitting together like a picture, Hyuk Mujin exclaimed,

“A promising young martial arts master and a peerless beauty… Whew, just looking at them makes my heart race. Don’t you agree?”

I turned away and pretended not to hear him.

Judging by the killing intent prickling my skin, Hyuk Mujin’s heart wouldn’t be racing much longer.

Winter days were short-tempered.

How long had we traveled along the mountain road? The sun quickly set, and darkness descended. The carriage stopped two shichen[687] later, around midnight.

“We’ve arrived.”

The first thing I saw upon stepping out of the carriage was a moderately sized wooden building.

A chill greeted me the moment I entered. A statue in human form gazed solemnly down at us.

What did they call places like this again?

Oh, right. A shrine.

I had heard they were places where the spirit tablets of the dead were enshrined and memorial rites performed.

The Guandi Temples[688] that appeared at the drop of a hat in martial arts novels came to mind. I examined the statue, but I couldn’t tell who it depicted.

“This shrine was abandoned after a famine several years ago, but it seems the local commoners still visit from time to time.”

Just as Wolhwa had said, the shrine’s interior was bare, but signs of human presence remained—footprints in the dust covering the floor, for instance.

“I’ll prepare the place.”

At the words of the coachman and bodyguard, whom I assumed to be a member of the Lower District Sect, we headed outside.

More precisely, one of us was dragged out by someone.

“Follow me.”

---

[687] A shichen is a traditional Chinese time unit of approximately two hours; two shichen are about four hours.

[688] Guandi Temples are shrines dedicated to Guan Yu, a historical Chinese general later revered as a deity.

“Gah! Captain! Captain!”

I ignored Hyuk Mujin as Jin Mukyung dragged him away by the collar and looked up at the sky.

Hmm. The moon sure is bright tonight.

“What are you doing?”

“As you can see.”

Wolhwa smiled faintly.

“You seem to enjoy looking at the scenery.”

“I’ve been getting into it lately.”

The only scenery to be found in the modern world was the nightscape seen from some high vantage point. Even that consisted of sad lights created by office workers working overtime.

Now this is real scenery.

There were no dense forests of skyscrapers, apartment complexes, or industrial sites.

In place of asphalt roads, damp dirt paths and crisp air filled the entire world.

Living in a place like this would be genuinely healing.

The problem was that it was also an easy place to get killed.

Somehow, people were more frightening here than monsters.

I didn’t even need to go as far as the Head Elder or Jopil. What had happened at the Phoenix Inn just yesterday was enough.

“Oh, right. What happened to those guys?”

“If you mean the mounted bandits from the Red Wind Band, they’ve been detained. Of course, we had to call a physician first.”

I’d beaten the shit out of them, so of course they’d needed treatment.

But there was another word that caught my attention more than that.

“The Red Wind Band?”

“They’re a rising power from Gaoyuan. They’re fairly large, and more than anything, the Red Wind Band Leader is said to possess formidable martial arts.”

Northern Gaoyuan.

I had first learned of that place from a map during the war with the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

One thing puzzled me. Gaoyuan was a considerable distance from Honju, where the Phoenix Inn was located. As far as I knew, the journey took more than a week even if you rode day and night.

“How did people like that end up all the way here?”

“Toward the end of the war, Lee Cheonbaek hired countless wandering martial artists and mounted-bandit groups. Many of them met their end at Eight Spring Gorge, but some survived and fled.”

"So the Red Wind Band was among them?"

Wolhwa shook her head.

"The Red Wind Band Leader… He was quicker-witted than I expected."

"Then what happened?"

"He watched the situation until the very end. He kept a close eye on Eight Spring Gorge from only two shichen[689] away, then turned his horse around the moment he heard how the battle had ended—along with the two hundred men under his command."

Two hundred people.

What would have happened if the Red Wind Band had joined the battle at Eight Spring Gorge that day? There would have been an enormous number of casualties, and it might even have affected the outcome of the battle.

"We were lucky."

"We were. For the Mount Heng Sword Sect, it was incredibly unlucky."

Wolhwa continued as she firmly packed tobacco leaves into her long-stemmed pipe.

"The Red Wind Band headed north immediately. They targeted the Mount Heng Sword Sect's main base after most of its forces had withdrawn."

"…Huh."

They were natural-born plunderers.

The moment the tide of the war turned, they headed north and sank their teeth into the Mount Heng Sword Sect's throat while most of its main force was away.

They had preserved their forces by staying out of the battle, and they must have been well-rested too. They would have been in peak condition.

"Young Master Jin, you heard how it ended, didn't you?"

"Yes."

After two days of fierce fighting, the Mount Heng Sword Sect ultimately emerged victorious—but at the cost of the Young Sect Leader, who was supposed to succeed his father.

"But the rumors I heard said that wandering martial artists and mounted bandits were mixed together."

"A tiger doesn't become a dog just because it has lost its teeth. The Red Wind Band Leader had recruited quite a few wandering martial artists as well. They would have made excellent shields."

Tap, tap.

Wolhwa took out a fire starter, lit it, and drew on her long-stemmed pipe.

---

[689] A shichen is a traditional Chinese time unit of approximately two hours; two shichen are about four hours.

“The mounted bandits Young Master Jin defeated were probably the ones who fled at that time. Even if the Red Wind Band is unusually disciplined for a mounted-bandit group, it doesn’t mean they have no deserters at all. I’m not sure what they were doing in Honju, though.”

“Deserters…”

“That’s why the surrounding area has been so unsettled lately. Wandering martial artists, bandits, mounted bandits, even dark-path figures—they’re all starting to rear their heads now that the Mount Heng Sword Sect’s strength has been so badly diminished.”

“They’ll have no choice but to accept our proposal.”

Wolhwa gave me a prim smile.

“Strictly speaking, it isn’t our proposal. It’s the Jin Family of Taiyuan’s, isn’t it? Still, from my perspective, this is certainly a good time to pressure the new Sect Leader.”

“By the way…”

“Yes?”

“Do commoners really visit this shrine in weather like this?”

“Of course not. Hunters, perhaps. Why do you ask all of a sudden?”

I pointed toward the mountain path.

Through the light snowstorm that had begun to swirl, I could see torches climbing toward us.

Chapter 108

Hunters?

Wolhwa's guess was only half right. They were hunters, all right—but the uninvited guests were something more special and far more vicious.

"Move it, you bastards."

"What good are grown men this scrawny?"

There were ten of them in all, every one of them rough-faced and armed. Ahead of them staggered a line of prisoners strung together with rope like dried fish.

Thud! Thud-thud!

"Ugh, Boss!"

"We're moving! We're moving, so please stop…"

"Hah, stop? You bastards still haven't learned your lesson."

"Hey, don't hit them too hard. If something breaks, their price drops. They're already so small we probably won't get full value for them."

"We should get a decent price if we sell them to a circus troupe. Let's hurry inside and have some strong liquor."

"Ah, my mouth's watering just thinking about it… But what's that?"

The human hunters stopped dead. Their eyes lingered on the four-horse carriage parked before the shrine, then slowly shifted aside.

Their gazes came to rest on Wolhwa and me.

"…Who are you?"

I stepped forward when the apparent leader spoke.

"Just a traveler passing through."

"A traveler, huh? Dangerous time to be wandering around."

The oily gleam in his eyes said he himself was one of those dangers.

Of course, at a mere Level 25, he didn't even qualify as a threat to me.

"Would you look at that. A four-horse carriage and a stunning beauty. You must be the Young Master of some wealthy family."

If he had come closer to inspect it, he could have seen the crest of the Jin Family of Taiyuan carved into the carriage. But it was pitch-black outside, and he didn't possess particularly sharp eyesight.

"I'm not from a poor one."

"Well now. You've been awfully informal with me from the start."

The leader licked his cracked lips. He seemed to be getting irritated, but he still hadn't let down his guard around me.

"Whatever. We've been staying here for the past few days… So what are you going to do?"

“About what?”

“What do you think? If you show us a little sincerity, we might let you have the place.”

“Anyone listening would think you owned this shrine.”

“It’s abandoned. Doesn’t that mean whoever claims it first owns it?”

“Then bring me a certified deed.”

“What?”

The leader turned to his men in bewilderment. Naturally, it was probably the first time any of them had heard the term. Not that his men were likely to know any better.

I clicked my tongue as they whispered among themselves about certified deeds.

“If you can’t prove you own it, leave quietly. And untie those people.”

“…You’re crossing the line. Are you waiting for bodyguards?”

“I don’t have any.”

“Then what are you relying on?”

“Me.”

The leader’s gaze shifted to my two empty hands.

“Without even a weapon?”

“For the likes of you, my fists are enough.”

“Looks like the Young Master learned a move or two somewhere… But aren’t you taking Murim a little too lightly?”

“Murim isn’t a joke. You are.”

The moment I stepped toward the brightly burning torch, the prisoners who had been quietly restrained began screaming.

“Wh-what?”

“Boss! Boss!”

“Have you bastards lost your minds? Shut your mouths!”

The men in the rear drew daggers and held them to the prisoners’ throats in response to their violent reaction. The leader stared at me with wary eyes.

“You know them?”

“No. Never seen them before in my life.”

Their reaction was so sudden that even I was caught off guard. And why were they calling me Boss?

“Bosss! It’s me! It’s us!”

“These men seem to know you.”

“They’re just asking me to save them… Huh?”

I looked closely at the prisoners. They were all short as children and had uniformly ugly faces. They looked vaguely familiar.

Is it because they're built like goblins?

Wait. Goblins?

A distant memory suddenly surfaced. No, it wasn't even that distant. It had happened only a few months earlier, during the tutorial Quest.

"Don't tell me… You were with the Heavenly Axe?"

The prisoners—or rather, the Five-Colored Ghosts, former subordinates of Jang Sam the Heavenly Axe—nodded frantically.

"That's us!"

"Boss! Please save us!"

I never expected to run into these bastards here. While I stood dumbfounded, Wolhwa, who had been watching from behind, asked,

"Are they acquaintances of yours, Young Master Jin?"

"We've met before, at least."

Human traffickers and bandits. It was hard to say which was worse.

A moment ago, I'd been planning to save them. Now I was having second thoughts.

"Bosssss!"

"Are you going to abandon us?"

"We quit being bandits after that day and have lived good lives ever since!"

"…"

Their ability to read the situation was almost supernatural. No wonder. They had surrendered immediately when the Heavenly Axe died, after all.

"Are you going to save them?"

"Tsk. I think we have to, at least."

They said they had turned over a new leaf after that day, and leaving them like this wouldn't sit right with me. More importantly, former bandits were far better than active human traffickers.

The leader overheard us and cut in with a growl.

"Save them? You?"

"You heard the whole thing. Why ask again? You sure know how to make life difficult for yourself."

"You little shit. I've let you run your mouth long enough…"

Clang!

The leader leveled his spear at me, and his men drew their weapons as well. Wolhwa clung to my side with a deliberately frightened expression.

"Oh my, I'm scared. You have to protect me, don't you?"

Her moist eyes stirred a man's protective instinct. Her expression was pleading.

Knowing Wolhwa's true nature, I found the sight ridiculous. The men, however, swallowed hard.

“Now I have one more reason to kill you.”

When the leader gave her a lecherous look, Wolhwa shrieked.

“Oh no, oh no! This maiden is so scared!”

“Ho ho, don’t be so frightened. Though I may have lived a rough life, you’ll soon learn that I’m a man with a heart as soft as silk. In a little while, we can have a conversation with our bodies.”

“Hey, look at me first.”

I needed to tear that filthy mouth open so he’d never say anything like that again.

I strode toward him, then abruptly stopped. The leader saw me halt and burst into laughter.

“What’s wrong? Lost your nerve now that it’s time to fight? Too late.”

“Exactly. You’re in real trouble now.”

“…What?”

I gave the bewildered man a broad smile.

“I said you’re fucked, asshole.”

The moment I finished speaking, the ground shook, and a powerful wind whipped through the area.

Boom—whoosh!

It all happened in the blink of an eye.

Something swept past Wolhwa and me at terrifying speed and was already standing in front of the leader.

“Say that again.”

Jin Mukyung.

An overwhelming wave of qi poured from his entire body and crushed the entire scene. The leader’s face turned deathly pale, and his hands began to tremble.

“F-forgive me. Please…”

A cold voice answered.

“You’re far too late.”

Perhaps Jin Mukyung was the greatest pacifist among us. In just over ten seconds, he had put an end to all the unnecessary fighting that would have followed.

“S-surrender! We surrender!”

“Please spare us! Please, just let us live…”

Their faces were frozen with terror. Everyone’s legs gave out, and they collapsed where they stood. Someone’s urine trickled down the hill.

The Five-Colored Ghosts were no different.

“Quiet.”

Jin Mukyung wiped the blood from his face and tossed out that single word. A deathly silence fell.

Hyuk Mujin, one eye bruised deep blue, whispered to me,

“Am I actually alive right now?”

“Yeah. Your breath against my ear is giving me goose bumps, so move away.”

“Just a moment ago, I was wondering how anyone could get beaten like a dog that badly, but now…”

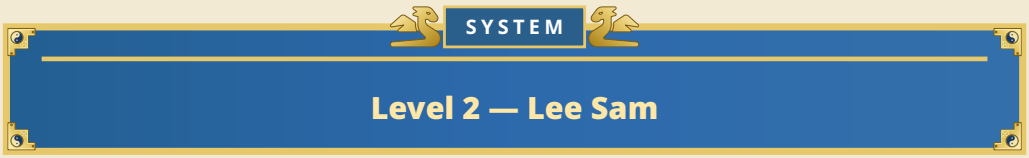
Gulp.

Hyuk Mujin swallowed dryly, his gaze fixed on the fallen leader.

“Hng… Hng…”

With all four limbs broken and his dantian destroyed, the man struggled for breath. If he received proper care, he might be able to walk again, but his life as a martial artist was over.

The Level window I sensed through Qi Sense was proof.



The dung flies those watchers used as Familiars were Level 1, if I remember right.

The culprit who had reduced a Level 25 martial artist—one who had once been close to First Rate—to a living corpse kept stealing glances in our direction.

“Captain, please save me. I think the Second Young Master is still short on blood.”

“Stop talking nonsense and move that guy somewhere suitable. He’ll die if you leave him like that.”

“Doesn’t he deserve to die? They were selling perfectly innocent commoners.”

“Move him anyway. He’s still alive.”

One of the greatest sources of dissonance I had felt while moving between Murim and the modern world was the issue of killing people.

For twenty-seven years, I had lived in a society governed by law and order.

I had trained to kill enemies with bladed weapons, but my targets had been monsters, not living humans.

I was sure that was the case…

Now I couldn’t even remember how many people I had killed. Even after realizing that the enemies who had died by my hand might have been real people rather than NPCs, I hadn’t felt much guilt.

They were enemies. They were trying to kill me too.

I didn’t know whether it was because I had lived as a Hunter or because I had grown accustomed to Murim’s ways. I was only surprised by my own numbness and the simplicity of my self-justification.

For now, this much should be fine.

I was living in two completely different worlds. I couldn't afford to play at being some half-baked Buddhist disciple.

I shook off the thoughts clinging to me and approached the men cowering on the ground.

"Eek!"

"Uaaagh! Save me, Boss!"

"You bastards make a fuss even when I'm trying to save you. Hold still."

I untied the ropes, and the Five-Colored Ghosts were free. They stood on trembling legs.

"Th-thank you."

"We'll serve you as our Benefactor for the rest of our lives!"

"Like hell you will. Anyway, how did you end up getting caught by men like these? All five of you at once?"

The Five-Colored Ghosts were small, but they were grown men, at least in name. They had been strong enough to commit banditry alongside the Heavenly Axe.

"Um, well…"

"…?"

What was wrong with these guys?

Sensing something off in their hesitation, I grabbed the nearest human trafficker by the collar and hauled him up.

"How did you catch them?"

"We caught them trying to steal our money pouches in the marketplace."

"…"

What the hell, these Ten-Colored Ghosts.[690] I thought they had quit being bandits and might have taken up farming, but they had only changed occupations?

"Explain yourselves."

Under my piercing stare, the five men's eyes darted around.

"W-well…"

"Boss, this is the only kind of thing people like us ever learned to do."

"E-even so, we only started recently!"

"We tried to work honestly, but nothing went right… We said we'd pull just one job and get out, but then…"

"If we'd known they were mounted bandits, we never would've touched them. We're victims too. Boss, please forgive us just this once!"

As I wondered what to do with these men, a familiar word made me pause.

---

[690] Sip-saek-gwi ("Ten-Colored Ghosts") plays on the group's Five-Colored Ghosts nickname and sounds like a Korean insult.

“What did you say?”

“We’ll live honestly if you forgive us just one more time!”

“No, not that. What did they say?”

“Ah, do you mean the mounted-bandit group?”

“Yeah. That.”

“We only found out after they caught us. Some ruffians were throwing silver nyang[691] around at a pleasure house, so we followed them… Turns out they were from the Red Wind Band, infamous for their viciousness even among mounted bandits.”

“The Red Wind Band? Are you sure?”

“Yes. I heard it clearly with my own ears. Right?”

The others began eagerly adding their own pieces.

“They also said they were leaving at first light tomorrow.”

“They said they’d have to ride without stopping to reach Saneum. They were even worried they might lose their heads if they arrived late.”

“So that’s how it is.”

Yesterday, and now today.

Running into mounted bandits from the Red Wind Band two days in a row was already an uncanny coincidence. On top of that, Saneum was close to Eung-hyeon, where the Mount Heng Sword Sect’s headquarters stood.

“Are these men telling the truth?”

The human trafficker whose collar I held in my right hand—or rather, the mounted bandit from the Red Wind Band—nodded, trembling.

At that moment—

Shriek!

A hawk landed in front of the shrine with a sharp cry. A small cylinder tied to its ankle caught my eye.

A messenger eagle.

Things were taking a strange turn.

[691] A silver nyang is a historical silver currency unit, not modern Korean won.

Chapter 109

A messenger eagle.

I'd heard that even the Jin Family of Taiyuan had only two of these birds. They were so difficult to train that they were used only to deliver important information…

Who sent it?

Just as I was about to approach the messenger eagle, Wolhwa's voice stopped me.

"You'd better keep your distance. It's extremely wary. If you try to catch it, Young Master Jin, it'll fly away."

"Ah, could it be?"

"It's a messenger eagle from our sect. It's trained to follow a specific tracking scent."

Wolhwa pulled a small pouch from her robes and shook it. The messenger eagle cautiously approached and rubbed its beak against the pouch.

While it was distracted, a Lower District Sect member who had already slipped outside untied the cylinder bound to its ankle.

"Where's it from?"

"It was sent to you from the Sakju Branch yesterday, Branch Leader."

"Give it to me."

Wolhwa accepted the letter and read it, her expression turning inscrutable.

After a moment, her tightly pressed lips parted.

"The Red Wind Band Leader… He's more than I expected."

"Is this about the Red Wind Band again?"

Wolhwa nodded slightly and handed me the letter.

She wanted me to read it, so there was no reason to refuse. Jin Mukyung and Hyuk Mujin, who had been hanging back, cautiously leaned in as well.

> The Red Wind Band is heading south across Gaoyuan. Their numbers are estimated at approximately two hundred.

The meaning of that single terse line was clear.

"They're planning to attack the Mount Heng Sword Sect again."

"There's no doubt about it. This news is already a day old, so they must have closed the distance by at least that much, if not more."

We were currently a day and a half away from the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

As mounted bandits, they would be advancing on their destination at remarkable speed.

“Unfortunately, our branch doesn’t have a proper intelligence network in the north. The one fortunate thing is…”

Wolhwa’s gaze shifted toward the Red Wind Band’s mounted bandits. They had lost the will to fight long ago, and they flinched and lowered their heads.

“We have some valuable sources of information right here. Whether they know anything useful is another matter.”

She looked over the mounted bandits, then abruptly pointed at one of them.

“You. Stand up.”

“…M-me?”

The terrified young man rose. He was younger than I had expected. The youngest and weakest of the mounted bandits, he couldn’t even meet Wolhwa’s eyes.

“How old are you?”

“I-I turned twenty this year.”

“Twenty? You’re young. Then again, being young doesn’t stop someone from becoming a mounted bandit.”

“I’m not a mounted bandit! I only became a wandering martial artist recently, but then they said they’d give me a big cut, so I…”

“Ah, so you’re one of the wandering martial artists the Red Wind Band Leader gathered for the last attack?”

“Y-yes! I’ll tell you everything I know!”

“No, it’s all right.”

“Pardon?”

“You don’t look like you know much anyway. What would be the point? Isn’t that right, Chunsam?”

The Lower District Sect member who had silently played the part of our carriage driver until now.

Instead of answering, he pulled a small knife from his robes and drove it into the young man’s chest.

Thunk—

The swift, precise One Strike of a First Rate martial artist split his heart. The young man’s mouth opened and closed soundlessly before he collapsed like a puppet with its strings cut.

Thud.

A frigid silence pressed down on the scene. While the mounted bandits stared in horror and fear, Wolhwa’s slender finger moved once more.

“You.”

“I-I’ll talk! I’ll tell you everything! I’ve been with the Red Wind Band for a year…”

“Chunsam.”

Whoosh! Slash!

“Grrk… Gurg…”

The mounted bandit staggered backward, making a wet, blood-choked sound. He tried to cover his gaping throat, but couldn’t stop the fountain of blood spraying between his fingers.

“You only need to remember two things.”

Covered from head to toe in bright-red blood, Wolhwa continued in a dry voice.

“Answer only what you’re asked, and tell the truth exactly as it is.”

“…!”

In mere moments, we learned everything there was to know about the Red Wind Band.

Once we realized there wasn’t a moment to lose, we abandoned the carriage and each chose a horse—me, Jin Mukyung, Hyuk Mujin, and Wolhwa.

Chunsam would take the Five-Colored Ghosts and the surviving mounted bandits to the nearest Lower District Sect branch and report the situation.

“Was that too cruel?”

Wolhwa asked as she saddled her horse. I scratched my chin.

“To be honest, I was a little surprised.”

I’d only ever seen her relaxed and playful, so I had briefly forgotten that she was a martial artist too.

And an experienced one at that.

How old was Wolhwa, anyway?

I’d never asked, so I couldn’t be sure, but she couldn’t have been over thirty.

Becoming the Branch Leader in charge of all Shanxi Province at such a young age meant she possessed the decisiveness the position demanded.

Cruel, but effective.

She had killed two people without hesitation. Just as casually as swatting flies.

Jin Mukyung’s display against the leader must have terrified the mounted bandits, but the fear of death was even greater.

Driven to the edge of a cliff, they had no choice but to pour out information desperately.

“I think I would’ve spilled everything too.”

“I’m saying this in case Young Master Jin gets the wrong idea, but I don’t enjoy killing people. They weren’t innocent commoners, either… Ah, this bastard’s blood just won’t stop, even when I wipe it.”

The blood streaming down her belonged to the second mounted bandit.

As she wrinkled her nose, someone held out a piece of cloth.

"U-use this to wipe it off."

"Oh my."

"Huh?"

"Hmm."

At the reactions from Wolhwa, me, and Hyuk Mujin, Jin Mukyung cleared his throat repeatedly.

"I thought you might need it."

"Thank you, Young Hero Jin. This is exactly what I needed."

"It's nothing."

He said that, but he looked awfully pleased with himself.

No way. Is he…

The type who's only nice to women?

There was always at least one guy like that wherever you went. Even the Heaven Shaking Sword wasn't any different, apparently.

After wiping away the blood, Wolhwa pulled a rolled-up piece of leather from her robes and spread it out.

"This is a rough map covering all of Shanxi Province. We're here. The Red Wind Band has probably… If they've been moving without rest, they may already have broken through Datong."

"They're faster than us."

"By half a day, for now. But the official roads along our route are well maintained. If we ride day and night, we should be able to close the gap."

In short, we shouldn't expect any rest.

I followed the others and vaulted into the saddle.

Why does trouble always break out the moment I arrive?

I sighed inwardly, but what could I do? This wasn't my first hardship—or my second. By now I just had to accept it.

Wasn't this supposed to be a really simple Quest?

Ding.

SYSTEM

Quest difficulty has changed to Peak.

"…"

Right. Not anymore, I guess.

He was a man who resembled a fox. His pointed chin and ears, along with his sharp, slanted eyes, watched and observed everything around him at once.

“Graaah!”

“Kill them! Kill every last one of them!”

“Aaaah!”

Smoke billowed from a large manor, accompanied by screams.

Pung Yang, the Red Wind Band Leader, sat astride his horse atop a hill and watched the scene below. He didn’t speak until the manor had fallen silent.

“Is it over?”

A mounted bandit who had just come up the hill to report answered him.

“We killed all the men and gathered the women and children together.”

“Why?”

“Pardon? Why, it’s the tradition of Gaoyuan…”

Any male taller than a cartwheel—even a child—was killed without mercy, while the women were taken or sold as slaves. It was a tradition—or something close to one—passed down from the nomads.

At the mounted bandit’s words, Pung Yang quietly crooked one finger.

“Come closer.”

The mounted bandit approached hesitantly and asked carefully,

“Leader, did I perhaps make some serious mistake…”

“Who were you with before?”

“Until recently, I was the deputy captain of the Earth Tiger Band.”

“The Earth Tiger Band? Ah, I remember. You were their deputy captain.”

“Y-yes! I was so impressed by your formidable martial arts and noble character that I swore to become your loyal subordinate!”

Pung Yang scratched his nose with an ambiguous expression.

Was that so?

All he remembered was killing a piece of trash in a single strike—the man who had swaggered around calling himself a bandit leader while commanding some thirty subordinates.

“My memory differs a little, but thank you anyway.”

“Not at all! It’s an honor!”

“Still, whatever the Earth Tiger Band may have been like, things are different in the Red Wind Band. Petty matters like the traditions of Gaoyuan, for instance.”

“Ah, I didn’t realize.”

“My orders as leader take priority. Do you understand?”

“I’ll keep that in mind—over and over again!”

“Those fellows probably followed Gaoyuan’s traditions because they didn’t know any better. They all joined recently, just like you. Would you go and tell them what I want?”

“Your command is my law. I won’t leave a single one alive.”

The mounted bandit even gave an awkward military salute, though there was nothing military about a mounted bandit. Pung Yang waved him away.

“Yes, go on.”

“Yes, Leader!”

Pung Yang watched him ride away, then suddenly flicked his sleeve.

Whoosh!

A streak of light split the air and pierced its target ten jang[692]—about thirty meters—away.

Thnk! Thud.

The horse kept galloping.

It had no idea that its rider was already dead, his foot caught in the stirrup and his body being battered to pieces against the ground.

“Go and tell them. There are no prisoners. Kill them all and burn the place.”

“Yes, Leader.”

Not long after Pung Yang’s subordinate departed, the entire manor was engulfed in flames. As he watched the signboard burn away in an instant, a faint smile touched the corners of his mouth.

Mount Heng Sword Sect, Datong Branch.

It was the moment the Red Wind Band crossed Gaoyuan once more.

The messenger’s report left the people arguing in the spacious main hall breathless.

“They’ve broken through Datong!”

“A-already?”

“What about the Datong Branch? What happened to the men who went out to stand guard?”

“Wiped out. They were all wiped out. The Datong Branch was reduced to ashes, and there wasn’t a single survivor.”

“What?”

“Could the report be wrong? They must have suffered heavy losses last time, so how could they have come this far so quickly…?”

[692] Jang is a traditional unit of length. Ten jang is approximately 30.3 meters, or 99 ft.

“They appear to have absorbed another mounted-bandit group. At least two hundred men—possibly more.”

“Is that certain?”

“Yes, without a doubt.”

“Th-then when will they reach us…?”

“If they’re fast, the attack will begin within a day. At the latest, we expect it within two days.”

“We’re finished.”

The muttered words were not much different from what most of the people gathered there were thinking.

There were around ten of them, all senior figures holding important positions in the Mount Heng Sword Sect. Yet every one of them was already turning the word defeat over in their minds.

“Iron Sword Squad Leader, are you confident in this fight?”

“Why are you asking me, when you’re a Pavilion Leader? Am I the only martial artist here?”

They were squad leaders, hall leaders, and pavilion leaders of the great Mount Heng Sword Sect.

There had been a time when he had desperately wanted to rise to that position. Once upon a time, that was.

To hell with the great Mount Heng Sword Sect. What good is a promotion now, with the sect in this state?

We were already on the verge of collapse, and now a mounted-bandit group has come to raise hell. Let’s see… If we scrape together everyone we have left, we might reach a hundred.

The war with the Jin Family of Taiyuan had cost them nearly eighty percent of their strength.

They had lost the elite martial artists they had painstakingly trained and the seasoned senior figures who had weathered countless trials in the martial world. Most painful of all was the loss of the Peak masters who embodied the sect’s power—and of its financial resources.

“Damn it. If only the Sect Leader were still alive.”

Lee Cheonbaek had started as a mere wandering martial artist and built the Mount Heng Sword Sect into what it was now. With his martial arts and resourcefulness, he could have turned this situation around.

But the Blood Wolf Sword, Lee Cheonbaek, was already dead. Of his bloodline, only one person remained alive.

“To think we have to serve some little girl who isn’t even twenty as Sect Leader at a time like this.”

The moment someone spat out those words in anger—

Boom!

The tightly closed doors of the main hall exploded.

Chapter 110

Boom!

The thunderous crash heralded the arrival of a powerfully built middle-aged man.

Beneath his thick, bristling brows, he swept the hall with tiger eyes like an enraged beast.

“Which one of you was spouting that nonsense just now?”

Everyone gathered here was a senior figure of the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

Even if they weren’t on their predecessor’s level, they possessed First Rate martial arts and considerable experience. Yet even they were busy shrinking back and avoiding his gaze.

The middle-aged man before them had every right to make them do so.

Damn it. Of all people, it had to be the Tiger of Mount Heng…

The storytellers said that two beasts lived on Mount Heng.

The Blood Wolf Sword and the Tiger of Mount Heng. The closest of friends, yet each a wall the other had to overcome.

The middle-aged man, Cheol Mubaek, had been a Peak master known as the tiger of Mount Heng for decades.

“I asked which one of you it was!”

His roar made every hair on the senior figures’ bodies stand on end.

They said that whenever Cheol Mubaek lost his temper, even his close friend Lee Cheonbaek would leave the area. These men lagged far behind him in both martial arts and age. What more needed to be said?

“We should be united in driving out those mounted-bandit bastards, and even that would not be enough, yet you dare defy Cheonbaek’s dying wishes and harbor rebellious intentions?”

Under his gaze, which seemed ready to pour out flames, the senior figures of the Mount Heng Sword Sect flinched as though they had been burned.

“G-Great Hero Cheol, you misunderstand.”

“How could we ever dare harbor rebellious intentions?”

“Then have I grown so old that my ears no longer work?”

At that moment, everyone inside the main hall felt thirsty. It wasn’t a simple illusion. It was caused by the terrifying Scorching Yang Qi radiating from Cheol Mubaek.

This is insane.

What the hell did he eat to amass such monstrous internal energy…?

Just being near him made it hard to breathe, and sweat poured down their bodies. The Tiger of Mount Heng. This was the moment the true nature of the Peak master who had supposedly trained alone somewhere in the vast mountain range since around the age of twenty revealed itself.

“Huff… Haaah…”

“Great Hero, please calm yourself… Hah.”

The senior figures of the Mount Heng Sword Sect panted harshly, while the Peak master glared at them without the slightest sign of forgiveness.

Just as the air in the hall threatened to boil like lava—

“Uncle Cheol, it’s hot.”

A voice as clear and refreshing as a stream, and slender white fingers tugging at Cheol Mubaek’s sleeve. At the same time, the angry furrows in his brow smoothed out as though someone had pulled them flat.

“W-Was it very hot?”

“Yes. I can’t even breathe.”

“Oh dear. I didn’t think of you. How is it now?”

“Much better. Thank you, Uncle Cheol.”

“Don’t say such things. Protecting you, Seowol, is my duty.”

Cheol Mubaek’s mighty Scorching Yang Qi subsided.

Only then did held breaths burst out across the hall. Once the people soaked in sweat came to their senses, they realized that Cheol Mubaek was not alone.

“Y-Young Lady.”

“We greet the Young Lady.”

Cheol Mubaek raised his brows at the senior figures hurriedly standing to show their respect. But the “Young Lady” was faster.

“I’ll tell you both one last time, Iron Sword Squad Leader, Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion.”

The woman who had been hidden behind Cheol Mubaek’s massive frame stepped into view. She was slim and graceful, and the hem of her blue gown rustled whenever it brushed the floor.

“Change how you address me. Not Young Lady—Sect Leader.”

Those who met her frost-covered gaze remembered one fact they had momentarily forgotten.

Ah. That’s right.

The Blood Wolf Sword, Lee Cheonbaek.

Lee Seowol was the child in whom his blood ran strongest.

I knew nothing about horseback riding. After coming to Murim, I had ridden only a few times. In the modern world, horseback riding was practically an aristocratic sport reserved for the rich, so I'd never had the chance to try it.

But perhaps because my physical abilities were so good and I was riding a well-trained horse, I had enough leisure to look at the System Window even during a furious gallop.

Open Quest Window.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Quest

Yesterday's Enemy, Today's Ally

Now that all the truth has been revealed, the Mount Heng Sword Sect is not an enemy but an ally you must join hands with. Invite them to the Jin Family of Taiyuan during the upcoming New Year's Day.

Grade: Peak

Restriction: Jin Taekyung

Objective: Deliver the invitation (Incomplete)

Reward: ???

Failure: None

Quests were fluid. Depending on the circumstances, sudden Quests could appear or existing Quests could be updated, as this one had been.

The Grade was raised.

The Quest Grade changing from First Rate to Peak meant that the road to the Mount Heng Sword Sect had become anything but easy.

For example, the Red Wind Band. Or the Red Wind Band. Probably the Red Wind Band…

Never mind. Thinking about it any more would only hurt.

Every day in this place is like walking on thin ice.

I thought I'd finally received an easy Quest for once, only for trouble to erupt again.

The reason I wasn't as anxious as before was partly because of the reliable presence of Jin Mukyung, but also because I myself had grown stronger.

Open Status Window.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Status Window
Level: 55 — Jin Taekyung
Class: First Rate Martial Artist
Fame: 1,300 (+150)
Titles: 4 (Title effects active)
— Returnee (All stats +10)
— Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi (All stats +10, Fame +100)
— Scion of a Prestigious Family (All stats +5, Fame +50)
— Gambler (Combat-related stats +10% in one-on-one combat)
Strength: 196 (+25)
Stamina: 195 (+25)
Agility: 192 (+25)
Intelligence: 35 (+25)
Charm: 35 (+25)
Internal Energy: 15 years
Toughness: 155 (+25)
Remaining Points: 0

Ahh, barkeep.

Look how well I've grown. All by myself.

Strength, Agility, and Stamina were each nearing 200. Just looking at them made me feel full, and my Toughness, born from getting beaten by Jin Mukyung, was growing nicely too.

The Title bonuses are hefty, too. This should be enough.

Until now, I had raised my stats just to survive. Every time I advanced a Quest, one crisis after another came crashing down like three waves at once. There was no way I could afford to invest points in Charm or Intelligence.

Even if I raised my Intelligence enough to reach an IQ of 180, it's not like I'd start thrusting a spear scientifically.

The same went for Charm. Jopil and the Head Elder weren't going to spare me just because I was handsome.

Of course, raising them would help me in some way eventually. But with my life hanging by a thread, I hadn't had the courage to invest in noncombat stats.

I can protect this one life of mine to some extent now.

Once this Quest was over, I planned to devote some attention to my internal energy and noncombat stats.

As it was, the items I had obtained after defeating Jopil—including the Blazing Flame Divine Pill—were sitting untouched in my Inventory.

Of course, taking it wrong could send me straight to the grave.

Just then, Wolhwa, who had been riding at the front, spotted a stream and pulled to a stop.

“We’ll rest for a little while. The horses are too exhausted.”

How much time had passed?

We had ridden without stopping since leaving the shrine. Dawn had broken, and now the sun hung high overhead. System messages announcing increases to my Strength and Stamina had even appeared twice, so this really had been a forced march.

“Whew. My ass is killing me. If I’d known this would happen, I should’ve been born the son of a coachman instead of a farmer.”

While the horses rested, Hyuk Mujin dropped heavily to the ground. Since he was the lowest-level member of the group, his exhaustion was obvious.

“Having a hard time?”

Hyuk Mujin wiped the sweat from his forehead with his sleeve before answering.

“Honestly, yes… But strangely enough, it’s much better than last time.”

“Last time?”

“You’ve already forgotten? During the scouting mission.”

“Ah, I remember.”

I had nearly died after running into Jopil during a scouting mission for White Tiger Hall. We had taken horses with us then too.

Though we ended up abandoning them when the heavy snow came.

The memory drew a quiet laugh from me.

“What’s wrong?”

“I was thinking about you. You mouthed off to me without knowing any better and got the crap beaten out of you.”

“…Do you really have to dredge up the past to feel better?”

“You’re the one who asked, punk.”

“Anyway, I’m saying it seems much better than back then.”

“Really?”

“Yes. We’ve ridden much farther than we did during the scouting mission, but I’m not even that tired. Maybe I’m getting used to riding?”

“Maybe… Ah, wait.”

“Hm?”

Something suddenly occurred to me, so I heightened my Qi Sense.

Ding.

With the familiar System notification, a Level Window appeared over Hyuk Mujin’s bewildered face.

SYSTEM

Level: 38 — Hyuk Mujin

"…Huh?"

A breathy sound escaped my open mouth. When had Hyuk Mujin's Level gotten this high?

Strictly speaking, it wasn't all that high.

But considering that he had been only Level 20 when we first met, calling it astonishing progress wasn't enough. At this point, it was practically like he had been reborn.

Come to think of it, his Level has been rising steadily ever since we met.

As I searched my memory, the details came back more clearly.

It had been the same when we reunited as a scouting unit. Whenever I heightened my Qi Sense from time to time, Hyuk Mujin's Level had risen by one or two.

Now he was Level 38. In terms of time spent in Murim, he had nearly doubled his Level in just over two months.

Then maybe…?

With a doubtful heart, I stared intently at Hyuk Mujin.

What if he received stat points like I did? Could I distribute them for him?

It's possible.

Judging by how much stronger I was than a Hunter or martial artist of a similar Level, there seemed to be some kind of System enhancement effect…

It's worth trying once.

"Why are you staring at me like that? Is there something on my face?"

"No. You're just ugly."

"…Seriously."

I grabbed Hyuk Mujin by the shoulder and shouted inwardly.

Open Status Window!

At that very moment—

"What are you doing? My shoulder hurts."

"Oh. Okay."

Nothing happened. I thought at least something would appear.

Then again, my main character was still far from reaching the Level cap. Why would my alt character get anything? Still, it was disappointing.

Should I try saying it out loud?

They would definitely treat me like some kind of weirdo, but it was better than moving on with the feeling of not washing my hands after using the bathroom.

I stealthily placed my hand against Hyuk Mujin's back—lightly, very lightly—and muttered under my breath.

"Open Status Window."

"Seriously, what has gotten into you today?"

I ignored him and shot to my feet.

The notification I had been waiting for chimed, and a System Window appeared.

"Yes! There it is!"

Ding.

SYSTEM

The Quest condition Time Limit has been added.
Arrive at the Mount Heng Sword Sect within 22:00:00. If you are late, there will be no turning back.

"Yes…"

My voice died away. My eyes trembled.

A time limit? What the hell kind of time limit is this?

Why are you doing this to me? Seriously.

As I let out a deep sigh, Wolhwa's eyes widened and she asked,

"Young Master Jin, are you hurt?"

"No, it's not that. Do you know around when we'll arrive?"

"Hmm. At today's pace, before tomorrow evening?"

"Ah."

It was a little past noon now. That meant we still had more than a full day's ride ahead of us.

Judging by the Quest Window's change, it seemed the Red Wind Band bastards would attack the Mount Heng Sword Sect within that time limit…

What was I supposed to do?

"Shall we get going soon?"

"The horses are tired. They need to rest for half a shichen.[693]"

"Horses, you're fine, aren't you? You heard that, right? They said they're fine."

"…"

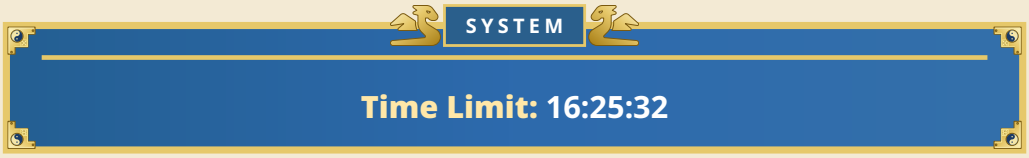
Yeah. I knew you'd look at me like that.

[693] A shichen is a traditional time unit of approximately two hours; half a shichen is about one hour.

Chapter 111

Thudthudthudthud!

Four fine horses thundered down the main road. Exhausted from too little rest, they were already gasping for breath, but we couldn't afford to ease the reins.



31, 30. The time kept ticking down.

Three shichen—a full six hours—had already passed. We had stopped at a small village along the way to look for fresh horses, but all they had were small, painfully slow packhorses.

We really do need to rest.

We were trapped between a rock and a hard place.

We had been forcing our march as hard as we could, but the time limit was dangerously close. If we kept running like this, the horses wouldn't hold out.

Do we have a choice?

I was just about to suggest to Wolhwa and Jin Mukyung that we rest, even if only briefly, when—

"Hm?"

"Young Master Jin! Ahead!"

Even without Wolhwa's shout, I had already seen them. Several dozen jang[694] ahead, a group of dark figures blocked the main road.

Every one of them wore filthy clothes, with a single curved saber sticking out from his belt. There was no need to say anything more.

The Red Wind Band.

The men had surrounded what appeared to be ordinary civilians and were threatening them. At the sound of hoofbeats, they whipped their heads around.

The mounted bandits spotted me riding well out in front and grinned, baring their yellow teeth.

"Well, look at that. Our next customer's here already. Stop!"

"Oh, sure."

They told me to stop, so I had to stop. What else could I do?

Thud! Thud!

"Gaaah!"

"Argh!"

[694] A jang is a traditional Korean unit of length, approximately 3.03 meters (9.94 ft).

My horse didn’t come to a halt until it had trampled the two or so men blocking the road. The mounted bandits—and even the travelers they had captured—stared at me wide-eyed.

“You—you bastard!”

I hopped down from the saddle and asked,

“I’m asking just to make sure. You’re the Red Wind Band, right?”

“Who the hell are you?”

“Judging by your reaction, I guess I was right. I’m short on time, so let’s finish this quickly.”

Without hesitation, I kicked the nearest man in the leg.

Crack.

With a chilling sound, his shinbone snapped, and he crumpled to the ground.

It all happened in an instant. The others stood stunned for a moment, then hastily leveled their curved sabers and spears at me.

“Kill him!”

“A man should always watch his back.”

“What?”

“I said, watch behind you.”

The instant I finished speaking, ten pairs of eyes turned to look behind them.

Craack! Thud!

Three fine horses charging at full speed swept the men away.

The battle was over before it had even begun. The men struck by the horses had been sent flying like bowling pins and lay sprawled out half-dead. The rest were easily subdued.

“P-Please, just spare my life.”

“I won’t kill you. But I’ll have to fix a few things first.”

“Eek!”

While Jin Mukyung methodically broke the limbs of the surviving bandits, Hyuk Mujin brought over the horses tied up beside the road.

“It looks like we can switch to these healthy ones. There must be at least ten of them, so we might as well take them all and change horses whenever one gets tired.”

I had been thinking the same thing. Unlike the last group we encountered, these mounted bandits each had their own horses. It was fortunate.

But still…

How many of these Red Wind Band bastards were there?

According to the information we obtained at the shrine, more than a hundred remnants had scattered throughout northern Shanxi.

Some were hiding in the foothills, while others were concealed in remote villages or crowded areas, gathering at a designated rendezvous point when ordered.

These men aren't stragglers.

They were ambush forces carrying out an operation. The Red Wind Band Leader was replenishing his forces on the plateau and moving south, while sending the subordinates he had left behind north.

I could easily understand why Wolhwa had described the Red Wind Band Leader as such a terrifying man.

The judgment to retreat swiftly when the tide turned against him. The meticulousness to prepare his next plan even while retreating. And the drive to put that plan into action.

On top of that, I had heard that his own martial arts were formidable.

At this point, I almost felt bad for treating him as nothing more than a mounted bandit.

This has gotten seriously messy.

Now I understood why the Quest Grade had risen to Peak. Things kept getting worse the more I learned.

Surely the Red Wind Band Leader wasn't a Peak master too… right?

I asked Wolhwa just in case, and she immediately nodded.

"Yes. He is."

"…Ah."

"There has to be a reason someone rose to prominence so quickly. He isn't widely known yet, but according to our sect's intelligence, the Red Wind Band Leader is indeed a Peak master."

I was dumbfounded.

"Why would a Peak master become a mounted bandit?"

"There are even Supreme Peak masters among mountain bandits and water bandits. Why couldn't a mounted bandit be one?"

"Supreme Peak masters? Among mountain bandits and water bandits?"

"If you ever meet the Green Forest Alliance Leader or the Alliance Leader of the Yangtze River Channel League, ask them yourself. Not that you ever will."

"…I sincerely hope that's true."

A Supreme Peak master? I genuinely hoped I would never meet one.

I shook my head repeatedly and mounted one of the newly taken horses. Jin Mukyung and Hyuk Mujin followed after tying up the Red Wind Band's mounted bandits and handing them over to the commoners.

SYSTEM

Time Limit: 15:59:13

The time limit continued to tick down even now. Leaving the commoners behind as they bowed deeply in thanks, we kicked the horses in the ribs.

“Giddyap!”

Deep within the inner grounds of the Mount Heng Sword Sect stood a garden that only a very small number of people were allowed to enter. Cheol Mubaek, the Tiger of Mount Heng, was the only outsider granted that privilege.

“This is my first time here.”

“Because it was a special place. Whenever Father had something weighing on his mind, he would come to the garden.”

Lee Seowol walked through the snow-covered garden, her footsteps crunching softly. Then she suddenly stopped when she spotted a frost-covered flower.

“Mother loved this flower.”

“Did she?”

“Yes. Whenever she tended the garden, she would always bring me here and tell me the names of the flowers.”

After thinking quietly for a moment, Lee Seowol continued.

“But I can’t remember it now.”

“It was a long time ago. Don’t trouble yourself over it.”

“Uncle Cheol.”

“Yes?”

“I don’t like flowers. I only followed Mother because she liked them. In truth, I never cared about flowers. It’s the same reason Father used to come to the garden.”

Lee Seowol slowly looked around the snow-covered garden. The flowers had withered, and the number of burial mounds in the center of the garden had grown from one to four.

Her gaze sank as she silently stared at the mounds where her family slept.

Whose fault was it?

Perhaps it was her own fault for being born the daughter of a Murim martial artist.

That was why she had lost her father and two older brothers one after another, after losing her mother ten years ago.

I should have kept trying to stop him until the very end…

A memory from two months ago suddenly resurfaced and blurred her vision.

It had been a conversation between father and daughter, held late one night with no one else present.

“I’ll have to tie you to the third son of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.”

“The third son? Surely you’re not thinking of marrying me to that good-for-nothing?”

“No. But it will become an unbearable scandal for you.”

“I see.”

“Is that all you have to say?”

“What can I do? It’s my fault for having a heartless father.”

“You’re a child I can never understand. Are you really all right with this?”

“If I say I don’t like it, will you change your mind?”

“At the very least, I’ll look for another way.”

“So the war with the Jin Family of Taiyuan is a foregone conclusion.”

“Now that the Strange Hero of Shanxi and the Heaven Shaking Sword are absent, this is the perfect time. This opportunity will never come again.”

“The Jin Family of Taiyuan is strong even without the Family Head and the Second Young Master. Please reconsider.”

“No. My decision has already been made.”

“Then make sure you win. Become strong enough that no one in Shanxi can even open their mouth about a scandal involving me.”

“…If you had been a man, I would have made you the Young Sect Leader.”

“I’m glad I was born a woman. I have no interest in being this sect’s Young Sect Leader.”

Her fears soon became reality.

Had even a fortnight passed before Lee Seogeun returned as a cold corpse? Not long after, she lost Lee Cheonbaek. In the end, even her eldest brother, Lee Seogwang, was gone.

Now I’m alone.

And so, the Blood Wolf Sword Lee Cheonbaek’s last surviving blood relative became the new Sect Leader.

As she silently gazed at the burial mounds, a warm palm gently caressed her shoulder.

“I’m sorry. I should have come sooner…”

“Uncle Cheol, please don’t say that. If you hadn’t come, our sect wouldn’t have been able to hold out this long.”

Under the Red Wind Band’s fierce assault, the Mount Heng Sword Sect had been helplessly driven back. If not for the Peak master known as the Tiger of Mount

Heng, who had rushed over after belatedly learning of Lee Cheonbaek's calamity, the enemy would never have withdrawn.

"I'll tear that bastard limb from limb and kill him."

At the thought of the Red Wind Band Leader, Lee Seowol shook her head.

In a life-and-death duel between Peak masters, Cheol Mubaek had the edge.

They had already clashed once, and Pung Yang had retreated with a minor internal injury.

But an opportunity like that will never come again.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect had always gathered information on the mounted bandits of northern Gaoyuan and remained constantly on alert.

There were dozens of mounted-bandit groups in Gaoyuan, but among them, the Red Wind Band led by Pung Yang had grown frighteningly fast.

A man particularly strong and meticulous even among Gaoyuan's chieftains.

That man was Pung Yang.

There's no way someone like that would engage Uncle Cheol in a life-and-death duel. If Uncle Cheol rashly tried to confront him, Pung Yang would turn the tables on him instead.

Lee Seowol turned toward Cheol Mubaek.

"Uncle Cheol, could you tell me once more about Pung Yang's martial arts?"

"Early Peak. His saber arts and throwing-knife techniques had reached a high realm. However…"

A deep furrow formed between Cheol Mubaek's brows.

"Every one of his forms was thoroughly insidious. I suspect he has learned demonic, heterodox martial arts."

"Demonic, heterodox arts…"

Ever since the Great Faction War, practicing demonic, heterodox arts had become synonymous with death in the Central Plains. Unorthodox factions might present themselves as orthodox, but no one openly declared themselves unorthodox.

"For now, it's only a suspicion. We'll know if we clash again."

"I trust you, Uncle Cheol. But don't underestimate the Red Wind Band Leader. He has any number of subordinates he can sacrifice in his place."

With enemies bearing down from both directions, their combined force was close to three hundred strong.

Meanwhile, even after gathering every martial artist stationed at its branches, the Mount Heng Sword Sect had less than half that number.

Given the situation, morale was low among both the ordinary martial artists and the newly appointed senior members.

"Seowol. May I say something?"

These were the words of a benefactor who had risked his life out of loyalty to his dead friend. Lee Seowol bowed politely.

“I’ll take your words to heart.”

Cheol Mubaek spoke heavily.

“Leave.”

It was a single word laden with meaning.

But there was not the slightest hesitation in Lee Seowol’s answer.

“I’m sorry.”

“It isn’t too late. You must survive.”

“It isn’t over yet. And I will survive.”

“If you thought Cheonbaek would have wanted this…”

“Uncle.”

At her resolute voice, Cheol Mubaek closed his mouth. Firm determination filled Lee Seowol’s clear eyes.

“This is what I wanted. As the Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect.”

“Whew…”

Cheol Mubaek let out a sigh instead of answering.

“I’m already deeply indebted to you, Uncle. Even if you leave now, I won’t resent you.”

“Do you really need to hear my answer before you’ll be satisfied?”

Lee Seowol shook her head. Cheol Mubaek had cherished her like his own child since she was young. In some ways, he had been more of a father to her than her actual father.

“I will never forget this debt. Uncle Cheol, you are the benefactor of both me and the Mount Heng Sword Sect.”

“I’ve watched you since you were little, but… you really are a sly child.”

“I was sly when I was young. Now I’m a ruthless bitch.”

Watching Lee Seowol smile faintly, Cheol Mubaek could only continue to sigh deeply.

“Do we have any chance of winning?”

“If we fought now? Ten percent.”

“What?”

“But if reinforcements arrive, fifty percent. More than that.”

“Reinforcements? From the Jin Family of Taiyuan?”

“A messenger pigeon from the Lower District Sect’s Jeongyang Branch arrived two shichen ago.”

“How many are coming? A hundred? Two hundred?”

“Four. One of them is the Heaven Shaking Sword, Jin Mukyung, and another is…”

Lee Seowol let out a wry laugh, reminded of her ill-fated connection with him. “The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, Jin Taekyung.”

Chapter 112

Mounted bandits riding openly down the main road in broad daylight?

Under normal circumstances, it would be unthinkable. The nearest Murim sect would be the first to act, followed by soldiers from the local authorities.

But if the mounted bandits numbered in the hundreds—enough to overwhelm even the Murim sect responsible for suppressing them—the officials could only close their eyes and cover their ears.

Just like now.

“Ar-aren’t those mounted bandits?”

“Watch what you call them. Do you have three lives or something? That’s the infamous Red Wind Band.”

“The Red Wind Band? Weren’t they defeated by the Mount Heng Sword Sect not long ago?”

“That’s what we thought. But this time seems different. The marketplace is already rife with rumors that the Mount Heng Sword Sect won’t escape total destruction.”

“Still, the sect has some ability. Surely they won’t lose to mere mounted bandits…”

“Hey, watch your mouth! The man riding at the front is Pung Yang, the leader of the Red Wind Band. They say he’s a Peak master.”

“What? A Peak master?”

“Yeah. You can’t dismiss them just because they’re mounted bandits. I hear he isn’t merely strong in martial arts—he’s exceptionally clever, too.”

The commoners’ fearful whispers wormed their way into Pung Yang’s ears and those of his mounted bandits.

A subordinate riding on Pung Yang’s right spoke casually.

“Shall I rip those bastards’ mouths apart?”

“Do you want to?”

“If the Leader permits it, I’ll deal with those two first, then turn the entire village into a sea of flames.”

“You’ll kill the old, capture the young men, and rape the women?”

“Heh heh. Isn’t that what men like us always do? The Mount Heng Sword Sect bastards must be cowering behind their walls by now, scared out of their wits.”

“They probably are. They’ll be gathering all their strength for one final battle.”

“It won’t matter. It’ll be like throwing an egg against a rock. It’s a foregone conclusion that you’ll wipe out the Mount Heng Sword Sect and take its place.”

“That is why I won’t permit it.”

“What?”

Pung Yang burst into hearty laughter at his subordinate’s bewildered reaction.

Every one of them was shortsighted and cruel by nature. That was why they had become mounted bandits—and why Pung Yang kept them close.

Because they're easy to handle.

When his laughter subsided, he spoke.

"Wiping out the Datong Branch was part of the war. But if we harm commoners now, all we'll accomplish is giving the Jin Family of Taiyuan an excuse to intervene."

"Are they the rulers of Shanxi Province or something?"

"Not yet. But they will be soon enough. Before that happens, shouldn't we swallow the Mount Heng Sword Sect and lie flat like dogs?"

"Um, Leader, I'm not doubting you, but… would orthodox factions like the Jin Family of Taiyuan really look favorably on mounted bandits like us?"

"Mounted bandits? Who's a mounted bandit?"

"What?"

"Last time, I noticed that the Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect was quite beautiful."

Pung Yang's subordinate blinked several times before finally catching his meaning. The corners of his mouth curled upward.

"She's of marriageable age. I suppose it's time she took a husband."

"She has two choices: total destruction or marriage."

"Then what will happen to the Red Wind Band…?"

"We'll take the heart of it and wear the outer shell. Let's see… Compared to the others, your face is at least presentable. I'll make you Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion."

"Ha ha ha! I'll devote my life to serving you!"

As he listened to his subordinate's laughter, Pung Yang tightened his grip on the reins.

At last, I've made it this far.

He was a cold and levelheaded man, but his heart pounded at the thought that he had taken another step toward his ambition.

Memories from long ago surfaced one after another, flickering before his eyes.

It's already been well over twenty years.

Becoming a mounted bandit had been easier and simpler than he had expected. There were only two ways: go looking for them yourself or get caught by them. In Pung Yang's case, it had been the latter.

When he was young, he had committed a crime and was being taken to the local authorities when a mounted-bandit group attacked. That had been the turning point of his life.

"Boss, there's a kid here too."

“Hm? He’s so scrawny we wouldn’t get more than a few coins for him even if we sold him. Kid, did you get caught pickpocketing?”

“No. I killed someone.”

“You killed someone? How old are you?”

“Thirteen.”

“Why did you kill him?”

“I hadn’t eaten for three days, and the boss had dumplings…”

“Dumplings? Did he take away what you begged for? That would be enough to make anyone snap.”

“No. I was hungry, and I didn’t have the strength to beg. He was eating dumplings right in front of me.”

“…So you killed him?”

“I thought it would be faster to take them and eat them.”

“Hey, let this kid go and feed him something. He’s one of us from today.”

Pung Yang became a mounted bandit that day.

An orphan with no one in the world, he had wandered from place to place begging for food. He was exceptionally perceptive and quick-witted.

Compared to his past, when he had barely eaten a meal every three days, life as a mounted bandit was lavish.

Robbery? Murder?

To Pung Yang, who had committed murder at the age of thirteen simply because he wanted to eat dumplings, such things were nothing more than what had to be done.

“Good grief. I’ve been a mounted bandit for more than ten years, but I’ve never seen anyone like you. It’s like you don’t have a conscience.”

“Why? I’m a mounted bandit.”

“Kid, that’s not how it usually works. You get used to it little by little. No one is skilled from the very beginning.”

“Were you like that too, Boss? It was easy for me.”

“Easy, easy… I’m starting to wonder if I’m raising a tiger cub. How about learning a thing or two about martial arts from me?”

“Martial arts?”

“Yes, martial arts. You’re still young, so if your bones and martial talent are up to the task, you could become a master.”

“Then I’ll call you Master from today onward.”

“Master and disciple, my ass. Forget it. Just keep doing what you’re doing now.”

Not forming a master-disciple relationship had been the right decision.

A year later, his boss was beheaded by a First Rate master, and Pung Yang found a new nest in another mounted-bandit group.

"You were under Gwangchil?"

"Yes. As long as you feed me well, I'll swear my loyalty to you."

"You seem reasonably sharp. I won't go easy on you just because you're young, so keep up on your own."

Gaoyuan was brutal.

Entire mounted-bandit groups were sometimes wiped out after attacking the wrong merchant caravan, and power struggles between the groups never ceased.

But Pung Yang survived every time, growing stronger with each passing year.

By the time he turned thirty, his martial arts had entered the First Rate realm, and he managed to seize the position of squad leader in a mounted-bandit group of considerable size.

But that was as far as I got.

The law of strength applied everywhere.

Gaoyuan was ultimately just another part of the Murim, where the strong ruled.

Pung Yang possessed grand ambitions and an exceptional mind, but he lacked the martial power befitting a leader.

The limit of Third Rate martial arts.

Pung Yang's martial talent was extraordinary.

Had he entered a prestigious orthodox sect as a child and learned an excellent internal cultivation technique and martial arts, he might have crossed the wall to Peak long ago.

But he had grown up in a beggars' den and learned Third Rate martial arts from the mounted bandits of Gaoyuan. His limits were clear.

If heaven's fortune hadn't favored me, I'd probably still be stuck in the same place.

A deep smile settled over Pung Yang's lips.

Three years ago, on that day, his life had changed completely. He had gone from being a mere squad leader in a mounted-bandit group to the leader of the Red Wind Band, one of the powers moving Gaoyuan—and now it was time to swallow a Murim sect.

"Leader!"

His subordinate's shout snapped Pung Yang out of his thoughts.

Far in the distance, stone walls piled high like a fortress had finally come into view.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect.

As Pung Yang gazed at his and the Red Wind Band's new home, one person entered his sight. Even from this distance, he could feel the man's fiery aura.

The Tiger of Mount Heng, Cheol Mubaek.

The wall he had to overcome to take the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

Although he had withdrawn after suffering a slight loss last time…

Today will be different.

Pung Yang unconsciously felt inside his robes. After confirming the hard wooden case there, his smile deepened.

“Leader, your orders?”

“Surround them. Don’t let so much as a single ant escape. Then send an envoy.”

Total destruction or marriage.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect had only two choices.

“I’ll have the Mount Heng Sword Sect in my hands before sunset.”

“They’ve surrounded our sect without leaving a gap!”

“Their numbers are well over two hundred!”

“Sect Leader, please make a decision!”

Seated in the place of honor, Lee Seowol spoke calmly.

“Are the troops deployed?”

“Of the hundred or so men, half are blocking the sect entrance. The rest have been armed with shields and bows.”

Everyone in the main hall knew that “a hundred or so” was a generous estimate. In truth, they fell well short of that number.

Several of the Mount Heng Sword Sect’s senior figures had fled the previous night, taking their families and the subordinates who followed them.

“Uncle Cheol, what happened with what I asked you to do?”

“I took care of it as you instructed.”

Lee Seowol’s plan involved oil.

They had spread enough oil to fill ten wagons evenly throughout the estate.

They had covered it with piles of well-dried hay, so it was obvious that the entire area would turn into a sea of flames the moment fire touched it.

Does she intend to take them down with us?

Cheol Mubaek was worried, but he kept his thoughts to himself. In all the years he had watched Lee Seowol, she had always been calm and clever, even from a very young age.

“We only need to hold out for one day. Just one day. Reinforcements from the Jin Family of Taiyuan are on their way. If we can delay the enemy until then, we have a good chance of winning.”

“R-reinforcements from the Jin Family of Taiyuan?”

“I hear the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi and the Heaven Shaking Sword are coming in person.”

The faces of everyone gathered in the main hall brightened.

The Heaven Shaking Sword, Jin Mukyung, was already renowned throughout the Central Plains as a martial arts genius, while the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, Jin Taekyung, was a rising star.

It was uncomfortable that he had earned his fame through a war against the Mount Heng Sword Sect, but knowing that he was now on their side made it feel as though they had gained a thousand troops.

Above all else…

“No matter how bold Pung Yang is, he won’t dare raise his sword against a direct descendant of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.”

“…I suppose not.”

Lee Seowol felt bitter inside.

Not long ago, the Mount Heng Sword Sect had stood shoulder to shoulder with the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

Now, a Murim sect that had once commanded northern Shanxi had to focus all its strength on merely holding out against a mounted-bandit group.

I will never forget what happened today.

Just as she bit down hard on her lip, the doors to the main hall opened, and a martial artist from the Gate Guard Pavilion came running in, shouting.

“Sect Leader, the enemy has sent an envoy!”

“An envoy?”

“Yes. He says there’s something he wishes to tell you in person…”

Lee Seowol nodded without hesitation.

If they could delay the battle by even fifteen minutes, they had to do everything they could.

“Bring him in.”

Not long after the Gate Guard Pavilion martial artist withdrew, the Red Wind Band’s envoy was escorted into the main hall.

Flashing his rotten teeth in a crooked grin, he bowed deeply in an exaggerated manner.

“I pay my respects to the Sect Leader of the great Mount Heng Sword Sect.”

His attitude was clearly mocking, but the senior figures—and even the fiery-tempered Cheol Mubaek—suppressed their anger. Lee Seowol had repeatedly warned them beforehand.

“Why did you send an envoy?”

“Well, shouldn’t you offer a man who has traveled so far a bowl of rice wine before you start asking—gasp!”

The Red Wind Band’s envoy broke off and began trembling violently.

Unable to contain his anger, Cheol Mubaek had taken one step forward and unleashed an overwhelming aura.

“Do you want rice wine that badly?”

At the deep, heavy voice, the envoy frantically shook his head.

“N-no, sir. I was thirsty and said something stu—stupid.”

“Uncle Cheol. That’s enough.”

“…Hmph. Stop talking nonsense and deliver your message.”

Barely freed from Cheol Mubaek’s aura, the envoy stammered.

“T-the Leader says we should end this pointless war and cement our friendship.”

“Friendship?”

The senior figures of the Mount Heng Sword Sect doubted their own ears.

Who had betrayed the previous Sect Leader, Lee Cheonbaek, and killed even the Young Sect Leader, Lee Seogwang? And hadn’t they massacred the families and dependents of the Datong Branch only a short while ago?

But Lee Seowol reacted differently. Without the slightest hint of surprise, she stared straight at the envoy.

“And if we refuse?”

“He said you won’t escape total destruction.”

“So he means that if we want to save our people, we must offer the Mount Heng Sword Sect in its entirety as a wedding gift.”

“I-I don’t know anything beyond that…”

By now, everyone in the main hall understood what Pung Yang had meant by “friendship.”

They were all furious, but the first to act was the Tiger of Mount Heng, Cheol Mubaek.

Thud!

In the literal blink of an eye, Cheol Mubaek crossed more than ten jang[695] and drove his fist into the envoy’s chest.

The red Fist Energy carrying horrifying heat shattered his chest bones and burned his blood and flesh.

“Ghuuuh…”

With one final death rattle, the light vanished from the envoy’s eyes.

Cheol Mubaek pulled his fist from the man’s chest and turned toward Lee Seowol.

“He deserved to die a hundred times over.”

“I agree. But…”

Lee Seowol slowly rose from her seat and continued.

“Now there’s no avoiding the fight.”

One hour later, everyone in the Mount Heng Sword Sect heard the sound of horn calls ringing out from all directions.

---

[695] Jang is a traditional Korean unit of length equal to ten ja, approximately 3.03 m (9.94 ft).

Chapter 113

Half a shichen[696] after sending an envoy to the Mount Heng Sword Sect, Pung Yang gave the order without hesitation.

“Attack.”

A swift, decisive battle.

The longer it dragged on, the worse it would be for him. Word that the Red Wind Band had surrounded the Mount Heng Sword Sect would spread quickly, and if outside forces—especially the Jin Family of Taiyuan—intervened, things would become troublesome.

I never expected to enter without bloodshed in the first place.

She might be a woman, but she carried the blood of the Blood Wolf Sword, Lee Cheonbaek.

If words and gestures couldn’t tame her, he would have to subdue her with violence—the same method Pung Yang had always used.

Bwooooooong!

Powerful horn calls rang out from every direction. At the advance signal used by the mounted-bandit groups of Gaoyuan, the mounted bandits of the Red Wind Band surrounding the Mount Heng Sword Sect kicked their horses in the ribs as one.

“Chaaaarge!”

“Kill every last one of them!”

Rumble, rumble, rumble!

Hundreds of hooves raced forward, trampling the snow-covered ground.

The horn calls continued without pause, strong and carrying far into the distance.

Ding!

SYSTEM

Circulate Qi was successfully completed.
A small amount of Fatigue and Stamina has been restored.

The moment I heard the System notification and opened my eyes, I looked around.

“Did you guys just hear something?”

Wolhwa and Hyuk Mujin, who had been feeding hay to the horses, looked at me in confusion.

[696] A shichen is a traditional time unit of approximately two hours.

"Young Master Jin, what sound?"

"There's always sound. Listen—the horses chewing hay, the wind…"

"Not that crap, you idiot."

"Then what?"

"A-a vuvuzela?"

"Vuvu… what?"

"The thing people use to cheer at sporting events… Never mind. It's a thing."

I gave up trying to explain and stared in the direction the sound had come from—or rather, the direction I thought it had come from.

Coincidentally, it was north, toward the Mount Heng Sword Sect—the very direction we were heading.

Did I hear it wrong?

According to Wolhwa, we still had another three shichen—six hours—of riding before we reached the Mount Heng Sword Sect. Whatever had happened, we were too far away to hear it from here.

Unless it was cannon fire.

Jin Mukyung, who had just finished circulating his qi, added his opinion.

"I didn't hear anything."

"But I could've sworn I heard something."

"You imagined it."

"Something might have happened at the Mount Heng Sword Sect."

"That's possible. But I didn't hear anything."

"But I'm telling you, I think I heard something."

"So I'm telling you that you imagined it."

"Based on what?"

"It's simple. There's no way you heard something I couldn't."

"…"

That was incredibly irritating, but he was right, so I couldn't argue.

Seeing me at a loss for words, Jin Mukyung clicked his tongue.

"If you don't want to die to a stray blade, focus on keeping your mind and body under control. You never know what might happen on a battlefield."

Look who's lecturing whom.

When it came to combat experience, no one here could match me.

I only looked the same as usual because I had grown so accustomed to it. When it came to preparing for and taking part in battle, I was already thoroughly battle-hardened.

“There are a lot of enemies, so conserve as much internal energy as possible and keep your movements to a minimum. I’ll take the lead. Just follow me, and you’ll be fine.”

Was he worried about me because we shared the same blood?

Come to think of it, Mukyung had made his dislike painfully obvious, yet he had still helped me a great deal.

He had helped with my training, agreed to accompany me to the Mount Heng Sword Sect, and, I’d heard, had even put considerable effort into reforming his lazy little brother when they were children.

Even if Jin Wikyung had asked him to, he couldn’t have done all that if he truly hated me.

Maybe he’s actually a soft-hearted guy.

Was this what people called a tsundere?[697]

I gazed at Jin Mukyung sentimentally, almost feeling a little moved.

Our eyes met.

“What are you looking at? Eyes down.”

“…”

“If you take even a single wound from those mounted-bandit bastards, I’ll kill you myself.”

“…Yeah, sure.”

That’s more like it. Tsundere, my ass.

I must have lost my mind for a moment to imagine something so ridiculous.

Accepting reality, I was about to transfer my saddle to one of the spare horses we had taken earlier when Hyuk Mujin sidled over with a deeply worried expression.

“Second Young Master, you aren’t going to kill me too, are you?”

“…Are you saying it’s okay if I die?”

“Ah, no! Why would you put it like that?”

“I’ll make sure to kill you before I die, so shut up and get ready to leave.”

I kicked Hyuk Mujin in the rear as he grumbled under his breath, then mounted my horse.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect was still three shichen away.

From here on, we had to ride hard without taking a single break.

[697] Tsundere is a Japanese term for someone who acts cold or hostile while concealing affection.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect was like a fortress. Its towering stone walls were sturdy enough to be called castle walls, and they were fitted with all manner of defensive structures for withstanding a siege.

Built more than thirty years ago under the uncompromising will of the founding Sect Leader, Lee Cheonbaek, those defenses were finally serving their purpose.

“Fire!”

Whoosh—whoosh—whoosh!

Dozens of arrows loosed in unison rained down on the charging cavalry.

But the most common weapons in Gaoyuan were spears, sabers, and bows. Accustomed to fighting in Gaoyuan, the mounted bandits of the Red Wind Band raised the shields strapped to one arm before anyone even gave the order.

Thud! Thump!

Only a dozen or so men fell from their horses.

The shields, made from bone-dry wood faced with hide from an old horse’s rump, stopped the arrows admirably.

“Ha ha ha! These punks don’t know their elders when they see them, and they dare—!”

That was when it happened.

Fwoosh—crack!

Something hurtled through the air with ferocious momentum, pierced the horse’s neck, and buried itself in the captain’s chest.

Having only just entered the early stages of First Rate, he stared at the arrow protruding from his chest as though he couldn’t believe it, then toppled over together with his prized horse.

Several of the riders behind him lost formation and fell one after another.

“Crossbows! Watch for the crossbows!”

“Return fire!”

Whoosh—whoosh—whoosh!

If the Mount Heng Sword Sect’s attack had been a passing shower, the Red Wind Band’s barrage was a torrential downpour.

Even on horseback, they drew and loosed without pause. Their arrows flew fast and true.

Thwack! Thwack! Thwack!

“Aaargh!”

“Hide behind your shields! Don’t stick your heads out!”

Taking advantage of the opening, the mounted bandits spurred their horses forward and set grappling hooks and makeshift ladders against the walls, which stood more than ten jang[698] high. They began attempting to breach the fortress.

A melee erupted atop the walls.

Screams and blood burst forth.

“Ha ha! Kill them all!”

“Don’t let them climb up!”

Lee Seowol watched it all from the highest watchtower. Her lips trembled, and the color had drained from her face.

So this is the Murim.

The screams of the dying. The desperate struggles of those who wanted to live.

The world of the strong preying on the weak that she had finally encountered was more brutal and frightening than she had imagined.

But…

I can’t retreat.

Countless people had already died. Those who were going to leave had left, while those who remained were fighting with their lives on the line.

Lee Seowol was now the Sect Leader who had to lead them, and she was bound to share her fate with the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

“Sect Leader! The walls are in danger! We need to send reinforcements!”

“They’re breaking down the gate with a battering ram!”

“Sect Leader! You must do something!”

“Sect Leader!”

As urgent reports rained down from every direction, Lee Seowol spoke.

“When I give the signal, fire one fire arrow toward the walls and two toward the gate. And, Uncle Cheol.”

Cheol Mubaek, who had been standing guard beside her, answered.

“Tell me what you need.”

“The gate will be breached soon. Can you buy us a little time?”

“By myself?”

“I can only apologize for making such a difficult request.”

“One against a hundred. I’ve always wanted to try that.”

“The uncle I know is a master who can face ten thousand men. Still, please be careful.”

“All right. Do you really think those bastards could get the better of me?”

Cheol Mubaek laughed heartily and leaped down.

With the Tiger of Mount Heng—a consummate Peak master—guarding the gate, no one would get through unless Pung Yang himself stepped forward.

---

[698] A Korean jang is ten ja, approximately 3.03 m (9.94 ft). Ten jang is about 30 m (99 ft); a hundred jang is about 303 m (994 ft).

More. Just a little longer.

Lee Seowol gazed down at the fierce battle before suddenly shouting like a thunderclap.

“Now!”

The two martial artists who had been waiting for her command each drew their bowstrings.

The next moment, the fire arrows soared into the darkening winter sky and shone brightly above everyone’s heads.

The fire arrows falling like meteors were clearly visible even to Pung Yang, more than a hundred jang[699] away.

He muttered to himself.

“So they had a move hidden up their sleeve.”

It didn’t take long for his guess to become certainty.

A moment later, enormous flames erupted around the walls.

Fwoosh! Fwoooosh!

“Aaargh!”

Burning alive was one of the most painful ways to die.

The mounted bandits of the Red Wind Band, massed beneath the walls like a swarm of ants, writhed and screamed horribly.

The ropes attached to the grappling hooks snapped, and the wooden ladders were engulfed in flames.

“Attack!”

“Kill every last one of those mounted-bandit bastards!”

Those waiting below to climb and those still climbing burned to death, while those who had already reached the top were stabbed and slashed by weapons converging from every direction.

“So they did make some preparations…”

As Pung Yang stared impassively at the battlefield, a mounted bandit returned, his body blackened in patches like charcoal.

“What happened?”

“L-Leader. Our losses are too great!”

The moment he reached Pung Yang, the mounted bandit threw himself flat on the ground and continued breathlessly.

[699] A Korean jang is ten ja, approximately 3.03 m (9.94 ft). Ten jang is about 30 m (99 ft); a hundred jang is about 303 m (994 ft).

“From the first assault until now, at least a hundred men must have died. More importantly, after that fire attack, our brothers’ morale is…”

“The gate?”

“Pardon?”

“What happened to the gate?”

“We broke through, but the Tiger of Mount Heng, Cheol Mubaek, is holding it alone…”

“Alone?”

“Yes. His martial arts are so formidable that no one dares step forward.”

“Then that’s enough.”

As he spoke, Pung Yang held out his hand.

The mounted bandit instinctively reached to take it, only for his body to tilt and collapse.

A dagger was buried deep between his brows, his expression frozen in confusion.

“How many troops do we have left?”

The subordinate who served as Pung Yang’s right hand was accustomed to such sights. He glanced at the corpse and answered.

“By a rough count, a little over a hundred and fifty but not quite two hundred. It’s true that our losses are heavier.”

“How much worse do you think theirs are? The men on those walls are the Mount Heng Sword Sect’s final bulwark.”

“You mean those few men are all they have left?”

“Yes.”

“It isn’t that I doubt you, Leader, but what if they have another trap like that fire attack…?”

“That’s what they’re counting on.”

Pung Yang let out a derisive laugh. He didn’t know whose strategy it had been, but they had played it quite cleverly.

If he had been less experienced, Pung Yang too would have suspected another trap and pulled his forces back.

They’re struggling to buy time. Are they waiting for someone’s support?

If so, there was even less reason to hesitate.

The few could not stand against the many. Even after suffering considerable losses, the Red Wind Band would have no trouble wiping out the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

And besides…

“I’m going myself.”

“You’re going yourself, Leader?”

“Yes. We have a tiger to catch, don’t we?”

Pung Yang burst into a hearty laugh and felt inside his robes out of habit.
A hard wooden case rested there.
Inside was something that could bring down a tiger in one go.

Chapter 114

The Tiger of Mount Heng, Cheol Mubaek, stood like an iron tower.

The entrance gaped wide enough for two carriages to pass through side by side, yet not one of the fifty-odd mounted bandits of the Red Wind Band dared set foot inside.

They had seen clearly how the men who went ahead of them had died.

Some had died with their heads blown apart. Others had been pierced through the abdomen or killed when their limbs were broken. No one had properly seen when or how Cheol Mubaek's fist moved.

More than twenty had died that way.

"Monster…"

A deep voice from behind rescued the mounted bandits, who were paralyzed with fear.

"You may leave now. I'll handle this place."

At the appearance of the voice's owner, Pung Yang, the Red Wind Band Leader, the mounted bandits retreated like the tide going out. Only then did the two Peak masters face each other.

"Good to see you again, Senior Cheol."

"I don't recall ever taking a bandit as my junior."

"You're still as prickly as ever. They say even brushing sleeves creates a bond, and you and I have traded blows, haven't we?"

"We did. Then you ran away without even looking back."

"Let's call it a strategic retreat. I didn't expect you to show up there either, Senior Cheol."

"Have your internal injuries healed?"

"My insides were burning, so I had a rough few days. But it wasn't enough to kill me, which is why I've shamelessly come back."

"Today, it won't end with mere heat."

"Oh, dear. How about we settle this through conversation? For a man of your age to have such a fiery temper…"

At Pung Yang's shameless remark, Cheol Mubaek ground his teeth.

"Conversation? If you hadn't betrayed us, Lee Cheonbaek, my friend, might have lived."

"I'm not stupid enough to join a fight with no chance of winning."

"As if that weren't enough, you killed Lee Seogwang too?"

"I'm not softhearted enough to spare a brat who came at me without knowing his place."

Pung Yang smiled gently and continued.

“If I’d known that brat would become my brother-in-law, I might have spared him.”

“You bastard!”

A lava-like aura boiled up from every inch of Cheol Mubaek’s body. Under the formidable Scorching Yang Qi of a Peak master, the snow blanketing the ground melted away, and the vegetation turned yellow.

Pung Yang exclaimed in admiration at the sight.

“Your internal energy is remarkable, as expected. If Senior Cheol had only set his mind to it, I’d be facing the Mount Heng Fist Sect today.”

“I’ll rip off your limbs.”

“Still, you shouldn’t be too confident.”

“Don’t count on the same stroke of luck as last time. You have no one to use as a shield today.”

Pung Yang smiled faintly.

“Why do you think I sent my men away?”

“That…”

Cheol Mubaek hesitated. Pung Yang’s relaxed attitude had been bothering him for some time.

What is he plotting?

Last time, Pung Yang had withdrawn after suffering internal injuries in barely a hundred exchanges. The fact that the man who had used his subordinates as shields to escape had sent everyone away and come here of his own accord meant that he was confident enough to do so…

“What dirty trick are you planning?”

“A dirty trick? I simply couldn’t use a chicken-killing knife on a tiger, so I stepped in myself.”

“You? Alone?”

“Why not?”

“There’s no way. I’m grateful, if anything.”

Cheol Mubaek glared at Pung Yang suspiciously and clenched his fists.

“Thanks to you, this will be over easily.”

Whoooosh!

The instant he finished speaking, a scorching gale rushed straight toward Pung Yang. Pung Yang swallowed a breath and swung his curved saber at the red fist energy flying toward his chest.

Boom! Boom-boom!

The two Peak masters collided. Roaring explosions rang out one after another, and the resulting wind swept across the snow-covered ground.

Beneath a mound of snow that had leaped high into the air, one man staggered backward.

"Ugh."

Pung Yang swallowed a groan and looked at his torn palm. He had avoided the disgrace of dropping his weapon, but the difference in strength was undeniable.

"You're still as strong as ever."

Cheol Mubaek stepped toward him and answered.

"It's too late for regrets."

"My thoughts exactly."

"I'll start by tearing that mouth apart."

Fwooooooosh!

Cheol Mubaek lunged forward with the movements of a tiger.

The ferocious forms of the Shura[700] Annihilating Fist, a martial art thought to have been lost long ago, poured down upon Pung Yang.

Kwa-gwa-gwang!

A fierce bloody battle was raging along the fortress walls. Despite facing a four-to-one disadvantage in numbers, the martial artists of the Mount Heng Sword Sect refused to retreat.

"Retreat, and all that awaits us is death!"

"Are you going to let those mounted-bandit bastards steal our home?"

"Let's avenge the martial brothers they killed!"

Slash! Thrust!

"Aaargh!"

"D-don't push!"

The mounted bandits of the Red Wind Band had fallen into confusion. The effects of the earlier fire attack and the fear that another trap might be waiting held them back.

In stark contrast, the martial artists of the Mount Heng Sword Sect charged at them wild-eyed. The mounted bandits were helpless against their unstoppable momentum and were cut down one after another.

"Don't run away!"

"Any bastard who retreats dies by my hand!"

The mounted-bandit captains shouted at the top of their lungs, but they were unable to restore order. Instead, they too had to surrender their lives to arrows that seemed to fly out of nowhere.

[700] Shura derives from asura, a class of combative beings in Buddhist and Hindu traditions.

Thwack!

“Ghk. Gaaah…”

“C-Captain!”

Lee Seowol stood atop the highest watchtower, drawing her bowstring without pause.

Beside her were the five finest archers among the Mount Heng Sword Sect’s martial artists.

Twung! Thud!

Every time a bowstring was drawn, a mounted bandit fell. Captains, or those who appeared to rank even higher, were their highest-priority targets.

One more. One more.

But the battle was going worse than expected.

The martial artists of the Mount Heng Sword Sect had entered the battle with fewer troops from the very beginning. They grew exhausted at an alarming rate, and before long, one or two at a time began losing their lives to stray blades.

The mounted bandits, meanwhile, were gradually recovering from their confusion.

“Get a grip! There aren’t many of these Mount Heng Sword Sect bastards!”

“If we kill these men, victory is ours!”

The martial artists of the Mount Heng Sword Sect had nothing left to lose. They fought desperately, heedless of the odds against them.

“Kill them!”

Slash! Slash! Slash!

But every time one mounted bandit was cut down, two more appeared to fill the gap. When two were cut down, three took their place.

“Gasp, gasp!”

A martial artist of the Mount Heng Sword Sect swung his sword frantically, only to be hacked apart by five or six weapons that sprang at him from every direction.

Slash! Thud-thud-thud!

Neck, chest, abdomen… Martial artists were cut and pierced all over, dying without even having time to scream.

The mounted bandits of the Red Wind Band, their momentum rising, continued pressing the attack without pause. Before anyone realized it, half the fortress wall was packed with enemies.

“Haa, haa.”

Twung! Twung! Twung!

Lee Seowol summoned every last bit of strength she had and drew her bowstring. Blood ran from her once-delicate fingers and between her clenched teeth, while her parched mouth reeked of a sickly sweetness.

"There!"

After firing arrows without rest, her position was discovered before long. When about twenty mounted bandits raised their shields and charged toward the watchtower, desperate shouts rang out.

"Sect Leader!"

"You must get away! They're coming!"

Three shichen[701] had passed since the siege began. Lee Seowol had only practiced archery as a hobby. She was no martial artist, and her Stamina had reached its limit long ago.

But she did not stop. She forced strength into her thin, trembling arms and searched for her next target.

Get away? Where would I go?

She had lived here her entire life. To Lee Seowol, the Mount Heng Sword Sect was both her hometown and something she had to protect until the final moment of her life.

The same was true of the martial artists still making their last stand.

"Stop them!"

"Never let them reach the Sect Leader!"

Their desperate cries were in vain. The fortress walls had already been overrun.

The surviving martial artists of the Mount Heng Sword Sect retreated to the watchtower. But well over a hundred mounted bandits were closing in from every direction.

Eyes gleaming with killing intent and desire shone between the torches held by the advancing enemies.

"You damned bastards dare…"

"I'll tear every last one of you apart and throw the pieces to the dogs."

The killing intent of the mounted bandits surrounding the watchtower in a circle stabbed at their skin.

Just as everyone was falling into despair, Lee Seowol suddenly drew her bowstring toward the sky.

Whoooosh.

Trailing a tail of flame, a single fire arrow descended toward the gate shrouded in darkness.

It was a light meant to find one person.

Uncle Cheol.

The Tiger of Mount Heng, Cheol Mubaek.

He was the Mount Heng Sword Sect's final hope.

---

[701] A shichen is a traditional time unit of approximately two hours; three shichen are approximately six hours.

That was when a man walked out beneath the light revealed by the fire arrow.

Clomp. Clomp.

“I suppose it’s a little late to say this now…”

Lee Seowol had heard that voice only once, but she could never forget it, not even in her dreams.

Unable to bring herself to look at him, she closed her eyes.

Pung Yang beamed at her.

“You’ll have to marry me.”

The hunter Cheol Mubaek had become the Tiger of Mount Heng because of a fortuitous encounter.

While tracking a wolf on a mountainside in the vast Mount Heng range, he fell into a hidden cave between the cliffs. There, he discovered a martial arts manual and an elixir left behind by a reclusive master.

I’m going back. I’m going back alive, no matter what!

Cheol Mubaek learned martial arts to survive. When the fasting pills in the hidden cave ran out, he tore up grass growing between the cliffs or caught bats to eat as he trained.

After no less than three years, he climbed the cliff with his bare hands and returned to the village.

What awaited him was his home in ruins—and the deaths of his wife and child.

“Had it been two months or so since we last heard from you? That bastard Hwang, who’d always had his eye on your wife…”

By the time Cheol Mubaek came to his senses, he had already beaten the village’s great landowner and all his servants to death.

After avenging his family, Cheol Mubaek returned to the hidden cave and resumed his martial arts training. It was a whip he used against himself, and atonement for his family.

How much time had passed like that?

Before he knew it, Cheol Mubaek was being called the Tiger of Mount Heng.

But…

“Huff. Even a tiger would cry.”

Cheol Mubaek panted harshly. His once-brilliant eyes were clouded as if by dark clouds, and his beard was drenched in blood.

I have to hurry. I have to stop that bastard…

But all he had left was his will. With all four limbs broken, his body had already slipped beyond his control. He had displayed martial arts worthy of the title Tiger of Mount Heng, yet he still could not defeat Pung Yang.

How in the world did that bastard…?

The result seemed obvious. Pung Yang had only just entered the Peak realm, barely capable of creating blade qi, while Cheol Mubaek was a Peak master who had reached a mature realm stage.

Pung Yang had been as precarious as a candle in the wind. Then he had suddenly changed after pulling an unidentified wooden case from inside his robes.

The red pill. Yes, that was definitely it.

Cheol Mubaek had made a mistake by retreating because he thought it might be a hidden weapon. After Pung Yang gulped down the pill, he was no longer the mere leader of a mounted-bandit group Cheol Mubaek had known.

How can a human being become that strong?

Cheol Mubaek's eyes trembled as he recalled Pung Yang's movements.

The gap between them was so vast that it seemed impossible to win, even if they fought ten or a hundred more times. Pung Yang had overturned the battle in an instant, broken all four of Cheol Mubaek's limbs, inflicted massive internal injuries, and then left.

"I'll let you live for now. I've decided I want the formula for your martial art as a wedding gift."

Cheol Mubaek's eyes reddened as he recalled Pung Yang's parting words.

The Shura[702] Annihilating Fist was a martial art passed down to a single successor and never taught to outsiders.

He would choose suicide rather than hand it over to Pung Yang, but Lee Seowol—whom he cherished like a daughter and a granddaughter—troubled him.

What on earth am I supposed to do?

Cheol Mubaek was staring at the sky with a heavy heart when it happened.

Thud-thud-thud-thud!

The sound of hooves in the distance drew closer and closer before stopping abruptly at his feet.

Beneath the brilliantly shining moon, four pairs of eyes looked down at him.

"Doesn't the Red Wind Band have a retirement age? Why is an old geezer still out here playing bandit?"

"Young Master Jin, that's Great Hero Cheol Mubaek, the Tiger of Mount Heng."

"Gah! I'm sorry. Hey, Mujin. Hurry up and apologize. What are you waiting for?"

"You're the one who made the mistake, Captain. Why should I…?"

Smack!

"Grandpa—no, Sir. Are you all right?"

Instead of answering, Cheol Mubaek stared intently at the young man's chest.

[702] Shura derives from asura, a class of combative beings in Buddhist and Hindu traditions.

A single character was embroidered on his navy martial robe.

□.[703]

“Taiyuan… the Jin Family?”

“Oh, you recognize it?”

The young man, Jin Taekyung, grinned.

[703] □ is pronounced Jin in Korean and means “advance.”

Chapter 115

Cheol Mubaek, the Tiger of Mount Heng.

I had heard that name several times already. Wolhwa had said that without him, the Mount Heng Sword Sect would have been wiped out by the Red Wind Band long ago.

“He’s considered a Peak master comparable to or even stronger than the Blood Wolf Sword, Lee Cheonbaek.”

She had definitely said that.

Then why has such an incredible Peak master ended up like this?

His limbs were bent at unnatural angles, and the black blood soaking his shirt was proof of severe internal injuries. Cheol Mubaek looked at us through hazy eyes.

“Taiyuan… Jin Family?”

“Oh, you recognize us?”

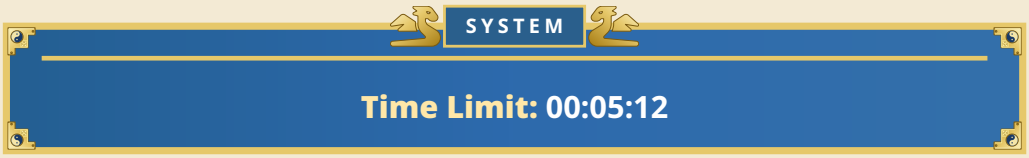
I forced a smile, hoping to reassure the critically wounded Cheol Mubaek, if only a little.

The man before me was no longer a renowned Peak master of formidable reputation. He was nothing more than an old man who had found his last hope.

“Red Wind Band… inside… Seowol’s in danger…”

Even without hearing Cheol Mubaek’s halting words, everyone here understood how serious the situation was. Everywhere we looked, there were corpses and pools of blood.

But it’s not too late yet.



We had made it just in time. The problem was that the bastard who had reduced the Tiger of Mount Heng to this state was still inside.

Wolhwa seemed to be thinking the same thing. She calmed Cheol Mubaek as she asked,

“Sir Cheol, did Pung Yang join forces with another master to attack you?”

Cheol Mubaek weakly shook his head.

“You’re saying Pung Yang defeated you by himself?”

“R-red pill. Be careful of that bastard…”

A red pill?

I wanted to ask more, but Cheol Mubaek had reached his limit. His lips moved soundlessly before his head slumped forward. Hyuk Mujin sucked in a startled breath.

“H-he’s dead.”

“…He’s still alive.”

“Oh. So he is. His breathing was so faint that I…”

Hyuk Mujin, you bastard. What kind of person kills even the living?

Still, he wasn’t entirely wrong. Cheol Mubaek’s thin breath was so precarious that it could stop at any moment.

That was when Wolhwa pulled a small porcelain bottle from inside her robes.

“Could you lift his head a little?”

She tipped the bottle into the unconscious Cheol Mubaek’s mouth.

As an unidentified green liquid trickled down his throat, color gradually returned to his pale face. It seemed to be a remarkably effective medicine.

“This will help him catch his breath, but it’s only a temporary measure. In his current condition, he couldn’t even handle a child. You understand, right?”

In short, someone had to stay behind to protect Cheol Mubaek in case something happened. I nodded without hesitation.

“Then Mujin can—”

“Two people stay behind.”

“Huh? Two people?”

What was he talking about? Jin Mukyung met my gaze, looking as though he couldn’t see what the problem was.

“Why?”

“No, you mean just the two of us should go?”

“Is there a problem?”

…

Of course there was.

Pung Yang turned a formidable Peak master like Cheol Mubaek into a half-dead wreck, and he still has all those mounted-bandit bastards under his command.

We needed every hand we could get, and he was suggesting this?

I didn’t know about Hyuk Mujin, whose abilities were still questionable, but Wolhwa absolutely had to come with us.

“Can the two of you manage?” Wolhwa asked.

I hurriedly opened my mouth.

“Obviously, that’s—”

“We can.”

Just as I was about to say it was impossible, Jin Mukyung fixed his deep, dark eyes on me.

“I said we can. Trust me.”

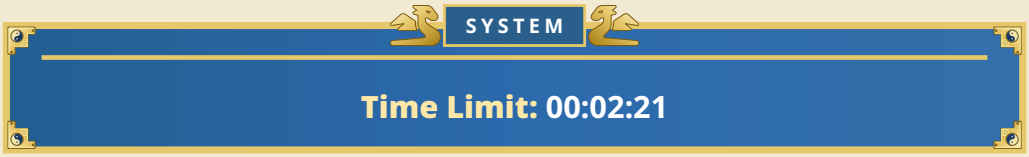
His calm yet confident words left me speechless.

For a moment, I wondered if this was merely the reckless bravado of an immature young man. But then I realized I was shaking my head inwardly.

The Heaven Shaking Sword. A martial arts genius.

The guy standing before me was a monster born from the combination of effort and talent. From everything I had seen, he wasn’t foolish enough to throw his life away for nothing.

And…



Damn it. There was no time left to hesitate.

I let out a deep sigh and asked Jin Mukyung,

“Are you confident?”

“This is the best option. Anyone of middling skill would only become a burden.”

Wolhwa let out a quiet laugh.

“My, you’re awfully honest.”

“…I apologize for that.”

“Well, that’s all right. You’re not wrong.”

That was the first time I had ever seen him apologize to anyone.

Hyuk Mujin interrupted this rare spectacle.

“Second Young Master, I’m a martial artist too!”

“Then follow us. But you’ll be responsible for staying alive.”

“On my own…?”

“I guarantee that once the fighting begins, the enemy will target you first. There’s nothing wrong with fighting bravely as a martial artist and dying.”

After a brief silence, Hyuk Mujin answered with a resolute expression.

“As a martial artist, I will remain here and safely protect Sir Cheol, who walks the same martial path as I do.”

…

Sometimes I wondered if that guy was even human.

If I had the time, I’d beat the hell out of him.

But even now, time continued to pass.

SYSTEM

Time Limit: 00:01:09

“Whew.”

I tightened my grip on the spear I had already taken out and spoke to Jin Mukyung.

“I’ll handle the small fry.”

“Usually, at a time like this, aren’t you supposed to volunteer to take the leader?”

“Yeah. Throw away that stereotype.”

“You’re ridiculous.”

“Let’s just say I know my place.”

“Fighting spirit and competitive pride help a martial artist grow.”

“And hasten his death. I’ve learned to pick my opponents carefully, so use all that overflowing fighting spirit and competitive pride to deal with Pung Yang.”

“You certainly have a way with words.”

“Oh, and when we get inside, approach as quietly as possible. Then ambush them when I give the signal. Got it?”

“Ambush?”

“Use the essence of an ambush to inflict as much damage as possible at the beginning. While the enemies are thrown into confusion, we’ll get to the Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect…”

“I see.”

“Good. It’s nice to be understood for once.”

That took care of the preparations. Forty seconds. Thirty-nine. Thirty-eight.

I watched the numbers fall and was about to head for the gate when—

Clomp.

There wasn’t even time to stop him.

Jin Mukyung strode inside and unleashed a shout infused with internal energy.

“Pung Yang!”

SYSTEM

Time Limit has disappeared.

…

Jin Mukyung, you fucking asshole.

“Marriage? I’d rather die.”

Pung Yang clicked his tongue as he watched Lee Seowol draw a silver dagger and hold it to her own throat.

“You’re making this awfully difficult. You really are the Blood Wolf Sword’s daughter.”

Though Pung Yang was highly skilled with throwing knives, he couldn’t make full use of his specialty in his current condition.

Damn old man… He actually forced me to use a Temporary Strength Pill.

Even Pung Yang possessed only three of these precious pills. Using one had allowed him to defeat Cheol Mubaek, but the aftereffects were considerable.

He hid his hands, trembling like aspen leaves, beneath his sleeves and said,

“Bring everyone who’s still breathing.”

“Yes.”

Not long after the order was given, martial artists from the Mount Heng Sword Sect were dragged over, bound hand and foot. Darkness settled over Lee Seowol’s face.

“What are you planning to do?”

Pung Yang smiled.

“You can probably guess. First, I’ll cut off their limbs one by one in front of you. Arms, legs, this and that. It won’t be a pleasant sight, so I recommend closing your eyes.”

“If you do that…”

“If you intend to kill yourself, I won’t stop you. Your loyal subordinates will be slaughtered in return, though.”

Lee Seowol clenched her teeth.

“That isn’t what you want, is it?”

“If my bride-to-be says she’s going to die, what else can I do? Still, the Blood Wolf Sword’s secret martial art and the Tiger of Mount Heng’s martial arts formula would be enough. Ah, I should take that old man Cheol with me on the way back, too.”

“…Uncle Cheol is still alive?”

“Of course. How could I kill a Benefactor who’s going to hand over such a precious martial arts formula?”

“…”

“I’ll stake my life on this promise. It’s not too late even now, so marry me. If you do, I’ll let everyone live. I’ll stop at destroying their dantians.”

That was the decisive blow.

Lee Seowol’s eyelashes trembled for a while before she slowly lowered her hand.

“Keep your promise.”

"A wise choice."

A triumphant smile spread across Pung Yang's face.

As of today, he would begin his third life.

He had gone from a beggar boy to a mounted bandit. Now he would finally don the mask of the orthodox faction and become the true master of the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

Though there had been heavy losses, it didn't matter. New wine belonged in new wineskins. Under the name of the Mount Heng Sword Sect, he would recruit martial artists and expand his power.

If the Blood Wolf Sword could do it thirty years ago, why can't I?

Just as the corners of his mouth lifted with overflowing delight—

"Pung Yang!"

A shout infused with internal energy shook heaven and earth.

Lee Seowol, Pung Yang, and every survivor turned their heads as if on cue.

A young man dressed in robes as black as night was walking toward them from some fifty jang away.[704]

A master.

The young man's needle-sharp gaze sent a chill through a corner of Pung Yang's chest.

He was a master. More than that, he was a Peak master in no way inferior to Pung Yang himself. Pung Yang could tell just from the way the young man's hand moved as it gripped his sword hilt.

There are only two Peak masters this young in Shanxi Province. And if he's a swordsman…

The answer came immediately.

Jin Mukyung, the Heaven Shaking Sword. A genius who had reached the Peak realm at barely twenty years of age.

More importantly, behind him stood the Jin Family of Taiyuan, which had risen to become the foremost family in Shanxi.

At least he came alone.

But the next moment, another person cautiously stuck his head out through the fortress gate Jin Mukyung had entered.

The young man wore a navy martial robe. His clothing, the dark iron spear in his hand, and above all, his nearly identical face told Pung Yang who he was.

"The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi?"

Jin Taekyung flinched at the nickname someone blurted out and muttered, "Fuck. I knew this would happen."

---

[704] A jang is a traditional length of 10 ja, or 3.03 m (9.94 ft). Fifty jang is about 150 m (500 ft).

Cursing crudely in a manner unbecoming a scion of a prestigious family, Jin Taekyung came sauntering forward beside the leisurely Jin Mukyung.

The two brothers were heading straight toward Pung Yang.

The Taiyuan Jin Family, at a time like this… This is very bad.

The reputation the family had built over many years, combined with the fame it had earned in the battle at Eight Spring Gorge, had left the Jin Family's current standing unrivaled.

As a result, countless young people across Shanxi Province who dreamed of becoming martial artists were flocking to the Jin Family.

That was why, even if Pung Yang swallowed the Mount Heng Sword Sect right now, he would still have to bow flat and hide his claws.

Once I get past this hurdle, my opportunity will come.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect had already collapsed. The Murim was a world where the strong preyed on the weak, and Pung Yang was a new power in that world. Even if his opponent was the Taiyuan Jin Family, he believed he had earned the right to be treated with respect.

Clomp. Clomp. Clomp.

With every step Jin Mukyung and Jin Taekyung took, the Red Wind Band's mounted bandits scattered out of their way.

When the brothers reached him, Pung Yang clasped his hands in salute.

"I am Pung Yang, Red Wind Band Leader."

Had Pung Yang not been a seasoned martial artist who never let down his guard—had the effects of the Temporary Strength Pill not still lingered faintly—he would never have evaded that strike.

Shiiiiing!

He hurriedly twisted aside.

A dazzling streak of Sword Energy skimmed past his neck and sliced through three mounted bandits behind him.

"Is this the will of the Taiyuan Jin Family?"

Jin Taekyung, who had already felled the nearby mounted bandits, muttered, "I'd rather talk it out."

"You fucking bast—"

Shiiiiing! Slice!

Before Pung Yang could finish speaking, another streak of Sword Energy flew in and grazed his back.

Pain seared through him like fire. He barely evaded the attacks that followed and revised his assessment of Jin Mukyung.

He's stronger than me.

At this level, Jin Mukyung's movements were comparable to Cheol Mubaek's. On top of that, Jin Taekyung was slaughtering Pung Yang's subordinates.

Pung Yang realized he had only one option left.

The Temporary Strength Pill.

While his subordinates died one after another trying to stop Jin Mukyung, Pung Yang pulled the wooden case hidden inside his robes and tipped the pill into his mouth.

Shiiiiing!

Jin Mukyung's blue Sword Energy was reflected in Pung Yang's eyes, which had turned blood-red.

Slice!

Chapter 116

The moment Jin Mukyung's Sword Energy split Pung Yang's back, I thought,

We've won.

It was hard to predict the outcome of a life-and-death duel between Peak masters.

But even I, someone who had yet to reach the Peak realm, could clearly see the gap between Jin Mukyung and Pung Yang.

Is Jin Mukyung really that strong, or was Pung Yang weaker than I thought?

Had he exhausted all his strength in his earlier fight with Cheol Mubaek, the Tiger of Mount Heng?

What mattered was that Jin Mukyung held an overwhelming advantage.

Slice! Shraaak!

"Gaaaaah!"

Pung Yang retreated, using his subordinates as shields, while Jin Mukyung relentlessly cut his way after him. The Red Wind Band's mounted bandits scattered in every direction to avoid the blue Sword Energy, leaving Pung Yang exposed and alone.

It's over.

I was clenching my fist in triumph when I noticed the red pill in his hand.

Wait. A red pill?

It was the very thing Cheol Mubaek had mentioned. Warning bells rang in my head just as Pung Yang tossed the pill into his mouth.

Jin Mukyung didn't miss the opening. His blue Sword Energy plunged toward the crown of Pung Yang's head.

Shiiiiing! Slice!

Blood sprayed through the air, and a shoulder was deeply cut.

But the person staggering backward was none other than Jin Mukyung.

I blinked.

What the hell just…

What had happened?

The System answered my question.

SYSTEM

A sudden Quest has been generated.
Quest
Temporary Strength Pill
Red Wind Band Leader Pung Yang has taken a Temporary Strength Pill (□□□) and is currently empowered by abnormal strength. Defeat him and save the Mount Heng Sword Sect.
The Quest will fail if Lee Seowol dies!
Grade: Supreme Peak
Restriction: Jin Taekyung
Task: Stop or defeat Lv.??? Pung Yang (Incomplete)
Reward: ???
Failure: ???

A Supreme Peak-grade Quest, no less.

I quickly skimmed the details and understood why that bastard had grown so strong.

“Temporary Strength Pill? Don’t tell me…”

I gaped at Pung Yang.

He looked completely different from before. His eyes had turned completely bloodred. Veins bulged beneath the skin exposed below his sleeves, and his muscles looked ready to burst. On top of that, the sheer force radiating from him made it frightening to even approach.

There’s no mistaking it.

No, fuck…

A fucking Peak master, cheating by doping?

“Heh-heh-heh.”

Pung Yang let out a low laugh.

Power and vitality surged through his entire body. His head burned hotter than ever, and everything in sight seemed weak and insignificant.

The internal energy boiling in his dantian only added to the sensation.

So this is the power of the Temporary Strength Pill.

It was an unknown red pill capable of drawing out twice the strength a person currently possessed—no, even more than that—for a limited time. Pung Yang himself didn’t know who had made it or how.

It was, quite literally, a fortuitous encounter bestowed by the heavens.

The Crimson Blood Twelve Swords. The Crimson Blood Cultivation Technique. And a wooden case containing five Temporary Strength Pills.

There were countless tombs hidden across the vast Gaoyuan. In one of them, Pung Yang had discovered a Peak-level martial arts manual and the Temporary Strength Pills, all left behind by some unknown person. The moment he found them, he knew he had stumbled upon a fortuitous encounter.

He also knew such treasures could not be shared with anyone.

Even if I went back to that time ten times, I would have made the same choice.

After killing his subordinates and claiming the fortuitous encounter for himself, Pung Yang began training in a hidden refuge no one ever visited. In only two years, he reached the Peak realm.

The absurd speed of his growth and the killing intent that surged from him at unpredictable moments made him realize he had learned demonic, heterodox arts.

But he didn't care.

This is the Murim!

In a world where strength was the law, arguing over whether something was orthodox, heterodox, or demonic was laughable. After returning to Gaoyuan, Pung Yang quickly began to distinguish himself.

His intelligence was far beyond that of the other mounted bandits, and his martial arts were exceptional.

By using violence and rewards in just the right measure, he quickly bent his subordinates to his will. Of course, he had faced crises as well.

But Pung Yang possessed a wondrous treasure he had never shown anyone.

That was when I first learned what the Temporary Strength Pill could do.

One against a hundred? It went far beyond that.

After taking a Temporary Strength Pill, he became an invincible master whom no one in Gaoyuan could withstand.

Two major mounted-bandit groups that had tried to eliminate their new rival were wiped out overnight. It was only natural that Pung Yang's Red Wind Band took their place.

But that was as far as I could go.

Demonic, heterodox arts could be learned quickly through shortcuts, but they lacked depth. Just as Pung Yang was trying to make up for that weakness with orthodox martial arts, two places caught his eye: the Jin Family of Taiyuan and the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

A battle between a dragon and a tiger.

Pung Yang didn't care which one fell.

At first, Lee Cheonbaek had hired him with the martial arts of the Jin Family of Taiyuan promised as payment…

But things had gone awry and led him here.

I should have used a Temporary Strength Pill when I first attacked the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

He could attack the Mount Heng Sword Sect again and force it to submit whenever he wanted.

But he could never obtain another Temporary Strength Pill.

If he had taken one back then, he might already have become the master of the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

“Well, this isn’t so bad either. Now I’ll obtain the martial arts of both the Jin Family of Taiyuan and the Mount Heng Sword Sect.”

Jin Mukyung pressed an acupoint on his shoulder to staunch the bleeding, then spoke.

“Was that your goal from the beginning? I thought some mounted-bandit bastard was desperate to play at being a Great Hero of the orthodox faction.”

“A Great Hero? If I kill the Heaven Shaking Sword and the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi today, I might at least become a demon lord. Wahaha!”

“You? A demon lord? Don’t make me laugh. And you don’t have to worry about that happening.”

“I broke all four of Cheol Mubaek’s limbs. The way you talk is beyond saving, so I’ll have to cut off two of yours.”

“Oh, really? My younger brother says this a lot…”

Jin Mukyung spat out a wad of phlegm.

“Go fuck yourself.”

Whoosh!

The blue-steel sword looked pathetic with its badly chipped edge, but the moment blue Sword Energy coated it, it transformed into the finest sword under heaven.

Shraaaaak! Shishishiiing!

Sword Energy rained down, slicing through everything around them. Horrible screams erupted from all directions, but Jin Mukyung did not stop swinging.

They were only the screams of mounted bandits who had failed to evade the attacks and gotten caught in them. The man whose voice Jin Mukyung wanted to hear was effortlessly avoiding his sword.

“As expected of the Heaven Shaking Sword. The edge of your sword is fairly sharp.”

Jin Mukyung slashed toward Pung Yang’s waist with lightning speed.

Clang!

Jin Mukyung's Sword Energy-wreathed blade collided with Pung Yang's curved saber, unleashing a thunderous boom.

"It's disgusting hearing that from someone who got stronger through dark arts."

"What matters is that I got stronger. How many seconds do you think that supposedly incredible Tiger of Mount Heng lasted against me?"

"Don't know."

Whoosh!

This time, the attack came for his face. The barrage of strikes that had poured toward his arms, chest, stomach, side, and legs suddenly shot straight upward.

Pung Yang hurriedly pulled his head back. The blade skimmed past his cheek by the narrowest margin.

Sizzle.

But he couldn't avoid even the sharp pressure of the wind. Blood dripped from the cheek the wind had raked.

Pung Yang retreated without a word, checked the wound, and ground his teeth.

"…You little brat."

Jin Mukyung spoke calmly despite the killing intent in Pung Yang's voice.

"So?"

"What?"

"So how many seconds did Sir Cheol last against you?"

Pung Yang glared at Jin Mukyung before answering.

"A hundred seconds."

"What about me?"

"Two hundred seconds. I'll finish you before then."

"Are you even capable of that?"

"Before cutting off your limbs, I should pull out your tongue first. Listening to you has been pissing me off for a while now."

"Be grateful you didn't have to fight my younger brother. If he were your opponent, you'd have already plugged your ears and killed yourself. He's mastered the art of making fun of people."

"The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi? Then I suppose I should pull his tongue out too."

"…That actually sounds kind of appealing."

"Enough nonsense. Raise your sword. That way, you can struggle for even a moment longer before you die."

The instant Pung Yang's red eyes gleamed eerily, immense internal energy surged from his lowered saber.

Fwoooosh!

When internal energy was infused into a medium and given tangible form, it was called Sword Energy.

But after taking the Temporary Strength Pill, Pung Yang had now surpassed that realm.

“Sword Force…”

A Supreme Peak master.

It was the symbol of those known as Martial Gods.

Though his enlightenment was insufficient for it to be called true Sword Force, there was no doubt that he had reached the very pinnacle of the Peak realm.

“Well, damn.”

Jin Mukyung let out a hollow laugh.

How many years would Pung Yang have needed to reach that realm through training alone? Ten? Twenty?

But one tiny red pill had allowed him to leap over all those years—the contemplation of martial principles, the endless training, the blood and sweat.

It had let him surpass all of it.

“What kind of son of a bitch made something like that…”

Tsssss.

Sword Energy rose from Jin Mukyung’s sword as well. Pung Yang spoke with open contempt.

“Last two hundred seconds, and I’ll let you live.”

“Yeah, go fuck yourself.”

Fwoooosh!

As he watched the Sword Force plunge down as though to split heaven and earth, Jin Mukyung suddenly thought he was beginning to resemble his insolent youngest brother.

But what is that guy doing, taking so long to get here?

KABOOOOM!

Rumble, rumble, rumble.

The ground shook as though an earthquake had struck.

I had no idea what kind of battle was taking place thirty jang[705] away, but I knew one thing.

I can’t go over there.

I wasn’t joking. If I got caught up in that fight, I’d probably die.

I had no desire to personally experience what happened when a First Rate got its back broken between Peak masters. And more importantly…

Whoosh! Slice!

[705] A Korean jang is ten cheok, about 3.03 m (9.94 ft). Thirty jang is about 90.9 m (298 ft).

"Gueeegh."

I had more than enough on my hands here.

At this point, I might not be able to take on a hundred men, but I had to be good for at least seventy.

I swung my weapon like a madman, drenched in the blood pouring down around me.

Shwaaak!

I caught the cavalry spear thrusting toward my side and pulled it toward me. I drove it into the stomach of the man bringing his saber down behind me, then chopped through the shaft with the edge of my hand.

Crack!

"Gasp!"

"Use an iron spear next time. Something heavy and sturdy. You could even do squats with it. How great is that?"

With that friendly advice, I smashed my fist into the mounted bandit's jaw. His body went limp as his jawbone shattered.

Shraaaaak!

Throat, side, leg.

I could read the daggers thrusting toward me from three directions without even looking.

How could every last one of them be so slow and predictable?

I was also genuinely amazed by myself. In that brief moment, I could think of a response and put it into action.

Tap. Crack!

I put my weapon into my Inventory, freeing my hands. As I simultaneously caught the wrists of the men stabbing toward my throat and side and broke them, I kicked backward with my leg fully extended.

Their short screams and the dull impact told me I had struck exactly where I intended.

More. More. More.

My hands moved faster and faster, while the sounds around me grew more distant.

Every time I brushed against the bodies of the enemies surrounding me, weapons summoned from my Inventory appeared and vanished.

Stab. Slash. Swing.

Broke.

How many had I brought down?

At some point, the noise that had been pushed far away came rushing back all at once.

Thud.

“Ggh…”

“Urgh.”

The dead lay motionless with their faces buried in the cold dirt. The survivors rolled around, groaning. The twenty or so mounted bandits who had escaped death and injury backed away from me.

“T-the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi…”

One step. Two steps.

Terrified, they retreated as I advanced, forgetting that furious enemies were still behind them.

Shraaaaak! Thud!

“Kill them! Kill every last mounted bandit!”

“You fucking bastards!”

They were the martial artists of the Mount Heng Sword Sect who had survived and fought to the bitter end.

Caught by the surprise attack of those bloodshot-eyed men, the mounted bandits fell like dominoes.

“Kyaaaagh!”

“P-please, spare me…!”

Everywhere I looked, the ground overflowed with corpses, blood, and groans.

How many mounted bandits had died here today? Two hundred? Three hundred?

I didn’t know.

What I did know was that this battle would not end until one man died.

Pung Yang.

It was time to deal with that cheating, pill-popping bastard.

“…”

I can do this, right? I should be able to. Probably…

Chapter 117

Jin Mukyung had learned countless martial arts over the years. They ranged from Peak-level arts that had once defined an era to Third Rate martial arts easily found even at a street stall in some backwater village.

But at this very moment, he realized something.

It's strong. Stronger than any martial art I've ever learned.

Fwoooosh.

A curved saber descended with the force of a single slash cleaving something in two.

It wasn't a Supreme Peak art like the Namgung Family's Emperor Sword Form or Huashan's Plum Blossom Sword Technique. This was the first move of the Three Calamities Sword Technique, Mount Tai Presses Down on the Crown—a move even a Third Rate street thug would know.

Pressing down Mount Tai. I think I know what that feels like.

The red saber qi rippling over the blade seemed capable of more than merely pressing down Mount Tai. It looked as though it could split the mountain apart.

I can't block it.

In that split second, Jin Mukyung threw himself aside without hesitation.

Shraaaaak!

The saber qi grazed his clothes by a hair before striking the ground. The sight of the earth splitting wide open without a single boom or tremor sent a shiver through him.

"You dodged that?"

But Pung Yang was dissatisfied with the result.

That had been an all-out attack. Even after drawing out 120 percent of the Temporary Strength Pill's effects, he hadn't managed to leave so much as a scratch on Jin Mukyung.

The Tiger of Mount Heng could barely parry that.

Even Cheol Mubaek, a fully mature Peak master, had suffered internal injuries and been forced to retreat in exchange for blocking it. So how had a brat not even thirty years old managed this?

"So you do live up to the name Heaven Shaking Sword?"

Jin Mukyung adjusted his stance and replied flatly.

"I should at least be able to dodge that much."

"Because you couldn't block it, perhaps?"

A sneer appeared at the corner of Pung Yang's mouth.

"Of course, a young master of the mighty Jin Family of Taiyuan must have been truly desperate to flee by rolling across the ground like a lazy donkey."

Narye tagon. It was a phrase comparing someone to a lazy donkey rolling on the ground. To martial artists from prestigious orthodox factions who valued their dignity, it was practically the ultimate humiliation.

But not to Jin Mukyung.

“Donkey or mule, I don’t care. Does dignity put food on the table?”

“What?”

“Compared to the price of my life, it was cheap. Besides…”

His face had remained impassive the entire time, but now he let out a quiet laugh.

“Why are you laughing?”

“I was just thinking—if there are people who pelt Peak masters with rocks, is rolling across the ground really such a big deal?”

Unable to make sense of the absurd joke, Pung Yang asked without thinking, “Throwing rocks at a Peak master? Are they insane?”

“When I first heard about it, I thought the same thing. But after thinking it over, I realized he was exactly the kind of bastard who would do something like that.”

“I’d like to see the face of this lunatic.”

“You’ll see him soon.”

“What does that mean?”

That was when Pung Yang felt a faint sense of puzzlement.

Shiiiiing!

A sharp aura came from behind him.

He turned around, and the face of a handsome young man was reflected in his red eyes.

The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi.

Within the slow flow of time, Jin Taekyung grinned. The iron spear in his hands was already hurtling toward Pung Yang’s chest.

KABOOM!

One Annihilation.

A vortex erupted from the spearhead and swallowed Pung Yang whole.

I was in perfect condition. Leveling up while dealing with the small fry had completely restored my fatigue and Stamina.

The timing was pretty good, too. Pung Yang’s broad, defenseless back looked like it was begging me to stick a spear through it.

For the finishing touch to this beautiful picture, I chose One Annihilation. I had yet to see anyone take this attack and walk away unscathed.

But then…

“You should’ve picked your opponent more carefully before charging in.”

A low voice like the growl of a beast.

Pung Yang was surrounded by a curtain of qi as red as his eyes. It had completely blocked the vortex unleashed by One Annihilation, and now writhed like living armor.

What did wuxia novels call something like this again?

Oh, right. I remembered. I barely managed to move my lips.

“Body-Protecting Qi?”

“At least you’re not blind.”

“No, for fuck’s sake…”

Sword Energy and Sword Force weren’t enough, and now he had Body-Protecting Qi too?

As I stood there dumbfounded, the sight before my eyes going dark, Pung Yang curled up the corner of his mouth.

“It’s too late for regrets.”

Whoosh!

A strand of saber qi shot up from his curved saber and sliced off a clump of my hair. I had bent at the waist just in time. If I had been even slightly slower, it would have been my head that was cut off.

Fuck.

I swallowed the curse trying to burst out and flung myself away. No sooner had I done so than savage saber strikes shredded the place where I had been standing.

Shh-shh-shh-shhk!

The problem was that every strand of saber qi was unbelievably powerful. The sight of the frozen ground splitting apart like soft tofu sent a chill down my spine.

One wrong move and I’m really going to die.

Even A-rank magic armor wouldn’t have been enough here, yet I was fighting in nothing but a scrap of cloth. This was the very definition of walking on thin ice.

More than anything else…

Doesn’t that bastard ever get tired?

Maintaining Body-Protecting Qi alone had to consume a tremendous amount of internal energy, but right now, Pung Yang seemed like an inexhaustible spring.

“I heard you two were brothers, but the way you run away like rats is exactly the same.”

That was when a voice came from behind him.

“That’s not particularly pleasant to hear.”

Jin Mukyung appeared out of nowhere and scattered a flurry of sword strikes. A streak of blue light shot straight toward Pung Yang’s neck.

Clang!

But even Jin Mukyung's Sword Energy, which seemed capable of cutting through anything, couldn't pierce the Body-Protecting Qi. Pung Yang leisurely rubbed the spot on his neck where the Sword Energy had struck.

"A little stiff. Is that all?"

"Of course not."

Shiiiiing!

As Jin Mukyung charged in without hesitation, the curved saber in Pung Yang's hand moved at the same time. The aura was so powerful that I could feel the flow of the air change.

This wasn't a fight I could interfere in.

Whoosh!

At last, the moment Jin Mukyung's blue Sword Energy met Pung Yang's red saber qi, a tremendous wave of force erupted along with a boom loud enough to make my ears ring.

KABOOM!

Most of the people standing firmly on both feet lost their balance and staggered.

But I widened my eyes and watched the result of this incredible clash.

Which one?

Through the dust swirling from the impact, I saw two people facing each other.

A sword and saber reduced to nothing but their hilts. Tightly pressed lips.

Pung Yang was the first to break the brief silence.

The bastard on his knees spat out dark red blood.

"Urgh—bleeeargh!"

A small cheer rose through the battlefield. Jin Mukyung stood proudly while Pung Yang knelt on the ground. The winner of this fierce battle had been decided.

We won.

I hadn't been able to see the entire exchange, but there was no doubt that Pung Yang had suffered internal injuries first.

The proof was the distinct palm print stamped across his chest—something that hadn't been there before. That had probably been the decisive blow.

"Cough, cough."

Pung Yang wiped the blood from the corner of his mouth and staggered to his feet.

"Striking the Ox Across the Mountain.[706] Even so, I never expected my Body-Protecting Qi to break so easily… Was my enlightenment lacking?"

When Jin Mukyung gave him no answer, Pung Yang clicked his tongue.

[706] A martial-arts term describing force that passes through an intervening defense to strike what lies behind it.

“Damn it. Even after using the Temporary Strength Pill, I’ve ended up like this. I suppose I’ll have to hole up in some remote mountain valley and train my martial arts for a while.”

“A remote mountain valley? Training?”

Genuinely curious, I asked, “Where are you going?”

“Wait, and you’ll find out soon enough. I plan to take you brothers with me, too.”

This was pretty awkward.

Since we’d been invited to a housewarming, should I at least bring a box of tissues?

“Uh, us?”

“Yes. I need the martial arts formulas you know from the Jin Family of Taiyuan. They should be a great help in supplementing the violent qi circulation of the Crimson Blood Cultivation Technique.”

After hearing that much, the words that had been lingering on the tip of my tongue came out on their own.

“Are you, by any chance, a lunatic?”

I hadn’t checked, but everyone probably wore the same expression I did.

The battle had already clearly decided its winner, and yet—what?

“Forget training in some remote mountain valley. I’ll send you on a filial-piety tour of Mount Beimang. You can train there.”[707]

“Mount Beimang? You think you can send me there?”

“Even if it isn’t me personally, there are plenty of people behind you who can send you to Mount Beimang.”

As Pung Yang laughed incredulously, I jerked my chin toward the people behind him.

The martial artists of the Mount Heng Sword Sect were already creeping closer with their weapons drawn.

The beautiful woman among them, glaring at him with especially venomous hatred, had to be the Mount Heng Sword Sect’s new Sect Leader, Lee Seowol.

This man isn’t going to die peacefully.

It was time for him to pay for the karma of his past misdeeds. I flicked my spear toward Pung Yang.

“Still going to keep spouting nonsense?”

The bastard stared at us for a moment before speaking.

“I think you’re laboring under a serious misconception.”

The laugh in his voice was impossible to hide.

“Is there anyone among you capable of defeating me?”

[707] Mount Beimang is traditionally associated with burial grounds and the dead; sending someone there is a euphemism for killing them.

“What the fuck does that even—”

“If you find that hard to believe, it would be faster to ask the Heaven Shaking Sword standing before me. Well? What do you think?”

Jin Mukyung didn’t answer Pung Yang’s question.

Only then did I realize why he hadn’t said a word for some time. Why he had stood there like a stone statue without moving.

Tap.

Pung Yang’s hand touched Jin Mukyung’s chest. At what point had it happened? His unconscious body crumpled limply.

Only then did I see the five throwing knives embedded in a neat row across his upper body.

Thud.

Pung Yang’s red eyes swept across the silent crowd and curved into crescent moons.

“Well, shall we finish things up?”

The “finishing” began quickly.

It started with the more than ten throwing knives that shot from Pung Yang’s sleeve as he approached us at an easy pace.

Whoosh! Thunk-thunk-thunk!

It might have been a close-range attack, but it was a throwing-knife technique that even Jin Mukyung hadn’t been able to evade. Pung Yang’s knives pierced their targets with perfect accuracy, and screams rang out without fail.

“Urgh.”

“Guhk!”

The martial artists of the Mount Heng Sword Sect were already at the limits of their endurance, and none of them were particularly powerful. They were easy prey.

By the time I finally stepped in front of Pung Yang, more than ten of them had already lost their lives.

“Stop.”

He shook his head.

“No. That’s not how it works. Giving orders is a right reserved for the strong.”

“…I’ll kill you.”

“If you were the Heaven Shaking Sword, perhaps. But a wet-behind-the-ears fledgling like you dares?”

I fell silent at Pung Yang’s sneer. He wasn’t wrong. My decision to block his path had been equal parts courage and recklessness.

But how do I take him down?

My mind felt like it was burning itself blank. Amid all the tangled thoughts, two faces surfaced.

The first was the Head Elder. He had been the most powerful and despair-inducing opponent I had ever faced. But back then, I'd had Jin Wikyung and the martial artists of the Jin Family to help me.

What about now?

No one. There was no one.

After taking the Temporary Strength Pill, Pung Yang had to be a master comparable to, or even stronger than, the Head Elder. And the only person left to face him was me.

That naturally brought the second person to mind.

Jopil, One Question, One Kill.

Perhaps Jopil was the person who had forced me to face a genuine crisis. For the first time, I'd lost one of the subordinates I'd gained in the Murim, and I'd nearly died. Only after that had I managed to defeat the bastard.

But the Pung Yang standing before me was on an entirely different level from Jopil.

This goddamn Temporary Strength Pill…

The more I thought about it, the more curses came out. I wanted to see the face of whatever son of a bitch had made it.

"Once you've learned your place, curl up quietly."

Watching Pung Yang act like the greatest master under heaven simply because he trusted that pill twisted my gut. If he'd only been around Jopil's level, I might have found a way to deal with him…

…Wait.

A fact I'd forgotten suddenly flashed through my mind.

There had been something nasty among Jopil's possessions. What was it again?

The Blazing Flame Divine Pill.

A peerless divine elixir that granted half a jiazi of internal energy when consumed—but also a double-edged sword that could kill its user with the fire qi it contained.[708]

The Blazing Flame Divine Pill. The Blazing Flame Divine Pill…

The next moment, I abruptly spoke.

"Hey."

Pung Yang, who had already walked past me, stopped and turned around.

"Hey? Were you talking to me?"

[708] A jiazi is a sixty-year cycle; half a jiazi is thirty years.

“Yeah, you pill-popping bastard.”

“Hah. What did this little brat just say…?”

“Did you enjoy being the only one popping pills?”

“…What?”

I looked straight at his face, mottled with bewilderment and fury, and enunciated each word.

“I asked if you enjoyed taking pills all by yourself.”

An eye for an eye. Doping for doping.

Now I was going to pop a pill and fight, too.

You bastard.

Chapter 118

“Was it fun being the only one popping pills?”

“What?”

“I asked if it was fun popping pills all by yourself.”

Pung Yang let out a hollow laugh.

For a mere brat barely twenty, his speech was far too disrespectful. Had being born the youngest young master of the Jin Family of Taiyuan and being called the Sleeping Dragon made him think he could get away with anything?

“What a brat. Heh.”

The hollow laughter soon faded, and killing intent filled his eyes.

“Must you see the coffin before you shed tears?”

Jin Taekyung’s eyes widened.

“Wow, that line sounds really weird when you hear it in real life. Say it again.”

“You’re beyond reasoning with.”

As he approached at a leisurely pace, Pung Yang wondered how he could make that young brat beg for his life.

His usual method was to pull out the tongue and slowly break all four limbs. But he couldn’t treat a valuable body that knew the Jin Family of Taiyuan’s martial arts so carelessly.

A reasonable compromise was necessary.

If I sever the sinews and meridians in his legs, he’ll quiet down.

He had already crossed a river of no return with the Jin Family of Taiyuan. Once this fight was over, Pung Yang planned to retreat into some remote mountain valley untouched by human feet, refine his martial arts, and then return to the Murim.

The Red Wind Band had been annihilated, but he could always gather another force. The Murim was ruled by the strong, after all.

“You brought all of this upon yourself, so don’t blame me.”

Pung Yang was just tightening his grip on his curved saber when—

“Ah, wait a second.”

Jin Taekyung held up a hand, then casually tossed something into his mouth.

The action was so natural that Pung Yang couldn’t help stopping.

What is he doing?

His question was answered a moment later.

After Jin Taekyung’s body shuddered once, tremendous heat began to rise from every inch of him.

I had only one option left.

One final gamble with the Blazing Flame Divine Pill.

It was dangerous, but still a hundred times better than dying after Pung Yang forced me to cough up the formulas for the Jin Family's martial arts.

Gulp.

True to its status as a divine elixir, the pill melted the instant it touched my tongue and slid down my throat. The problem began after that.

Ding.

> System - You have taken the Blazing Flame Divine Pill. - Circulate your qi to control its energy.

Hot.

The thirty years of internal energy contained within the Blazing Flame Divine Pill spread through every part of my body like wildfire.

> System - You have temporarily gained the Scorching Yang Qi attribute. - Your internal energy has temporarily increased to 45 years. - If you cannot control the energy, you may die! - Quest, Divine Pill Absorption, has been created.

I had no time to check the System notifications chiming incessantly in my ears. I already had my hands full trying to control the Blazing Flame Divine Pill's energy as it rampaged through my body.

"Hoo. Hooooo."

I felt like a human pressure cooker. Smoke curled from my entire body as though I were actually on fire.

The snow beneath my feet melted, and the damp earth softened until it ran like water.

I expected it to some extent, but this is…

It was far beyond anything I'd imagined. I couldn't even scream. All I could do was tremble as Pung Yang's voice cut into my ears.

"What have you done?"

Seeing the bewilderment on his face actually made the heat subside a little.

I forced the corners of my mouth upward.

"What else? I'm going all in."

"You brat!"

Had he sensed something ominous in my answer? Pung Yang's curved saber flew toward me at a blinding speed. A red strand of saber qi extended from the blade and aimed for my chest.

Swish!

Death missed me by exactly half a step. The curved saber missed its target and drew another dizzying arc.

Shh-shh-shh-shhk!

But once again, the blade only cut through empty air. Pung Yang's face twisted as he stared at me, already backed away.

"You…!"

"What, asshole?"

I answered as casually as I could, but no one was more surprised than me. When we'd crossed hands earlier, I hadn't been able to dodge him this easily.

This was on an entirely different level from before, when Pung Yang's overwhelming aura and saber qi had forced me to do nothing but evade.

Since when has my body felt this light?

The instant I thought I needed to avoid an attack, my body moved faster than ever before. And that wasn't the only thing that had changed.

I can see everything clearly.

I could see and read every one of Pung Yang's movements. If I could see his attacks, there was no reason I couldn't evade them. I felt like I could dodge even saber force, let alone saber qi.

At last, I understood why.

It's the internal energy.

My original fifteen years of internal energy had combined with the thirty years from the Blazing Flame Divine Pill. I couldn't control it perfectly, but that didn't mean the power of those thirty years had vanished.

Like an overinflated balloon, the Blazing Flame Divine Pill's energy filled my entire body.

The problem is that I have no idea when this balloon will burst.

So I had to take Pung Yang down before it did.

Feeling the heat bubbling up inside me, I adjusted my grip on the iron spear.

"Come at me."

Pung Yang bit his lip.

"Young brat, you're already getting cocky. Someone like you doesn't stand a chance against me."

"You look pretty tense for someone saying that."

"A wild beast gives its all even when catching a rabbit."

"But a wild beast doesn't take a Temporary Strength Pill to catch a rabbit."

"…!"

Shock flashed across Pung Yang's face. He stared at me with his mouth hanging open, then stammered.

"T-Temporary Strength Pill?"

"Yeah. Temporary Strength Pill."

"How do you know that name?"

"Corporate secret, asshole."

"Did you take one too?"

"Well, I did eat something similar."

I wondered whether he would recognize the name Blazing Flame Divine Pill.

Compared to the Temporary Strength Pill, its stability was complete garbage. As for how powerful its effects were, I intended to find out right now.

"You're fucking dead."

With those final words, I kicked off the ground.

Shweeeeeek!

Pung Yang was deeply troubled.

How does that brat know about the Temporary Strength Pill?

The existence of the Temporary Strength Pill was a secret he had to take to his grave.

It was a hidden trump card that might one day save his life. But if word of it spread, this wondrous object would bring a bloodbath upon the world.

Just the fact that it could draw out two or three times the power of the person who took it would be enough to make martial artists throughout the land salivate and come running.

But there was an even greater problem.

It's a legacy of demonic, heterodox arts.

After the Great Faction War, the Murim had fallen into the hands of the orthodox factions.

If even a rumor spread that Pung Yang had inherited the legacy of demonic, heterodox arts, it wouldn't be only the Jin Family of Taiyuan pursuing him. The entire Murim would come after him.

Jin Taekyung, the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi… I must kill him and eliminate the trouble he'll cause later.

Pung Yang gritted his teeth and unleashed his martial art.

After only a few years of training, he had already attained seventy percent mastery of the Crimson Blood Twelve Sabers. It was more than enough to kill a brat hopelessly beneath him in both age and martial arts.

"Die!"

Shiiing!

The Crimson Blood Twelve Sabers was a domineering martial art. Red saber qi shot from the curved saber and slashed wildly in every direction. The fierce momentum split open the surface of the earth and burst the air apart.

Yet the target it was meant to cut was no longer there.

Jin Taekyung dodged the attack by exactly half a step and thrust his spear.

Shweeeeeek!

The spearhead drove toward Pung Yang's throat. He hastily twisted his head aside to evade it, and a chill ran through his chest.

Fast.

Fast and accurate. Jin Taekyung had yet to reach the stage of injuring others with Sword Energy, the hallmark of a Peak master, but his movements had already caught up to Pung Yang's.

Could this brat have taken the Temporary Strength Pill too? No. It's completely different from mine.

Pung Yang had taken the Temporary Strength Pill several times before.

One look at Jin Taekyung's body, flushed bright red with heat, was enough to tell him that the pill the brat had swallowed wasn't a Temporary Strength Pill.

Then what did he—wait!

Pung Yang couldn't finish the thought. Jin Taekyung had finally seized the initiative and begun unleashing the Jin Family's Spear Technique in earnest.

Shh-shh-shh-shh-shhk!

Dozens of spear shadows poured down like a rain shower. The sight alone was suffocating.

No, it wasn't just an illusion. It really was suffocating.

A bead of sweat rolled down Pung Yang's forehead.

This is…

Scorching Yang Qi.

And not just any Scorching Yang Qi. It was powerful enough to affect even Pung Yang, a Peak master. The Tiger of Mount Heng, Cheol Mubaek, had also possessed Scorching Yang Qi, but it couldn't compare to what Jin Taekyung was emitting now.

He took a divine elixir—a Scorching Yang-type divine elixir!

Whoooooom!

Recognizing it changed nothing. The heat was dizzying, and the attacks were sharp. Pung Yang bit down hard on his lip as he retreated again and again, barely evading the spearhead.

Against a brat this young!

He had lived his entire life fiercely. Now, even after taking the Temporary Strength Pill, he felt humiliated to be driven back by a young brat who had only just begun making a name for himself.

That anger flowed straight into his curved saber. The saber qi rising over the blade blazed redder than ever.

Hiss!

The Jin Family's Spear Technique and the Crimson Blood Twelve Sabers differed in both weapon and form, but they had one thing in common: both were domineering martial arts.

In the blink of an eye, Jin Taekyung's iron spear and Pung Yang's curved saber finally parted after more than ten fierce exchanges.

"Hmm."

Jin Taekyung was the first to retreat. Blood flowed from his torn palm, and the heavy, sturdy iron spear had been cut by the sharp saber qi until less than half of it remained.

"You fool."

Pung Yang smiled triumphantly. For a martial artist, losing one's weapon meant defeat.

Even the Tiger of Mount Heng, Cheol Mubaek, who had built his reputation with nothing but his fists and feet, had knelt before Pung Yang. Jin Taekyung hadn't even crossed the wall into the Peak realm. The moment he lost his weapon, he was as good as dead.

"Did you think you could defeat me head-on?"

Jin Taekyung wiped the blood from his palm and answered.

"No. But I did learn some valuable information."

"…Valuable information?"

"Yeah. I figured out your attack pattern."

"Pat—what?"

"Your attack pattern is strong, strong, strong, strong, strong."

What kind of bullshit is this?

Pung Yang understood that the brat was talking about his martial arts, but he had never heard of this "pattern-whatever" before. And what did he mean by strong, strong, strong, strong, strong?

Pung Yang glared at Jin Taekyung with murder in his eyes.

“I’ll sever the sinews and meridians in all four of your limbs as payment for that nonsense.”

Jin Taekyung opened his mouth with a bored expression.

“You really like cutting off limbs and pulling out tongues. Do you have a limb fetish?”

“You little bastard…”

“You old bastard…”

Pung Yang drew a deep breath. He was a Peak master who had spent his entire life possessing a cool, rational mind. But he couldn’t stop his voice from breaking into pieces with anger.

“You. Will. Die. By. My. Hand.”

“I. Sometimes. Cut off. Limbs. Sometimes. I don’t like this version of myself.”

He felt his patience snap. He could swear that he had never been this furious in nearly ten years.

“Graaaargh!”

Pung Yang charged like a madman, unleashing a strange cry that could have been either a scream or a roar.

Without using any form or martial art, he brought the curved saber down over the crown of Jin Taekyung’s head with all his strength.

“Die!”

That was when Jin Taekyung’s calm expression was reflected in Pung Yang’s bloodshot eyes gleaming with killing intent.

In an instant, his mind snapped clear as though someone had dumped cold water over him.

Something’s wrong.

Pung Yang drew up his internal energy with all his might.

As his Body-Protecting Qi rose, a dagger flashed in Jin Taekyung’s previously empty hand.

Shnk!

Chapter 119

Shnk!

A sharp tingle ran through my fingertips—a familiar sensation I'd felt thousands, even tens of thousands of times before.

It went in.

The instant I was certain, I twisted the dagger buried in Pung Yang's side. A scream burst from his mouth.

"Graaaargh!"

The dagger itself must have hurt like hell, but the strike had also inflicted a serious internal injury. His Body-Protecting Qi scattered like smoke before it could fully form, proving as much.

That was close.

Pung Yang's instincts were no joke. If the dagger hadn't pierced him in that split second before his Body-Protecting Qi formed, I would have been the one in trouble.

"Guh!"

Pung Yang spat out dark blood and reached out with one arm. In that instant, a flash of light burst from inside his pitch-black sleeve.

Shweeeeeek!

I instantly stepped back and tilted my head back. A throwing knife shot from Pung Yang's sleeve and narrowly grazed the bridge of my nose.

That was dangerous.

If I hadn't stepped back, it would have struck my throat instead of my nose.

I'd only managed to dodge because I'd already seen Pung Yang use throwing knives. I stuck out my tongue and licked up the blood trickling down my nose.

"Thanks. I was thirsty anyway."

"You little rat bastard…!"

Pung Yang backed away and ground his teeth.

"Was this your plan from the beginning?"

"Yeah. Hurts, doesn't it?"

"Just wait. I'll pay you back a hundredfold."

"There's no need to go that far between friends. You can keep it."

"Grrrrrgh!"

Teasing him was surprisingly satisfying. It would have been nice if he dropped dead from rage, but I doubted I'd get that lucky.

It was a good opportunity.

I'd succeeded in drawing Pung Yang in with Taunt, but I'd failed to finish him off. Even after taking the Blazing Flame Divine Pill, there was still a huge gap between us.

And more importantly—

This is getting rough.

My entire body was hot as a furnace. The thirty years of Scorching Yang Qi that I hadn't been able to control from the beginning was now running wild of its own accord.

It would have been touch and go even if I'd tried to suppress it with my existing internal energy, but I'd fought Pung Yang at close quarters with the reins completely off, and my condition was steadily worsening.

Damn it. I wish it had been a Temporary Strength Pill instead of the Blazing Flame Divine Pill.

The two pills had been created for entirely different purposes.

Was the Temporary Strength Pill a stimulant that temporarily awakened latent power and raised it to its limit? To put it simply, the difference was like that between traditional herbal medicine and a stimulant.

Does that bastard not have any side effects? He's still disgustingly lively.

I was looking at Pung Yang with a trace of envy when—

"Cough."

Oh? What was this?

As Pung Yang coughed, the whites of his eyes showed for an instant.

His eyes had been completely blood-red the entire time. No matter how I thought about it, there could only be one reason for this change.

The Temporary Strength Pill is wearing off.

Pung Yang was flustered. He immediately recognized the abnormal signs appearing in his body.

Already?

The Temporary Strength Pill's effect lasted a little over one shichen.[709] Yet now, after barely half a shichen[710] had passed, the power that had been surging through his entire body was gradually fading.

Fatigue he hadn't felt before pressed heavily down on his shoulders, and pain that had seemed distant began to prick at his nerves.

"Cough."

On top of that, he had suffered a considerable internal injury.

[709] A shichen is a traditional time unit of approximately two hours; half a shichen is about one hour.
[710] A shichen is a traditional time unit of approximately two hours; half a shichen is about one hour.

Pung Yang bit his lip at the dark-red blood mixed into his cough.

I've expended too much strength.

The Temporary Strength Pill was a wondrous object that could draw out twice, or even more than twice, the strength a person possessed—but it demanded an equal price.

In exchange for temporarily granting tremendous power, it weakened the body's physical abilities. If the user's body could not support it, the effect would disappear.

Taking Temporary Strength Pills back-to-back was the problem.

First the Tiger of Mount Heng, Cheol Mubaek, and then these young brats from the Jin Family of Taiyuan. Without the pills, Pung Yang would have died long ago, but he knew their price and feared the backlash.

At this rate, the effects will last no more than one meal's time…[711]

He had to settle the battle within that time.

He must not use the last Temporary Strength Pill. Taking three in succession could put his life at risk.

"One meal's time…"[712]

Pung Yang muttered under his breath and glared at the remaining prey.

"That's more than enough."

The flash of white vanished as his eyes filled with blood-red light once more.

Had I imagined it?

When Pung Yang raised his head again, his eyes were red, and an overwhelming aura poured from his entire body.

"I'll kill you with a single stroke."

I watched his curved saber and opened my mouth.

"I thought you needed the martial arts formulas."

"It doesn't have to be you. Why do you think I went to the trouble of keeping Jin Mukyung alive?"

"Because you love him."

"I swear by the gods of heaven and earth… I will cut out your tongue."

Pung Yang raised his curved saber.

Shweeeeeek! Clang!

He caught the iron arrow that came flying at him with tremendous force and frowned.

---

[711] "One meal's time" renders sikgyeong, a traditional expression for approximately half an hour.

[712] "One meal's time" renders sikgyeong, a traditional expression for approximately half an hour.

“There’s no shortage of bastards eager to die. No, is it a bitch this time?”

The owner of the arrow slowly walked over and stood beside me. Her footsteps were light as down, and the top of her head barely reached my shoulder. Even in this desperate situation, her beauty was enough to steal my gaze for an instant.

Lee Seowol, Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect, whispered to me.

“We’ll buy you some time.”

By we, she meant herself and the surviving martial artists of the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

There were only ten of them. Every one was a First Rate master, as one might expect of those who had survived such a brutal battle to the bitter end. But against Pung Yang, the outcome was obvious.

They’ll be wiped out.

How much time could they buy even if they stepped forward? They were more likely to get in my way. It was coldhearted, but that was reality.

I shook my head.

“That won’t change anything.”

“We’re not saying we’ll fight alongside you.”

“Then?”

“Take your brother and run.”

Pung Yang stood only a little over ten zhang[713]—about thirty meters[714]—away. No matter how quietly she spoke, there was no way a Peak master like him hadn’t heard her.

“What, run? Hahahaha!”

Lee Seowol ignored his booming laughter and continued.

“It may only be for a fleeting moment, but we’ll buy you time. Run as far away as you can.”

I looked toward the fortress gate. It was about one hundred zhang[715]—three hundred meters[716]—from here. Just beyond it were Wolhwa, Hyuk Mujin, and the horses waiting to carry us away.

It’s worth a try.

I was already suffering internal injuries from the Blazing Flame Divine Pill, but I could still endure them to some extent. If I squeezed out every last bit of strength I had, I might be able to escape even while carrying Jin Mukyung on my back.

But…

They’ll die.

Every last one of them. Not a single exception.

---

[713] A zhang is a traditional Chinese length of approximately 3 meters, or 9.8 ft.
[714] Thirty meters is about 98 ft.
[715] A zhang is a traditional Chinese length of approximately 3 meters, or 9.8 ft.
[716] Three hundred meters is about 980 ft.

Lee Seowol herself was included in that we. She had stepped forward prepared to die as well.

Why?

The Mount Heng Sword Sect and the Jin Family of Taiyuan were bitter enemies. Even if they had been manipulated by the Head Elder's schemes, they had killed one another, and both sides had shed a great deal of blood.

And yet Lee Seowol was trying to save me.

Even if it meant sacrificing her life and the lives of her subordinates.

"You don't need to look at us like that. I reached this conclusion after careful consideration. In return, may I ask you for one thing?"

I asked her,

"What is it?"

"Avenge us in our place."

Lee Seowol stared coldly at Pung Yang.

"Kill that bastard. As cruelly as possible."

Ten people were throwing away their lives for one person's death.

I could feel the hatred Lee Seowol held in every word. As I stood there speechless, Pung Yang, who had been watching us with a mocking smile, opened his mouth.

"You've come up with quite the bold idea, but it won't happen. You'll all bury your bones here."

One of the Mount Heng martial artists shouted.

"Shut up, you vicious bastard!"

Thwack!

The next instant, the martial artist's head snapped back. The iron arrow Pung Yang had been holding was embedded in his forehead.

"Senior Brother!"

As the belated scream rang out, Pung Yang smiled.

"I was just about out of throwing knives… Thank you, Sect Leader."

Lee Seowol bit her lip.

"Go! Hurry!"

I took a deep breath. I had already mapped out every step in my head.

Jin Mukyung lay only about twenty zhang[717]—sixty meters[718]—away. If I drew up as much internal energy as possible and ran with him on my back, enduring the internal injuries, I could reach the fortress gate in no time.

Pung Yang might catch up by then, but if they bought me just a little more time, I could survive.

I can go back.

[717] A zhang is a traditional Chinese length of approximately 3 meters, or 9.8 ft.
[718] Sixty meters is about 200 ft.

Back to the Jin Family of Taiyuan, where Jin Wikyung was. Back home, where my mother and Hayeon were waiting.

If I lived to fight another day, I was confident I could return far stronger—strong enough to make Pung Yang look insignificant.

That's enough.

I drew another deep breath and turned toward Lee Seowol.

"I'll avenge you. I swear."

For the briefest instant, I thought she smiled.

Perhaps I imagined it. The moment passed too quickly, and when I looked again, only firm resolve remained on her face.

"Go. Hurry."

Her words were the starting signal. The Mount Heng martial artists charged with furious shouts, Lee Seowol at the front.

Yes. I have to go.

I drew up every last bit of internal energy in my body. Sharp pain tore through me as the internal injuries left by the Scorching Yang Qi sent dark-red blood flowing from my nose, but I endured it.

It only had to last a moment. A very brief moment.

Inventory open. Equip spear.

The cool shaft settled into my grip.

Then I pushed off the ground once.

Boom.

I shot forward like an arrow—no, faster than an arrow.

Not toward Jin Mukyung.

Toward Pung Yang.

I could see his broad smile.

"That's more like it!"

"Shut up, you son of a bitch."

"Ha-ha-ha-ha!"

Pung Yang's curved saber was larger than ever before. Brimming with red saber qi, it swung toward me.

Whoooosh!

The wind exploded, and even the air seemed to vanish.

I gripped the iron spear hard enough to crush it.

Please. Just this once.

I poured all fifteen years of my internal energy into the spear. Drawing my shoulder and waist as far back as they would go, I sent everything I had flying forward.

One Annihilation.

Rumble-rumble-rumble!

The immense saber qi collided with the vortex.

A thunderous roar filled the world, as though the sky itself were splitting apart. Through the raging wind, I saw it clearly.

Kaboom!

The white vortex shattered into pieces before the red saber qi. The massive concentration of qi completely pulverized One Annihilation.

Pung Yang whispered with an ecstatic expression,

“This is as far as you go.”

The next instant, Pung Yang’s internal energy surged along the spear and slammed into me.

Boom!

Blinding pain and ringing ears rolled over me like waves.

Ding.

> System - You have suffered Internal Injury! Your condition is extremely serious! - Scorching Yang Qi is running wild! - You have suffered a Severe Injury! All stats have dropped significantly!

The System notifications rang out one after another, mingling with the Mount Heng martial artists’ shouts, Lee Seowol’s scream, and Pung Yang’s laughter.

It’s over.

The instant my legs gave out despite my will, a powerful hand clamped around my throat.

“Guh. Guhh.”

“That was fairly impressive. If I’d been even a moment slower, you might have won.”

Pung Yang bared his teeth in a grin. The red light in his eyes was slowly fading.

Damn it. I was so damn close.

I wanted to say it aloud, but my mouth was full of blood, making even that difficult.

“I swore by the gods of heaven and earth, didn’t I? I swore I’d pull out your tongue.”

Had he said that? By now, I could barely remember who I was.

Pung Yang pried open my mouth with his other hand. His rough fingers seized my blood-soaked tongue and pulled.

“Ghh…”

“When you were running that mouth, didn’t you know this would happen? Huh?”

“Ghaa… hahahaa.”

“Hahaha! What the hell are you babbling about? Shall I let you say your last words?”

Pung Yang laughed heartily and released my tongue. Only then could I speak. I swallowed the blood in my mouth and said,

“Salty.”

“What?”

“Damn salty.”

“What kind of bullshit is that?”

What do you think?

I’m saying the taste of your fingers brought me back to my senses a little.

Half-conscious, I muttered,

Inventory open. Summon anything.

Ding.

> System - No item named Anything can be found. The oldest item stored in your inventory will be summoned first. - The Unnamed Sword has been summoned.

The Unnamed Sword? What was that again?

Whatever.

I gathered the last of my strength and thrust the sword in my hand at Pung Yang’s chest, shrouded in Body-Protecting Qi.

It was a futile last-ditch attack with an obvious conclusion.

Damn Body-Protecting Qi.

But this was enough.

I had no regrets left.

It was at that moment, as my head slowly drooped—

Shnk!

Ding.

> System - The Unnamed Sword has satisfied a specific condition. - Ten-Thousand-Year Cold Iron has destroyed Body-Protecting Qi.

…Huh?

Chapter 120

Shwick!

A sword thrust forward—slowly, but with tremendous force.

For the briefest moment, a mocking smile appeared at the corner of Pung Yang's mouth.

I knew this was coming.

He had spent decades living in Gaoyuan, where every kind of underhanded trick ran rampant. If he had been foolish enough to fall for the same trick twice, he would have become wild-dog food long ago.

But where did that sword come from?

It wasn't a dagger. Where had the brat hidden a longsword that size?

With that slight question in mind, Pung Yang drew up his Body-Protecting Qi.

Fssssss.

He had expected this, so his response was quick. Red qi surged up in an instant and wrapped tightly around his body.

Body-Protecting Qi was invincible armor that nothing short of powerful Sword Energy could so much as scratch. The young brat's futile struggle was laughable.

What an annoying bastard. Just die already.

He was about to snap Jin Taekyung's neck in a single motion when—

Thud!

"…Huh?"

A cold chill pierced his body, followed by searing pain. Pung Yang stared wide-eyed at the sword that had pierced straight through his chest.

What the hell?

His Body-Protecting Qi had vanished.

No—it had been destroyed.

Jin Taekyung's sword sliced through it as easily as cutting tofu, then pierced Pung Yang's chest as well.

Pung Yang looked down at the transparent blade, unstained by even a drop of blood, and muttered like he was groaning.

"Ten-Thousand-Year Cold Iron…?"

He had heard of it before. Stories about a divine weapon said to be capable of cutting and breaking anything in the world.

"How did you get this?"

Pung Yang glared at the sword's owner with a twisted expression. The young brat from the Jin Family of Taiyuan blinked innocently.

"Wow. This actually worked."

"You fucking bastard…!"

He wanted to snap the brat's neck right away, but his vision suddenly went hazy, and the strength drained from his grip. The power that had filled his body vanished like the outgoing tide, leaving only helplessness in its wake.

The Temporary Strength Pill had to wear off now of all times.

Blood streamed from the seven openings in Pung Yang's face as he staggered backward.

The injuries he had suffered, both great and small, combined with the dispersal of his Body-Protecting Qi. The internal energy surging backward through his body began driving him rapidly toward death.

I can't die like this. I can't.

Pung Yang hurriedly searched inside his robes.

He still had one Temporary Strength Pill left. If he took it, he could beat these bastards to death in a single stroke and leave this place. He had lost plenty, but he could recover and return to Murim afterward.

Yes. All he had to do was take the Temporary Strength Pill…

Clatter.

Damn it. He was in too much of a hurry.

The wooden box slipped from Pung Yang's frantic hand, struck the ground, and sprang open. A pill tinged with a blood-red color rolled across the ground before coming to a stop beneath someone's foot.

"Oh, so this is the Temporary Strength Pill?"

Jin Taekyung picked it up and examined it curiously. Pung Yang shouted at him.

"G-Give it to me! Hurry!"

"Here's a question. Do you really think I'll give it to you just because you ask?"

"You bastard!"

Pung Yang lunged forward with all his remaining strength, but his ruined body had already reached its limit. His legs gave out before he could reach Jin Taekyung, and he crumpled to the ground.

Only one path remained to Pung Yang now.

"Please. I'm begging you. Give it to me. Give it to me!"

"What if I do?"

Pung Yang cried out desperately.

"You'll never see me again. No—I'll swear my loyalty to you from this day forward!"

"Oh, a Peak master as my subordinate. That sounds pretty good."

"R-Really? Then hurry and give me the Temporary Strength Pill!"

"First, I'm taking my property back."

"Your property?"

His question was answered a moment later when Jin Taekyung approached and yanked the sword from the center of his chest.

Blood poured out like a waterfall, accompanied by dizzying pain.

“Gueeeeegh!”

Pung Yang didn’t even notice the pieces of internal organs mixed with the blood he vomited.

All he felt was his vision gradually darkening and the sounds around him receding into the distance.

He was dying, and desperation had driven him half-mad.

I want to live.

Pung Yang had spent his entire life as a ruthless marauder.

He had stolen the wealth—and sometimes the lives—of countless people, but never in his wildest dreams had he imagined meeting an end like this.

“Now… now, please give me the Temporary Strength Pill…”

Through his blurred vision, he saw Jin Taekyung shake his head. Pung Yang mumbled piteously.

“Why? Why not?”

But the answer came from somewhere else.

“What? Why?”

“That bastard deserves to be torn limb from limb!”

The surviving martial artists of the Mount Heng Sword Sect gripped their weapons, their eyes brimming with killing intent.

Lee Seowol also bit her lip and aimed her bow at Pung Yang, but Jin Taekyung hurriedly stopped her.

“Let’s hold off on the finishing blow… No, he’s too vicious to let him die comfortably. Better to leave him there and let him die slowly.”

Lee Seowol wrestled with the decision for a moment before finally lowering her bow. Jin Taekyung approached Pung Yang and whispered into his ear.

“I’m starting to get tired too. Let’s just die now.”

Pung Yang didn’t understand what he meant, but one thing was certain.

Death.

Pung Yang realized that his own death was almost upon him.

“Even if I become a vengeful ghost, I’ll have my revenge.”

“Amen. In your next life, be satisfied with Viagra.”

Pung Yang gave a hollow laugh. It was absurd that he had to listen to that bastard’s incomprehensible nonsense until the very end.

Damn it. What terrible weather.

He raised his head and looked at the sky. It was entirely red.

Then darkness swallowed it.

As Pung Yang's head lolled to the side, celebratory fireworks burst overhead.
Ding. Ding. Ding!

> System - Defeated Lv. 85 Pung Yang! - Successfully completed the Temporary Strength Pill Quest! - Obtained a massive amount of EXP and Fame! - Level Up! - Level Up! - ...

After announcing five level-ups and an increase in Fame, the System window delivered even better news.

> System - The Quest success reward has been delivered to your Inventory! - Full Recovery has taken effect immediately as the Quest success reward!

Full Recovery?
It said the effect would be immediate, and the change happened exactly as promised.
Cracked and broken bones knitted together. Cuts and puncture wounds healed without a trace. And the changes didn't stop at the surface.
My Internal Injuries...
Invisible healing took place inside my body as well. I had expected all my Internal Injuries to heal, but there was an even greater benefit than I had imagined.

> System - All Internal Injuries have healed! - Your stabilized body accepts new qi! - The Blazing Flame Divine Pill has been fully absorbed! - Your internal energy has risen to 45 years! - Your internal energy has gained the Scorching Yang Qi attribute!

The Blazing Flame Divine Pill had been completely absorbed.
And my internal energy had risen dramatically.
I could feel power filling every limb and bone. The Scorching Yang Qi that had burned through my body like lava had somehow become a warm spring breeze.
I did it.
I had planned to circulate my qi and control the Scorching Yang Qi once my body recovered somewhat from the level-ups, but thanks to the System, I had handled the difficult part with ease.
Forty-five years? Just how much is that?

It was three times what I'd originally possessed—an increase of half a jiazi, a full thirty years of internal energy.

Half a jiazi.

Under normal circumstances, I would have put off taking the Blazing Flame Divine Pill. But the gamble had turned out to be a masterstroke.

I would have died if luck hadn't been on my side, though.

Two strokes of heavenly luck.

One was the Blazing Flame Divine Pill. The other was the Unnamed Sword in my hand.

Both were loot I had obtained after defeating Jopil several months ago.

Without this, I really would've been screwed.

I'd thought it was merely a little sharper and harder than other swords. Never in my wildest dreams had I imagined it was actually Ten-Thousand-Year Cold Iron—or that it had such an ability.

In that sense, seven parts luck and three parts skill didn't suit me today. Nine parts luck and one part qi was much more appropriate.

Though I'm not sure this really counts as good luck.

I slowly looked around.

A graveyard of weapons stood with their hilts buried in the ground. Some people had died with their faces planted in pools of blood. Others stared wide-eyed at the sky as dawn began to break.

There were hundreds of corpses like that.

"There's a survivor here!"

"Chunsam! Wake up!"

Amid that horrific scene, the martial artists of the Mount Heng Sword Sect moved tirelessly. As I watched them rescue the few survivors with disciplined efficiency, I was suddenly seized by an inexplicable sense of wrongness.

What is it?

It felt like I'd forgotten something important…

Just as I was frowning, one of the corpses that had been lying motionless sat up.

"Guuuuuh."

"Oh."

Right. Good to see you, Mukyung.

By the time the two-shichen[719] search was over, Lee Seowol was soaked in blood.

"How many survivors?"

[719] A shichen is a traditional time unit of approximately two hours; two shichen are about four hours.

“Twenty-five, including you, Sect Leader.”

“How many did you say?”

“Twenty-five. Five of them probably won’t make it through today.”

Both Lee Seowol, who had asked the question, and the martial artist who answered it fell silent.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect, which had once divided Shanxi Province with the Jin Family of Taiyuan, no longer existed. All that remained were the wounded and a young Sect Leader who wasn’t even twenty years old.

If I had abandoned this place and fled, if I had accepted Pung Yang’s marriage proposal from the beginning, could I have saved them?

Regret was always futile.

But Lee Seowol had to regret.

Although few remained, she was still the Sect Leader of a sect. Only by agonizing over her mistakes and regretting them to the bone could she avoid making the same mistakes again.

That was her atonement to those who had died today and her effort on behalf of those who remained.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect will survive. If only for those who gave their lives for our sect.

Lee Seowol clenched her fist. Her fingernails, broken from drawing the bowstring, dug into her flesh. Blood seeped out, but she felt no pain.

“What about the others?”

“They’re all in the main hall. A woman from the Jin Family of Taiyuan knows a fair amount about medicine and is treating the wounded, but…”

The martial artist’s expression darkened. It was proof of just how bad the condition of some of the wounded was.

Lee Seowol asked no more questions and headed toward the main hall.

We haven’t even had time to collect ourselves, and already I’m sending them off again.

Unbearable fatigue pressed down on her entire body, but she held on through sheer willpower.

At the very least, she had to be there for their final moments.

Creeeeak.

When Lee Seowol entered the main hall, the people from the Jin Family of Taiyuan were nowhere in sight. The wounded lying on the floor immediately caught her eye.

The Tiger of Mount Heng, Cheol Mubaek, and more than a dozen martial artists noticed her and called out.

“Ah, Seowol. You’ve come?”

“You’re here, Sect Leader!”

“We greet you, Sect Leader!”

“…?”

Was it just her imagination?

For people on the verge of death, they seemed strangely full of energy. After staring at them in silence for a while, Lee Seowol realized what that energy meant.

“A final rally…”

Only then did she see the dark shadow of death hanging over their faces.

Just as she hurriedly turned away to hold back her tears—

Bang!

Lee Seowol staggered after striking her forehead against something solid. As she began to fall, a large, firm hand caught her by the shoulder.

“Oh, careful there. Are you all right?”

“Ah, yes.”

“Then we’re good.”

Jin Taekyung looked down at Lee Seowol and let out a short laugh.

Some final rally.

I barely held back a snort.

Cheol Mubaek and the other wounded were all recovering vigorously.

Of course, Jin Mukyung was no exception.

What would they have done without me?

More precisely, if not for the Quest rewards, half of them might have needed funerals.

The thirty Superior Wound Medicines and thirty Ten-Year He Shouwu[720] I’d received as rewards were remarkably effective at treating external wounds and Internal Injuries.

I did consider saving them for an emergency…

But I wasn’t heartless enough to ignore people dying right in front of me.

Of course, the sheer quantity had played a part too.

“Aren’t you coming in?”

“What?”

“If you’re not going in, I’ll go in first.”

I was about to walk past Lee Seowol, who was standing there in a daze, when I suddenly remembered what I’d forgotten.

Wait. Where did I put that?

[720] He Shouwu is the root of Chinese knotweed, used in traditional Chinese medicine.

“Ah, here it is.”

I pretended to rummage through my robes and pulled a bamboo slip[721] from my Inventory.

“Here. It’s from my hyung[722]… no, from the Lesser Family Head.”

Lee Seowol accepted the bamboo slip[723] with a bewildered expression.

The instant she took it, a System notification rang out.

Ding.

> System - Invitation delivery complete. - Quest Yesterday’s Enemy, Today’s Ally completed!

Invitation delivery.

If I had to do that twice, someone was going to die.

[721] A bamboo slip is a strip of bamboo used as a writing surface.
[722] Hyung is a Korean term a younger man uses for an older brother or a close older male.
[723] A bamboo slip is a strip of bamboo used as a writing surface.

Chapter 121

It had been a fierce battle—fierce enough to leave mountains of corpses and rivers of blood—yet most of the Mount Heng Sword Sect's buildings remained largely intact.

Like this pavilion, for instance.

I collapsed into a chair and leaned back.

"Ugh. I'm dying."

Exhaustion always followed a major battle like the one we had just fought.

Leveling up could restore my physical fatigue, but it couldn't do anything about mental fatigue.

And after skirting the brink of death like I had today, it was even worse.

That was seriously dangerous.

Jopil. The Head Elder. Pung Yang.

Nothing good had ever come from getting tangled up with Peak masters. More than once, I'd found myself wishing I had about five lives.

"Squad Leader, thank you for your hard work."

"Yeah, yeah."

"Whew, your shoulders are really tense."

Hyuk Mujin sidled up and began massaging my shoulders.

Wolhwa and Hyuk Mujin had been protecting Cheol Mubaek outside before joining the survivor search once things had more or less settled down.

"If I'd been there, I would've really laid into that bastard Pung Yang. You know what I mean, right?"

"Of course. You would've gotten yourself killed on the spot."

"…"

"What? Come on, massage a little harder."

Hyuk Mujin grumbled, but he put more strength into his hands and kneaded my shoulders.

"What about Jin Mukyung? I mean, my second brother?"

"We've already moved him elsewhere. The physicians said there's no need to worry. They also said the other wounded are recovering quickly."

"Really? That's a relief."

"Aren't they quacks? I heard the Second Young Master and Great Hero Cheol Mubaek both suffered fairly serious Internal Injuries."

"They were sent by the Lower District Sect. Let's trust their skills."

In truth, it wasn't the physicians I trusted. It was the efficacy of the Items.

If not for the Superior Wound Medicine, which could heal most wounds within a few days, and the Ten-Year He Shouwu[724], which was exceptionally effective at treating Internal Injuries, some of them would already have crossed the River Jordan[725].

I've given them the minimum emergency treatment. The physicians can take care of the rest.

The Lower District Sect—or rather, Wolhwa—had moved quickly without any of us realizing it. Several days ago, when she sent one of her subordinates back from the shrine, she had apparently issued a mobilization order to a nearby branch.

The Lower District Sect's support force arrived half a day after the battle ended and immediately began dealing with the aftermath.

While everyone else was looking ahead, she was thinking about what came after.

The Lower District Sect's support force had been organized for relief work, not combat.

They had brought physicians, cooks, and even laborers. Their foresight and preparation were enough to make me marvel.

She really isn't an ordinary person.

The Lower District Sect was both an information organization found throughout the land and a Murim sect.

Wolhwa had become a Branch Leader in a sect of that size while still in her mid-to-late twenties. There was no way she was ordinary.

Come to think of it, Wolhwa isn't even her real name.

The name I'd discovered through Qi Sense was Eun Sowol. As for why she had gone out of her way to hide it from us, I figured it was something like using a code name in a spy movie.

One thing was certain: making an enemy of someone that capable would be exhausting.

Don't get too close. Keep a reasonable distance and maintain proper boundaries. Yeah, that should be about right.

Fortunately, that wouldn't be too difficult. Wolhwa had shown me inexplicable goodwill and curiosity from the very beginning.

Whether those were genuine feelings or simply the curiosity of a veteran information merchant was something I would have to watch a little longer to determine.

"Mujin-ah."[726]

"Should I massage harder?"

---

[724] He shouwu is a plant used in traditional Chinese herbal medicine.

[725] In Korean speech, crossing the Jordan River is a way of saying someone has died.

[726] The Korean suffix -ah is an informal way to address someone by name, typically someone familiar or younger.

“No, not that. What do you think of Young Lady Wolhwa?”

“She’s pretty.”

“And?”

Hyuk Mujin thought hard before answering.

“She’s extremely pretty.”

“…”

“Massage my forearms instead of my shoulders.”

I was the idiot for asking that guy anything.

Hyuk Mujin looked wounded and was about to retort when light footsteps slowly approached and stopped in front of the door.

Wolhwa?

No. The qi I sensed outside the door was far weaker and smaller than Wolhwa’s.

After a brief silence, an unexpected guest spoke.

“Young Master Jin, may I come in?”

The voice was clear and distinct.

It was Lee Seowol.

Once Hyuk Mujin left the pavilion, Lee Seowol and I were alone.

I gazed out the window at the slowly darkening sky and cleared my throat for no reason.

“Ahem. Ahem.”

Being alone with a woman at this hour—especially a stunning beauty—was a trial in itself.

Worse yet, she was the Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect, whom we had been fighting like sworn enemies until recently.

They said new wine belonged in new wineskins, but she was the only daughter of Lee Cheonbaek, the man who had tried to bring down the Jin Family of Taiyuan, and she and I were already entangled in a scandal.

What the hell am I supposed to say?

May the deceased rest in peace?

No. That would make the atmosphere far too heavy. As if losing her family recently hadn’t been enough, she had also lost most of her subordinates in the battle against Pung Yang.

After agonizing over it, I finally opened my mouth.

“Have you eaten?”

“…”

“I know you’ve been through something difficult, but it’s even more important to keep your strength up at times like this, so… Sorry.”

Damn it. I should’ve just kept my mouth shut.

As I was regretting my words from the bottom of my heart, Lee Seowol rose from her seat and bowed deeply to me.

“Lee Seowol of the Mount Heng Sword Sect pays her respects to her benefactor.”

It happened before I could stop her. Flustered, I hurriedly helped her to her feet.

Benefactor?

It was accurate, but hearing it made me cringe.

“Oh, come on. What are you doing? You don’t have to call me your benefactor.”

“No. A person ought to receive kindness and know how to be grateful for it. Please do not make me feel ashamed, Benefactor.”

Her tone was so resolute that I couldn’t stop her anymore.

She’s not wrong.

If not for Jin Mukyung and me, the Mount Heng Sword Sect would have shut its doors today. A deep bow wasn’t enough. They could have erected statues of us and it still wouldn’t have been sufficient.

Maybe they could designate today as the Day the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi Came and make it an annual Mount Heng Sword Sect holiday—

That might be taking things too far. Anyway.

“Now, calm down and sit.”

“I will follow my benefactor’s instructions.”

“Could you stop calling me that?”

“Yes, Benefactor.”

This is driving me crazy.

Only after Lee Seowol answered with a calm expression and sat down was I finally able to hear why she had come to see me.

“I came to give you my answer regarding the letter.”

“The letter? Oh.”

She meant the invitation.

The polite invitation to have a meal at the Jin Family of Taiyuan on New Year’s Day, which was fast approaching—a summons disguised as a dinner invitation.

Now that the Jin Family of Taiyuan had Shanxi Murim firmly in its grasp, it was obvious that any sect refusing the invitation would face an unpleasant future.

The Mount Heng Sword Sect, which had only narrowly escaped annihilation, was no exception.

“So what’s your answer?”

“We will gladly accept your sect’s proposal.”

It was the answer I had expected.

But Lee Seowol didn't stop there. She continued speaking.

"Furthermore, as an apology for what happened, I will transfer every right held by our sect to the Jin Family of Taiyuan."

"Rights?"

"Yes. All rights to the territory currently occupied by our sect."

In other words, she was saying that she would hand over all of northern Shanxi to the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

She's going this far?

The fact that the Mount Heng Sword Sect had bowed its head to the Jin Family of Taiyuan was already a given. Jin Wikyung would demand a great deal in compensation, but even he couldn't completely swallow the sect whole.

Wolhwa had said something similar during our previous conversation.

And now she's serving it up to us without even being asked.

After calling me her benefactor over and over, it seemed she hadn't just been paying lip service.

Right. Gratitude shouldn't end with words. Hm.

"Thank you. My eldest brother will be pleased."

"There's more."

What? She isn't finished yet?

Lee Seowol took three books from inside her robes and held them out to me.

I slowly read the titles on their covers.

"Blood Wolf Sword Technique, Blood Wolf Footwork. And…"

"Shura Annihilating Fist. The sword technique and footwork technique were created by my father himself. The Shura Annihilating Fist is Uncle Cheol's secret ultimate technique. Every one of them is an outstanding Peak martial art."

"Peak martial arts…"

I swallowed hard.

One of the things I had learned painfully in the Murim was the importance of martial arts. Even I was barely able to make up for my deficiencies by relying on the System. For ordinary martial artists, it went without saying.

To them, an outstanding Peak martial art was a priceless treasure.

These are worth more than the rights to northern Shanxi.

If those rights were the branches of a tree, the three martial arts manuals before me were its roots.

Lee Seowol had placed her father's legacy—the most valuable possessions of the Mount Heng Sword Sect—on the scales.

"Is this a gift too?"

"No. This is a transaction."

I knew it.

A transaction.

If it was Jin Wikyung, he would accept the deal by any means necessary. Three Peak martial arts were at stake, after all.

What on earth is she going to demand?

Wealth? A guarantee of safety? Or something else?

Lee Seowol—or rather, the Mount Heng Sword Sect—was in a situation beyond desperate. Even if they were offering their martial arts at a bargain price, whatever they wanted in return was certain to be a difficult demand.

I cautiously distanced myself from the matter.

“I’m curious what kind of transaction this is, but I don’t know if you’re aware—I don’t have that kind of authority.”

Lee Seowol gazed steadily at me with eyes as clear as a lake.

“Is that so?”

“Yes. I don’t have a particular position, either. I think it would be best for you to discuss this separately with my eldest brother later.”

“My thoughts differ from yours, Benefactor.”

“Excuse me?”

“This is a transaction you are fully capable of deciding. Of course, there would need to be many discussions.”

“A transaction worth trading three Peak martial arts for… Then what would our side have to give?”

“A person.”

“A person?”

For an instant, a smile flickered across Lee Seowol’s lips.

It was the second time I had seen her smile, and this time, I knew I hadn’t imagined it.

“Please marry me.”

“Well, I’ll be going.”

Hyuk Mujin, who had been pacing around the pavilion’s front courtyard, turned at the sound of a woman’s voice behind him.

A beauty who made his chest tickle just by looking at her was descending the pavilion steps.

Good heavens. She’s breathtaking.

Though she was dozens of paces away, it almost seemed as if the cold midwinter wind carried the scent of flowers.

Our squad leader sure is lucky.

He had a handsome face, was the youngest Young Master of the Jin Family of Taiyuan—the universally acknowledged foremost family in Shanxi—and possessed excellent martial arts.

When he was with Wolhwa, the words a celestial beauty and a handsome man fit them perfectly.

And now the Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect had been added to the list.

Hyuk Mujin let out a deep sigh as he watched Lee Seowol's back disappear into the distance.

I loved you, however briefly, Young Lady Lee.

When Hyuk Mujin returned to the pavilion, he found Jin Taekyung sitting there half out of his mind.

"Squad Leader, what's wrong?"

"…"

"Squad Leader. Please come to your senses!"

Only after Hyuk Mujin grabbed him by the shoulders and shook him did his unfocused eyes finally clear.

Hyuk Mujin asked with a worried expression, "Did something happen? Why are you suddenly acting like this?"

Gulp.

Jin Taekyung swallowed hard and barely managed to open his mouth.

"Mujin."

"Yes."

"Do you know how old Lee Seowol is?"

"What do you mean, 'Lee Seowol'? You should call her Sect Leader or Young Lady."

"Unless you want people calling you the late Hyuk Mujin, shut up and answer."

"…"

Hyuk Mujin thought for a moment.

"How old was she again? I think she was about the age when people started getting married."

He suddenly slapped his forehead.

"Oh, I remember."

"H-How old is she?"

"Seventeen."

Jin Taekyung's mouth fell open.

"Fuck, she was still a high schooler?"

Chapter 122

Two things mattered when conveying information: speed and accuracy.

To that end, the Lower District Sect, which dealt in information, had established a dense information network around each of its branches.

Wolhwa had the authority to issue mobilization orders to the more than thirty branches established throughout Shanxi Province.

“How did it go? Is everything taken care of?”

A clean-cut middle-aged man answered her. He was the Jeongyang Branch Leader of the Lower District Sect.

“We separated and moved all the corpses. There were no more survivors from the Mount Heng Sword Sect, but some of the mounted bandits were still breathing.”

“How many?”

“Exactly forty-seven.”

“Quite a lot survived. How many can we save?”

“With the medicine we have on hand, thirty at most.”

“We don’t need to save every last one.”

At Wolhwa’s words, the Jeongyang Branch Leader bowed his head.

“I’ll see to it.”

That decided the surviving mounted bandits’ fates.

Those with severe injuries would rejoin the mountain-high pile of their comrades, while those with minor injuries might have their lives extended a little longer.

Of course, the moment their treatment was finished, they would be sold as slaves to the mines or fighting pits.

“Next. Honju Branch Leader?”

“No problems on our end, either.”

The Honju Branch Leader was a hulking man whose face was covered in sword scars. He scratched his stiff, wirelike beard and continued.

“Truth is, we didn’t even need to step in. They must’ve heard that Pung Yang was dead and the Red Wind Band had been smashed, because they didn’t come anywhere near the area.”

“For now, that’s enough. Pick your fastest, most loose-lipped people and have them spread the rumor. They’ll run away on their own.”

Although Pung Yang and his subordinates had been dealt with, a considerable number of mounted bandits were still prowling around the area like wolves.

They were watching for a chance to sink their teeth into the easy prey that was the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

“The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi and the Heaven Shaking Sword beat Pung Yang to death with a single blow. Something like that should scare them out of their wits.”

“It’s not exactly true, but… spice it up as much as you need to. We can’t shed blood over someone else’s fight, can we?”

Whether the rumor was true didn’t matter. All that mattered was spreading the word that the two brothers of the Jin Family of Taiyuan had rescued the Mount Heng Sword Sect from Pung Yang and the Red Wind Band.

“Besides, the Jin Family of Taiyuan will make its move within a few days. Unless they’re complete idiots, they’ll return to Gaoyuan if they want to live.”

Word would soon spread far and wide that the great tiger known as the Jin Family of Taiyuan stood behind the Mount Heng Sword Sect. Wouldn’t one roar from the mountain lord[727] be enough to send those bandits running?

“Five days at most. Let’s hold out until then.”

The two Branch Leaders nodded.

“It’s hardly a hardship. These are the Chief Branch Leader’s orders. Of course we’ll obey.”

“I’m fine with it. Maybe it’s because Gaoyuan is right next door, but there’s something fun about riding across all this open land.”

“Glad to hear it.”

Wolhwa let out a short laugh and drew on her long-stemmed tobacco pipe.

“Um, by the way…”

“Yes?”

The Honju Branch Leader, considered the most aggressive and martial-arts-obsessed of her subordinates, had a bright gleam in his eyes.

“I heard from the wounded that bastard Pung Yang took down the Tiger of Mount Heng and the Heaven Shaking Sword all by himself. Is that true?”

“It is. Though I didn’t see it myself.”

“Wow. That’s impressive.”

“It is. Though the fact that he grew so strong so quickly reeks of something fishy.”

The Peak realm was a domain of enlightenment. From that point onward, a martial artist had to go beyond physical training and see through the principles of martial arts in order to advance to a higher realm.

But Pung Yang had been defeated by Cheol Mubaek, the Tiger of Mount Heng, only a short while ago. No matter how much enlightenment supported him, he had become far too strong in far too little time.

Wolhwa, who still knew nothing of the Temporary Strength Pill, focused on that point.

“He definitely used some kind of trick… I’ll have to look into it more closely.”

The quick-witted Jeongyang Branch Leader gave a silent bow, while the Honju Branch Leader vigorously scratched the back of his head.

[727] “Mountain lord” is a traditional epithet for a tiger.

“Of course, Pung Yang, that mounted-bandit bastard, is impressive too. But I was talking about someone else.”

“Who? Ah.”

“The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi. Isn’t he incredible? According to what our sect has determined, his martial arts are still only First Rate, but he defies our expectations every time.”

Information had to be based on objective facts. As members of the Lower District Sect, they coolly judged how information could be used from a third-party perspective, then applied it to people and situations.

In that regard, Jin Taekyung was a headache. Every prediction they made about him proved wrong.

“But the strange thing is, I’m starting to look forward to it more and more.”

“Look forward to what?”

“Wondering how he’ll defy our expectations next time. That kind of anticipation.”

The Honju Branch Leader had been grinning, but his smile vanished at Wolhwa’s impassive expression.

“My apologies. I was running my mouth…”

“At least you know it. Go outside and handle your work.”

After driving the two Branch Leaders out, Wolhwa put her pipe back between her lips.

A tiny voice slipped from her barely moving lips along with the smoke.

“Jin Taekyung. Jin Taekyung.”

She suddenly remembered a conversation she had once shared with her Master.

“There are people like that. People who always defy prediction. People who cannot be judged through information.”

“Then what should I do?”

“Do not judge them. Simply watch until you can reach your own conclusion about them.”

“What if I still can’t reach a conclusion after all that?”

“Unpredictable. If such a person exists, wouldn’t they possess the makings of someone who might one day move the world?”

The makings of someone who could move the world…

Wolhwa tapped the ash from her pipe and left the pavilion.

Night had fallen thick and dark. Using the blazing torches as guideposts, she walked until she stopped in front of the pavilion where Jin Taekyung was staying.

“What are you doing out here?”

Hyuk Mujin, who had been squatting miserably in front of the pavilion, brightened when he saw Wolhwa.

“Oh, you’re here?”

“Things are mostly wrapped up, so I stopped by for a moment. Young Master Jin is inside, right?”

In truth, there was no need to ask. Bright light was spilling out through the pavilion.

But Hyuk Mujin shook his head, his expression grim.

“He isn’t inside?”

“No, he is. It’s just…”

Hyuk Mujin let out a deep sigh before continuing.

“His condition isn’t very good. He’s been muttering things that make no sense for a while now. I get goose bumps just looking at him.”

“Things that make no sense?”

“Yes. Do you happen to know what ‘school lunch’ means?”[728]

“School lunch?”

Wolhwa tilted her head. She had read plenty of books, but she had never heard the expression before.

“I don’t think so. It’s new to me.”

“Right? I thought maybe I was just too ignorant to know.”

“And then?”

“You know what our Captain is like. He kept saying ‘school lunch, school lunch,‘ so I asked him what it meant. Then he threw me out.”

Judging by the miserable look on his face as he rubbed his forehead, he hadn’t been shown the door gently.

What happened?

Unable to contain her curiosity, Wolhwa was about to knock when an eerie voice seeped through the gap in the door.

“School lunch, high schooler, clank, clank…”

Goose bumps prickled across Wolhwa’s skin, and she involuntarily stepped back.

“D-Did you hear that?”

“He’s been like that for a while.”

Even as the incomprehensible muttering continued, she backed away in hesitant steps.

“I-I’ll come back another time.”

She realized it once again.

The man named Jin Taekyung was still utterly unpredictable.

[728] “School lunch” is Korean slang for a school-age child. The later “clank, clank” evokes handcuffs or prison bars.

Two days flew by in the blink of an eye. Lee Seowol did not come back after that night, and I didn't bother leaving the pavilion, either.

Even as I spent most of my time learning to control my newly acquired Scorching Yang Qi, her final words kept returning to me.

"Marriage is one of life's great human obligations, so take your time thinking it over."

I had been so flustered at the time that I could only open and close my mouth.

Who would have thought a woman would propose to me first—and a girl who looked so much younger than me, at that?

Although it was a cold political marriage proposal—cold enough that calling it a transaction wasn't an exaggeration—a proposal was still a proposal.

The greater shock, however, was still to come.

Seventeen years old? Is this for real?

A first-year high school student was right in the prime school-lunch-eating years.

She was two years younger than my late-born little sister, Hayeon, and a full ten years younger than me.

That's the Murim for you…

This was a world where getting married in middle school and becoming a parent in high school wouldn't even be strange. If anything, the three brothers of the Jin Family of Taiyuan looked like the oddballs for remaining unmarried at our age.

No, wait a second.

"What are you staring at?"

Jin Mukyung noticed my gaze and asked irritably. He had suffered considerable injuries at Pung Yang's hands, but he had now recovered enough to move around on his own.

Come to think of it…

I had never heard whether Jin Mukyung was married.

I opened my mouth, half expecting the worst.

"Just asking in case."

"What?"

"Are you married?"

Pffft!

Jin Mukyung spat tea into my face and hurriedly shouted.

"W-What kind of nonsense is that?"

"If you're not, then you're not. Why are you so flustered?"

After receiving that unexpected facial wash, I wiped my face with my sleeve and continued asking questions.

"Why haven't you married?"

Jin Mukyung seemed flustered for a moment, then answered readily.

"I'm too busy training in martial arts. Women are a luxury to me."

"You make it sound downright frugal."

"Don't lump me in with a lecherous idler like you. That's an insult to me."

"…"

Lecherous, my ass. I had spent all twenty-seven years of my life single.

If dating was a luxury, then I was the very definition of a miser. The only slight difference was that while Jaringobi[729] ate rice while staring at a strip of dried fish, I had a USB drive.

"What's with that expression? You look incredibly sad."

"Call it regret over the life I've lived."

"At last, you're becoming human."

He seemed to have a different interpretation of my past life, but fine. He could interpret it however he wanted.

"But why did you suddenly ask about marriage? It's something you already know perfectly well."

"Oh, because the Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect asked me to marry her."

Pffft!

"…For fuck's sake. Stop spitting."

As I wiped away the second mouthful of tea, Jin Mukyung regained his composure.

"The Sect Leader of the Mount Heng Sword Sect?"

"Yeah. She said it two days ago."

"Why on earth would she marry someone like you… Ah, of course. It must be a political marriage."

"…"

He wasn't wrong, but it was still pretty damn irritating. At this point, wasn't I prime husband material both in the Murim and in the real world?

"So, are you thinking of doing it?"

"Of course not. How could I marry a girl so much younger than me?"

"You're barely twenty, and you say things like that."

My body is twenty, but my mind is twenty-seven, you bastard.

Besides, I had decided on my answer to Lee Seowol's proposal long ago.

You can't set up two households when there's someone you love. There was only one person in my heart right now.

What could Song-i be doing right now?

[729] Jaringobi is a figure in a Korean story about miserliness who stares at dried fish while eating rice instead of eating the fish.

Just imagining it made me happy. I tilted my teacup with a blissful smile, and Jin Mukyung stared at me with a bizarre expression.

“What a disgusting look.”

“Anyway, I’m turning down the marriage for various reasons.”

“You made the right decision. At the very least, a political marriage has to offer us something in return. If you marry someone you have no feelings for and gain nothing from it, there’s no reason to enter into a political marriage.”

I had thought he was a fool who knew nothing but martial arts, but every now and then, he became a surprisingly sharp realist.

“And no matter what they offer, it’s out of the question as long as our eldest brother is around. He isn’t the sort of man who would bind you through a political marriage.”

“They did make a pretty substantial offer, though.”

“Hm. What did they say they would give you?”

Jin Mukyung tilted his teacup with an uninterested expression.

“The Blood Wolf Sword Technique, the Blood Wolf Footwork, and the Shura Annihilating Fist.”

Pffft!

“…Ah, fuck.”

This time, I didn’t even have time to wipe my face. Jin Mukyung grabbed me by the collar and shook me hard.

“Marry her right now!”

Chapter 123

A middle-aged man lay in bed, his entire body wrapped in bandages.

His brow was deeply furrowed, as if something was bothering him, and his body kept fidgeting without a moment's rest.

"Ugh."

The moment he groaned, a sharp rebuke followed.

"Please don't move so much."

"That's not it…"

"Uncle Cheol, didn't you hear what the physician said?"

Here we go again. Cheol Mubaek, the Tiger of Mount Heng, stared blankly at the ceiling. Lee Seowol pulled a thick cotton blanket up to his chest and continued.

"You need to recover as quickly as possible. I know you're restless, but please stay in bed. At least get some more sleep."

"I've already slept enough."

"You only slept for one shichen[730]."

"Only? One shichen[731] is plenty."

"You'll only make your injuries worse."

"I've lived like this for more than thirty years. I'll be fine."

"That's because you've never been this badly injured before."

"…Ugh."

Cheol Mubaek fell silent at Seowol's pointed remark.

She was right. He had never suffered injuries this severe since learning the Shura Annihilating Fist. Broken limbs and serious internal injuries. According to the physician, his injuries were severe enough to require at least four months of recuperation.

"I wasn't this badly hurt even when I met your father."

Seowol reacted to his complaint.

"My father?"

"Yes. That friend of mine, Cheonbaek."

"What happened between the two of you?"

"Did I never tell you?"

"I only knew that you hit it off and became friends."

"We did. But first, we fought with our lives on the line."

"You fought?"

Cheol Mubaek smiled faintly.

---

[730] A shichen is a traditional time unit of approximately two hours.

[731] A shichen is a traditional time unit of approximately two hours.

"What else would two martial artists do when they met? We were both young and fiercely competitive, so what happened next was obvious."

Cheol Mubaek looked out the window. More than thirty years ago, somewhere along those towering mountain ridges, the two men had met for the first time—and fought.

"He said he'd spent three months combing the mountain range to find me. He looked like a beggar, but his aura was anything but ordinary."

Masters recognized masters. Cheol Mubaek had secluded himself in a remote mountain valley where no one ever ventured, training alone. Lee Cheonbaek had perfected his own martial arts through countless battles.

It was the first meeting of two Peak masters.

"He told me to become his subordinate. He said he was going to establish a sect at the foot of the mountains and wanted me to help lay its foundation."

"That sounds like Father. So what happened?"

"What else was there to say? We fought. Viciously."

Seowol let out a quiet laugh.

"I see."

"Aren't you curious how it ended?"

"Do I need to hear it? The fact that you've remained unaffiliated all this time tells me everything, Uncle Cheol. Isn't this one of those embarrassing stories about two men becoming friends after being impressed by each other's martial arts?"

"Ha-ha-ha! Exactly! The fight was decided after precisely five hundred exchanges… Ugh."

Cheol Mubaek had been laughing heartily when a sudden stab of pain made him flinch. Seowol sighed.

"I think having me here is making your condition worse… Perhaps I should leave."

"You little rascal. Don't you feel sorry for your uncle, growing old all alone?"

"If you're interested, just tell me anytime. I'll even play matchmaker for you."

"Forget it. What would I do at my age?"

Although he had said the words himself, they left a bitter taste in his mouth. Cheol Mubaek muttered inwardly.

Yes. Somehow, I've grown this old.

He did not even know exactly how many years had passed since the day he lost his family.

His deep internal energy and rigorously trained body merely made him look younger than his true age. His spirit had been growing old for a long time.

My one and only friend is gone, and the martial arts I spent my entire life honing were utterly crushed. Heh.

Only now could he finally admit it.

The Tiger of Mount Heng had grown old.

But Cheol Mubaek still had something left to protect.

“Seowol.”

Seowol answered him warmly.

“Yes, Uncle?”

“I want you to be happy.”

“I know.”

“It isn’t too late. Marry someone you love. With the Jin Family of Taiyuan’s help, you could build a safe, happy home anywhere in Shanxi.”

“What I want isn’t a home. It’s the Mount Heng Sword Sect.”

Sorrow flickered in Cheol Mubaek’s eyes. He had watched Seowol grow from infancy. Rebuilding and restoring a fallen sect was far too heavy a burden for a girl not yet twenty.

“You may regret the choice you’re making now.”

“But no matter what choice I make, you’ll believe in me, won’t you?”

“If I didn’t, I wouldn’t have given you the martial arts manual for the Shura Annihilating Fist.”

Seowol grasped Cheol Mubaek’s wrinkled hand.

She, too, was the daughter of a martial household. She understood what a momentous decision the old martial artist before her had made.

“Thank you, Uncle.”

At the moisture in her voice, Cheol Mubaek waved a hand.

“I’m old. I was already having trouble taking on a Disciple at my age, so this was simply a good opportunity.”

The Shura Annihilating Fist followed the principles of a single successor and transmission only to the worthy. Its purpose was to preserve the martial lineage by finding a successor of upright conduct and good character.

Yet Cheol Mubaek, its ninth-generation successor, had broken those principles and handed the martial arts manual to Seowol. Though he had not taught her directly, he had still broken a tradition passed down through generations of his school.

But Cheol Mubaek had his own reasons.

The Heaven Shaking Sword and the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi should be able to protect Seowol.

If Seowol had decided on a political marriage, those two were her best options.

Their martial talent went without saying, and they possessed the chivalrous spirit to risk their lives fighting injustice.

Still, I’ll have to watch and see what they’re really like…

If all went well, this path could fulfill both the purpose of the political marriage and the traditions of a single successor and transmission only to the worthy.

“So, about that…”

Cheol Mubaek continued in a suggestive tone.

“Which one did you choose?”

Seowol tilted her head, feigning ignorance.

“My, whatever do you mean?”

“Don’t play dumb. Is it the Heaven Shaking Sword? Or the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi?”

“I’m not sure.”

“They’re much the same, but… Wouldn’t the Heaven Shaking Sword be better?”

“You don’t like the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi?”

“It’s not that I dislike him…”

Cheol Mubaek frowned. Even he, who spent most of the year deep in the mountains, had heard the rumors about the notorious good-for-nothing of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

“Even if he has turned over a new leaf, old habits die hard. I worry that he may break your heart someday.”

“What about the Heaven Shaking Sword?”

Cheol Mubaek’s crumpled expression smoothed out.

“They say no younger brother measures up to his elder. I spoke with him briefly yesterday, and he seemed like a fine man. His martial talent is outstanding.”

“I heard he knows nothing but martial arts.”

“Hey! That’s far better than chasing women. His speech and conduct are dignified, and he carries himself with proper gravity. That’s how a man ought to be. Yes, indeed.”

Cheol Mubaek smiled contentedly.

Jin Mukyung grabbed me by the collar and shook me violently, his eyes half rolled back in his head.

“Marry her right now!”

“Cough! Cough!”

Tea had already gone up my nose and left me choking. With Mukyung shaking me nonstop by the collar on top of that, I couldn’t think straight.

“Let go! Are you going to let go or not?”

“The Shura Annihilating Fist! The Blood Wolf Sword Technique! The Blood Wolf Footwork!”

“I get it, so let go first!”

“You stupid bastard! Do you even know what kind of martial art the Shura Annihilating Fist is?”

“Let go and then we’ll talk!”

“A single successor! Transmission only to the worthy!”

“Enough, you crazy bastard!”

A short while later, by the time I finally pried Mukyung’s hand away, the inside of the pavilion looked as though a storm had passed through it.

“Huff… huff…”

I caught my breath and looked around.

The table had collapsed, the chairs had been smashed to pieces, and shards of broken teaware rolled across the floor.

Mukyung calmly straightened his clothes and spoke.

“Hmm. I’ve calmed down.”

“…”

This guy was even crazier than I’d thought.

I scrubbed my face with the less-soaked sleeve.

“Is the Shura Annihilating Fist the greatest martial art under heaven or something? Why are you so obsessed with it?”

“It ranks among the ten greatest fist techniques under heaven. No—it did.”

“It did?”

“Two hundred years ago. Even in the library of Heaven’s Gate Temple, which holds thousands, even tens of thousands of books, that martial art survives only in written records. And to think that the Great Hero Tiger of Mount Heng was the current successor to the Shura Annihilating Fist!”

His cheeks flushed red from excitement at the mere thought.

I blew the tea out of my nose and asked, “So?”

“What? What do you mean, ‘so’?”

Mukyung stared at me in disbelief.

“This is the Shura Annihilating Fist we’re talking about! A Peak martial art whose lineage was believed to have died out long ago!”

“And it was one of the ten greatest fist techniques under heaven two hundred years ago?”

“Exactly!”

“Wait a second.”

I picked up a thick wooden stick lying on the floor. Until five minutes ago, it had been known as a table leg.

“Know what this is?”

“A club?”

"You know your stuff."

"What does that have to do with anything?"

"About two thousand years ago, wouldn't this have been one of the ten greatest weapons under heaven or something?"

He wasn't stupid enough to miss my point.

Mukyung glared at me.

"How dare you compare the Shura Annihilating Fist to something like that."

"Then what's the difference?"

"That's…"

"Sure, it's worth far more than a wooden club. But does it still hold the same value now?"

In the past, mankind had fought with stones and clubs. But when bronze and iron appeared, the march of time left them behind.

The Shura Annihilating Fist was no different.

"Of course, it's still an outstanding Peak martial art that everyone would want."

Cheol Mubaek himself had proven that. With the Shura Annihilating Fist, he had become a renowned Peak master in Shanxi Province.

"But it's not still one of the ten greatest fist techniques under heaven, is it?"

Just as stone and wooden clubs had given way to steel, martial arts had also advanced.

I had no idea what the ten greatest fist techniques under heaven were now, but Mukyung's expression proved my point.

"To put it bluntly, if the Shura Annihilating Fist were really that powerful, Cheol Mubaek wouldn't have lost to Pung Yang. And here's the most important part…"

I tossed the table leg into a corner and drove the final nail home.

"I have no intention of getting married."

"…!"

"What can you do when the person involved refuses? Right?"

"Well… That's true."

Mukyung heaved one sigh after another. I'd been ready to fight him if he kept insisting, but he accepted it surprisingly easily.

Still, the wistful look in his eyes suggested that he couldn't stop thinking about the Shura Annihilating Fist manual.

This guy is a martial arts nut too.

Then again, he had gone to Heaven's Gate Temple because he wanted to learn more martial arts.

Now he had discovered a centuries-old martial art that survived only in the records of that very temple. No wonder he was beside himself.

"Hoo…"

Mukyung let out a sigh deep enough to make the earth cave in and muttered,

“What a shame. What a shame.”

“It’s not that big a deal. If fate brings it around, we can get it another time.”

“You idiot. Do you think Peak martial arts just drop out of the sky?”

“Really? Mine did.”

“Even at Heaven’s Gate Temple, where all the martial arts under heaven are gathered, Peak martial arts are strictly controlled… What did you say?”

“I said mine fell out of the sky.”

I pulled an old book from inside my robes. The four characters on its cover had faded under the ravages of time, but they remained clear enough to read.

Flame Divine Palm.

A tiger leaves its hide when it dies, and Jopil left behind a Supreme Peak martial art.

“Fl-Fl-Flame…”

Today was probably the most astonishing day of Jin Mukyung’s entire life.

I grinned as his eyes bulged and darted between me and the martial arts manual.

“From now on, call me hyung[732].”

[732] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

Chapter 124

I was only human, so I couldn't help wavering when Lee Seowol presented me with three martial arts manuals two nights ago.

They were Supreme Peak martial arts, no less. Now that I had mastered the Jin Family's Spear Technique and Jin Family's Manoeuvre Technique, I had already been feeling the need to learn something new. Then someone dangled such a tempting offer right in front of me.

I can't go on like this.

My fight with Pung Yang had been brutal. If not for the Unnamed Sword I'd obtained from Jopil, even two lives wouldn't have been enough to survive.

It was time to learn more martial arts and reach a new realm.

Peak master.

The Blood Wolf Sword Technique, Blood Wolf Footwork, and Shura Annihilating Fist were all proven Peak martial arts—sturdy hammers capable of breaking through the supposedly insurmountable wall of the Peak realm. But…

If those are hammers, then this is an excavator.

I gazed proudly at the old book in my hand.

This single martial arts manual was why I could reject Lee Seowol's proposal without much regret.

"Fl, fl, fl, fl…"

After buffering for quite some time, Jin Mukyung finally managed to spit out a single word.

"Flame Divine Palm!"

"Oh, you know it? Correct."

Jin Mukyung even knew the ten greatest fist techniques in the world from two hundred years ago, so perhaps it was only natural that he knew about the Flame Divine Palm. This martial art was even more incredible than those.

Check item.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Item Window
Flame Divine Palm
Type: Martial arts manual
Grade: Supreme Peak
Restriction: Owner of Scorching Yang Qi
Description: One of the Fire Gate Clan's secret techniques. A martial art based on powerful fire qi.
Effect: Acquisition of Flame Divine Palm.

Jin Mukyung asked in disbelief.

"How did you get this…?"

"Some generous soul gave it to me before he left."

"He gave it to you?"

"Yeah."

He gave it to me and then flew away to heaven.

The Unnamed Sword, made of Ten-Thousand-Year Cold Iron capable of destroying even Body-Protecting Qi. The Blazing Flame Divine Pill, which could grant thirty years of Scorching Yang Qi.

And finally, the Flame Divine Palm, a Supreme Peak martial art.

Thinking of Jopil, who had given me so much before leaving this world, I gazed at the blue sky beyond the window.

Hope you're doing well.

That was when Jin Mukyung abruptly cut in.

"Enough nonsense. Tell me the truth. How did a secret technique of the Fire Gate Clan end up in your hands?"

"I told you. Someone gave it to me before he left."

"You seem to be misunderstanding something…"

Jin Mukyung continued with a serious expression.

"This isn't a situation you can gloss over with a joke."

"Why not?"

"Because you could be branded a thief who stole another sect's martial art. If this goes badly, our family could face condemnation from the entire Murim."

That was a problem I hadn't considered.

A sect's martial arts were its foundation and its history. The Flame Divine Palm was not only a Supreme Peak martial art but also a secret technique of the Fire Gate Clan. That went without saying.

"Ah, damn it."

“I’ll ask you one more time. Where and how did you acquire the Flame Divine Palm manual?”

I let out a deep sigh before answering.

“From Jopil.”

“Jopil? The One Question, One Kill Jopil I know?”

“That’s right. I defeated him and took it as spoils.”

“Do you know how that bastard came to possess the Flame Divine Palm manual?”

“Not really…”

After thinking carefully, I remembered what Jopil had said at the time.

“He claimed he was the nineteenth-generation successor to the Flame Divine Palm.”

“How could someone like Jopil… Are you sure you didn’t mishear him?”

“No, I’m sure. He didn’t look like he was lying, either.”

At the time, Jopil had been drawing on his innate qi and was already dying fast. Most words spoken by someone on the brink of death were close to the truth.

Of course, I have to consider the possibility that Jopil was lying.

Jin Mukyung, who had been lost in thought, spoke with a look of bafflement.

“If he was the successor to the Flame Divine Palm, how did he lose to someone like you?”

“…”

Well, that pissed me off, but he had a point.

It was suspicious enough that Jopil had been living as a wandering martial artist despite having learned a Supreme Peak martial art.

Come to think of it, he couldn’t even use Sword Energy properly.

These days, every martial artist I met came with Sword Energy as standard and Body-Protecting Qi as an optional extra. One Question, One Kill Jopil had been among the weakest Peak masters I had fought so far.

“Is the Flame Divine Palm weaker than I thought?”

“What? The Flame Divine Palm is weak?”

Jin Mukyung looked at me as if I were the craziest person he had ever seen.

“You lunatic. You’re probably the only person under heaven who would call the Fire King’s signature martial art weak.”

“Who’s the Fire King?”

“I’m not in the mood for jokes.”

“Neither am I.”

“Stop it. It isn’t funny.”

“Okay. So who’s the Fire King?”

This silence lasted a little longer. Jin Mukyung opened and closed his mouth like a goldfish before letting out a deep sigh.

“Count your fingers and toes. How many are there altogether?”

“Twenty.”

“Right. Even if you turned the whole world upside down and shook it out, the Fire King would still rank among its twenty greatest masters.”

“…Whoa.”

“One God, Three Saints, Ten Kings. You’ve never heard of them? You seriously don’t know?”

He looked ready to twist my neck if I said I had never heard of any of them.

Faced with Jin Mukyung’s wide-eyed stare, I cautiously opened my mouth.

“I’ve heard of the Three Saints, at least…”

“That’s something.”

I meant Samsung,[733] not the Three Saints, but whatever.

That wasn’t important right now.

“Then if the Fire King finds out I have the Flame Divine Palm…”

“Something you’d rather not imagine will probably happen.”

Damn it. A Supreme Peak master ranked among the twenty greatest experts in the entire world. If the Fire King learned about this and came looking for me, the entire Jin Family of Taiyuan could attack him together and still lose.

After everything it took to get this martial art…

My gut twisted at the thought of handing it over without even learning it.

At that moment, Jin Mukyung, who had been gazing at the Flame Divine Palm manual just as regretfully as I was, added,

“If the Fire King is still alive, that is.”

“What?”

“The Fire King last appeared forty years ago.”

“Forty years ago?”

“He was already an old man when he first appeared in the Murim. If not for the Great Faction War, he might have spent his entire life as a secluded eccentric.”

Jin Mukyung continued.

“The Demonic Cult’s morale soared after it defeated the Namgung Family and occupied Anhui Province. Its members looted, murdered, and committed arson on a massive scale. Apparently, setting fire to Mount Jiuhua was what finally provoked the Fire King.”

“And then?”

---

[733] Samsung is a Korean company. Its name is pronounced Samseong, like the Korean title rendered here as “Three Saints.”

“A thousand people died over four days and nights, and the old man who had been living in seclusion deep within Mount Jiuhua gained the name Fire King.”

“…A thousand people?”

“Yes. The Demonic Cult suffered such heavy losses at Mount Jiuhua that it could not hold out for long and had to withdraw from Anhui Province.”

A thousand people, huh…

After careful consideration, I spoke.

“Let’s give it back.”

I wanted to live a long life. I didn’t want an event involving some insane old man who had single-handedly killed a thousand people added to my life.

“We should leave right away. Anhui Province? Do people still say he lives there?”

“No one knows. Perhaps that still hadn’t been enough to quell the Fire King’s anger. He spent an entire year crushing every Demonic Cult member he could find before disappearing into seclusion again.”

“The Fire Gate Clan! We can find him if we go to the Fire Gate Clan.”

“The Fire Gate Clan has only one successor at a time. It’s similar to Great Hero Cheol’s situation.”

“…”

So even if I wanted to return it, there was no one to give it to.

Jopil had probably been the person closest to the Fire King, but he was already dead. I had no way to find the man.

The best-case scenario is that the Fire King is already dead…

He had already been an old man forty years ago, so it was entirely possible.

On the other hand, as a Supreme Peak master, he might have lived an extraordinarily long life.

“Hmm.”

Was this a priceless treasure or a useless burden? As I stared at the Flame Divine Palm with a conflicted expression, Jin Mukyung said,

“If the Fire King is dead… then you’re the master of the Fire Gate Clan now.”

Jin Mukyung recovered quickly. He had suffered considerable internal injuries from Pung Yang, so a full recovery would still take some time, but he had enough strength to return to the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

“We’re finally going home.”

Hyuk Mujin muttered with a deeply moved expression.

“They say leaving home means hardship. From now on, I will never, ever leave the family grounds again!”

"…Anyone listening would think you suffered the most, you punk."

"What are you talking about? I have my own hardships, you know."

"Try saying that to the person behind you."

Jin Mukyung, who still hadn't been able to remove his bandages, came flying over and smacked Hyuk Mujin on the back of the head.

Whack!

"Urk!"

"Enough nonsense. Drive the carriage."

"There's a coachman. Why do I have to…?"

Just as Hyuk Mujin said, we had a separate coachman—a member of the Lower District Sect whom Wolhwa had assigned to us.

Wolhwa had come out ahead of time to see us off.

"Goodbye. It's a shame to part now that the time has come, isn't it?"

"Then would you like to come with us now?"

I spoke jokingly to her as she winked at me. I was still wary of her, but after our journey together, we had become close enough to exchange jokes.

"Oh my, I'd love to, but… I'm planning to take this opportunity to tour all of northern Shanxi."

Northern Shanxi, which the Mount Heng Sword Sect had kept under tight control until now, had become an open market. Naturally, Wolhwa—the Lower District Sect's Chief Branch Leader for Shanxi Province—would be busy.

"Things must have gone well with the Mount Heng Sword Sect?"

"Secret. I may be the Chief Branch Leader, but I can't go around telling outsiders our sect's confidential information."

Her words said one thing, but her bright, carefree smile was answer enough.

She was the sort of woman who could have nine tails[734] and no one would find it strange, so she had probably obtained a more than satisfactory result.

"I suppose we'll meet at the Jin Family of Taiyuan next time."

"Oh, really?"

"We were allies once. Wouldn't it be better for both of us if we continued to maintain a close relationship?"

Wolhwa smiled coyly and lifted the hem of her skirt slightly.

"Make sure you come see me again then. Well, I'll be off."

As soon as she climbed into the waiting carriage, the coachman cracked his whip. Two pairs of eyes gazed blankly after the carriage as it rapidly receded into the distance.

"Tsk. She could've stayed a little longer."

[734] A gumiho is a nine-tailed fox in Korean folklore, often depicted as a cunning shapeshifter.

“Hmm. Mmm…”

Hyuk Mujin was one thing, but what was Jin Mukyung’s deal?

As I watched the wistful look in his eyes, a thought suddenly occurred to me.

Could that bastard possibly…?

Was he interested in Wolhwa?

Good heavens. I couldn’t believe it. The man who knew nothing but martial arts was showing an interest in a woman.

I couldn’t keep this earth-shattering news to myself. I moved close to Hyuk Mujin and whispered in a voice as small as an ant.

“Hey, Mujin.”

“Ah! You startled me. What is it?”

“Shh. Listen, but don’t be surprised. Don’t show even the slightest reaction. This is a secret we have to take to our graves.”

Hyuk Mujin answered in a stiff voice.

“Gasp. Yes. Go ahead.”

“I think that guy… is interested in Young Lady Wolhwa.”

“…”

“Don’t tell anyone. This is a secret only I know, and I’m telling you alone.”

Despite my serious whisper, Hyuk Mujin replied with a sour expression.

“Oh, yes. Thank you. I’m so grateful I don’t know what to do with myself.”

Why, this little shit…

I was wondering how to correct that rude tone when—

“Benefactor.”

I slowly turned around.

Lee Seowol stood there in a snow-white palace robe.

Chapter 125

“Benefactor.”

Lee Seowol looked especially beautiful today. She wore a snow-white formal robe, and her hair gleamed where it had been swept up with a jade hairpin.

She still looked haggard from everything she had been through, but she was so dazzlingly beautiful that even her exhaustion seemed charming.

No. What am I thinking?

Beautiful? Charming? At seventeen, she should still be wearing a school uniform and worrying about her grades, not marriage.

She was two years younger than Hayeon, putting ten years between us. With an age gap like that, she might as well have been my niece.

Still, she certainly seems mature for her age… No. Get a grip.

Avoiding Lee Seowol’s deep gaze, I clasped my hands in a formal salute.

“Greetings.”

“I greet the Sect Leader.”

Lee Seowol was no ordinary girl. She was the Sect Leader responsible for an entire sect. Just as she was about to return Jin Mukyung’s and my polite greetings—

“Imagine the Sect Leader of the great Mount Heng Sword Sect coming out to greet us in person! I, Hyuk Mujin, am truly honored!”

Of course. It wouldn’t be complete without you.

Hyuk Mujin kept his eyes fixed on her as he bowed over and over. All I could do was sigh.

“I apologize. He’s not all there.”

“…Captain.”

“You saw that, right? We’re not even close, but he’s pretending we are. You’ll be better off ignoring him.”

A faint dimple appeared at the corner of Lee Seowol’s mouth.

“Not at all. He’s also a Benefactor who fought for our sect.”

“It’s fine. He didn’t lift a finger, so you don’t have to count him as a Benefactor.”

“…Oh. I see.”

At my helpful fact-check, her smile turned awkward. Just then, a rough voice came from behind her.

“He’s a Benefactor to me.”

The speaker was a middle-aged man with half-gray hair. Seated in a rattling wooden cart, he greeted us with a nod.

“Please excuse me for being unable to stand. Well, age has caught up with me. My body isn’t what it used to be.”

No one here could match the man before us in either age or fame.

At the appearance of Cheol Mubaek, the Tiger of Mount Heng, Hyuk Mujin quickly bent at the waist.

“I greet Great Hero Cheol Mubaek—”

“Is this your first time seeing my face? Spare me the tiresome formalities.”

“But you’re a renowned great senior of the Murim…”

“Senior, my foot. If you fuss over every little distinction like that, life in the Murim gets exhausting.”

“…”

Look at how laid-back this old man was.

Even Hyuk Mujin, who was as shameless as they came, quietly shrank back. That left Jin Mukyung.

“You’ve arrived.”

Nothing special. He simply clasped his hands in a brief salute. Yet Cheol Mubaek’s face lit up the instant he saw him.

“Well, if it isn’t our Heaven Shaking Sword. So, you’re leaving now?”

“It seems so.”

“Why not stay a little longer? We could have an in-depth discussion about martial arts later. Hmm?”

“I’m sorry, but I’m pressed for time.”

“Oh, what a shame. It can’t be helped, then. Will you come visit this old man sometime?”

“If a great senior of the martial world is willing to teach me, then I should be the one asking for the opportunity.”

“Ha-ha-ha! Senior, huh? I like the sound of that.”

What exactly was I looking at?

They had only spent three or four days together, but they looked like a close grandfather and grandson.

And what was that? Hadn’t he just said fussing over seniority made life exhausting? Look at him changing his tune.

I shot Hyuk Mujin a glance.

What’s with those two?

No idea. He called me a Benefactor before, but is it really all right to treat people this differently?

But if you’re being honest, you didn’t actually do anything.

…

He clamped his mouth shut with an irritated expression. My meaning seemed to have gotten through.

“All right. Make sure you come next time.”

Cheol Mubaek gazed at Jin Mukyung with a pleased, grandfatherly smile before turning toward me.

“What about you? Don’t you have anything to say?”

Was it my imagination, or had I just felt a predator’s gaze?

I decided to follow the better of the two examples I had just witnessed.

“You’ve arrived.”

“Of course I have. Did I go somewhere?”

“…”

That wasn’t it.

But smiling in hard times was the mark of a First Rate man. I put on a smile without panicking.

“Are you feeling all right?”

This time, Cheol Mubaek shook his splinted limbs.

“Do I look all right?”

“…No.”

“If I were all right, I would’ve walked here. These days, those mounted-bandit bastards work people without even a retirement age. How is an old man like me supposed to keep up?”

“…”

The old man had quite a memory. He still seemed to be holding on to what I had said by mistake when we first met.

Lee Seowol, who knew nothing about the situation, shouted in embarrassment.

“Uncle!”

“Good grief, you’ll burst this old man’s eardrums.”

After grumbling, he suddenly bowed his head politely.

“Thank you, all of you.”

He wasn’t thanking us out of obligation. Cheol Mubaek, the Tiger of Mount Heng—an old master who had walked his own path for many years—was speaking from the bottom of his heart.

“Not because you prolonged what little remains of this old man’s life. Seowol—thank you for protecting that child. Thanks to all of you, the Mount Heng Sword Sect survived.”

He gazed calmly at me, Jin Mukyung, and Hyuk Mujin in turn.

“I’ve learned something after living for more than a jiazi.[735] Gratitude and grudges must be repaid, no matter what it takes. I swear here and now that I will never forget what happened, not until the day I die. If you wish it, I’ll repay you even if it costs me my life.”

[735] A jiazi is a traditional sixty-year cycle.

Lee Seowol immediately continued where he left off.

“The Mount Heng Sword Sect will also remember our Benefactors. And for the wrongs committed by my late father… I would like to offer our apology here and now.”

“We apologize!”

“Please forgive us!”

The thunderous cries burst from the mouths of the Mount Heng martial artists.

Every one of them bore injuries, both great and small. Kneeling in the snow that had yet to melt, they waited for our answer.

A light tap.

You answer.

At Jin Mukyung’s Sound Transmission, I licked my parched lips.

Forgiveness.

We had won the war, but wounds remained.

Martial artists had fought and died without end on the orders of their superiors. Even women and children who had never learned martial arts had been sacrificed. It was all the work of Lee Cheonbaek, blinded by his desire to avenge his son.

The wounds left by the war with the Mount Heng Sword Sect ran deep. They would take a long time to heal.

And scars will remain.

Some scars could never be erased.

The young siblings who had lost their home and parents in an instant would carry scars like that. So would I, judging by how the face of that man who had dreamed the absurd dream of becoming the greatest of all time still haunted me.

But I couldn’t deny that the wounds were beginning to close.

Because everyone who caused them is dead.

The Head Elder and Lee Cheonbaek, each of whom had dreamed of revenge, had already met their ends.

Wasn’t that why we had raced here day and night to save the Mount Heng Sword Sect?

With a sincere apology and forgiveness… wounds could heal, even if the scars remained.

Just as they were now.

“I won’t accept your apology.”

The words came out only after considerable thought. Without waiting for anyone else to react, I continued.

“I’m not someone with the right to receive your apology or forgive you.”

No one here had that right. The people they needed to apologize to were back at the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

Lee Seowol and Cheol Mubaek seemed to understand. Both nodded.

“I’ll see you on New Year’s Day.”

“Taiyuan, is it? It will be my first journey away from home in thirty years.”

The Mount Heng Sword Sect would hardly be a welcome guest. Especially now, diminished to such a pitiful state, they might have to endure all manner of humiliation and disgrace.

But that was something they would have to bear themselves. There was nothing I could do, nor any reason for me to interfere.

Well done.

With Jin Mukyung’s brief Sound Transmission in my ear, I offered one last farewell.

“Then we’ll be going.”

I had just turned toward the carriage when Lee Seowol called out.

“Benefactor.”

“Yes?”

“Did you know there are fewer than fifteen days left until New Year’s Day?”

Her voice babbled on like a little stream.

“I’m looking forward to hearing the answer I didn’t get last time.”

I could only open and close my mouth in confusion as Jin Mukyung grabbed me and dragged me away.

With Cheol Mubaek’s distinctly displeased cough sounding behind us, the carriage set off at full speed.

The journey back to the Jin Family of Taiyuan was quick and smooth. The coachman’s skill played a part, but with the impatience gone from my heart, everything seemed that way.

“Phew.”

Jin Mukyung had just finished circulating his qi when he suddenly muttered, “Now that I think about it, I didn’t even get to see a Peak martial art.”

He had joined us after Jin Wikyung lured him in with the promise that he could see Peak martial arts at Mount Heng. I answered him calmly.

“It’s fine. Thanks to Pung Yang, you got to see Mount Beimang.[736]”

“You call that consolation?”

“No. I was making fun of you.”

[736] Mount Beimang is traditionally associated with burial grounds and death.

Bones cracked in Jin Mukyung's hand.

"You've grown a lot."

"Want to spar once your injuries are fully healed?"

"I could do it right now… Urgh."

Jin Mukyung tried to spring to his feet, then immediately frowned.

No matter how quickly he recovered, it had only been four days. That was nowhere near enough time for his injuries to heal completely.

He collapsed back into his seat and glared at me.

"Consider yourself lucky."

"I don't know about lucky, but my lifeline sure is damn thick."

Considering how I kept surviving every brush with death, I must have been born with an unusually sturdy lifeline. Either that, or I had been blessed with heaven's fortune.

"Anyway, you did well."

"Huh?"

"Eeeh?"

Hyuk Mujin and I both widened our eyes at the unexpected praise sticker. Jin Mukyung looked at us as if he couldn't understand what was wrong.

"Why are you looking at me like that? You look as if you've heard something you weren't supposed to."

"You're practically a ghost."

"Wait, could Pung Yang have already killed you? Are you sitting here as a vengeful spirit?"

It was a fairly plausible theory, but around Jin Mukyung, you had to watch your mouth at all times.

As I watched Hyuk Mujin get beaten until dust flew, I felt around inside my robes.

Inventory open. Summon.

The next moment, my fingertips touched something round and hard.

It was the only thing Pung Yang had left behind.

No—the only thing I had taken from him.

Check Item.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Item Window
Temporary Strength Pill
Type: Elixir
Grade: ???
Restriction: Peak martial artist or higher
Description: A pill manufactured by an unknown person. It greatly raises the user's latent power for about one shichen,[737] but a price must be paid in return. Do not take it except in the worst-case scenario.
Effect: Combat-related stats +100
Internal energy: +15 years
Body-Protecting Qi: Available

Even accounting for the short time limit, its effects were monstrous. I could understand why Pung Yang had been so confident.

I had no idea how severe the aftereffects were, but if my life were in danger, I'd swallow twenty of them, not two. Obviously.

But something else bothered me.

A pill manufactured by an unknown person.

The Item's Grade was marked with question marks, its exact aftereffects weren't listed, and even its maker was shrouded in mystery.

What kind of bastard had created something this bizarre?

This thing reeks of something shady.

I was rolling the Temporary Strength Pill around in my palm, lost in thought, when a distant cry drifted toward us.

"Mukyuuung! Taekyuuung!"

Jin Mukyung froze in the middle of enthusiastically hammering Hyuk Mujin's forehead.

"Was that a hallucination?"

Yeah, no.

[737] A shichen is a traditional Chinese time unit of about two hours.

Chapter 126

Four days ago, after completing every mission and returning to the Jin Family of Taiyuan, Wipeng deeply regretted how efficiently he had handled things.

I should've come back a day later.

But it was already too late. Jin Wikyung had received a messenger eagle from the Lower District Sect and was flying into a rage, his eyes practically rolling back in his head.

"Those goddamn mounted bandits dare!"

"What is it this time?"

"Pung Yang! The Red Wind Band! The Mount Heng Sword Sect! My brothers are in danger! Great danger! We leave at once!"

"…I'll assemble the guards."

Now that every obstacle had been swept aside, Jin Wikyung's authority was absolute. Before even half a shichen[738] had passed, the two left the family grounds with fifty elite guards and raced onward without rest.

Two days later, they stopped at a Lower District Sect branch to change horses and received new information.

"What? Pung Yang is dead, and the Red Wind Band has been annihilated?"

"Yes! According to our sect's intelligence, most of the enemy force—some three hundred men—was wiped out, and Young Master Jin Taekyung defeated Pung Yang himself."

"Oh. Ohhh! Taekyung!"

Jin Wikyung's laughter, as if he had gained the whole world, vanished without a trace at the next words.

"Tell me again. What happened to Mukyung?"

"W-well… he suffered a considerable injury during his life-and-death duel with Pung Yang. But his life isn't in danger, and he's recovering quickly, so there should be no need to worry."

It was already over. Jin Wikyung had probably heard nothing except considerable injury.

When his younger brothers were children, if even a thorn pierced one of their fingers, he would raise such a commotion that you would have thought the finger had been severed.

And it wasn't a minor injury. It was a considerable one. This is going to be a disaster.

Experience told Wipeng what would happen next.

Sure enough, he was exactly right.

"Mukyung is hovering between life and death?!"

[738] A shichen is a traditional time unit of about two hours; half a shichen is about one hour.

The Lower District Sect member blinked at Jin Wikyung's roar.

"Y-yes?"

"Pung Yang! You dare kill my little brother!"

First Jin Wikyung turned a considerable injury into hovering between life and death, and now he'd pronounced Mukyung dead outright. The Lower District Sect member finally came to his senses and hurriedly opened his mouth.

"Lesser Family Head, I think there's been a terrible misunderstanding…"

"I'll tear your limbs to shreds and scatter them across the Nine Provinces!"[739]

"…"

"…"

Jin Wikyung's fury did not subside until another day had passed.

"Mukyung and Taekyung left the Mount Heng Sword Sect yesterday?"

"Yes. So please take it down a notch."

"Are they both safe?"

"If they weren't, they'd be carried here on a cart. Why would they be riding in a carriage?"

"Then…"

"You should see them around noon tomorrow."

The thought that he could finally rest filled Wipeng with relief.

Who was he, after all? He was a Peak master known by the epithet Ghost Sword. He had the skill to secure an important position wherever he went, yet choosing the wrong lord had condemned him to this grueling labor.

When was the last time I had a drink?

Today, at last, he could enjoy some roast duck and a warm cup of liquor.

A satisfied smile had just appeared around Wipeng's lips when Jin Wikyung spoke.

"Good. Then let's hurry and get ready."

"Pardon? Get ready for what?"

"My brothers overcame countless hardships and successfully completed their mission. We have to hold a welcoming ceremony."

"…And what about me? Did I spend more than half a month touring the martial world for pleasure?"

"Hm? Who? Oh, you?"

Jin Wikyung blinked at Wipeng, then burst into hearty laughter.

"Of course that includes you! Surely you didn't think I'd forgotten?"

I'd thought surely not, but this guy had definitely forgotten.

As Wipeng stared at him in disbelief, opening and closing his mouth without a word, Jin Wikyung continued.

---

[739] The Nine Provinces is a traditional expression for the lands of China.

"Ah, have your men buy some cloth from a nearby fabric shop. As large as possible."

"Cloth? Why do we suddenly need that?"

"I have something in mind."

"…And that's what happened."

I glanced around as I listened to Wipeng, who looked ten years older than the last time I'd seen him.

We had reached Sakju two days after leaving the Mount Heng Sword Sect. The city was unexpectedly packed with people, and at the entrance, a gigantic white cloth bearing black writing fluttered in the wind.

Congratulations on the safe return of Jin Mukyung, Jin Taekyung, and Hyuk Mujin!

—Everyone in the Jin Family of Taiyuan—

A groan escaped me before I knew it.

"Oh, fuck. What the hell is that…?"

I had never seen anything like it in my life.

The banner's width alone was more than twenty jang—over sixty meters.[740] Strung between the tops of two pavilions facing each other across a broad avenue, it looked as though it might even be visible from the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

Look at that unnecessarily flamboyant calligraphy.

Even overbearing parents whose child had been accepted into a prestigious university wouldn't go this far.

Jin Mukyung, Hyuk Mujin, and I stared up at the banner with our mouths hanging open as if we had planned it.

"Why is my name so small?"

I looked again to see what he meant. Sure enough, even Hyuk Mujin's name had been included in tiny letters.

"Are you disappointed that the letters are small? I'd be happy if I were you."

"It looks strange. You can barely see my name from down here."

"Want to take my name out and put yours there instead? I mean it."

Hyuk Mujin considered the offer for a moment.

"Now that I think about it, it seems fine as it is."

"Then shut up."

"Yes, sir."

[740] A jang is a traditional Korean unit of length of about 3.03 m, or 9.94 ft. Twenty jang is about 60.6 m, or 199 ft.

That was as far as our conversation got. The overbearing parent—no, Jin Wikyung—came running toward us with the brightest smile in the world.

"You rascals!"

Was he a man or a brown bear?

The giant, well over two meters[741] tall, pulled Jin Mukyung and me close with hands the size of pot lids. His brute strength was so tremendous that it would not have been strange if he had crushed us to pieces.

"I'm so glad you're safe. Really, so glad!"

We had been safe.

Right up until Jin Wikyung hugged us with all his strength.

Crack.

"Guh!"

"Mukyung!"

…He doesn't look very safe now.

The perpetrator, still embracing his victim as he trembled in pain, shouted,

"Doctor! Doctor!"

"I think we should call a doctor. He looks like he's in real pain."

Wipeng answered me wearily.

"Is this your first day dealing with him? I knew this would happen, so I called one in advance."

"Ohhh."

It was the first time Wipeng had ever seemed magnificent.

The three Jin brothers of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, including me, and Wipeng gathered together shortly after sunset.

When Jin Mukyung appeared wrapped in even thicker bandages, Jin Wikyung watched him apprehensively.

"Are you all right?"

"Would you be all right if it were you, my lord? How could you treat someone who was already injured so roughly?"

"I thought I was being gentle…"

Jin Wikyung might not have been the strongest in martial arts, but when it came to raw physical strength, he was Shanxi's Number One.

I quietly slid my chair farther away as Jin Mukyung answered with a haggard expression.

"I'm fine."

[741] Two meters is about 6 ft 7 in.

"…"

He looked anything but fine.

It was fortunate that Jin Mukyung was a Peak master. An ordinary civilian who had never learned a single martial art wouldn't have been able to walk after that.

"I heard the Second Young Master had been injured, but I didn't realize it was this severe. Even his Internal Injury hasn't fully healed…"

"Did that Pung Yang bastard really do this to you?"

Jin Mukyung calmly nodded in response to their questions.

"He was strong. Stronger than I expected."

And who was Jin Mukyung? A promising young prodigy who had drawn the attention of the entire realm. Through dazzling talent and relentless effort, he had reached the Peak realm at an early age—yet he had been defeated by a mere mounted-bandit leader.

"You mean he was truly that powerful?"

"Pung Yang… I've heard that there are some fairly skilled masters among the mounted bandits of Gaoyuan. But still…"

Their gazes suddenly turned toward me.

The silent pressure told me to stop stuffing my face with roast duck and say something.

I swallowed the food filling my mouth and opened it.

"It's true. You've heard what happened to the Great Hero known as the Tiger of Mount Heng, right? His arms and legs got wrecked too. He's been getting around in a wheelchair lately."

"What is a wheelchair?"

"Ah, a cart. A cart."

Jin Wikyung tapped the table with one thick finger.

"A master of that caliber would have been known long ago. Mukyung, is it possible that you let your guard down?"

This time, Jin Mukyung shook his head without hesitation.

"I was caught by a move I hadn't anticipated, but that cannot be an excuse. Even if we fought again, the result would be the same."

"…He was that strong?"

"He used Body-Protecting Qi. It was overwhelming."

Jin Wikyung's and Wipeng's eyes widened simultaneously.

"Body-Protecting Qi!"

"Second Young Master, is that true?"

There was no need for an answer. Jin Mukyung had no reason to tell such an obvious lie. Facing their shock, he continued.

“He was the strongest opponent I’ve ever fought. No—to be precise, I should say he became that strong.”

“Became?”

“What do you mean by that…?”

“The instant he swallowed a blood-red pill, he became terrifyingly powerful.”

At last, the conversation had reached the Temporary Strength Pill.

I tried to act as naturally as possible.

I can’t let them find out I have it.

The Temporary Strength Pill was a poisoned chalice. It was undeniably ominous and suspicious, but its tremendous effects couldn’t be ignored.

I had already decided to use it as a second-worst contingency for the worst possible moment—when I was facing death.

“It was only for a brief moment, but when he was about to take the pill, I clearly saw that one pill remained inside the wooden case…”

Jin Mukyung trailed off and looked at me.

“Did you happen to find anything on Pung Yang’s person afterward?”

“Hm? Like what?”

“A wooden case. Or the red pill I mentioned.”

I deliberately furrowed my brow.

“I’m not sure. I searched him afterward to see if he had anything, but a bunch of wooden splinters spilled out. Maybe those were pieces of the case?”

“Then the pill? The pill?”

“No idea. I was half-dead myself. How was I supposed to search through everything?”

It was a fairly convincing excuse.

It wasn’t as though only one or two people had died, and the battle had been brutally fierce. It was only natural that I’d been too exhausted to search properly. What more could he say?

“Is that so?”

“The people from the Mount Heng Sword Sect might have found it. Or it could have dissolved into one of the countless pools of blood scattered across the ground.”

“Hmm.”

Jin Mukyung stared at me with faint suspicion, but I merely shrugged.

You won’t find it even if you search, idiot.

I had tucked it safely into a corner of the greatest vault in existence—my Inventory, which only I could open and close. Neither Jin Mukyung nor the greatest thief under heaven could touch a hair of the Temporary Strength Pill.

It really is convenient.

While I marveled once more at the convenience of the System, Jin Wikyung and Wipeng began speculating about the pill's origins.

"It must be a relic of demonic, heterodox arts. I remember hearing that quite a few pills with similar effects were used during the Great Faction War."

"Northern Shanxi, including Gaoyuan, once fell into the hands of the Demonic Cult. If Pung Yang discovered some remnant they left behind, it would make sense."

I had been listening with my ears perked up when I suddenly froze.

Wait. The Demonic Cult?

The Demonic Cult was a regular fixture you could never leave out of a Murim novel, the licorice in every medicine shop, and Geum Jandi's honorary firefighter.[742]

Of course, it wasn't a religious organization devoted to world peace and helping the poor. It was more like IS—the Islamic terrorist group.

In short, they were a bunch of fanatics you had absolutely nothing to gain from getting involved with.

What if the Demonic Cult made the Temporary Strength Pill?

Pung Yang's eyes had been stained red, like a demon that had just climbed out of hell. The pill had granted him unimaginable power, even if only temporarily.

I'm starting to see the picture.

This felt wrong. Really fucking wrong!

But nothing could be gained without suffering. The side effects should be something I could endure…

"The best-known pill used by the Demonic Cult at the time was the Blood-Exploding Pill, if memory serves."

"I've only heard stories about it. Don't all the blood vessels in the user's body burst after two shichen,[743] killing them?"

"That was the price of trying to gain power through dark arts."

"If the Blood-Exploding Pill was that terrible, just how severe would the side effects of Pung Yang's pill be?"

"I don't know, but they must be beyond imagination. It wouldn't just damage his innate qi. Once the time limit ended, his body would suffer tremendous strain. In the end, the pill uses the body itself as kindling and burns it for a brief period."

I swallowed dryly. Before I knew it, my voice had jumped out.

"And after that?"

---

[742] Geum Jandi is the heroine of the Korean drama Boys Over Flowers.

[743] A shichen is a traditional time unit of about two hours; half a shichen is about one hour.

“It was made by the Demonic Cult. What else would you expect? Once the demonic qi surges into your very marrow… you’d become a murderous fiend who knows nothing but blood.”

“…A murderous fiend? The demonic qi surges into his marrow?”

“If an item like that fell into the hands of a villain, it would be a true disaster… Taekyung, what’s wrong?”

Jin Wikyung looked at me with concern. I rubbed my forehead and found it covered in beads of sweat.

“Nothing. I’m just a little hot.”

“What are you talking about? It’s snowing outside.”

“What would a Soeumin[744] know? I’m a Taeyangin.[745] That’s why…”

Damn it. I didn’t even know what I was saying anymore.

I gave the three of them an awkward smile.

“There’s something I forgot earlier.”

“…?”

“…?”

“…?”

“That pill. Now that I think about it, I have it. Heh-heh. Heh-heh-heh.”

“…!”

“…!”

“…!”

[744]Soeumin, or “lesser yin person,” is one of the four constitutional types in traditional Korean Sasang medicine.

[745]Taeyangin, or “greater yang person,” is another of the four constitutional types in Sasang medicine.

Chapter 127

It didn’t take long for the question marks to turn into exclamation points, and the exclamation points into bewilderment and rage.

Jin Mukyung was the first to break the silence.

“You…”

His face was flushed red, his breathing ragged. His fist twitched as if he wanted to plant one right in my mouth.

Well, he’s really pissed.

A chill ran through me. A dagger had flown in and lodged in my chest.

But don’t worry. I had a sturdy shield.

“Now, now, Mukyung.”

At the quiet voice, Jin Mukyung’s face twisted violently.

“Eldest brother!”

“Taekyung must have had his reasons. Isn’t that right?”

I deliberately lowered my eyes.

“No, eldest brother. I was shortsighted.”

“Hm?”

“I let my curiosity get the better of me… But after hearing what Eldest Brother said, I realized the truth. That object must never be kept—or hidden.”

I didn’t forget to make a show of trembling my fist, as if merely thinking about it made my teeth chatter with rage.

“The Demonic Cult! Just hearing the name of those vile bastards makes my teeth chatter with fury!”

That part was sincere. If they were going to make something, they should’ve made it properly. Turning the user into a deranged murderer was one hell of a design flaw.

“Good heavens.”

Jin Wikyung looked at me with eyes full of affection.

“I remember a small, adorable little boy who said he would grow up to become a chivalrous hero. You were six years old then. Do you remember?”

Of course I didn’t.

Even the year before last was already hazy. How was I supposed to know what the original owner of this body had done at age six?

Still, I nodded solemnly.

“I remember it clearly. It was my one and only dream.”

Chivalrous hero, governor of Gyeonggi Province[746]—whatever. As of this moment, that was my career aspiration at age six.

"Ha-ha. To think that little boy would grow into such a fine man."

Jin Wikyung smiled with satisfaction, then turned to the other two.

"You were there too, Wipeng. Do you remember?"

Wipeng answered without even taking a breath.

"I don't remember that, but I do remember him starting to womanize exactly ten years later. When I asked what he wanted to be when he grew up, he said he'd become the greatest ladies' man under heaven."

"A hero ought to know how to enjoy romance."

"He doesn't know squat about martial arts, so what good is knowing about romance? Is the hero you're talking about a hero of the night, a hero to courtesans, or something?"

"Be quiet. Our youngest showed unusual promise from an early age."

"So that promise… Ah, forget it. I should just keep my mouth shut."

Glug, glug.

Jin Wikyung neatly ignored Wipeng, who was pouring liquor straight from the bottle, and turned to the next man in line.

"Mukyung. Now that you understand your little brother's sincerity, let go of your anger."

Jin Mukyung, whose face was twisted into an ugly grimace, finally spoke.

"Can't I hit that bastard just once?"

"Now, now."

"Just once. Please."

At the icy voice, I quickly bowed my head.

"Please forgive this foolish little brother, Second Brother."

"You've been talking down to me this whole time, and now you're calling me 'brother'?"

"Pardon? Me?"

"That's enough. This is your final warning."

"No. Hit me instead. If that would ease your anger, this little brother will gladly endure it."

"You little shit!"

Jin Mukyung shot to his feet, only to sink back down with a gasp. The bandages wrapped around his chest were turning red. His wound must have reopened.

"Oh, no! Second Brother, are you all right?"

"This bastard, again… Guh!"

[746] In Korean, the phrases for "chivalrous hero" (hyeopui jisa) and "governor of Gyeonggi Province" (Gyeonggi-do jisa) share the sound jisa.

“Doctor! Doctor!”

The drinking party descended into chaos in an instant.

Wipeng silently picked up his second bottle and muttered,

“This family is really something…”

And how something it was—the foremost family in Shanxi.

The atmosphere finally settled down after the physician had come and gone.

Ignoring Jin Mukyung’s murderous glare, I took the Temporary Strength Pill from inside my robes.

“This is it.”

The pill was entirely red, as if blood had been condensed into a single sphere.

Jin Wikyung and Wipeng examined it closely.

“Wipeng, what do you think?”

“Just looking at it, I can smell blood. It’s a vicious object.”

“Could it really have been made by the Demonic Cult?”

“I couldn’t say. If it were, we should be able to sense demonic qi… but I can’t be certain.”

“Right? There’s something different about it.”

Both of them looked extremely serious. I was just as curious about where the Temporary Strength Pill had come from and who had made it, so I decided to give them a hint.

“They called it a Temporary Strength Pill.”

“A Temporary Strength Pill?”

“Yes. I heard it directly from Pung Yang’s own mouth.”

Jin Mukyung abruptly cut in.

“Pung Yang? When?”

“While you were unconscious.”

“…Hoo. Hoo…”

No matter what anyone said, I was the sole eyewitness and witness. While Jin Mukyung steadied his breathing to calm himself after getting nowhere, the furrows between the other two men’s brows only deepened.

“A Temporary Strength Pill, Wipeng?”

“I’ve never heard the name either. If something this potent belonged to the Demonic Cult, it must have been used during the Great Faction War…”

“What if the Demonic Cult didn’t make it?”

Their gazes turned toward me.

“Not the Demonic Cult?”

"What makes you think that?"

"I'm just saying there's no need to jump to conclusions."

In truth, I had said it out of hope that I might be able to take the pill back if it hadn't been made by the Demonic Cult.

Of course, I had another thought as well.

The Head Elder.

On the surface, the enemy in the last battle had clearly been the Mount Heng Sword Sect. But the true enemy had been the Head Elder himself.

Rather than making a simple either-or assumption, I believed we always had to keep open the possibility that there might be a third faction involved.

"Well, it just suddenly occurred to me."

After hearing me out, the other two men's expressions grew strange. Then, in the next moment, a very quiet voice escaped Wipeng's lips.

It was a single word that slipped out unconsciously, like a groan.

"Dark Heaven…"

"Wipeng."

Jin Wikyung's sharp gaze cut off whatever he had been about to say.

"Ah, I apologize. I misspoke."

Wipeng hurriedly tried to cover it up.

But it was already too late.

The two words Dark Heaven had been deeply etched into my mind.

Dark Heaven? What's that?

Then something unexpected happened.

Ding.

SYSTEM

You have obtained a small amount of information about Dark Heaven.
The item description for the Temporary Strength Pill will be updated.

The System notification had come out of nowhere. I held out my hand toward Wipeng, who was holding the Temporary Strength Pill.

"May I take a quick look?"

"Of course."

Item check.

The moment I muttered the command in my head, the information on the Temporary Strength Pill appeared.

The change was easy to spot.

The phrase Someone Unknown had disappeared, replaced by the unfamiliar term Dark Heaven.

Judging by the context, it's definitely some kind of organization…

Well, anyone capable of making something like the Temporary Strength Pill was bound to be no better than the Demonic Cult. Same rotten lot, different name.

Dark Heaven.

Whoever had named them had one hell of a gift. Those two words alone announced that they were shady bastards.

These fuckers definitely have something rotten going on behind the scenes. I'm ninety-nine percent sure.

Jin Wikyung and Wipeng seem to know something.

The problem was that, judging by their reactions, they were extremely reluctant to reveal anything about Dark Heaven.

Should I poke at them once?

But before I could open my mouth, Jin Mukyung beat me to it.

"Dark Heaven? What is that?"

"Well…"

A troubled look crossed Jin Wikyung's face.

"I'm sorry. I can't tell you yet."

Those words came from a man who cared deeply for his younger brothers.

If even Jin Wikyung refused to speak, there was no point asking Wipeng.

[747] A shichen is a traditional Chinese time unit of approximately two hours.

"I apologize, Young Masters, but I cannot tell you until the matter becomes clearer."

His attitude was firmer than I had ever seen it. Jin Mukyung and I both realized that we had to withdraw for today.

But the more they tried to hide it, the more curious I became about Dark Heaven.

So it's a secret they have to keep even from us.

Setting aside the fact that Mukyung and I were direct descendants, we were both core masters of the Jin Family of Taiyuan. If Wipeng was Jin Wikyung's right arm, either of us could more than qualify as his left arm—or at least one of his legs.

Then it must be top-secret information known only to those two, even within the family.

I was only human, so I couldn't help being curious. The fact that the System had reacted this time, despite remaining silent during the Mount Heng Sword Sect incident, also played a part.

Dark Heaven. The Temporary Strength Pill. A top-secret matter known only to Jin Wikyung and Wipeng.

Several keywords flashed through my mind.

All right. I'd made up my mind.

I'll ignore it and go on living.

Too much curiosity had a way of shortening your life. It had only been a few days since I'd gone to deliver the mail to the Mount Heng Sword Sect and nearly died.

A mysterious organization whose very name was ominous? If I got involved with them, it was obvious things wouldn't end well.

"Come now, let's stop talking about this and have another drink."

Jin Wikyung forced the mood back to normal.

Wipeng had already demolished two bottles by himself, and even the injured Mukyung was filling his glass. How could I be the only one to sit out? I accepted the liquor Jin Wikyung poured and downed it in one gulp.

Gulp, gulp.

The notoriously potent fire liquor burned down my throat in a rush of heat.

"Guhhh."

Wow. This was no joke.

I knew it was strong, but drinking it myself, it was far more potent than I'd expected. At this strength, soju[748] and beer couldn't even hold a candle to it.

Unlike me, who shuddered from head to toe, the other three immediately filled their empty glasses to the brim.

"Drink!"

"Pour it down!"

[748] Soju is a Korean distilled spirit commonly made from grains or starches.

“Keep going till we drop!”

“…”

It wasn’t until we had drunk through the entire night that I learned Shanxi Province was part of North China—and that every man from North China was an incredible drinker.

At noon the next day, I mounted my horse in a perfectly refreshed mood, and Hyuk Mujin stared at me as if I were a monster.

“Is your stomach all right?”

“Yeah. It’s fine.”

“Don’t tell me you were the only one who didn’t drink last night. Or did you fall asleep halfway through?”

“No. The four of us kept drinking.”

“…All of it?”

His mouth fell open.

“How is that possible? Are you even human?”

“It all went down.”

“Good heavens. How many bottles did you drink through the night?”

He had the wrong unit.

Not bottles. Barrels.

We kept emptying massive casks of liquor—the kind I’d only ever seen in pirate movies—and then emptying more.

“I think it was close to twenty barrels. I stopped counting after ten, so I’m not sure.”

“Wow. That’s incredible.”

Hyuk Mujin raised his thumb in admiration. Just then, the inn door swung open.

And three zombies—or rather, three Peak masters—emerged.

“Uuugh.”

“Urk.”

“Huff, huff.”

Pale faces, parched lips, and hollow eyes.

Every last one of them dragged his feet straight into the carriage. The martial artists of the escort force stared wide-eyed.

“Why are they suddenly getting into the carriage…?”

“They look really unwell.”

“That can’t be right. Haven’t you ever drunk with our Commander? Wipeng, the God of Drinking? Never heard of him?”

“Wasn’t the Commander’s epithet Ghost Sword?”

“Whatever else you might say, when it comes to drinking, he could probably beat even the Martial God. They’re probably just like this because all the fatigue they’ve accumulated finally caught up with them.”

As the martial artists whispered among themselves, the carriage door suddenly flew open, and one person hurriedly dashed out and bent over.

“Urrp, buuurrgh!”

Splaaarsh.

Wipeng spent a good while spewing nothing but pale liquid, then staggered back into the carriage. One of the martial artists who had been talking animatedly muttered in a dazed voice,

“…This can’t be.”

“It absolutely can. Anyone can see that’s a hangover. They drank like that all night without sleeping. Of course they’d end up like that.”

“Then why is the Third Young Master so perfectly fine?”

Every eye in the escort force turned toward me.

The smell of liquor radiating from my entire body was strong enough to send chills down the spine. But in complete contrast, my face looked unbelievably refreshed, and my breathing was calm.

“No way…”

“The Third Young Master beat the Commander? That God of Drinking?”

A buzz spread through the crowd.

Hyuk Mujin’s look of admiration had gone beyond admiration and become outright reverence.

“Ah, I knew it! That’s our Captain—the man who used to drink with courtesans every damn day!”

“…”

“I remember what the Chief Steward said. If Captain had kept drinking for three more years, he would have uprooted our family’s entire foundation. So that’s why you always had to steal from the family coffers!”

“…Hey, you punk.”

We weren’t alone. What did he think would happen to my image if he talked like that?

As if the stares pouring in from every direction hadn’t already made my face feel hot enough.

“Ahem. Ahem!”

I cleared my throat and glanced around. And what do you know? The eyes of all those rough-looking men were sparkling brighter than stars in the night sky.

“The true God of Drinking. That’s him.”

“He’s famous in Taiyuan’s red-light district. Haven’t you heard of the Night King?”

“The Night King? The epithet says it all. So he was already renowned for his drinking.”

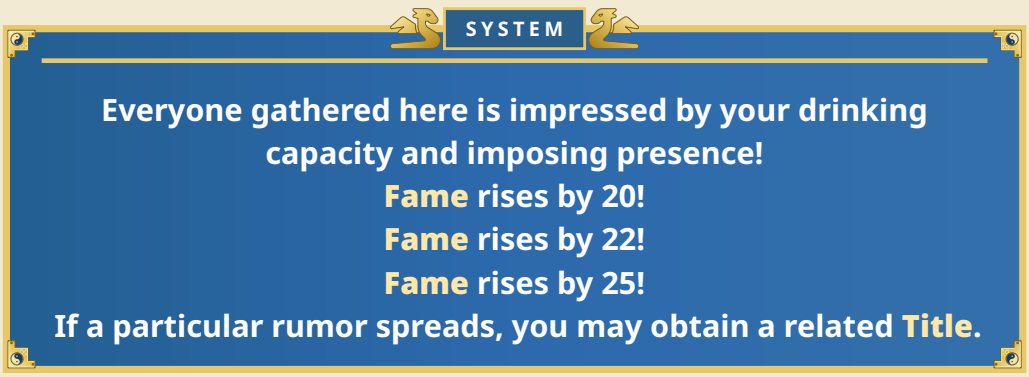
“No, not that… You know. That.”

“Gasp. Is it true?”

“How would I know? I’ve never seen it.”

“Turns out he’s a true man among men.”

Ding.



“…”

Why the fuck was my Fame shooting up?

And what was this about a related Title? No, thanks. Put it away. Please, just let me be satisfied with the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi.

Stop it, you lunatics…

I turned away in inexplicable shame—only to find Hyuk Mujin staring intently at a certain part of my body.

“…What are you doing?”

“Oh, I was just measuring it by eye.”

He answered so matter-of-factly that I was almost thrown off. Hyuk Mujin held out his forearm with an innocent smile.

“Wow. As expected, you’re amazing. Hehe.”

In return for his forearm, I offered him my fist.

Thwack!

Chapter 128

Old Man Jang woke to the sound of a commotion.

What goddamn bastards are making all that noise?

He was already sleeping less and less with age, so he wasn't happy about being woken.

Let's see what these bastards' faces look like.

Dragging his stiff body out of the thatched cottage, Old Man Jang immediately spotted a crowd gathered like clouds.

There were hundreds of them, by his rough estimate. It looked as if everything in the village with legs—human or animal—had gathered in one place.

"What's all this about?"

It was a small, unremarkable village, so he knew most of the faces.

At Old Man Jang's muttering, a market merchant he recognized greeted him.

"You're awake, sir."

"With this kind of racket, how could I stay asleep?"

"Ha-ha, please understand, sir. Everyone's gathered because they heard an important guest was coming."

Old Man Jang grunted.

"An important guest? Is the Emperor coming?"

"Oh, there you go again. Is the Emperor your friend?"

"Going by age, I'd be his father."

"You'll get arrested for treason talking like that. Can't you see the government troops over there?"

"Government troops?"

Following the merchant's nod, Old Man Jang spotted dozens of government troops and the county magistrate dressed in his official robes. His eyes narrowed.

"That fellow never showed his face when the mounted bandits were prowling around, but now he's even put on his official robes? Is this important guest some high-ranking official?"

"Not a high-ranking official, but in Shanxi Province, they're number one."

The merchant raised his thumb.

At that very moment, excited shouts erupted from the assembled crowd.

"They're coming!"

"They're here!"

Old Man Jang turned to follow everyone's gaze. When he saw fifty mounted riders galloping toward them in the distance, their flags snapping in the wind, he finally realized who the important guests were.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan.

Old Man Jang had little interest in the affairs of the world, but even he had heard the name of the Jin Family of Taiyuan until his ears rang.

A prestigious family that had maintained its lineage for three hundred years, and the hegemon that held Shanxi Province in its grasp.

As Old Man Jang watched the imposing procession, his brow suddenly furrowed.

Who was that fellow again? That… what was it? Shanxi, Shanxi… some kind of dragon?

Age had weakened his memory as well. As Old Man Jang lamented the passing years, one person caught his eye.

"Say, who's that young man?"

"Ah, that Young Hero?"

There were dozens of martial artists from the Jin Family of Taiyuan alone, all clearly visible. Yet the merchant immediately understood whom he meant.

An awl in a pocket. The young man's presence was like an awl tucked inside a pouch, bound to stand out wherever he went, so there was nothing strange about it.

"That's the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi."

Shing—

As if he had heard those words, the young man at the head of the procession drew the sword at his waist.

The transparent blade flashed in the sunlight, and a thunderous cheer erupted.

"Waaaaaah!"

"Jin Family of Taiyuan! Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi! Heaven Shaking Sword!"

"Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi! Jin Taekyung! Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi! Jin Taekyung!"

My epithet and name rang out from every direction. Even though I'd already experienced this several times over the past few days, it still filled me with pride.

Is this how idols feel?

This was that thing, wasn't it? Milky-skinned Jin Taekyung. We love you, Jin Taekyung.

An idol fan club, the kind I'd only ever seen on music variety shows, was right in front of me. Smiling contentedly, I drew the [Unnamed Sword] from my waist.

Shhhng. Flash!

Maybe it was the Ten-Thousand-Year Cold Iron brand, but nothing else came close when it came to visual effects.

"Waaaaaah!"

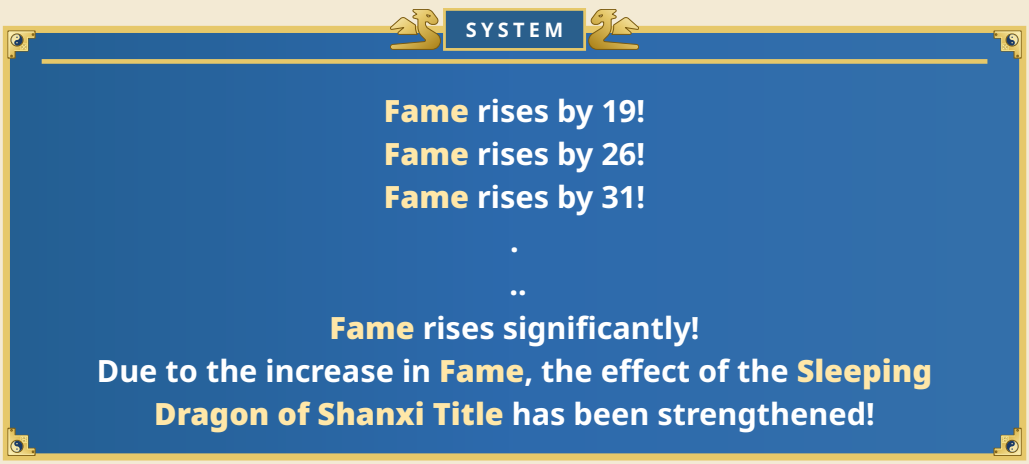
“Eeeeek! Young Master, take me!”

“Wah! Wah!”

A man for everyone, like something rated for all audiences—men and women, young and old.

That man was me.

Ding.



The Title effect has been strengthened?

That was an unexpected bonus. I opened my Status Window to check the changes.

Ding.

SYSTEM

Status Window
Lv. 61 Jin Taekyung
Class: First Rate Martial Artist
Fame: 2,100 (+250)
Titles: 4 (Title effects active)
— Returnee (All stats +10)
— Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi (All stats +15, Fame +200)
— Scion of a Prestigious Family (All stats +5, Fame +50)
— Gambler (Combat-related stats +10% in one-on-one combat)
Strength: 196 (+30)
Stamina: 195 (+30)
Agility: 192 (+30)
Intelligence: 35 (+30)
Charm: 35 (+30)
Internal Energy: 45 years
Toughness: 155 (+30)
Remaining Points: 60
— Distribute your remaining points.

The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi's Title effect had definitely changed. Before, it had granted All stats +10 and Fame +100.

So my name carries more weight now?

Titles didn't simply drop from the heavens.

In my case, rumors about me being some kind of sleeping dragon had gradually spread, and at some point, my Fame rose and I gained the Title Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi.

It seemed that a Title's effect increased as Fame rose.

My Level has already passed sixty, too.

The Status Window, which I hadn't checked in a while, had grown by leaps and bounds. My Fame had shot up, my combat-related stats were approaching 200, and I had a solid forty-five years of internal energy.

Now that's the stuff! Innkeeper!

I shuddered with exhilaration, and Hyuk Mujin, who was carrying a flag to my right, looked at me as though I were mentally ill.

"Are you really that happy?"

I deliberately put on a serious face.

"Who said I was happy? The people were enjoying themselves, so I was just livening up the mood."

"…I have a lot to say, but I won't."

"Wise choice."

As we rode amid the crowd's cheers, we pulled on the reins and slowed down.

Dozens of men had poured out into the street and blocked our path.

Among them, a fat man dressed in splendid red robes smiled broadly at me.

"Heh-heh, you're every bit as dignified and handsome as I'd heard. I've long been familiar with the great reputation of the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi."

"Ah, yes."

Confused, I asked, "But who are you?"

Hyuk Mujin hurriedly whispered, "He's the county magistrate. The county magistrate."

"What's a county magistrate?"

"What? You don't even know what a county magistrate is?"

"Is he like a village head?"

"Wow, this is driving me crazy. Just think of him as an official."

"An official. Then are the people behind him government troops?"

"…Why are you acting like you've never seen government troops before?"

"No, I just find it interesting."

In fact, I really had never seen them before.

I studied the fat man—no, the county magistrate—and his subordinates carefully.

I knew that this world had a government, official offices, and law-enforcement agencies, but this was the first time I'd actually encountered them.

How could they never show even the tips of their noses?

Violent crimes happened dozens of times a day around here, yet I had never once seen government troops drag away a criminal.

Then again, considering the authorities hadn't intervened in the Battle of Eight Spring Gorge, where roughly two thousand people had clashed, or in this latest incident involving the Red Wind Band, perhaps that was only natural.

It's not as if they're even beating up the mounted bandits who loiter around.

What exactly did these bastards do?

I was imagining that, if this were modern times, half the martial artists in the Murim would be locked in solitary confinement for murder when the county magistrate cleared his throat.

"Ahem. Ahem!"

His face flushed red as he coughed awkwardly.

He was an official of some standing, after all, and seemed offended that I had ignored him.

"Oh, I'm sorry. I injured my head a while ago, so I keep spacing out."

I'd only offered a reasonable excuse, but the county magistrate's expression finally relaxed a little.

"Ahem, no, no. You must have endured great hardship dealing with those vicious mounted bandits. Ah, I heard you killed more than five hundred of them?"

"Uh… five hundred?"

"That's right. I was overjoyed to hear the tales of valor of the two heroes, the Heaven Shaking Sword and the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi. Ha-ha."

I had no idea where that number had come from.

Even if you counted every mounted bandit who took part in the battle, there might have been three hundred at most. And by the time Jin Mukyung and I arrived, fewer than a hundred of them remained.

In reality, there was Pung Yang and maybe seventy mounted bandits who were already exhausted. Something like that.

Well, rumors were usually exaggerated.

"Come on, that's too—"

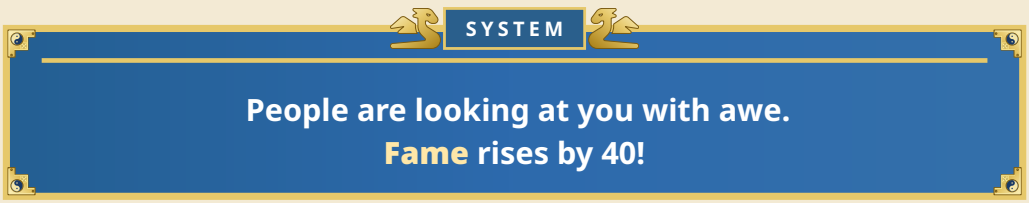
Just as I was about to tell him the truth, murmurs spread through the people who had been listening to my conversation with the county magistrate.

"Five hundred? Didn't the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi and the Heaven Shaking Sword go there alone?"

"Good heavens. The two of them defeated more than five hundred mounted bandits?"

"How can human beings be that strong?"

Ding.



"Too what, did you say?"

I continued speaking to the bewildered county magistrate.

"That's far too low. In reality, there were nearly six hundred."

"Six hundred!"

"My second brother and I took half each."

"Then three hundred each!"

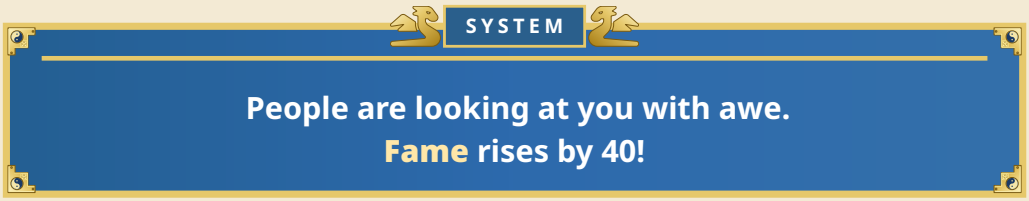
"Hmm. More precisely, about 285?"

The county magistrate—and even the government troops—gaped at me.

"Ooh!"

"Two hundred and eighty-five! He even knows the exact number!"

Ding.



This time, Hyuk Mujin whispered to me with an expression usually reserved for looking at a bug.

“Do you really want to take it this far?”

“Yep.”

“What are you going to do if you inflate your achievements for no reason and get caught lying?”

“You, Wolhwa, and the Mount Heng Sword Sect just have to keep your mouths shut. So hurry up and back me up.”

“I refuse. Hyuk Mujin may not look it, but I’ve lived a truthful life without a single shameful moment before the heavens.”

I stared at him in disbelief.

“When Jin Mukyung destroyed my pavilion, weren’t you the one who fought assassins that didn’t even exist?”

“…”

“If you have nothing to say, shut up and watch your expression. My two hundred and eighty… How many was it?”

“Two hundred and eighty-five.”

“Right. I’ll say you took care of about thirty of them. If you were born with balls, you ought to become Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion in the Jin Family of Taiyuan at least once in your life. Don’t you think?”

“…!”

Hyuk Mujin, who had lived a truthful life without a single shameful moment before the heavens, used dazzling verbal footwork to completely win over the county magistrate.

The mounted bandits, most of whom had been Second Rate or Third Rate, became First Rate masters to a man—each a Lü Bu[749] astride Red Hare.[750] Pung Yang became an invincible master who could cleave mountains and seas with a single sword strike.

From now on, I’m filtering anything that comes out of this bastard’s mouth.

He was such a skilled liar that even I found myself wondering whether it was true. If even I, the person involved, was confused, there was no hope for anyone else.

---

[749] Lü Bu was a warrior and military commander of China’s Three Kingdoms era, famed for his fighting ability.

[750] Red Hare was a celebrated horse associated with Lü Bu in the Three Kingdoms tradition.

"…and that was how Pung Yang, the absolute ruler of Gaoyuan, and the vicious Red Wind Band came to meet their end at the Mount Heng Sword Sect."

The moment Hyuk Mujin finished his bullshit—his story, I mean—sighs of disappointment rose from all around us. The county magistrate's reaction was the most enthusiastic of all.

"Whaaaat? How could such a thing happen? The Murim is truly a wondrous yet terrifying place."

Hyuk Mujin swept his gaze over the crowd with melancholy eyes.

"A martial brute like me has no fear. Ever since I took up the sword, I've lived with death as my companion. But if I have one wish…"

"One wish?"

"To die by the sword of someone strong. That is all I could ask for."

"…"

What a bumper crop of bullshit.

Suppressing the urge to smack Hyuk Mujin in the back of the head, I stepped forward.

I had already milked the Fame for all it was worth, and it wasn't rising anymore. There was no reason to keep talking to a potbellied middle-aged man.

"Sorry to interrupt, but we're in a hurry."

The county magistrate, who had been gazing at Hyuk Mujin with dazed eyes as if hypnotized, suddenly came to his senses.

"Ah, my apologies. I didn't mean for this to happen."

"Then did you have some other business?"

"Could I meet Great Hero Jin? The Lesser Family Head, I mean."

The county magistrate's gaze shifted toward the carriage behind me.

They couldn't be seen from outside, but Jin Wikyung, Jin Mukyung, and Wipeng were inside.

Because they were drunk out of their minds.

They were the losers who had been utterly crushed by me in our drinking contest over the past three days. But how could I tell him the truth? Without so much as changing my expression, I lied.

"I'm sorry, but he's currently circulating his qi, so I don't think he can see you. As you know, County Magistrate, it's quite dangerous."

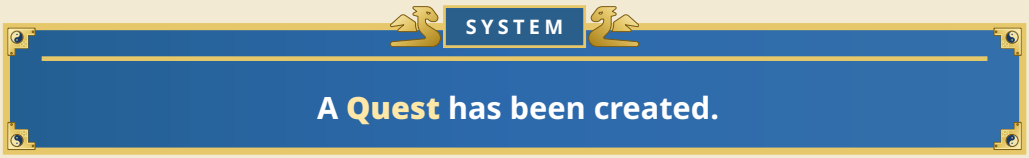
"Ah, I see. Then it can't be helped."

The county magistrate clicked his tongue, then pulled a tightly rolled piece of paper from his sleeve and handed it to me.

"What is this?"

“An invitation from the City Lord. After hearing about your recent exploits, Young Hero Jin, he seems to have been deeply impressed, so he arranged a gathering with several young prodigies.”

Ding.



Chapter 129

Ding.

SYSTEM

A Quest has been created.
Quest
The City Lord's Invitation
High renown is bound to attract attention.
The City Lord of Shanxi Province, having heard rumors about the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, invites you to a luncheon with several young prodigies tomorrow.
Grade: Third Rate
Restriction: Jin Taekyung
Objective: Attend the luncheon hosted by the City Lord (Incomplete)
Reward: Varies according to the City Lord's reaction.
Failure: The City Lord becomes extremely depressed.
Would you like to accept the Quest?
Y / N
※ If you reject the Quest, the City Lord may sulk.

The City Lord wants me?

It was certainly unexpected, but not all that surprising. Politicians often made use of other people's fame, after all.

Of course, this was a world where media had almost no reach, so personal curiosity was probably the greater factor.

But…

What do you mean, the City Lord might sulk if I reject the Quest?

What was there to sulk about? Imagining a middle-aged man with five folds under his chin sulking sent goose bumps all over my body.

"Young Hero?"

Pretending not to notice the county magistrate's puzzled expression, I scratched my chin.

Hmm. What a pain.

It was only a Third Rate Quest. The EXP and Fame I could gain would probably be minimal, and I'd have to carefully flatter the City Lord to obtain the reward.

Wouldn't I be better off spending that time practicing martial arts?

It's not like I have to come running the instant the City Lord calls.

I was on my way back after a battle in which I had nearly lost my life. I didn't particularly want to have lunch tomorrow with some middle-aged man called the City Lord whose face I had never even seen.

If I rejected the Quest, the worst that could happen was that he'd sulk. Whatever. Let him sulk all he wanted.

I was just about to turn him down as politely as possible when—

Snatch.

"We'll go. Absolutely!"

Hyuk Mujin suddenly stepped forward and grabbed the invitation. The county magistrate frowned.

"I don't believe I invited you."

His voice had turned cold. Hyuk Mujin didn't care in the slightest and flashed him a shameless smile.

"Oh my, of course not. It's just that our Young Master has always respected the City Lord so deeply that he was too moved to speak."

The county magistrate stared at me through narrowed eyes.

"Hmm. Is that true?"

Of course it wasn't.

I was about to say so when Hyuk Mujin turned his back to the county magistrate and silently mouthed at me.

You absolutely have to go?

Unlike usual, he looked strangely desperate.

I made a quick decision.

"Of course. Is there anyone in Shanxi who doesn't respect the City Lord?"

"Ha-ha, spoken like a true citizen of a Great Nation. The City Lord will be delighted to hear it."

Only then did the county magistrate's expression soften into a satisfied smile. He turned around.

"Then I'll take that as your acceptance and be on my way. Please convey my regards to the Lesser Family Head and the Heaven Shaking Sword as well."

"Ah, of course."

Ding.

The System notification rang out.

Now I can't even cancel it.

Once the county magistrate and the government troops had moved away, I pressed my foot down on Hyuk Mujin's and whispered,

"I think you have something to tell me. Don't you?"

"I'll explain. Let's get out of here first."

There were still too many eyes watching us. Amid the people's cheers, we mounted our horses again.

We continued farther into the village until we reached our destination. A little errand boy shot out like a bullet and bowed at the waist.

"Welcome—gasp."

The fifty mounted riders and the escort force's intimidating presence startled him once. Recognizing Hyuk Mujin and me startled him a second time.

He was the errand boy from the Phoenix Inn. I had seen him a few days ago.

"The private annex is fifty silver nyang a night. Right?"

"Uh, you're the one from back then?"

"Hey, you little brat. How dare you point at a guest as lofty as the heavens?"

After sternly scolding the boy, Hyuk Mujin tossed him a heavy money pouch.

The little boy glanced nervously between us, then sucked in a breath when he saw the pouch packed with silver.

"Gasp. Th-this much?"

"From this moment on, the Jin Family of Taiyuan is taking over the Phoenix Inn."

"…Are you some kind of two-knife gangster?"

Anyone watching would have thought we were members of organized crime.

The three zombies climbed out of the carriage and began frantically gulping down the broth first the moment the food arrived.

It was understandable, considering they had spent three days drinking to excess without taking a single day off. No—if they hadn't practiced martial arts, they might have died of alcohol poisoning on the first day.

"Guhhh, I feel alive again."

The instant Jin Wikyung leaned back in his chair after finishing his hangover cure, Wipeng's nagging flew at him.

"My lord, please maintain your dignity. Your dignity."

"What does it matter? We're the only ones here."

"Even so, what will your subordinates think if you keep letting them see you like this?"

"It's fine. I didn't throw up."

That single sentence silenced Wipeng. Jin Wikyung then turned to me.

“So, the county magistrate came by?”

“Yes. He said the City Lord was inviting me to a luncheon tomorrow.”

“The City Lord?”

“I don’t know why, but he seemed interested in me. I was planning to reject it, but some thoughtless idiot accepted it without hesitation.”

“Did he? Who on earth would do that?”

Hyuk Mujin, who had been sitting in the corner of the table and nervously watching our expressions, answered in a tiny voice.

“That would be me, Lesser Family Head.”

“Ah, I see. You’re the fellow they call our youngest brother’s right-hand man. The one who served at the Gate Guard Pavilion until recently. Your name was… Hyuk Mujin, wasn’t it?”

Compared to the modern world, the Jin Family of Taiyuan was a conglomerate, while Jin Wikyung was the chairman’s eldest son and the actual head of the company.

Assistant Manager Hyuk, who had spent every day getting bullied by his foul-tempered boss, answered in a deeply moved voice.

“Ah, thank you for remembering me.”

“I should be thanking you. Our youngest brother still has some rough edges, so keep helping him as you did today.”

“A-as you command!”

“Ha-ha. It’s good to see such spirit.”

Jin Wikyung laughed cheerfully, then turned back to me.

“Accepting the City Lord’s invitation was absolutely the right thing to do.”

“Really? From what I’ve experienced so far, he doesn’t seem to have much to do with the Murim.”

“For a long time, the government and the Murim have maintained a relationship of noninterference. Do you know that?”

“Yes, more or less.”

I had learned about the Murim through novels. The common conventions of martial-arts fiction weren’t all that different from how things worked here.

“They recognize each other’s domains, but nothing good can come from offending the government. The Murim is only one part of the world. The world itself is not the Murim.”

Jin Wikyung pointed to the bowl in front of him. It was half-filled with broth and contained one large chunk of meat.

“Do you understand what I mean?”

I nodded.

The bowl was the world, and the chunk of meat inside it was the Murim.

“We are martial artists, but it is the Emperor who rules the world. Among the people, the authority of the Son of Heaven is absolute. The City Lords govern their respective provinces under the Emperor’s command, so they possess considerable power and authority.”

“More than the Jin Family of Taiyuan?”

“In terms of authority alone, yes. We simply acknowledge and respect each other’s power. Murim sects sometimes maintain public order where the government cannot, and they also send martial arts instructors to train government troops. The government provides assistance in return. The two sides help each other.”

So the government and the Murim were like the crocodile and the crocodile bird.

After thinking for a moment, I voiced the question that had been nagging at me since earlier.

“Then why does the government sit back and do nothing when mounted bandits run wild or large-scale battles break out between sects? I can understand staying out of the last war because it was a matter between martial artists, but the mounted bandits are different, aren’t they?”

Even Lee Cheonbaek had massacred everyone at the Sakju Branch and committed the insane act of killing children, but the victims had belonged to the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

Strictly speaking, they could be considered people who had been sacrificed to the gratitude and grudges between Murim sects.

But the mounted bandits killed indiscriminately and burned everything in their path without any of that, didn’t they?

To mounted bandits, commoners are easy prey.

Weak before the strong and strong before the weak. That was what mounted bandits were.

The important point was that I had encountered dozens of mounted bandits on the way to the Mount Heng Sword Sect, yet I hadn’t even seen a government soldier.

“That’s…”

Jin Wikyung let his voice trail off. Jin Mukyung, who had been silently inhaling his food until then, suddenly blurted,

“Because the City Lord is incompetent. No, in this case, is the Emperor incompetent?”

The moment he finished speaking, Hyuk Mujin had a fit, while Jin Wikyung and Wipeng deliberately hardened their expressions.

“Hey, Mukyung.”

“It’s just us here. No one can overhear us. Besides, I didn’t say anything untrue.”

“Second Young Master, our family does not yet stand alongside the Nine Sects and One Gang or the Five Great Families. Please refrain from saying anything that could cause trouble.”

I asked Jin Mukyung, who reluctantly nodded.

“What do you mean, the City Lord is incompetent?”

“Do you not know what the word incompetent means?”

“Should I report you to the authorities for insulting the Emperor?”

“Treason gets at least three clans[751] punished. Congratulations, little brother.”

This bastard Jin Mukyung has gotten pretty good with words.

“Do you know who the current City Lord is?”

“Kim Chunbae?”

“…If you don’t know, just say you don’t know.”

He looked at me as if I were a bug, then continued.

“The current City Lord of Shanxi has the surname Zhu.”

“So?”

“What do you mean, so? He’s a member of the imperial family. The imperial family!”

“Oh, really?”

Apparently, this was a Zhu dynasty. In the span of a moment, I had been branded an ignorant fool who didn’t even know the Emperor’s surname.

Still, it wasn’t as if this sort of thing had only happened once or twice. I wasn’t even embarrassed anymore.

“Fine, I get it. Keep going.”

Jin Mukyung let out a deep sigh and continued.

“The current City Lord is the Emperor’s youngest brother, and his imperial title is Prince. As a direct member of the imperial family, he stands on a different level from the other City Lords. He’s someone whose invitation we must accept, even if we have to force ourselves, if only to preserve his dignity.”

“Oh.”

He really was on a different level. Not just an ordinary City Lord, but the Emperor’s brother. An actual king, no less.

Born the son of the Son of Heaven and then becoming the younger brother of the Son of Heaven, he hadn’t merely been born with a silver spoon in his mouth. His spoon was made of vibranium.

He was the modern North Korean nuclear spoon[752]—and then some.

“Then how can someone who’s practically a king be so incompetent? One letter to his brother should get him all the support he needs from above. Are they on bad terms?”

---

[751] “Three clans” refers to a form of collective punishment that could extend a person’s sentence to their relatives.

[752] Korean “spoon” slang describes the social standing someone inherits at birth. A “nuclear spoon” suggests a status beyond even a gold spoon; the comparison invokes North Korea’s ruling family.

“Who knows? I don’t know the details of that family’s affairs, but I doubt they’re particularly close. There are rumors that the current Emperor assassinated the Crown Prince, his immediately older brother, before ascending the throne.”

“Talk about a hunger for power.”

“People kill over a single dumpling. Imagine what they’d do for the imperial throne.”

Jin Wikyung and Wipeng’s mouths fell open, while Hyuk Mujin had another fit.

“Your Honor, I didn’t hear anything. I truly know nothing. In fact, I haven’t been able to hear for a long time…”

As Hyuk Mujin muttered like a madman, Jin Mukyung smacked him across the back of the head. I asked,

“Does he not get any support because he’s on bad terms with the Emperor? Or is he simply lost in wine and women?”

“Wine? Women?”

Jin Mukyung gave another short laugh.

“He’s only ten years old. It’s too early for him to lose himself in wine and women.”

“What, ten? You mean a ten-year-old is the City Lord?”

“He’s a direct member of the imperial family. With his bloodline, he could become far more than a City Lord.”

The System message I’d seen earlier suddenly came to mind.

> ※ If you reject the Quest, the City Lord may sulk.

I had thought it was ridiculous for a middle-aged man to act so childish, but now that I knew he was a ten-year-old boy, it finally made sense.

Wasn’t that the age when even a falling leaf could make you sulk?

“What’s even more amusing is that he was first appointed City Lord five years ago.”

“…Five years old? That’s insane.”

What could a five-year-old possibly know? I could roughly guess why the public order in Shanxi Province had become such a mess. I also understood why Jin Mukyung had said that the Emperor, rather than the City Lord, was more incompetent.

This wasn’t some neighborhood corner store. They had put a child in a position that demanded ability and responsibility. There was no way things could run properly.

“How do you know all this?”

I asked because it was surprising that Jin Mukyung, who had been obsessed with martial arts and nothing else, was so well-informed about current affairs.

His answer was unexpected.

“Because I’ve met him before. More accurately, I was summoned.”

“Oh, really?”

“Three years ago.”

Well, if I was the rising super rookie of the moment, Jin Mukyung was already an established Peak master. It made sense that he would have been invited before me.

“What was he like?”

Jin Mukyung looked at me with a strange glint in his eyes.

Then, wearing an ominous expression that mixed laughter with irritation, he spoke.

“It was fucking awful.”

Chapter 130

Winter in the borderlands was harsh. A middle-aged man shivered violently as the knife-sharp wind cut through his collar.

“Ugh, it’s cold as hell.”

The man, Seokchil, was a porter for the Seongun Escort Bureau in southern Shanxi Province.

He had spent more than a day and a half hauling a cart loaded with over a hundred geun[753] of cargo, soaking his entire body in sweat. Whenever he took a brief rest, as he was now, he had to fight against the brutal cold.

“Hyung,[754] leave the cart and hurry over. Come warm yourself by the fire before you freeze to death.”

A fellow porter, already crouched in front of the campfire, called out. Seokchil answered gruffly as he walked over.

“Brat, I have five mouths to feed. I’ve got a long way to go before I can die.”

“True. You can’t die with a fox of a wife and rabbit-like children waiting for you.”

“What fox? She’s a bear. A bear.”

“Were those your last words? If your wife hears you, she’ll wring your neck.”

“You can curse the king behind his back. Didn’t you know?”

Seokchil moved closer to the campfire.

They used horse manure for firewood, so a foul smell spread in every direction. But after nearly twenty years as a porter, Seokchil was as used to it as he was to the smell of cooking rice.

“Ah, now I feel alive again.”

“But Hyung,[755] aren’t you being a little stingy?”

“Huh? What nonsense are you talking about now?”

His fellow porter grinned and jerked his chin toward something.

“You should bring the rookie over, too. Where’s the sense in rushing over here to save yourself alone?”

Seokchil, who had been warming his frozen hands, turned his head. At the end of his gaze sat a young man on a snow-covered rock, staring blankly into space.

That kid’s doing it again.

The young man was a new porter they had picked up in Henan. According to Escort Chief Song, who was in charge of this escort run, the young man seemed capable enough to earn his keep, so they had taken him on.

Well, we’re always short on people.

---

[753] A Korean geun is 600 g, or about 1.32 lb. A hundred geun is 60 kg, or about 132 lb.

[754] Hyung is a familiar Korean form of address used by a man for an older brother or older man.

[755] Hyung is a familiar Korean form of address used by a man for an older brother or older man.

The problem was that no one could tell what the young man was thinking. He often sat there in a daze, just as he was doing now.

As Seokchil clicked his tongue, his fellow porter asked,

“Why? Is he a little strange?”

“He does his work well. He’s surprisingly strong for someone who doesn’t look like much.”

“Then what’s the problem?”

“What do you mean, what’s the problem? It’s frustrating to see a young fellow sitting around like that day after day. Back when I was his age…”

“You want to say you dreamed of making your mark on the world and worked hard every day?”

“Of course. A man should know how to set a grand goal and move toward it.”

“I assume that grand goal wasn’t becoming the greatest porter under heaven.”

“You little—”

At Seokchil’s furious reaction, his fellow porter quickly changed the subject.

“By the way, what’s that fellow’s name?”

“Cheongpung.”

“Now that’s a fine name. Suits him, too.”

“That’s true.”

Seokchil secretly disliked the young man, Cheongpung, but he had to agree completely.

Something about the young man’s open, pleasant features and clear eyes put people strangely at ease and soothed their anger.

“Hey, rookie!”

At his fellow porter’s shout, Cheongpung turned his head.

“Me?”

“Who else would I be talking to? Come over here and warm yourself by the fire. If you keep sitting there, your butt will get ripped right off.”

“An experience like that wouldn’t be bad.”

“An experience? What experience?”

“The experience of having my butt ripped off. I’ve never had that happen before.”

His fellow porter was silent for a moment before whispering to Seokchil,

“What kind of guy is he?”

“I don’t know. The kid’s a little strange. Maybe he ate something bad.”

Cheongpung tilted his head.

“I ate two dumplings this morning.”

“…Sharp ears, huh? Fine, just come sit down.”

“Should I?”

Cheongpung trudged over and sat down in front of the fire. The usual questions immediately began flying at him.

“Where are you from?”

“Henan.”

“So you’re from Henan.”

“I was in Hubei a month ago.”

“Hmm. Hubei’s nice, too.”

“Before that…”

The porter turned to Seokchil.

“This guy’s unbelievable.”

“Right? Talking to him makes me feel like I’m going strange, too.”

“How have you put up with him beside you for over a month?”

“That’s why I stopped talking to him lately. Has it been about three days since our last conversation?”

Cheongpung answered with a serious expression.

“Four days and three shichen.[756]”

“…”

“…”

The two men barely suppressed the urge to smack him over the head.

“So where are you from?”

“I lived in the mountains.”

“That’s not what I meant… No, never mind. Thank you for answering that, at least.”

“You’re welcome.”

Strangely, Cheongpung’s bright smile made their anger subside.

His unpredictable, bizarre remarks were paired with an innocent smile like a child’s. Their curiosity about this strange young man, unlike anyone they had ever seen, continued to grow.

“But you said you lived in the mountains?”

“Just like it sounds. I grew crops and gathered medicinal herbs there from the time I was young. I did all sorts of other things, too.”

The two men jumped to the conclusion that Cheongpung was from a slash-and-burn farming community.

Most slash-and-burn farmers went into the mountains to escape the cruelty of vicious landlords or to avoid the authorities after committing one crime or another.

“You must have had a hard life.”

---

[756] A shichen is a traditional time unit of approximately two hours; three shichen are about six hours.

“But I had fun.”

“Oh, really?”

Could life as a slash-and-burn farmer really be fun? The thought briefly crossed Seokchil’s mind, but he saw no reason to ask.

“Then what made you come down from the mountain?”

“Life there got boring. I wanted to see the world, and there were people I wanted to meet.”

“So that’s why you came to Henan.”

“Yes. It turned out to be a wasted trip, but… things aren’t bad now, either. This escort work is pretty interesting, too.”

“You find escort work interesting?”

Cheongpung answered with a broad smile.

“Watching people is interesting. Looking at the land and the sky is interesting, too. Thinking is fun.”

To Seokchil, who had spent so many years as a porter, they were all sights he was sick to death of.

People worn down by exhaustion and worries about making a living. Damp earth and knife-sharp winds blowing like mad. The only thought filling his head was how much he would be paid for this escort run.

Well, he’s still young. That’s why he can say things like that.

Besides, he had lived in the mountains all his life and came from a slash-and-burn farming community. His attitude was understandable.

Wouldn’t he learn about the harsh realities of life soon enough and gradually become just like Seokchil as he grew older?

I used to be like that, too.

Seokchil looked at Cheongpung with a mixture of envy and pity before opening his mouth.

“Just listen to this as nonsense.”

He knew he was meddling where he wasn’t wanted, but he wanted to tell this innocent young man about the realities of life.

Wasn’t his life too promising to start as a porter and grow old and die as one?

“Anything seems worthwhile for a while. But after ten or twenty years, you stop seeing much of a future ahead of you. No matter how hard a porter works or how talented he is, he’s still a porter. You should learn even Third Rate martial arts at a local martial arts academy and start working as an escort. You’d be much better off.”

Cheongpung blinked.

“Oh, really?”

“Not ‘oh, really?‘ I’m telling you to do it. You’re a little old to start learning martial arts, but who knows? Maybe you have exceptional martial talent and could become a successful First Rate master.”

“A First Rate master…”

His fellow porter, who had been listening quietly, clicked his tongue.

“Isn’t that giving him too much false hope? A First Rate master isn’t some dog’s name.”

“I’m speaking hypothetically. What kind of sense does it make for someone his age to be satisfied with being a porter?”

“Well, you’re right about that. If I were ten years younger, I wouldn’t be doing this either.”

“See?”

Seokchil patted Cheongpung on the shoulder.

“You heard him, right? Save carefully for a year or two and enroll in a martial arts academy. It’ll be much better for you. Until then, I’ll teach you everything I know.”

Cheongpung tilted his head.

“A year or two?”

“What? Is that too long? You don’t know how the world works, so I suppose you don’t realize how expensive martial arts academy fees are. Even with the lowest estimate, it’ll take at least a year…”

“No, because I’m going to quit before then.”

“You’re quitting? When?”

“Now.”

“Huh?”

“What?”

Cheongpung smiled brightly.

“I don’t know the way to Shanxi Province. There happened to be an escort run heading to Shanxi, so I asked them to let me tag along.”

“…And?”

“We’ll reach Taiyuan after one more day, so I was planning to part ways around then.”

Seokchil and the other porter exchanged baffled looks.

“What the hell? Didn’t Escort Chief Song say he signed a one-year contract?”

“That’s what I heard, too. That’s why they assigned him to you, the most experienced porter, so he could learn from you.”

With a confused expression, Seokchil asked Cheongpung,

“When you joined us in Henan, you signed something, didn’t you?”

“Oh, yes.”

“If you have it, show it to me.”

Cheongpung pulled a yellowish bamboo slip from inside his clothes and showed it to them.

It was a contract stating that he would work as a porter for the Seongun Escort Bureau for one year and pay a penalty if he left before then.

“You can read, right?”

“I finished the Four Books and Three Classics when I was four.[757]”

“Don’t say stupid things like that. Read this part. Yes, that section. Read it aloud, and make sure I can hear you.”

Cheongpung read the section Seokchil indicated in a crisp voice.

“Once signed, this contract cannot be revoked. In the event of unauthorized departure, the signer shall pay a penalty of fifty silver nyang[758] or provide compensation of equivalent value.”

“You know how much fifty silver nyang[759] is, right? Do you know what ‘compensation of equivalent value’ means?”

Cheongpung thought deeply for a moment, then slapped his forehead.

“Does it mean I’d have to work it off?”

“That’s right, you idiot. Did you think the Escort Bureau was full of nothing but kindhearted saints?”

Seokchil’s blood pressure shot up, making the back of his neck throb. He wanted to crack open the top of the kid’s skull and see what was inside.

How can someone like this even exist? Is it because he only ever lived in the mountains?

The dangers of transporting goods across the land were beyond imagination. Mounted bandits, river bandits, mountain bandits, every kind of bandit gang imaginable, not to mention interference from competing Escort Bureaus.

Even if they overcame every one of those obstacles, a single natural disaster could doom an escort run.

An Escort Bureau was every bit as thorough and hard-edged as most Murim sects, if not more so.

And this kid signed the contract, then says what? “I’m leaving around here”?

The young fool in front of him knew far too little about the world.

Seokchil spoke, determined to keep the boy from throwing his life away.

“I’m telling you this just in case, so give up any thoughts of running away. Work for a year and think of it as earning money. Understand?”

“A year is too long. I think I can work through tomorrow, though.”

---

[757] The Four Books and Three Classics are foundational Confucian texts.

[758] A nyang is a historical unit of silver currency, not modern Korean won. Fifty silver nyang is the contract’s stated penalty.

[759] A nyang is a historical unit of silver currency, not modern Korean won. Fifty silver nyang is the contract’s stated penalty.

"You little bastard!"

"Hyung,[760] Hyung,[761] calm down! If Escort Chief Song happens to see this, we'll all be in trouble."

"Let go! I said let go!"

It was just then, as Seokchil was about to snap.

"Uh, wouldn't this be enough to cover the penalty?"

Clink.

The two men's eyes widened at what Cheongpung held out.

The object was shaped like a horse's hoof and gleamed with a silver light whiter than the snow.

"S-silver yuanbao?[762]"

"And there are two of them!"

Two silver yuanbao,[763] each worth fifty silver nyang.[764]

A hundred silver nyang[765] was an enormous sum that an ordinary porter would struggle to earn even after working himself to the bone for ten years.

And yet such a fortune had come from the clothes of a young man from a slash-and-burn farming community.

"H-how…?"

"I was given some traveling money when I left home."

Both men's mouths fell open at Cheongpung's innocent reply.

What kind of family gave their son a hundred silver nyang[766] as traveling money? And judging from the money pouch hanging limp like a bull's testicles, this didn't seem to be all he had.

"At least it looks like this should cover the penalty…"

The two men nodded frantically.

"It can. Of course it can."

"Why did you suddenly start speaking formally?"

"It's just more comfortable this way."

"Exactly. It's the most comfortable thing in the world."

"Oh. If that's what you prefer."

---

[760] Hyung is a familiar Korean form of address used by a man for an older brother or older man.

[761] Hyung is a familiar Korean form of address used by a man for an older brother or older man.

[762] A yuanbao is an ingot of precious metal used as currency. Each of these silver ingots is worth fifty silver nyang.

[763] A yuanbao is an ingot of precious metal used as currency. Each of these silver ingots is worth fifty silver nyang.

[764] A nyang is a historical unit of silver currency, not modern Korean won. Fifty silver nyang is the contract's stated penalty.

[765] A hundred silver nyang is twice the contract's stated penalty.

[766] A hundred silver nyang is twice the contract's stated penalty.

Cheongpung looked at the two men as if they were strange and handed over the two silver yuanbao.[767]

“I’ll be going, then. Please tell them this is the penalty.”

“A-are you giving us both?”

“It’s too much…”

“If there’s anything left over, you two can split it. I don’t really know how to spend money. Buy yourselves some warm clothes. Something with expensive fur.”

“…!”

As Cheongpung slung a bundle over his shoulder and prepared to leave, Seokchil hurriedly called after him.

“C-could I ask your name?”

“Cheongpung. Until half a month ago, I was from Henan. Last month, I lived in Hubei, and before that, I was in Shaanxi.”

With that, Cheongpung strode off toward Taiyuan.

The sky was blue, and early shoots were already sprouting from the damp earth.

“Maybe spring will come a little early this year.”

He smiled brightly as he thought about it. He hoped the plum blossoms would bloom in profusion again this spring.

Then, without warning, he thought of Lotus Peak on Huashan, from which he had secretly run away not long ago.

[767] A yuanbao is an ingot of precious metal used as currency. Each of these silver ingots is worth fifty silver nyang.

Chapter 131

"Fresh-killed pork, twenty coins per geun[768]! Cheap, cheap!"

"Oh my, that ring looks perfect on you. It's normally one silver nyang, but since your fingers are so pretty, I'll let you have it for half a nyang. What do you say?"

"As for this pill, just one will clear your mind and fill you with strength…"

The streets were packed with endless rows of stalls and the booming cries of merchants.

When I saw the crowded streets of Taiyuan, I clicked my tongue in amazement.

There are a hell of a lot of people.

There was quite a variety among them, too. There were not only street vendors, but also quack medicine sellers, people dressed in smooth silk, and beggars whose poverty practically poured off them.

Martial artists with swords at their waists were also a common sight, but no one paid them any particular attention. Everyone simply went about their business.

So this is the capital of Shanxi Province.

Shanxi Province had dozens of counties and towns, but Taiyuan held a special place among them.

Thanks to its many advantages, it had once served as the capital of a dynasty in the distant past.

That dynasty had fallen long ago, of course, but Taiyuan had continued to develop afterward…

Or so Hyuk Mujin had told me.

That must be why the Jin Family of Taiyuan has managed to survive for three hundred years.

Abundant supplies and manpower. And economic power.

Come to think of it, even after one worthless son raided the family coffers and blew it all at a pleasure house, they still had enough left to wage war against the Mount Heng Sword Sect.

If they had been the Jin Family of Mount Heng instead of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, they would have gone bankrupt and ended up on the streets long ago.

You can't pass through Taiyuan without setting foot on the Jin Family of Taiyuan's land.

As I recalled the saying, Hyuk Mujin asked, "What are you thinking about so hard?"

"Just that land speculation really pays off."

"What?"

[768] A geun is a Korean unit of weight equal to 600 g, or about 1.32 lb.

"It's nothing. You…"

"Don't need to know?"

"You catch on fast."

"I'm getting tired of hearing that."

"Yeah, I'm getting tired of you, too."

"Then why did you bring me?"

"Let's get the facts straight. I didn't bring you. Eldest Brother assigned you to me."

Jin Wikyung had sent me ahead to prepare for tomorrow's luncheon with Shanxi's City Lord. The City Lord was a temperamental child, so Wikyung probably wanted us to accommodate him as much as possible and avoid any trouble.

In any case, that was why Hyuk Mujin was traveling with me. As a native of Taiyuan, he was an ideal attendant in many ways.

"Come to think of it, isn't this your hometown?"

"My hometown… Yes, it is."

Hyuk Mujin stared at the streets with a complicated look in his eyes.

"It's only been five years, but so much has changed."

"You must've stopped by a few times in between."

"No. I haven't been back once."

His unexpected answer caught me by surprise.

"Not even once in five years?"

"I started learning martial arts rather late. If I wanted to catch up with everyone else, I had no choice but to work ten or twenty times harder."

"Hmm."

"I never thought I'd come back like this."

It was the first time in a long while—no, almost the first time ever—that I had seen him look so serious.

Come to think of it, Hyuk Mujin might fool around constantly, but he was still a capable First Rate master. He only seemed unimpressive because he was surrounded by monsters. His realm was by no means low.

He could never have reached it without working himself to the bone. And on top of that…

He seems to have some talent, too.

His rapidly rising Level was proof enough.

At this rate, is he going to become a Peak master before I know it?

Despite my newly appreciative gaze, Hyuk Mujin was too absorbed in the emotions of returning to his hometown after so long.

“Ah, that auntie is still here.”

His voice was happy, yet wistful.

He pointed to a gray-streaked middle-aged woman selling all kinds of snacks from a small stall.

“Do you like candied hawthorn skewers[769]?”

Normally, I would have told him to stop talking nonsense and keep moving, but the mood was unusual. I answered as kindly as I could.

“I’ve never had one in my life.”

“When I was little, I wanted them so badly. Whenever I crouched in front of her stall and sucked on my fingers, that auntie would give me one or two.”

Hyuk Mujin continued with a bitter smile.

“You have no idea how jealous I was of the other children. They’d come holding their parents’ hands, buy candied hawthorn[770] and sweets, and wander around the market… I can still picture it.”

What was I supposed to do with this mood?

I had figured there must be a story behind him, but I hadn’t expected it to take this turn.

I should’ve known when he said he hadn’t come back in five years.

There were an unusually large number of orphans in the Murim. Even looking around us, it was easy to find children wandering through the market in filthy rags.

He must have been in a similar situation.

With no family, he had no reason to return. Coming back would only stir up painful memories of lingering outside the stall as a child, longing for candied hawthorn[771].

Maybe that was why he had tried to forget his pain through training.

For him, the Jin Family of Taiyuan had been home, and his companions had been his family.

And without knowing any of that… I’ve been treating him far too harshly.

Damn it. The tip of my nose was starting to sting for no reason.

Hyuk Mujin immediately noticed the change in me.

---

[769] Candied hawthorn skewers are a traditional snack made by coating skewered fruit in hardened sugar.

[770] Candied hawthorn skewers are a traditional snack made by coating skewered fruit in hardened sugar.

[771] Candied hawthorn skewers are a traditional snack made by coating skewered fruit in hardened sugar.

"What's wrong?"

"No, it's nothing. Maybe the fine dust is especially bad today. My nose feels itchy."

"Fine dust?"

"Never mind that. Why don't we get a candied hawthorn skewer[772] each?"

"Wouldn't it be better to find an inn first? If we don't get a room before the sun goes down, there may not be any left."

"Hey, how long does it take to eat one of those? They're not even that expensive. We were given plenty of travel expenses, weren't we?"

"That's true."

"Let's eat whatever we want and have all the fun we can before we leave. You can pay that auntie back for the treats she gave you by giving her plenty of business."

"I'm not sure we should spend money meant for necessities like this…"

"Spend it. Spend all of it. If anyone complains later, bring them to me."

"What if the Second Young Master complains?"

"…Bring me anyone except him."

Hyuk Mujin let out a short laugh before speaking in a much brighter voice.

"Then shall we get a skewer each?"

"Sure. I've been looking at them for a while, and they're making my mouth water."

I said it entirely for Hyuk Mujin's benefit. I was almost thirty. Why would fruit candy make my mouth water?

As long as it cheers him up.

That guy had suffered plenty while following me around. He was constantly berated and beaten, and every time we took on a Quest, we ended up meeting nothing but monsters. He had come close to dying more than once.

My first meeting with Hyuk Mujin had certainly been an ill-fated one, but that was no longer true.

"Hey, Mujin."

Hyuk Mujin, who had just started walking toward the stall, stopped short.

"Yes? What is it?"

"Well…"

The words I'm counting on you from here on out hovered on the tip of my tongue. Damn it. That was much too sappy for two grown men to say to each other.

After agonizing over it, I blurted out something completely different.

"Let's get two each. The big ones."

"Oh. Yes."

[772] Candied hawthorn skewers are a traditional snack made by coating skewered fruit in hardened sugar.

Too embarrassed to look at him, I gazed off at a distant mountain. Hyuk Mujin's conversation with the middle-aged woman drifted to my ears.

"Oh my! Aren't you Mujin? Hyuk Mujin, right?"

"It's been a long time, Auntie."

"My goodness, it is you. It is! I almost didn't recognize you, child."

"You haven't changed at all, Auntie."

"Ho-ho-ho. That's kind of you to say. Have you been well, Mujin? I heard you became a martial artist."

"Yes. I belong to the Jin Family of Taiyuan. I'll be promoted to Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion soon."

"T-the Jin Family of Taiyuan? Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion? My goodness, my goodness…"

Whether he would actually be promoted remained to be seen, but their conversation brought a pleased smile to my face.

This sounds like a radio call-in story.

A kindhearted auntie who used to give candied hawthorn[773] to an orphan boy who lingered around her stall. After a childhood of hardship and years of grueling effort, the boy finally found success and returned as a strapping young man.

It was a story I had heard somewhere before, but that didn't make it any less moving.

"Ahem. What is this? Did something get in my eye?"

Was it yellow dust[774] or fine dust? They couldn't have built any factories yet, so it must have been yellow dust[775].

That was when the rims of my eyes reddened slightly despite myself.

"So, have you gone to see your parents?"

"Not yet. I was thinking of stopping by today or tomorrow."

"Go see them soon. Didn't your family move?"

"Moved? Where?"

"To a large estate along the main road over there. They even released koi into the pond and raised them."

"Oh, really?"

…?

Parents? Moving? A huge estate with koi?

Wait. Something wasn't right.

---

[773] Candied hawthorn skewers are a traditional snack made by coating skewered fruit in hardened sugar.

[774] Yellow dust is windborne dust from arid regions of East Asia that can affect air quality in Korea.

[775] Yellow dust is windborne dust from arid regions of East Asia that can affect air quality in Korea.

I stared dumbfoundedly at Hyuk Mujin as he returned carrying the candied hawthorn skewers[776].

“What was that about?”

“Huh? About what?”

“Your parents are alive?”

Hyuk Mujin stared at me as though I were insane.

“Why are you killing off my perfectly healthy parents?”

“No, that’s not what I meant… Then what was all that stuff you said earlier?”

“What stuff?”

“The candied hawthorn[777]. You said you couldn’t have any and spent every day sucking on your fingers.”

“I couldn’t have any. My parents wouldn’t let me eat it because they said it would rot my teeth. Every merchant around here knew how overbearing my parents were, so they made a point of refusing to sell any to me. That lady was the only one who secretly slipped me some.”

…

“And what about being jealous of the children holding their parents’ hands?”

“My family’s business was so successful that they never had any free time. I played by myself.”

“Th-then you had family in Taiyuan, but you didn’t come back once in five years?”

“I left home. I didn’t want to inherit the family business, so I left a single letter behind and ran away. The Master of the Gatekeeper Pavilion in our family is my father’s childhood best friend, so he probably knew everything about how I was doing.”

…

“For about two years, they gave me hell over it. Then my youngest sibling was suddenly born, so I no longer needed to inherit the family business. After that, they stopped saying much.”

Hyuk Mujin craned his neck and looked around, then raised a hand and pointed.

“Ah, there it is. See it? That building belongs to my parents… It got even bigger while I was away.”

I followed Hyuk Mujin’s finger and turned my head.

A huge, towering five-story pavilion and a signboard bearing enormous characters came into view.

Hyuk Family Textile Shop

Hyuk Mujin smiled proudly.

---

[776] Candied hawthorn skewers are a traditional snack made by coating skewered fruit in hardened sugar.

[777] Candied hawthorn skewers are a traditional snack made by coating skewered fruit in hardened sugar.

“It’s the largest textile shop in Taiyuan. We have branches in Henan and Hebei, too.”

This bastard was born with a silver spoon, too…

You had to be pretty damn wealthy to open chain stores in a place this rough.

What the hell have I been doing?

A young boy who used to suck on his fingers because he wanted to eat candied hawthorn[778] so badly?

The truth was that his successful business-owner parents had forbidden him from eating it because they were worried about his teeth.

What the fuck is this?

As I stood there with my mouth hanging open, Hyuk Mujin held out one of the candied hawthorn skewers[779].

“Here, have one. I specially chose the biggest and shiniest one. The ones that lady sells are the best in this area.”

“You son of a…”

I swallowed the curse that had surged up to my throat and bit down on the candied hawthorn[780] with a loud crunch.

“Let’s hurry up and find a room.”

“Already? We’ve only spent a few iron coins…”

“Hey! Is it your money? Those are travel expenses we were given to spend when necessary. Expenses!”

“Didn’t you just say we should spend it all and have fun?”

“We’ve had enough fun. You said the rooms would fill up after sunset. If we get a bad night’s sleep and end up late to tomorrow’s luncheon, are you going to take responsibility?”

…

Honghwa Inn.

As its signboard suggested, this was one of the establishments under the Lower District Sect’s influence.

Honghwaru at night. Honghwa Inn for lodging.

Whoever had come up with that arrangement was clearly determined to wring every last coin out of the drunks.

---

[778] Candied hawthorn skewers are a traditional snack made by coating skewered fruit in hardened sugar.

[779] Candied hawthorn skewers are a traditional snack made by coating skewered fruit in hardened sugar.

[780] Candied hawthorn skewers are a traditional snack made by coating skewered fruit in hardened sugar.

"Let's go in."

I was about to lead Hyuk Mujin, whose lower lip had been jutting out for some time, toward the inn's entrance when someone spoke.

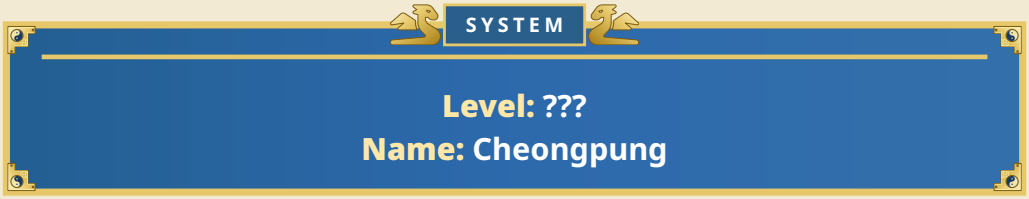
"Excuse me. I'm sorry to bother you."

The voice strangely tugged at my nerves. Its owner was a young man with an affable expression and a dreamy, hazy voice as innocent as a child's.

This feeling…

The moment I turned around and met his clear eyes, my breath caught despite myself.

This was an aura different from Jin Mukyung's.



Another Peak master had appeared.

Amid the tension, the young man named Cheongpung opened his lips.

"If you don't mind, may I eat just one candied hawthorn skewer[781]?"

…?

What the hell is this guy?

[781] Candied hawthorn skewers are a traditional snack made by coating skewered fruit in hardened sugar.

Chapter 132

"If it wouldn't be too much trouble, may I have just one candied hawthorn skewer?[782]"

The unexpected comment caused my brain to freeze for a moment.

What the hell is he talking about?

It wasn't one of those Do you know the Way?[783] pitches. He was asking if he could have just one candied hawthorn skewer.

I hadn't planned for a Peak master I'd just met to beg for candied hawthorn in the most polite tone in the world.

Grrrrrrowl.

Now he was even tugging at my pity with his stomach clock. Without thinking, I held out the candied hawthorn skewer I was still holding.

"H-here."

"Thank you, Benefactor."

Talk about value for money. Ten seconds after meeting him, I had become a Peak master's Benefactor.

Hyuk Mujin and I stared blankly at Cheongpung as he ferociously bit and sucked on a sugary snack meant for children.

"Captain, do you know him?"

"No."

Cheongpung devoured the candied hawthorn skewer as though it had vanished in the blink of an eye. Apparently, it hadn't been enough, because he turned the eyes of a starving beast on Hyuk Mujin.

More precisely, on the two candied hawthorn skewers in Mujin's hands.

"…Mujin."

"Yes?"

"Give them to him."

Hyuk Mujin quickly hid his hands behind his back.

"No."

"No?"

"Yes. This is the first time I've eaten these in five years. I haven't even taken a bite yet."

"I see. Our Mujin wants to die about fifty years ahead of schedule."

"…"

With a deep sigh, he held out the skewers. Cheongpung's eyes flashed.

---

[782] Candied hawthorn skewers are a traditional Chinese snack made by coating skewered fruit in hardened sugar.

[783] "Do you know the Way?" evokes an opening used by street proselytizers in South Korea.

"Thank you, Benefactor!"

The next moment, there was a sharp whoosh, and the skewers were in Cheongpung's hands.

"Gah!"

That was incredible speed. Hyuk Mujin sucked in a startled breath and whispered to me in a trembling voice.

"H-he's no ordinary beggar, is he?"

What kind of face would Mujin make if he learned that the filthy young man in front of us was a Peak master?

I studied Cheongpung as he inhaled the candied hawthorn with single-minded focus.

He looks far too young to be a Peak master.

I had heard a few rumors by now. I also knew that even famous, powerful sects with every kind of genius training and support only produced a Peak master once in a blue moon.

That was why Jin Mukyung, who came from Shanxi Province—a remote backwater even by the standards of the Central Plains—had become so famous.

He had reached the Peak realm ten or twenty years ahead of everyone else.

But…

The young man in front of me looked barely my age, yet he was a Peak master whose Level I couldn't even determine through Qi Sense.

I had never heard of a Peak master this young in Shanxi Province.

Where the hell did this guy come from?

As if on cue, Cheongpung raised his head. He had eaten so hurriedly that sticky sugar covered the corners of his mouth.

"Whew. That was delicious."

"You must've been a little… very hungry."

"Yes. I haven't eaten all day."

"Oh dear. How did that happen?"

"I lost my travel money. Still, it was an interesting experience."

"…"

Could starving all day because you had no money really count as an interesting experience?

I had sensed it from the moment we met, but this guy definitely had a peculiar way of thinking.

Cheongpung smiled brightly and gave us a respectful fist-and-palm salute.

"Ah, I'm late introducing myself. Cheongpung offers his greetings to his Benefactors."

"My name is Jin Taekyung."

"And I'm this man's right arm and heart, Hyuk Mujin."

I completely ignored Hyuk Mujin's nonsense and kept my eyes on Cheongpung.

I might not look it, but I was fairly famous in Shanxi Province.

Until a few months ago, I had been famous for all the wrong reasons. Now, for the exact opposite reason, there wasn't a soul in Shanxi Province who didn't know my name.

I wonder if he'll recognize me.

Just as I was secretly getting my hopes up, Cheongpung's face went stiff.

"Excuse me, are you perhaps…"

"Yes, that's right. I'm the very—"

"Would it be all right if I imposed on you a little longer?"

"What?"

"I've been hungry for quite a long time."

Right on cue, a thunderous sound came from Cheongpung's stomach.

Grrrrrrowl.

"…Then why don't we have a meal together?"

"Thank you, Benefactor!"

I couldn't tell whether I was his Benefactor or just a sucker.

Honghwa Inn was packed with people who had come for an early dinner.

A quick-footed waiter led us to one of the few remaining empty tables.

"What'll it be?"

I handed Cheongpung the wooden Murim-style menu.

"Order whatever you want."

"Oh, no, I couldn't. I'm not some ungrateful beast who doesn't know how to repay a kindness. How could I…"

"It's fine. Order whatever you want."

"Then I'll have everything on here."

"…"

What an ungrateful beast.

The appearance of a colossal sucker kept the kitchen busy. Before long, the dishes we had ordered began pouring out without pause.

"Garlic Pork is here. This dish is made by slicing boiled pork thin and…"

"Oh."

"Fish-Fragrant Shredded Pork is here. It's pork served with bamboo shoots, wood ear mushrooms, and…"

"Ohhh."

“Beijing Sauce Shredded Pork.”

“Ohhhh!”

“Beggar’s Chicken.”

“Ohhhhh!”

Unlike the waiter, whose explanations had grown shorter and shorter, Cheongpung’s reactions were becoming more and more elaborate.

Dish after dish continued filling the table. Just as there was barely any room left, the waiter slid out another plate with the expression of a man who had reached enlightenment.

“Maegu.”

“Maegu?”

I’d heard of Megumi from the island country next door, but Maegu was a new one to me. Catching my look, the waiter answered as if explaining it was a chore.

“Maechae Guyuk.”[784]

“…”

Now he was even abbreviating dish names.

While I stared at him in disbelief, Cheongpung rapidly emptied the plates.

“Nom, nom.”

“Slow down. Eat slowly.”

“Ah hih he ho. Ha hu i heup hi ha.”

“Don’t answer. Just keep eating.”

“Khanks hah!”

Hyuk Mujin whispered with a thoroughly disgusted expression.

“Isn’t he really a beggar?”

“Didn’t you see him snatch the candied hawthorn earlier? No way.”

Chomp, chomp.

“…Probably not.”

“What if he’s a master of the Beggars’ Sect?”

“The Beggars’ Sect, huh?”

I had seen it countless times in martial arts novels. It also existed openly in the actual Murim as one of the Nine Sects and One Gang.

I had yet to meet one of its members, but any of the beggars loitering near the inn’s entrance could be a Beggars’ Sect disciple.

“Should I take a quick look and see if he has any knots?”

The masters of the Beggars’ Sect supposedly distinguished their status by the knots around their waists.

---

[784] Maechae Guyuk is pork belly with preserved mustard greens. The waiter shortens its Korean name to Maegu, which sounds like the beginning of the Japanese name Megumi.

I shook my head.

No. He isn't with the Beggars' Sect.

If he were, he would have reacted somehow when he heard my name. We belonged to the same orthodox faction, so he had no reason to pretend he didn't recognize me.

Then what sect is he from?

There was no way a Peak master this young had simply dropped out of the sky.

He had to be from a famous sect at the very least… The more I thought about it, the more curious I became about this mysterious young man.

"Burp. That was delicious."

Cheongpung finally finished eating. After patting his tadpole-like belly, he looked at Hyuk Mujin and me, then stopped short.

"It was my first time trying any of these dishes, so I made a spectacle of myself in front of my Benefactors. I hope I didn't overdo it…"

You already overdid it, you idiot.

Still, it was good that he had at least a little self-awareness.

"It's fine. I do that sometimes, too."

"We have something in common. Ha-ha."

I laughed along with Cheongpung and opened my mouth. It was about time I started a background check on this sucker.

"You said it was your first time trying all of this. I suppose you don't usually eat rich food."

Cheongpung shook his head gloomily.

"It's not that I don't. I couldn't. If I'd known food this delicious existed, I would have come down from the mountain sooner."

"Oh, so you lived in the mountains. That must've been difficult."

"Life in the mountains? It was fun. The scenery was beautiful, and there was plenty to eat all over the place. My grandfather has lived alone in the mountains his entire life, too."

"Your grandfather?"

"Yes. But, um…"

"Go ahead."

"May I order some alcohol? I've never tried it before."

"…Order as much as you like."

This kid had a lot of things he'd never tried.

At least he still had a sliver of conscience left. He ordered the cheapest bottle of fire liquor.

A short while later, Cheongpung downed the fire liquor without hesitation and muttered, his face slightly flushed.

“Ahh, so this is what it means to get drunk. But what were we talking about?”

“Your grandfather living alone in the mountains his entire life.”

“Oh, right. Anyway, I’ve lived with my grandfather since I was little. I was five when we started living together, so it’s already been fifteen years.”

“Really? That’s a long time.”

I did my best not to show my surprise.

A Peak master at barely twenty.

That meant he was a genius at least comparable to Jin Mukyung, if not greater. The more I talked with him, the more curious I became about his identity.

“Where is it? If it’s such a nice place to live, maybe I could visit sometime.”

Cheongpung hesitated just as he was about to say something.

“Um, I don’t think I can tell you that.”

“Come on. You can’t even tell me that much?”

“Because my grandfather hates it so much… He already moves to a different place once or twice a year because of that.”

“He moves?”

“Yes. Strange people keep coming to see him.”

Strange people? Obnoxious hikers?

Well, I suppose it would be annoying for someone living in the mountains.

He continued with a nostalgic look in his eyes.

“When I was ten, dozens of people suddenly came rushing over and started causing trouble. I remember my grandfather shouting at them to get lost before he set the mountain on fire.”

“Oh, so that’s why he keeps moving?”

“Yes. Fortunately, the mountains are huge, so he’s managed to avoid them for ten years.”

“…”

Ten years? His grandfather was quite a man.

Hyuk Mujin, who had been listening to Cheongpung’s story with great interest, asked, “Then why did you come down from the mountain, Young Master?”

Cheongpung, who had been sucking on the mouth of the liquor bottle regretfully, answered,

“Because of the Ten Dragons and Phoenixes.”

“The Ten Dragons and Phoenixes? What’s that supposed to be?”

At my question, Hyuk Mujin looked at me as though I were the strangest person he had ever seen.

“Why don’t you know about the Ten Dragons and Phoenixes, Captain?”

“I’m allowed not to know, damn it.”

“Huh? Last year, you got plastered at a pleasure house and made a complete fool of yourself bragging that you were going to become one of them.”

“That wasn’t me… Never mind. What are the Ten Dragons and Phoenixes?”

“Are you seriously asking because you don’t know?”

“Can’t I just not know?”

“Of course you can’t. The Second Young Master is one of them, after all.”

Wait, really?

As I blinked at him, Hyuk Mujin launched into an impassioned explanation.

“They’re the greatest young prodigies of the orthodox Murim! The dragons and phoenixes who will lead the Murim of the future! How can you not know about the Ten Dragons and Phoenixes?”

“Hey, hey. Keep your voice down. People are staring.”

I wasn’t exaggerating. Hyuk Mujin’s booming voice had drawn glances from the other customers.

“Who cares if they stare? This is too much even for you, Captain! Are you making fun of me?”

“I don’t know about making fun of people, but I’m good at hitting them.”

“I think I got too worked up. I’m sorry.”

Hyuk Mujin regained his composure in an instant. I turned away from him and gave Cheongpung a friendly smile.

“Please continue.”

“It’s nothing important. I just had a childish thought for a moment.”

Cheongpung gazed at me through slightly unfocused eyes. Apparently, he had no intention of using his internal energy to dispel the drunkenness, because he still looked a little tipsy.

“Who would be stronger, me or them? I wanted to find the answer to that question.”

In the end, it came down to a martial artist’s competitive pride.

The desire to venture into a new world. The desire to defeat the strong and prove his martial arts. I could tell those feelings had led him down the mountain.

He seems to have the skill to justify thinking that way, too.

Jin Mukyung had supposedly reached the Peak realm at barely twenty, causing an uproar throughout the Central Plains. Now he was counted among the Ten Dragons and Phoenixes, the greatest young prodigies of the orthodox faction.

The Cheongpung in front of me possessed martial talent at least comparable to Jin Mukyung’s.

He has every right to think so.

I was nodding inwardly when—

“Puhahaha!”

“Pfft, hahahaha. Ah, holding back my laughter was torture.”

I raised my head toward the source of the sound.

On the second floor, five men and women dressed in silk were looking down at us, their faces full of mockery.

Chapter 133

Woo Jintae raised his golden wine cup. Five men and women, including him, sat around a table laden with every manner of delicacy and fine liquor.

“Now, to the boundless prosperity of the Five Gates of Shanxi!”

“To prosperity!”

“To prosperity!”

After the wine made its way around once, smiles spread across all five faces.

“As expected of Honghwa Inn. I don’t know who the chef is, but the food is incredible.”

“Right? It practically melts the moment it touches your tongue.”

Woo Jintae let out a hearty laugh.

“Ha-ha! Loosen your belts and eat to your hearts’ content. I’m paying for everything again today.”

“Wow, as expected of you, hyung[785]! At this rate, aren’t you going to pull up one of the foundation pillars of the Seongun Escort Bureau?”

“Oh my, can you afford all this?”

Woo Jintae chuckled as he looked at the two men and two women before him.

They were the scions of the Five Gates of Shanxi, the leading sects in an alliance of twenty small and medium-sized sects. Even so, they had to defer to him.

“Come now, I’m Woo Jintae. Woo Jintae of the Seongun Escort Bureau! I could buy this entire inn and it wouldn’t be a problem, so don’t worry and eat as much as you like.”

There was a touch of boasting in his words, but they weren’t entirely untrue.

The Seongun Escort Bureau dominated the area around Three Questions Gorge and raked in an enormous fortune each year from transportation, security, and various other businesses.

And Woo Jintae was its heir.

Money really is the best.

The Five Gates of Shanxi were still just a bunch of scions from similarly modest sects. With the Seongun Escort Bureau’s wealth behind him, nothing stood in his way.

“Thanks to everyone here, our Seongun Escort Bureau has risen another step. It’s only right that I treat you accordingly, wouldn’t you agree?”

Everyone hurriedly waved him off.

“Oh, how could that be thanks to us? It’s all because the Chief and you have worked tirelessly day and night for the Escort Bureau’s growth.”

---

[785] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

“That’s right. We could never accept such praise from Young Hero Woo.”

They said money could make even ghosts do your bidding. How much easier would it be with the living?

Worked tirelessly day and night, huh? Well, that isn’t entirely wrong.

The Seongun Escort Bureau was neither a prestigious martial family nor a proper Murim sect. It had managed to join the Five Gates of Shanxi because it had thrown money around.

The Sect Leaders, senior members, and scions of more than twenty small and medium-sized sects…

Woo Jintae had stuffed all of them with liquor and money day and night, and the results had been undeniable.

The Five Gates of Shanxi.

It was a position that could be called the representative of the alliance of small and medium-sized sects in the south.

For an ordinary Murim sect, it would have been nothing more than a hollow honorary position. But for the Seongun Escort Bureau, which generated profits through all kinds of businesses, it was like growing wings.

Woo Jintae bowed his head with a deliberately solemn expression.

“No. The Seongun Escort Bureau is where it is today because of all of you. Until just a few months ago, those vile old monsters had us living without being able to hold our heads up… Once again, thank you.”

“Those old monsters? You mean the traitors?”

“Ugh, don’t even mention them. If this hadn’t happened, all of us would have been helplessly used by them.”

Everyone gathered here was now a scion of the Five Gates of Shanxi, but that hadn’t been true just a few months ago.

The Samdo Sect, the Gunggui Sect, and three others had made up the former Five Gates of Shanxi. But at the Battle of Eight Spring Gorge, they had been exposed as the Head Elder’s lackeys and annihilated to the last sect.

“Now that I think about it, those bastards were especially wary of the Seongun Escort Bureau.”

“They were clearly afraid that their identities would be exposed by the keen insight of the Chief and Woo Jintae.”

Woo Jintae suppressed the laughter threatening to burst out.

The reason the former Five Gates of Shanxi had kept the Seongun Escort Bureau in check was simple.

They were worried about exactly this.

The Five Gates of Shanxi had been much stronger back then, and their bonds had been far tighter.

But not anymore. Everyone here had already gotten a taste of the Seongun Escort Bureau's money. From there, it was only a matter of time before he used that leverage to nibble away at their various business interests.

"Now, let's raise a toast to our friendship."

"To friendship!"

The lively drinking continued, and Woo Jintae occasionally handed out bribes under the guise of gifts.

"This is Shu brocade I brought in from Sichuan. I thought it would suit Young Lady Hwang, so I set some aside for you."

"Oh my! You mean the Shu brocade I know?"

"Yes. It's the finest grade, and perhaps that's why the color is so exceptionally beautiful. I told a servant to load it into the carriage beforehand, so please take it with you."

"My goodness, Young Hero Woo. Thank you so much."

"Is there any need to thank me? Just think of it as the feelings I have for you and put it away."

"Wh-what?"

"Ha-ha, that came out wrong. Pretend you didn't hear it."

At Woo Jintae's charming smile, the only daughter of a martial sect with more than a hundred affiliated martial artists blushed.

Once I make her indebted to me, there will be a day when I can put that debt to use.

"Hyung[786], now I'm hurt. How can you only look after the young ladies?"

This time, he winked at the scion of a martial family who had become close enough with him to call each other hyung[787] and little brother.

"As if I could forget you, Little Brother Hyuk. Just wait. I've prepared an absolutely incredible gift for you."

"Damn, as expected of you, hyung[788]."

"Ha-ha, Jintae, you haven't forgotten me, have you?"

"What a hurtful thing to say. I only planned to tell each of you separately because I chose a gift suited to each person."

It was easy. Expensive silk and jewelry for the women, and peerless beauties and wealth for the men.

Honghwaru, reputedly the finest pleasure house in Shanxi Province, happened to be nearby. It was perfect.

---

[786] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

[787] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

[788] Hyung is a Korean term a man uses to address an older brother or an older man with whom he is close.

Woo Jintae smiled as he watched everyone's delight.

"Now that everyone's had a chance to unwind, I was thinking we might end tonight's drinking here… What do you all think?"

They might have been disappointed before receiving their gifts, but things were different now.

The women nodded, eager to check the silk and jewelry loaded into the carriage, while the men's hearts pounded at the certainty that they would be moving to the pleasure house.

"Then let's have a few final cups before we leave. And don't forget tomorrow's luncheon."

Everyone chuckled at Woo Jintae's words.

"How could we forget that, no matter how drunk we get?"

"You really underestimate us, Jintae."

"I only mentioned it just in case. Ha-ha-ha."

A luncheon with the City Lord of Shanxi.

That was why the scions of the sects with some clout in Shanxi had gathered in one place. Woo Jintae emptied his wine cup and thought,

I'm looking forward to tomorrow.

The City Lord was a mere ten years old.

Woo Jintae was already a master at catering to people's whims, and he had finished making every possible preparation to win the City Lord over.

I hear he's quite a mischievous little fellow… He's a member of the imperial family, so I wonder what he'll be like.

Just as Woo Jintae was lost in thought, a booming shout erupted from downstairs.

"The greatest young prodigies of the Murim's orthodox faction! The dragons and phoenixes who will lead the Murim of the future! How can you say you don't know the Ten Dragons and Phoenixes?"

"Hey, hey. Keep your voice down. People are staring."

At the words Ten Dragons and Phoenixes, five pairs of ears perked up.

Who were the Ten Dragons and Phoenixes? They were geniuses already writing the first page of their legends—the future of the Murim's orthodox faction.

They were the objects of every rising martial artist's admiration, and those gathered here were no exception.

"Who are they? Martial artists?"

The person seated closest to the railing craned his neck and looked down at the first floor.

"There are three of them. One's a young master, another looks somewhat like a martial artist… and the last looks like a beggar."

"What kind of combination is that?"

"Shh. Let's keep listening."

At Woo Jintae's urging, everyone fell silent and pricked up their ears again.

They had all trained in martial arts as befitted scions of martial families, so overhearing the conversation was not difficult.

"Please continue."

"It's nothing important. I just had a childish thought for a moment."

There was a brief silence. Then another statement followed.

"Who would be stronger, me or them? I wanted to find the answer to that question."

The young prodigies of the Five Gates of Shanxi looked at one another.

"Did you all hear that?"

"Yes. Who said it?"

"That beggar I mentioned. You really do see all kinds of lunatics these days."

Woo Jintae shook his head.

"He's probably a martial artist, not a beggar."

"A martial artist…?"

"If he's talking about the Ten Dragons and Phoenixes, that must be it. As for how he ended up looking like a beggar, well, I can guess without even seeing him."

A mocking laugh escaped Woo Jintae's lips.

"Isn't it obvious? He's the type who picks up a few Third Rate martial arts moves by chance, puts his faith in them, wanders aimlessly through the martial world, and winds up dead."

"Ah, now that you mention it, you're right. As expected of Young Hero Woo."

"The more I think about it, the funnier it gets. How did someone like that dare mention the Ten Dragons and Phoenixes?"

The young prodigies snickered at one another, and their laughter gradually grew louder.

"That tells you all you need to know about the people who associate with a lunatic like him. Or maybe they'll slap him across the face, call him crazy, and walk out."

"What are the young master and the martial artist sitting with him doing?"

The young prodigy who glanced downstairs again answered while stifling his laughter.

"I don't know about the martial artist, but the young master is nodding to himself."

"Well, now."

"Really?"

"Wow, you should all see his expression. He genuinely seems to believe that beggar."

The young prodigies rose and approached the railing. Woo Jintae, unable to contain his curiosity, went with them.

Let's at least see what these fools look like.

The moment he saw the young master nodding with a serious expression, a loud laugh burst from his mouth.

"Puhahaha!"

At the same time, the other young prodigies began laughing loudly as well.

"Pfft, ha-ha-ha! I almost died trying to hold that in."

"Ha-ha-ha! They don't know the first thing about martial arts, yet they're talking about the Ten Dragons and Phoenixes?"

How long did they laugh?

When they finally managed to stop, what they saw was one person staring quietly up at them.

"Finished laughing?"

At the 'young master's' words, the young prodigies froze.

They had all been raised precious and pampered. How long had it been since anyone had spoken down to them like that?

Woo Jintae's dry voice broke the sudden, icy silence.

"And if we have?"

The 'young master' smiled brightly.

"Get down here right now, you fucking sons of bitches. My neck hurts."

Hyuk Mujin asked with an expectant look in his eyes,

"Are you going to fight them?"

"Depends on what they do."

"Once you've called them fucking sons of bitches, isn't that asking for a fight?"

"That works, too. See all the spit those bastards sprayed on my face?"

"You're completely drenched."

Hyuk Mujin briskly wiped my face with his sleeve.

"What if they don't apologize?"

"They'd better."

"Look at their faces. They're never going to apologize."

"Then they'll get the shit beaten out of them."

"There are women among them, too…"

"I believe in gender equality."

"What?"

"I beat everyone equally."

Cheongpung, who had been watching blankly, looked at me with sparkling eyes.

"Oh. I don't really understand, but it sounds cool."

“It’s nothing special… Anyway, thanks.”

I might have said more, but there was no time.

The five bastards—or rather, the five sons and daughters of bitches—had jumped down from the second floor.

Tap.

They landed lightly, as befitted First Rate masters. One of them stepped out from the group as they glared at us.

Level 45. Tall and good-looking. The same bastard who had laughed first.

“I am—”

“You the head?”

“The head?”

“Are you the boss of these five?”

He let out a short laugh.

“You’d better watch your mouth. If you knew who the people here were, including me…”

I smiled back and scanned through their Level windows.

“Seongryong, Cheonwoo, Myeonghwa, Sohye, and finally, you—Jintae. Want me to tell you your family names, too?”

“…!”

“…!”

Five pairs of astonished eyes turned toward me. No, seven, counting Hyuk Mujin and Cheongpung.

“Oh, and this is a personal request, but please don’t ask how I knew. I’m sick of that line. If you ask, I’ll hit you.”

“How did you…?”

“Did you stuff radishes in your ears?”

The next moment, my palm met his cheek.

Smack!

Chapter 134

Smack!

Woo Jintae's head snapped to the side with a satisfying crack. He blankly stroked his cheek.

What just happened?

He was dumbfounded. Had he just been slapped? By a punk like this?

Woo Jintae was nearly thirty. He had married young and already had a family of his own.

Yet some kid who barely looked twenty had subjected him to such humiliation.

"Eek! Young Hero Woo!"

"H-Hyung[789], are you all right?"

"Isn't that the Young Bureau Head of the Seongun Escort Bureau?"

"That's him. My goodness, what kind of reckless bastard would… Wait. Doesn't that face look familiar?"

The young prodigies' belated reactions and the stares of the inn's guests doubled Woo Jintae's shame.

He glared at the little bastard before him, his eyes brimming with killing intent.

"How dare you…"

"That's not what you should be saying."

"What?"

"Not how dare you. You should be asking how did you do that? If you're a martial artist."

Woo Jintae froze for a moment.

Since childhood, he had received the full support of the Seongun Escort Bureau, taking in all kinds of elixirs and First Rate martial arts. Even if he hadn't been born with extraordinary martial talent, it was only natural that he took pride in being a move and a half ahead of the other young prodigies.

How did someone like me get beaten so easily?

He hadn't even seen when or how the bastard approached. The humiliation of being utterly disgraced in front of everyone had overwhelmed everything else.

Only then did Woo Jintae study his opponent with eyes full of caution.

"Look at those eyes darting around. What, do you want me to tell you my three measurements[790]?"

"Who are you, and what sect are you from?"

"I'm Tien Shinhan of the Dodong Sect, you son of a bitch."

---

[789] Hyung is a Korean form of address used by a younger man for an older brother or an older man with whom he is familiar.

[790] The "three measurements" are bust, waist, and hip measurements.

Woo Jintae endured the young bastard's profanity only because he had finally regained his reason.

In the Murim, you never knew what might happen. If the other man was a disciple of a great sect, Woo Jintae would have to withdraw cleanly.

The Dodong Sect? Tien Shinhan of the Dodong Sect?

Both the sect and the man's name were utterly unfamiliar. Woo Jintae glanced behind him and saw the same bewilderment on the other young prodigies' faces.

His mind raced.

As far as I know, there's no such sect as the Dodong Sect in Shanxi Province.

Opening a new sect in Shanxi Province, where all the established sects had already secured their positions, was nearly impossible.

Even setting aside interference from the other sects, word of it would spread immediately.

If they raised a young prodigy of this level at his age, the sect must possess considerable power... Where could it be? Shaanxi? Henan?

As Woo Jintae found himself unable to speak, his eyes darting around, the young martial artist who had been standing idly by as though none of this concerned him suddenly asked,

"What's the Dodong Sect? Is it a real sect?"

"Would it be? A well-told lie becomes fact."

"Ah. I'll engrave those golden words in my heart."

"You little punk. You're talking pretty for once."

A young man dressed in rags like a beggar added his own comment.

"A well-told lie becomes fact... Those are wise words. I can sense profound mysteries in them."

"Ah... yes. Thank you for the compliment, at least."

Sparks flew from Woo Jintae's eyes as he listened to the three of them.

"You bastard! Reveal your identity!"

"Why? So you can hear who I am and where I'm from, pick a fight if I sound like an easy target, then tuck your tail between your legs and apologize if my status is too high?"

"..."

Crude as it was, the remark hit the mark. When Woo Jintae couldn't answer, the young bastard clicked his tongue.

"Punk, you started with the wrong question. They say the one who farted gets angry. If you wanted an answer from me, you should've apologized first."

Woo Jintae bit down on his lip.

An apology?

Born the sole male heir the Seongun Escort Bureau's family had produced in three generations, he had spent his entire life being pampered and revered. He wasn't flexible enough to bow his head to some nobody of unknown origin.

At last, Woo Jintae made up his mind and gave the young prodigies of the Five Gates of Shanxi a subtle signal with his eyes.

No matter how strong he is, he can't be that strong.

There were only three opponents. On their side were five First Rate masters, all among Shanxi Province's foremost young prodigies.

Seeing the four men and women discreetly gripping their weapons in response to his signal, Woo Jintae felt reassured.

"Do you know who I am—or rather, who we are?"

"I happen to know your names, at least. But is that an apology?"

"An apology? You've got some nerve."

Woo Jintae sneered.

"We are the heirs of the Five Gates of Shanxi. Surely you can't claim not to know the Five Gates of Shanxi."

"I'll say I know. But are you really not going to apologize? This is your final warning."

"I'll warn you, too. I don't know where you came from, but you picked the wrong person to mess with—"

Smack!

Woo Jintae's vision flashed white.

He stumbled backward instinctively as lightning-fast slaps struck him one after another.

Smack! Smack! Smack-smack!

One slap with every step.

After taking five slaps in all, Woo Jintae staggered.

The relentless blows had struck only one side of his face, leaving his cheek grotesquely swollen and blood pooling inside his split mouth.

Even my father has never hit me.

It was the first humiliation of his life—and it had happened in front of everyone.

His eyes rolled wildly.

"You fucking—!"

"I told you, final warning. Do you not know what final means, or what warning means? Or both?"

"How dare you hit me?"

"I may be the first man ever to treat you so casually, but please don't fall in love with me. I'm busy enough loving one Song-i."

"I'll kill you!"

“I’ll beat you!”

Smack-smack-smack!

“Guh!”

Woo Jintae couldn’t regain his senses.

The blows carried no internal energy, nor did his opponent seem to be using any mysterious manoeuvre technique. Yet he had no way to block the storm of slaps raining down on both cheeks.

How is this possible?

As he was beaten helplessly, a crazed shout rang in his ears.

“Slap with the left hand, slap with the right hand!”

Smack-smack!

“One chi[791], two chi[792], three chi[793], four chi[794]—Ppukku cheek! Ppukku cheek!”

Smack-smack-smack!

He kept shouting words that made no sense while flinging slap after slap. He looked like a madman born for the sole purpose of smacking people across the face.

Just like right now.

“Raise your left hand and lower your right. Lower your right and lower your left. Lower your left, and don’t raise your right.”

“Hurk!”

“That’s right. Good job. As a reward, your teacher is going to give little Woo Jintae’s cheeks a thorough beating.”

Smack-smack-smack-smack!

How many times had he been struck in the space of less than a moment?

Thirty? Fifty?

He had been hit so frantically that his head rang and tears swam in his eyes.

In the end, all Woo Jintae could do was call for help.

“P-please! Somebody help me!”

[791] A Korean chi is a traditional unit of length equal to 3.03 cm (1.19 in). The line plays on a Korean counting chant.

[792] A Korean chi is a traditional unit of length equal to 3.03 cm (1.19 in). The line plays on a Korean counting chant.

[793] A Korean chi is a traditional unit of length equal to 3.03 cm (1.19 in). The line plays on a Korean counting chant.

[794] A Korean chi is a traditional unit of length equal to 3.03 cm (1.19 in). The line plays on a Korean counting chant.

The Young Bureau Head of the Seongun Escort Bureau—the very Seongun Escort Bureau whose wealth alone was said to rival that of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, the richest family in Shanxi—cried out in desperation.

“P-please help me!”

Yet even after Woo Jintae cast aside his pride and everything else, the young prodigies of the Five Gates of Shanxi couldn’t bring themselves to draw their weapons.

“How are we supposed to beat that…?”

The words slipped from someone like a groan, speaking for them all.

They were right. There was no need to experience it firsthand.

Just watching from the side was enough to make their knees go weak and their legs give out. Their opponent was roughly the same age as them, but there was no question that he was a master far beyond their imagination.

“To reach that realm at his age…”

“That thing’s a complete monster.”

Smack-smack!

“P-please spare my life!”

Woo Jintae’s voice grew even more desperate. Even his plea for help had subtly changed.

If this continued much longer, he might start begging to be killed instead.

“W-we should help him, right?”

“At the very least, we should try to stop him… Young Master Wang, do something.”

“Me? Why me all of a sudden?”

“Why do you think? Every time we got together, you bragged about your family’s martial arts. You said it was sword arts you could display anywhere in the Central Plains without shame.”

The heir of the Wang Family Estate, who never missed an opportunity to boast about the greatness of his family’s martial arts, answered with a solemn expression.

“I’m a saber user. I never learned sword arts.”

“What?”

“And why are you trying to dump this on me? If Young Lady Shin wants to stop him so badly, she can step in herself.”

“My goodness. What a spectacle.”

As the young prodigies of the Five Gates passed the responsibility around, Hyuk Mujin, who had been quietly watching the situation, suddenly cut in.

“You’re all worrying over nothing. If it were me, I’d hurry over and lend a hand, at least.”

“You—no, sir. Who are you?”

With such a terrifying scene unfolding before them, they had to speak with even an ordinary martial artist using half-polite language.

Young Lady Hwang, who had received Shu brocade as a gift from Woo Jintae only a quarter of an hour earlier, quickly stepped forward.

“Let me make this clear in advance. We have no ill feelings toward you people. You know that, right?”

“Do you? If that’s how it is, then fine. Let’s say that’s how it is.”

“I’m not saying we should just say that. I’m saying it’s the truth.”

“What good will telling me do?”

Hyuk Mujin grinned and jerked his chin toward Jin Taekyung’s back, where he was enthusiastically beating Woo Jintae.

“Our Captain has quite a temper. Once the gentleman getting beaten over there collapses, who do you think will be next? You, Young Master? Or the Young Lady beside you?”

“…”

“Oh, and just in case you’re wondering, that man hits men and women alike.”

“I-I didn’t laugh!”

“Neither did I!”

“Do I have to say the same thing twice? Telling me won’t do you any good. Though, there is one way that might work.”

“A way?”

The young prodigies’ ears perked up.

They hadn’t trained in martial arts for nothing. They understood that they had no chance against that monstrous young man.

“S-somebody save me…”

Woo Jintae’s dying voice happened to drift into their ears, fanning their survival instincts even further.

“W-what exactly is this way?”

Hyuk Mujin stroked his chin with a deliberately serious expression.

“Well, you’re all scions of influential families, so I don’t know whether you can bring yourselves to do it.”

“I will!”

“I’ll do it! I’ll definitely do it!”

“Good. At least you’ve got the right attitude.”

Hyuk Mujin nodded in satisfaction and pointed at Cheongpung, who was watching the one-sided beating with his mouth hanging open.

“First, apologize politely to this gentleman.”

Before he had even finished speaking, the young men and women of the Five Gates bent deeply at the waist.

“We sincerely apologize.”

“We’re truly sorry for judging you rashly based on your appearance.”

Cheongpung scratched the back of his head.

“I’m fine, so everyone, please stand up.”

Considering how they had mocked him in front of so many people, Cheongpung forgave them so readily that even Hyuk Mujin was taken aback.

Even his face, which should rightfully have been flushed with anger, was sunny and bright.

“You’re saying that so easily?”

“Yes. Is there a problem?”

“It’s not that, but… Weren’t you angry earlier? You were insulted so publicly.”

“Why would I be angry? I just found it fascinating.”

“What? What do you mean?”

“That was the first time so many people had paid attention to me. It was also the first time someone who looked down on me apologized afterward. I found it fascinating and fun.”

“…”

“Ah. I think coming down from the mountain was a good decision.”

This guy’s a little nuts, too.

Hyuk Mujin looked at Cheongpung as though he were some strange creature, then shook his head and turned to the young prodigies.

“You heard him, right? Since Cheongpung here has accepted your apology, we’ll consider the matter settled.”

“Oh!”

“We’re saved!”

But Hyuk Mujin wasn’t finished.

“All right, then. There’s one final thing left—the second.”

“…The second?”

“There’s more?”

“Yes. This is the most important one.”

Then he solemnly declared to the four men and women looking at him,

“All of you, get down and plant your heads on the floor.”

“…!”

“…!”

Chapter 135

Smack!

“P-please, help me!”

“No one’s coming to help you.”

Smack-smack!

“P-please, spare me!”

“Nope. Not happening. Go away.”

Smack-smack-smack!

“Th-then just kill me…”

“No, you’re still fine. Words are still coming out of your mouth.”

Smack-smack-smack-smack!

“Hhk… Hhrrgh…”

“Yes. That’s the reaction I was looking for.”

Only then did I finally stop.

The young master’s once reasonably presentable face had puffed up like a steamed bun. Instead of a rosy flush, dark blue bruises covered both cheeks.

“Our Jintae. Did you do something wrong or not?”

“Hhrrgh.”

Seeing him sob in such a miserable state, I suddenly felt a little sorry for him.

Right. He’s someone else’s precious son, too…

“You did something wrong, didn’t you?”

“Hhk! Hhrrgh!”

“Then why did you ignore what I was saying? You should’ve apologized the moment I told you to. Wouldn’t that have been better? Don’t you think?”

“Hhrrr.”

“Let’s be good from now on. Understand?”

“Hhrrgh.”

I quietly watched Woo Jintae nod furiously, then spoke.

“But you…”

“Hh?”

“Why have you been answering like that this whole time? Can’t you speak like a person?”

His sobbing stopped dead.

“I-I’m sorry.”

“So you can talk. You could talk all along, but you chose not to? Why were you crying? Were you trying to show how much pain and hardship you were in?”

“No!”

“Now your voice is getting louder, too. You’ve got some volume. Have you been practicing diaphragmatic breathing? Were you planning to burst my eardrums and escape this crisis?”

“No. Absolutely not. Please, stop now. Hh-hhng…”

“Oh? You’re crying again? You can still cry? What have you done to deserve tears? Is your life over because you’re crying? And ‘please stop’? Anyone watching would think I was the one attacking you.”

“I’m sorry. I won’t cry.”

“Wow, look at him stop crying right away. You’re a creepy bastard, aren’t you? If I were you, I’d feel so guilty for picking on an innocent person that I’d cry until I passed out from exhaustion. Are you really sorry?”

“P-please, just listen to me for a moment…”

“Listen to what? Do you even have the right to speak? Is this some kind of entertainment awards ceremony? Am I supposed to wait quietly while you talk, then smile warmly and applaud when you’re finished?”

“…”

“Now you’re not even answering. You must feel full even without eating. Right? If you keep crunching through other people’s words like that, it must feel good…”

Just as I was about to continue, Woo Jintae slammed the back of his head into the floor with lightning speed.

Thud! Flop.

What a shame. I could have kept chewing him out for at least another shichen.[795]

As I turned away from the unconscious Woo Jintae, countless gazes came flying toward me and stuck fast.

“The Young Bureau Head of the Seongun Escort Bureau went down that easily…”

“Who the hell is that young man?”

“His hands are vicious enough, but his tongue is a venomous snake all on its own.”

Murmurs of shock and fear rippled through the room.

There were around a hundred guests on the first floor alone. It was hardly surprising that some of them recognized me.

“I-it’s the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi!”

“What? The one from the Jin Family of Taiyuan?”

“Do you think there are two Sleeping Dragons of Shanxi? I knew he looked familiar.”

My reputation as the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi really does shake the heavens.

I was just about to give the crowd a pleased smile and wave when someone spoke up.

[795] A shichen is a traditional time unit of approximately two hours.

“Are you sure? I saw the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi at Honghwaru around this time last year, but he looks a little…”

“You don’t remember that the two of us were there together?”

“Oh. Were we?”

“Yes. His build and overall impression have changed quite a bit, but it’s definitely him. I can still picture that young master from the Jin Family making a scene because he wanted to bring a courtesan back to the family.”

“…”

Damn. Why do people remember such useless things?

As I awkwardly lowered my hand, several guests who had been whispering among themselves suddenly raised theirs.

“I was there, too!”

“You were, Brother?”

“I remember it clearly. That bastard—no, that gentleman—fell down the stairs, grabbed the thing between my legs, and gave it a long yank… Whew. Just thinking about it still makes me dizzy.”

“My goodness, how indecent. Are you all right now?”

“Fortunately, I’m perfectly fine. Not only that, I think it’s gotten a little longer since then.”

“…”

Can that happen?

I barely suppressed the urge to ask exactly how much longer it had gotten. I still had the trash from the so-called Five Gates of Shanxi to deal with.

But then…

“Huh?”

Four young prodigies were lined up with their heads planted on the floor, while Hyuk Mujin stood beside them with his neck held strangely stiff.

“We’re ready.”

“Did you order them to do this?”

“They say even a village-school dog can recite poetry after three years. By now, I can tell what you want at a glance.”

“You little…”

I was seized by an indescribable emotion.

At first, I’d thought he was an idiot, but he seemed to be getting smarter by the day.

I was starting to suspect he was putting points into Intelligence on my behalf.

“You’ve grown. I’m very proud of you.”

“You’re too kind. More importantly, what should we do with them?”

“Give me the sword case.”

“At your command.”

It was straight out of a historical drama. I took the sword case Hyuk Mujin held out and slapped it against my palm.

Good grip. Good impact, too.

“Everyone, on your feet.”

The four young prodigies sprang to their feet the moment I spoke.

Ignoring their terrified gazes, I scanned their Level Windows again. Just as I’d thought, they were barely First Rate, if that.

“You already know what you did wrong… You’re the heirs of the Five Gates of Shanxi?”

“Y-yes, sir!”

“You’re not third sons or youngest daughters or anything like that?”

“No, sir!”

“You’re sure?”

“Yes, sir!”

Their voices, filled with proper martial spirit, rang through the inn. I tapped the sword case against my palm and muttered,

“Really? Then the Five Gates of Shanxi aren’t anything special, are they?”

“…”

“…”

Every one of their faces flushed with shame, but none of them dared to answer.

They knew who I was now.

The difference in our martial prowess aside, the Five Gates of Shanxi couldn’t hold their heads high before the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

“You’ve had it good all this time, haven’t you?”

“…No, sir.”

“What do you mean, no? You never had to worry about money, and you had powerful backing. You relied on that and strutted around like big shots, didn’t you? Picking fights wherever you went.”

“…”

“But then a war broke out between the Jin Family of Taiyuan and the Mount Heng Sword Sect. The Jin Family was the one that had always treated you well, but you were afraid of the retaliation that would come if Mount Heng won, so you kept watching the situation and ended up here. Right?”

“Th-that’s… We…”

“You’re the heirs, aren’t you? Young Sect Leaders, Lesser Family Heads, things like that. Ah, that fellow over there was the Young Bureau Head.”

The four of them reflexively followed my finger and shuddered.

Unable to withstand the merciless barrage of slaps and trash talk, Woo Jintae had chosen to knock himself unconscious. He lay on the floor like a corpse.

“Anyway, given the situation, you should’ve kept your heads down. What did you come all the way here for, acting so high and mighty? Do you think the Jin Family of Taiyuan is a joke? Do I need to tattoo ‘Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi’ on my forehead and walk around with it?”

“I-I’m sorry.”

“Does apologizing make everything go away? Should I beat you into a bloody mess and then apologize to you?”

“Eek!”

Just look at those terrified eyes. I felt like a walking disaster.

There was no need for any more words. I raised the sword case.

“Historically, this has always been the best medicine. Everyone, get down.”

Then I asked the four trembling young prodigies lying face down before me in a chilling voice,

“How many blows will it take for you to reflect? Each of you, give me a number.”

“W-what?”

“Give me a number. I beat that Woo Jintae so badly because he was acting too high and mighty. Since you paid up voluntarily, I’ll take that into consideration.”

A heavy silence descended.

The four exchanged hurried glances, then shouted in unison.

“J-just one!”

“One? Will that really be enough?”

“Yes, sir!”

“If you take one hit, will you swear never to do anything like this again?”

“We swear it before Heaven and Earth and all the divine spirits!”

I tightened my grip on the sword case.

“Good. Then ten each.”

“…!”

“…!”

“I just asked Heaven and Earth, and they said one wouldn’t come close to being enough for you. So ten it is.”

I never thought I’d find myself in a situation like this.

I felt like one of those physical-education entrance-exam instructors from my school days who swung a bat whenever he got the chance.

Sinking into a strange sense of nostalgia, I swung the bat—or rather, the sword case.

Whack! Whack! Whack! Crack!

"Guh!"

"Don't move. You'll hurt your bones. All right, again."

Whack! Whack! Whack!

It must have been a rare sight for everyone packed into Honghwa Inn. The heirs of the Five Gates of Shanxi were crawling across the floor like grubs.

Two of them were even women.

The whispers of the people surrounding us cut into my ears.

"Is that really okay?"

"I know, right? Even if they are the Five Gates of Shanxi… Couldn't this turn into another one of those big fights over Murim gratitude and grudges?"

"Don't be so clueless. Are you really that out of touch with what's happening these days? Maybe things would be different if the Mount Heng Sword Sect were still standing, but now, every small and medium-sized sect in Shanxi could join forces and still might not stop the Jin Family of Taiyuan."

"It's that bad?"

"They might outnumber them if they gathered everyone, but the caliber is completely different. You only have to look at the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi over there to see that."

"That's true. Those Five Gates heirs swaggered around like big shots, but they're nothing before the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi."

"If you think about it, they were the ones who picked the fight first."

"That's true, too."

"And since we're on the subject, there's something rotten about everyone calling themselves the Five Gates of Shanxi these days."

"Rotten?"

"They call themselves an orthodox faction, but they're really just sucking the marrow out of ordinary people without anyone noticing. Just look at the Seongun Escort Bureau. How many complaints have merchants made about them?"

"Were all those rumors true?"

"What about the Jin Family of Taiyuan? When famine struck ten years ago, they released relief grain. Long before that, they even held off the Demonic Cult. Those bastards were vicious murderous fiends who went around killing ordinary people like us. If not for the Jin Family of Taiyuan… Ugh. I don't even want to think about it."

"That's right. I also heard it was the Jin Family of Taiyuan that drove off the mounted bandits who crossed over from Gaoyuan this time."

"Is there anyone who hasn't heard that rumor yet? They say the Heaven Shaking Sword and the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi slaughtered every last one of them."

"My goodness."

"So even if another war breaks out, what's there to worry about? I swear, if the Five Gates of Shanxi try to make an issue of this, I'll join the Jin Family of Taiyuan immediately and fight!"

"Oh!"

"That's some impressive chivalrous spirit for such a young man. Now that I've heard you out, I think you're right. Here, have a drink on me!"

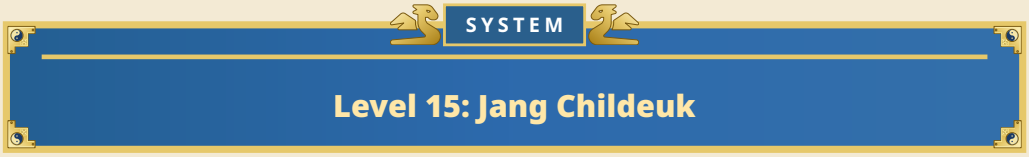
Whack! Whack! Whack!

After turning three of the four young prodigies into grubs, I turned toward the voices.

The speaker had defended the Jin Family of Taiyuan so passionately that, by the time he finished, I wanted to buy him a drink myself.

In terms of mindset, he's already one of our Jin Family.

If his Level were high enough, he'd be my first recruitment pick. Smiling with satisfaction, I checked the great orator's Level Window.



"…What the fuck?"

Jang Childeuk? The Jang Childeuk I know?

Looking again, I realized I definitely recognized him.

He was the servant who had faithfully brought us meals while I was receiving one-on-one intensive training from Jin Mukyung.

That Jang Childeuk was the great orator's true identity.

Holy shit. Goose bumps.

No wonder he'd been taking the Jin Family's side so aggressively.

Nothing he'd said was wrong, of course, but manipulating public opinion like this…

I was trembling as though I'd uncovered some enormous political conspiracy when someone spoke.

"Um…"

It was Cheongpung, the one person I had momentarily forgotten. He spoke up, his eyes clear.

"There's still one person left."

"Ah."

The last man lying face down flinched. Cheongpung seemed innocent in his own way, but he was also strangely frightening.

Not that I had any intention of going easy on him just because he was last.

"I was just about to hit him."

I was about to swing the sword case when Cheongpung spoke again.
“Excuse me. May I ask you one difficult favor?”
“We’re out of candied hawthorn skewers[796] now.”
“That’s not it. I, uh…”
Cheongpung hesitated, then quietly pointed at the sword case.
“I’d like to try hitting the last gentleman.”
“What?”
“I’ve never done anything like this before…”
“…”
I had seen every kind of nutcase in my life, but this was my first time seeing a first-experience villain.

[796]Candied hawthorn skewers are a traditional snack of fruit skewers coated in hardened sugar.

Chapter 136

“Ugh.”

“Gnnngh.”

The two men’s eyes met as they groaned. Seeing each other lying face down with their bare buttocks exposed was embarrassing, yet it also gave them a strange sense of solidarity.

“Ahem. Young Hero Jeong, how are your wounds?”

“Ahem. More or less. How about you, Young Hero Gal?”

“I feel like I’m going to die—hngh!”

“Actually, so do I—ngh!”

The pain returned as they spoke. Both men blinked back tears and muttered,

“There’s bad luck, and then there’s this. Of all the people we could have run into, why did it have to be the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi?”

“I know. I never thought I’d suffer this kind of humiliation in my lifetime.”

The mood was gloomy.

Things might have been different in the Central Plains, where countless prestigious sects stood shoulder to shoulder. But in borderland Shanxi Province, both men were heirs to sects big enough to swagger around spitting and farting as they pleased.

They had never once had to humble themselves before anyone. Now they lay groaning in bed after being thoroughly beaten.

“Even when the Mount Heng Sword Sect was still standing, the Five Gates of Shanxi weren’t reduced to this…”

“Those were the days.”

A few months ago, the alliance of small and medium-sized sects led by the Five Gates of Shanxi could still have made its voice heard. Now, they couldn’t even squeak. The balance of Shanxi Murim had been shattered.

With the fall of the Mount Heng Sword Sect, the balance of power in Shanxi Murim was bound to tilt toward the Jin Family of Taiyuan.

“My father will kill me if he finds out.”

“Same here. He warned me so many times. If he finds out this happened… Ugh. I don’t even want to think about it.”

They had been publicly humiliated in front of more than a hundred people. By around New Year’s Day, the rumor would certainly have spread throughout all of Shanxi.

“If I had my way, I’d run far away.”

“To hell with running away. I don’t even know if I’ll be able to walk tomorrow. But I can’t refuse the City Lord’s summons, either…”

“Even if our legs are broken, we still have to go. What else can we do? He isn’t just some ordinary City Lord. He’s a member of the imperial family.”

“That’s true. At least our faces are fine.”

“They are.”

Their gazes naturally shifted to the side.

Woo Jintae lay there as though dead, his face swollen like he had been stung by a swarm of wasps. If not for the occasional labored breath, they would have thought he was already dead.

“Still, how could anyone beat a man that badly?”

“I never knew the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi was this vicious.”

“Thank goodness we planted our heads on the floor beforehand. We almost ended up just like Brother Woo.”

“He absolutely would have done it. Isn’t he the bastard who beats women without mercy, too?”

There were two women in their group. A man might be expected to go soft in front of young, beautiful women, but that bastard Jin Taekyung’s reaction had gone far beyond anything they expected.

“Age.”

“Y-yes?”

“Age. How old are you?”

“I-I’m seventeen.”

“And you?”

“I-I’m eighteen.”

Seventeen and eighteen. They were in the flower of youth, old enough that it wouldn’t have been strange for talk of marriage to begin.

Just as everyone wondered whether Jin Taekyung might be interested in the women—

“Lift your butt higher. You’ll break a bone.”

Whack! Whack!

“You kids are still wet behind the ears! And you’re already drinking!”

Whack! Whack!

“If you’re going to drink, hide somewhere and do it quietly! Don’t pick a fight with someone who was minding his own business!”

Whack! Whack!

“You haven’t learned how to behave! People like you are exactly why corporal punishment is necessary! Do you understand or not?”

Whack! Whack!

“Improve teacher authority! A certain amount of corporal punishment is absolutely necessary!”

Whack! Whack! Whack!

The two men shuddered at the memory.

One woman had fainted, while the other had wept until tears and snot streamed down her face in front of everyone.

After having their buttocks thoroughly beaten by a man outside their families in front of so many people, it was only a matter of time before their marriage prospects were ruined.

“What in the world does ‘improve teacher authority’ mean? Is it something from Mencius[797]?”

“I don’t know, either. He even hit them one extra time.”

“What a vicious bastard…”

“Even so, I envy the others.”

“What kind of outrageous thing is that to say? Can’t you see that your butt is covered in bruises?”

“At least the others were beaten by the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi. I was beaten by some beggar-looking bastard… Sob!”

“Oh, that’s awful.”

“If I’d been beaten by the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, at least I could make excuses. But some mangy bastard who crawled in from who-knows-where beat my butt… Who borrows a beating instead of money?”

His chin trembled with humiliation as he remembered the beggar-like man taking the sword case from Jin Taekyung and gleefully laying into him.

“Wow, this is fun! Your butt has some great bounce!”

Whack! Whack! Whack!

“Does it hurt? How much does it hurt? If you don’t mind, may I hit you harder? This is my first time doing something like this, so please understand if I’m not very good at controlling my strength!”

Whack! Whack! Whack!

He had suffered a humiliation he would never forget until the day he died—or even after. He wanted to chew that bastard up from head to toe and swallow him piece by piece, and even that wouldn’t have been enough.

“I will never forgive that bastard!”

“Don’t worry. I’ll do everything in my power to help you, Young Hero Jeong!”

Who were they? They were heirs to the Five Gates of Shanxi. Jin Taekyung of the Jin Family of Taiyuan might be beyond their reach, but they certainly had enough power to deal with one young beggar.

“Um, about that…”

---

[797] Mencius was an ancient Chinese philosopher whose teachings became part of the Confucian tradition.

"Yes?"

"Are you certain he's really a beggar? I'm not saying this because I'm afraid, but after what happened with the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, it occurs to me that there's no harm in being thorough…"

"…Should we look into him a little more?"

"Y-yes. Let's do that."

One group beating had taught the pampered rich kids to be cautious.

Once the lesson was over, we decided to move to a private room.

Staying on the first floor meant enduring the stares of all the surrounding guests.

Basking in people's attention was fun for a moment or two, but if I tried to eat like this, I'd probably lose track of whether the food was going into my mouth or up my nose.

"My name is Seok, and I oversee Honghwa Inn. Please feel free to call me Chief Steward Seok."

The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi's reputation really was something. The chief steward, who hadn't shown so much as a hair until now, had come out personally to bow to me.

This man must be part of the Lower District Sect, too, right?

Honghwaru served as the base of Wolhwa, Chief Branch Leader of the Lower District Sect in Shanxi, and judging by its name, Honghwa Inn was practically a subordinate organization.

He might even have known about my existence before I set foot inside Honghwa Inn.

I can't say that makes me feel particularly good.

Was it overreacting to think that unseen gazes were monitoring my every move?

Still, I wasn't exactly offended.

It was more like a little caution. We had certainly maintained a friendly relationship until now, but no one knew what might happen in the future.

"I've prepared a separate, quiet place for you."

"Oh, that sounds good."

They were offering us special treatment without even being asked, so there was no reason to refuse. I was about to follow the chief steward when—

"Thank you for everything, Benefactor."

I turned toward the voice and found Cheongpung smiling innocently.

"What do you mean? Surely you aren't planning to leave just like this?"

"Yes. It's already late, so I was thinking of heading out."

Going where? We barely got to talk because those random bastards barged in.

I hurriedly waved him off.

“Come on, if it’s late, you should stay the night. You said you don’t have any travel money, right?”

“It’s all right. I’m used to sleeping rough.”

“You shouldn’t be used to that. Right, a new experience! Have you ever slept at an inn?”

“I stayed at inns a few times before I lost my travel money. And I’ve already imposed on you both more than enough.”

Hyuk Mujin muttered beside me.

“That’s true. My candied hawthorn skewers[798]…”

“You be quiet. So, are you really leaving?”

“Yes. Fortunately, I still have business left in Shanxi Province, so if we happen to get the chance, we’ll meet again.”

At this point, I had nothing left to say. If a Peak master was determined to leave of his own accord, I couldn’t exactly hold him back by claiming the roads were dangerous at night.

Still, I was dying to know the identity of this oddball who had suddenly appeared out of nowhere.

“If you have nowhere to go, come to the Jin Family of Taiyuan. Give them my name and they’ll let you in.”

“Oh, come to think of it, you’re a Young Master of the Jin Family of Taiyuan, aren’t you? The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, Jin Taekyung… I’ll remember my Benefactor’s name.”

He had known who I was for some time, but it hadn’t fazed him in the slightest. His reaction amounted to, Oh, I see. That was it.

Hyuk Mujin subtly caught my eye before cutting in.

“The Jin Family of Taiyuan. You don’t know it?”

“Well, I think I’ve heard of it somewhere. It does sound familiar, but I don’t really know much about it.”

Cheongpung tilted his head for a moment, then bowed to us.

“If fate brings us together, we’ll meet again. Then I’ll be off.”

I bid him farewell with deep regret.

“Take care. And don’t forget the Jin Family of Taiyuan.”

“Haha, of course I won’t.”

He turned away with a hearty laugh. Thinking the conversation was over, the chief steward spoke.

---

[798] A sweet made by coating skewered hawthorn fruit in hardened sugar.

“Then I’ll escort you to the annex.”

“Ah, yes. Mujin, let’s go.”

“Oh! We get to sleep in the annex of the famous Honghwa Inn?”

“We stayed in the annex at Phoenix Inn, too. Why are you acting like this is something new?”

“What are you talking about? If Phoenix Inn is a young prodigy, then Honghwa Inn is a Peak master whose fame is already known. Its hot springs, in particular, are such a renowned attraction that even high officials and nobles visit them.”

“Hot springs?”

“I’ve only heard about them from rumors, but they say there’s no paradise like it.”

The chief steward added calmly,

“My father is turning eighty this year. He came here once and nearly departed for paradise.”

“…Isn’t that dangerous?”

“It only means the hot springs are that good. He’s still hale and hearty.”

“Ah, I see. I hope he lives a long life.”

Hot springs…

I had gone to saunas plenty of times, but I had never visited a hot spring. Just thinking about sinking into pleasantly hot water already had me excited.

“Ahem. Shall we go?”

“I’ll escort you.”

I was just about to follow the chief steward when a firm hand suddenly seized my shoulder.

“Um. Did you just say hot springs?”

“…You haven’t left yet?”

Looking at Cheongpung’s sheepish grin, I was certain of one thing.

I’d bet both my balls this bastard had never been to a hot spring.

In the early dawn, while darkness still lay thick over the estate’s training ground, a man was swinging a sword.

He looked to be about thirty. His strong, rugged features were striking.

Swish, swish, swish!

He thrust, slashed, and swung without pause. Each form flowed smoothly into the next, like flower petals fluttering in the wind.

As the Seven Plum Sword, in which he had reached eight-tenths mastery, cut through the chilly dawn air, a messenger opened the main gate and entered.

“What is it? I forbade anyone from entering while I’m training.”

“My apologies. But His Highness Prince Shangshan ordered me to deliver a message…”

“His Highness?”

“Yes. His Highness commands you to attend today’s luncheon at noon.”

“The luncheon… You mean the gathering where the young prodigies of Murim are coming?”

“Yes, sir.”

The man let out a deep sigh. He was a Third-Rank Assistant Military Commissioner, an official who could easily be counted among the five highest-ranking figures in Shanxi Province.

I can’t refuse an order from His Highness. What a nuisance.

The position of Assistant Military Commissioner was by no means an idle one. It was a weighty office responsible for training the soldiers.

But the order had come from Prince Shangshan, the City Lord and a man of royal blood. The man had no choice but to nod.

“Tell His Highness that I accept the royal command.”

“Yes, sir!”

After the messenger departed, the man raised his sword once more.

As he resumed the Seven Plum Sword, the plum blossoms of Huashan, which he had left long ago, seemed to bloom from his blade.

Chapter 137

“Are you awake?”

A familiar face abruptly opened the annex door and barged in.

I had just finished circulating my qi, so I unfolded my legs from the lotus position and spoke.

“You came in without even waiting for an answer?”

“Come on, Captain. You and I aren’t that distant.”

“What kind of relationship do you and I have?”

“Comrades in arms who don’t share blood but can fight back-to-back? A lord-and-vassal relationship tightly bound by affection and trust?”

“Affection? Hmm. You’re determined to get beaten half to death first thing in the morning.”

“One hit, then. Surely it won’t kill me.”

He was getting more shameless by the day. I let out a quiet laugh and shook my head.

“Enough. What brings you here so early?”

“Obviously… Wait, what’s with that guy? Did he sleep here?”

Hyuk Mujin stared incredulously at Cheongpung, who lay sprawled in the corner.

“Why would he sleep here when the annex has several rooms?”

“Leave him alone. It happens. I came back from the privy and found him asleep.”

Long story short, my attempt to uncover Cheongpung’s identity had ended in complete failure.

The moment he got out of the hot spring, he had fallen asleep from exhaustion. I couldn’t bring myself to wake him, so I slept, too.

“Even so, Captain. How could you let a strange man you met yesterday sleep in your room?”

“…That sounded a little strange.”

“That’s not what I meant. I’m saying you should be more careful.”

“Careful? Anyone listening to you would think he was an assassin.”

“Can you say for certain he isn’t?”

“What?”

“You’re a good man in many ways, Captain, but I think you take the Murim too lightly. It’s a place tangled in complicated gratitude and grudges. Let your guard down, and you could really end up dead.”

“What an unlucky thing to say. Want me to send you there?”

“Seriously! I’m not joking.”

Mujin thumped his chest in frustration, then watched the sleeping Cheongpung with wary eyes.

"Isn't he a little strange? He seems remarkably skilled for someone so young, yet he wanders around looking like a beggar. And he isn't even a Disciple of the Beggars' Sect."

"Maybe that's just the way he's wired."

"What if all of that is just a disguise meant to lower people's guard? If he were a trained assassin, it would be entirely possible."

"An assassin? Who would even want to target me?"

"Why wouldn't anyone?"

"You know I'm not such a bastard that I make people hold grudges against me everywhere I go."

"…Just counting yesterday, I think at least five people now have a grudge against you."

Come to think of it, he had a point.

Still, suspecting Cheongpung of being an assassin was an overreaction.

I spoke to Mujin, who was still shooting Cheongpung suspicious glances.

"This guy isn't one. If he were an assassin, would I still be alive?"

"Well, that's true."

"And what assassin? Aside from those Five Gates of Shanxi bastards, who could possibly have a reason to hold a grudge against me?"

"Did the Head Elder try to kill you because of some personal grudge? What about the martial artists of our family who died in the last war?"

"That… is true."

Mujin shook his head.

"I'm only telling you to be careful. Gratitude and grudges in the Murim run deep and stay hidden, so no one knows when or where something might happen."

"Hmm."

"Flies swarm around appetizing food. The more famous the name Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi becomes, the more trouble you'll have to deal with. There are even people who show up out of nowhere and challenge you to a life-and-death duel."

The world was a big place, and there were plenty of lunatics in it. I was surprised to hear something I'd never heard of, but I was also impressed by Mujin.

This guy is saying something genuinely useful for once.

"You know quite a lot. What a good boy."

"Ahem. It's nothing worth making a fuss over. I've just seen a lot of things."

As expected of a local. People in the Murim around my age had apparently seen assassins killing people and all kinds of other things.

“Does that sort of thing happen all the time in the Murim? You know, you go out to the market and see martial artists picking fights with each other?”

“What?”

Mujin blinked.

“What are you talking about? This is Taiyuan. The public order is excellent.”

“Oh. So not often, but sometimes?”

“Sometimes? I lived in Taiyuan for nearly twenty years before entering the Jin Family of Taiyuan, and I never once saw martial artists fighting each other.”

“…What?”

“The Shanxi Provincial Office, where the City Lord resides, is half a shichen[799] west of here, and the Jin Family of Taiyuan is one shichen[800] east. Starting a sword fight for no reason would only make your life miserable. Even the lowest wandering martial artists pretend to be Great Heroes of Benevolence and Righteousness in Taiyuan. You didn’t know that?”

What the hell was this guy talking about?

After a brief silence, I spoke.

“You said you’d seen a lot of things, didn’t you?”

“What? Oh, that?”

“Yes, that.”

“Of course I read about that in books.”

“…Books?”

“Yes. There was a bookstore run by an old man in front of my house. For one nyang[801] in iron coins, you could read for half a shichen[802]. That’s where I nurtured my dreams.”

Mujin gazed out the window with a nostalgic look in his eyes.

“The Shop Assistant Becomes a Sword God, You Must Hurt to Become a Martial Artist, The Son of Murim Walks Three and a Half Times Around the Nine Provinces and Eight Wastes[803], and so on… They were really interesting.”

“Oh, so you decided to become a martial artist after reading those books.”

“Of course. I even bought and kept a few of them when the bookstore went under. Would you like to borrow them?”

“No, I’m good. Anyway, Mujin.”

“Yes?”

“Do you really want to get beaten to death?”

I was an idiot for being impressed.

---

[799] A shichen is a traditional Chinese time unit of about two hours; half a shichen is about one hour.
[800] A shichen is a traditional Chinese time unit of about two hours; half a shichen is about one hour.
[801] Nyang is a traditional unit of currency. Here it denotes an amount in iron coins, not modern won.
[802] A shichen is a traditional Chinese time unit of about two hours; half a shichen is about one hour.
[803] “Nine Provinces and Eight Wastes” is a literary expression for the whole world.

This wuxia-novel[804] otaku[805] bastard was confusing fiction with reality. I grabbed Mujin by the lapels.

“Do you think novels and reality are the same? Huh? Didn’t any of the novels you read have someone getting beaten to death for running his mouth?”

“W-wait! Wait! I’ve never personally witnessed anything like that, but the Murim is more than capable of—”

“Right. Next otaku.[806]”

Smack!

Honghwa Inn stood in the heart of Taiyuan. Even in Taiyuan, known as Shanxi’s prime real estate, it was famous for its prime location.

It was only natural for the area in front of Honghwa Inn to be crowded with people, but today the crowd was unusually large.

“Oh dear, what’s all this?”

“There’s a carriage and soldiers… Hey, Mr. Yang, have you heard anything? Is a war breaking out?”

“I haven’t heard nothin’.”

Amid the murmuring, a luxurious, enormous carriage drawn by six fine horses came to a stop.

Then at least a hundred soldiers stood in neat ranks at the entrance to Honghwa Inn. An official dressed in his robes shouted loudly,

“Receive the royal command of His Highness Prince Shangshan!”

“Receive the royal command!”

The short phrase royal command carried tremendous weight. On top of that, the thunderous cry of a hundred elite soldiers caused hushed voices to spill out from every direction.

“Did you hear that?”

“Do you think my ears are decorations? I heard them say royal command.”

“Any idea what this is about?”

“I heard the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi is staying at Honghwa Inn. Isn’t it probably because of him? Everyone knows the young Prince likes martial arts.”

“I know that much, but I’m saying this because His Highness has never made such a commotion before.”

[804] Wuxia is a genre of Chinese martial-arts adventure fiction.
[805] Otaku is a Japanese term for a person with an intense interest in a hobby or fandom.
[806] Otaku is a Japanese term for a person with an intense interest in a hobby or fandom.

“Well, the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi has become awfully famous lately. Not long ago, he even wiped out those Red Wind Band bastards in place of the government troops, so he’s certainly performed a great service.”

“Do you think His Highness plans to grant him an official post… Ah, they’re coming out! They’re coming!”

At someone’s shout, countless eyes turned toward the entrance of the inn.

The doors stood wide open. As the people summoned by the Prince appeared beneath the glaring sunlight, a wave of excitement spread through the onlookers.

“Oh! Is that the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi?”

“There’s more than one of them.”

“They’re wearing swords, so I suppose the others are young prodigies, too.”

“Then which one is the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi?”

“Can’t you tell at a glance? The tallest and most handsome one in the middle. That’s Jin Taekyung, the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi.”

“My, my. They’re all handsome men and beautiful women, aren’t they?”

As the people whispered, five figures emerged, each one worthy of being called a dragon or phoenix.

Among them, Jin Taekyung’s presence stood out like a crane among chickens. At the very moment admiring gazes poured toward him as he stood tall in the center —

“Ugh!”

Thud!

“…?”

“…?”

One of the young prodigies suddenly crumpled to the ground.

Not only the onlookers but even the soldiers standing at attention stared at the fallen prodigy as though they had no idea what was going on.

“Ahem. Ahem!”

At the official’s pointed cough, the fallen man’s face turned bright red.

The young prodigy who had fallen flat on his face got back up on legs trembling like a newborn calf. The official unfurled a red silk scroll.

“Ahem. Young prodigies of Murim, receive this royal command! I, the younger brother of the sacred Son of Heaven[807]…”

“Eek!”

Thud!

This time, the one who collapsed was a woman.

[807] Son of Heaven is a traditional title for the Emperor.

The unexpected accident made the official's breathing turn ragged for a moment. But he was the bearer of a royal command. He couldn't let something so trivial throw him off.

The official composed himself and took another breath.

"I-I…"

"Gasp!"

Thud!

"The command I bestow upon you…"

"Eek!"

Thud!

This time, even the official couldn't escape the disaster. Perhaps he had bitten his tongue, because a crunch came from his mouth, followed by blood streaming down his lips.

The crowd fell silent, though for a different reason than before.

As the official stood there in despair, one man strode confidently up to him and whispered,

"Do we really have to do this outside? Why don't we just do it inside?"

The official considered Taekyung's words for a moment before answering.

"Let'sh do that."

"…Just nod. You're getting blood on your clothes."

The official spoke with a grave expression.

"How on earth did this happen?"

Everyone was watching me for a response. In the end, I had no choice but to explain the situation as briefly and clearly as possible.

"The kids aren't feeling well."

"Not feeling well? What do you mean?"

"They're the fresh young pillars of Murim, aren't they? They trained so hard to become stronger that they wore themselves down. That's why they keep collapsing."

"Is that really what happened?"

"…"

"…"

It was quiet enough to hear a mouse breathe. I turned slightly and asked,

"He's asking whether that's true. Did you not hear him?"

The four young prodigies of the Five Gates of Shanxi jolted as though they had seen a ghost.

"O-oh, no. We heard him. We were just thinking of an answer…"

"Th-that's right. I thought someone else would answer…"

"What is there to think about? Just tell him the truth. Isn't that right? Hahaha."

Of course, if they told the truth, they would get some private one-on-one time with me. The law was far away, and fists were close at hand.

If the four of them wanted to keep living peacefully in Shanxi Murim, they had no choice but to stay on the Jin Family of Taiyuan's good side. They forced the corners of their mouths upward.

"Well, that's what happened."

The official looked dubious as he asked another question.

"But why is one person missing? As I understand it, there should be six of you, including Young Hero Jin."

"Ah, you mean the Young Bureau Head of the Seongun Escort Bureau."

"That must be him. His name was…"

"Jintae. Woo Jintae."

"That's right. Why hasn't he come out?"

Because that one is in no condition to look human.

If I had known from the start that the Five Gates of Shanxi's young prodigies had been invited to this luncheon with me, I wouldn't have beaten him quite so badly.

Well, what's done is done.

All I could do was clean up the mess as best I could.

I shook my head with the most sympathetic expression I could manage.

"Last night, he was injured in a minor altercation and still hasn't regained consciousness."

"An altercation? Are you saying he got into a fistfight?"

"Something like that. In any case, his face is in such a state that he simply can't appear in front of people."

"Good heavens. What kind of fiend would do that to a guest invited by His Highness?"

"…"

This felt really strange. With the culprit standing right in front of him, the official muttered something about treason, then lamented.

"This is a serious matter. Whatever the reason, the fact remains that he can't attend the invitation. How furious will His Highness be when he learns of this?"

"Could I perhaps explain things to him properly?"

"Young Master, you don't understand. Once His Highness takes offense, no one can stop him. The surrounding area will be turned into a wasteland for the time being."

"Turned into a wasteland? What do you mean by that?"

“What else could I mean? First, they’ll arrest and severely punish the man who injured the Young Bureau Head of the Seongun Escort Bureau. Then, citing the terrible state of public order, dozens of officials will be forced to resign. I’ll probably be one of them.”

“…”

Why would they take it that far?

The official, who looked like he was about to be laid off in the prime of his life, added the finishing touch with a tragic expression.

“I have more than ten family members to feed… Sigh. I can only blame the heavens.”

He has a big family, too.

I was squirming in my seat and desperately racking my brain when—

“Yaaawn.”

A carefree yawn, completely at odds with the mood.

My eyes lit up when I saw someone coming downstairs with a long stretch.

“Hey, how about this?”

“Hm? What do you mean?”

“If we bring along an even more impressive young prodigy, there won’t be a problem. Right?”

“I can’t be certain, but that’s probably true. His Highness wouldn’t complain if you found someone even more outstanding.”

Perfect.

With a triumphant smile, I waved at Cheongpung.

He was a young prodigy who was no less than a Peak master.

“Have you ever seen a member of the imperial family?”

Chapter 138

The luxurious six-horse carriage raced onward without slowing.

Elite-looking soldiers cleared the road ahead, while the crowds swarming like ants parted to either side and watched the carriage fly past like the wind.

"So this is how Moses[808] felt."

Cheongpung reacted to my mutter.

"Moses? Who is that?"

"Someone."

"Oh, I see."

If it had been Hyuk Mujin, he would have complained for ages about me saying something weird, but Cheongpung was different.

He wore the excited expression of a child at an amusement park as he pressed and tapped every part of the carriage.

"This is my first time riding in a six-horse carriage!"

"…What about a four-horse carriage?"

"I've never ridden in one of those, either!"

"What about an ordinary carriage…?"

"I'd like to ride in one of those, too!"

"…"

If I put him on a subway, he would probably faint.

At this point, it would be much faster to count the things he had done than the things he hadn't.

I stared at the thoroughly excited Cheongpung.

What the hell is this guy?

Was he innocent or stupid?

Then again, he had said he had lived his entire life in the mountains. Maybe this was only natural.

At least he's easy to handle.

I still couldn't forget the expression he had just made. His eyes had lit up like high beams at the mere mention of the imperial family.

"Have you ever seen a member of the imperial family?"

"I want to! I'll see one! Please let me see one!"

What filled his eyes wasn't the sort of admiration ordinary commoners felt toward the imperial family. If I had to compare it to something, it was more like the excitement of going to see an elephant at the zoo.

He really is a strange one.

---

[808] In the biblical account, Moses parted the Red Sea to lead his people through it.

Apparently, I wasn't the only one who thought so.

The young prodigies of the Five Gates of Shanxi, excluding the severely injured Woo Jintae, were staring at Cheongpung as if they were looking at something bizarre.

"There's something a little… off about him."

"Can we really go like this?"

"If he says something inappropriate in front of His Highness, we might get dragged into it, too."

"We'll be lucky if that's all he does. If he gets excited about seeing a member of the imperial family for the first time and pulls on Prince Shangshan's ear, we're finished. Completely finished."

…That was a surprisingly plausible prediction.

Hearing the young prodigies whispering, the official riding in the carriage with us leaned over anxiously and whispered.

"Um, Young Master Jin."

"Yes?"

"That man… Are you certain he's all right?"

"Trust me. He's a master I can vouch for."

"To hell with whether he's a master. I'm asking whether he's right in the head."

"Oh."

"Wouldn't it be better to bring along the martial artist who was with you instead?"

"Who? Ah, Hyuk Mujin?"

"I believe that was his name. I hear he's also quite skilled in martial arts."

If Mujin had heard that, he would have jumped for joy.

The problem was that he had a dark blue bruise on his face from getting beaten by me that morning, so there was no way he could come along.

Besides, Hyuk Mujin wouldn't be enough.

To avoid offending the young prince, I needed to bring a more impressive gift.

I firmly shook my head at the worried official.

"Don't worry. I'll take responsibility for keeping him under control."

Who was I? A direct descendant of the prestigious Jin Family of Taiyuan, a rising star, and Shanxi Murim's newest sensation.

My bold assurance brightened the official's expression a little.

"Then I'll trust Young Master Jin—"

Crack.

"…?"

"…?"

Wait a second. What was that sound?

As if on cue, we all turned our heads at the same time.

There was Cheongpung, clutching something in his hands.

“Huh? Why did this fall off?”

Cheongpung grinned foolishly, holding an exquisitely crafted golden dragon. After a long silence, the official looked at me.

“Young Master Jin.”

“Yes?”

“Are you certain he’s all right?”

After thinking it over, I opened my mouth.

“Probably.”

The space was so vast that it could have been called a castle rather than a residence. A man strode through it without hesitation.

Everyone who saw his tightly set lips and resolute gaze paid their respects.

“Greetings, Assistant Military Commissioner.”

He acknowledged them with a nod and quickened his pace.

After passing through a corridor lined with endless pillars, how long had he been walking? The man finally stopped when a massive iron gate engraved with a dragon appeared before him.

“Announce me.”

“Yes, sir.”

A commander of the guard saluted him and called out in a powerful voice.

“His Excellency Li Feng, Assistant Military Commissioner of Shanxi Province, entering!”

Before long, a voice answered from within.

“Let him enter.”

“…!”

The voice was neither as high and childish as a little boy’s nor as deep as a grown man’s.

The man—Li Feng—seemed to realize something. His eyebrows shot up just as the iron gate opened with a heavy groan.

Grrrnnng.

Beyond it lay an extravagantly decorated grand hall. Gold and silver treasures glittered in every direction, and a table large enough to seat dozens was laden with every delicacy from land and sea.

The sight would have left anyone else gaping. But Li Feng’s gaze remained fixed on a single point.

How is he here?

At the end of Li Feng's gaze, a man seated at the head of the table smiled faintly.

Wrapped in dazzling red silk, the man spoke in a coy, lilting voice.

"Well, well. If it isn't our Assistant Commissioner Li."

Our Assistant Commissioner Li?

Li Feng bit down on his lips and performed a military salute.

"…Greetings, Deputy Military Commissioner."

The Deputy Military Commissioner was a second-rank official, with only two such posts in each province.

Aside from the Military Commissioner, the supreme military commander, and Prince Shangshan, the City Lord, it was the highest position in the province. As deputy commander, he also wielded tremendous authority.

That was what the public knew. In truth, the man before him possessed even greater power.

That bastard deserves to be beaten to death.

A sycophant and corrupt official who used his glib tongue and petty tricks to blind the young prince's eyes and ears while lining his own pockets. That was Li Feng's assessment of him.

But even under Li Feng's hostile gaze, the man's smile never faltered.

"Assistant Commissioner Li, it's been a while. Isn't the atmosphere a little too tense? Did I perhaps do something to offend you?"

"…Of course not. I was merely surprised to find you in a place like this, Deputy Military Commissioner."

"A place like this?"

"It is a gathering of martial artists from the martial world. They are rather rough people, so I was concerned that you might be uncomfortable, Deputy Military Commissioner."

His words sounded considerate, but both men knew what he truly meant.

"Why would I? I like places like this. Besides, you've been awfully formal with my title. Just call me whatever you like. We're close enough, aren't we?"

"And what sort of relationship do we have?"

"The kind where we'd split even a single bean. True and loyal subjects who serve His Highness with all our hearts."

Split a bean? True and loyal subjects?

Li Feng asked bluntly, "Then may I call you Eunuch Hong?"

Eunuch Hong's smile stiffened for a moment.

With that single word, Li Feng had touched his sore spot.

"That's… a little too familiar, don't you think?"

"I only followed your instructions."

“Well, this is a surprise. I had no idea Assistant Commissioner Li considered me that close.”

“I’m overwhelmed that you finally understand how I feel.”

“Assistant Commissioner Li.”

“Did you call, Eunuch Hong? Or would you prefer that I go back to calling you Deputy Military Commissioner?”

A heavy silence settled over the hall.

It was a long while before Eunuch Hong spoke again.

“Our Assistant Commissioner Li has improved quite a bit, hasn’t he?”

“Have I?”

“Yes. Compared to a few years ago, you’ve made remarkable progress.”

“I’ve learned many things thanks to you.”

“I thought you were only good with a sword, but now I see you’re good with your tongue, too. I’ll have to look at you differently.”

“I’m still nowhere near as skilled as a certain someone.”

Their gazes collided in midair. Amid the taut silence, Eunuch Hong smiled gently.

“Well, we can talk about that later… May I ask you one thing?”

His opponent was no pushover, but he had taken a step back. If Li Feng kept biting at him, he would only put himself at a disadvantage. He silently nodded.

“Ask.”

“You said you used to belong to Huashan, didn’t you?”

Li Feng paused. Huashan was a place he both missed and remembered with pain.

It had been nearly ten years since he had left Mount Hua, but the memories of that time still remained deep in his body and heart.

“Yes. I was a lay disciple.”

“And Huashan is in Shaanxi?”

He and Eunuch Hong were what one might call political enemies. For that very reason, they knew one another inside and out.

Eunuch Hong was neither careless nor stupid enough to ask about such a basic fact without a reason.

If anything, he was a crafty bastard with a hundred snakes writhing inside him.

That only made Li Feng more puzzled.

“That’s right. But why are you suddenly asking?”

“I’ve come to know a few people recently, and I wondered if you might know them, too.”

“Are they martial artists?”

“Yes. From Shaanxi, no less.”

“Don’t tell me they’re from Huashan…?”

“Oh, come on. If they were, I would have told you already.”

Li Feng sighed in relief.

In the end, he had left of his own accord, but Huashan was still the sect he would be proud of for the rest of his life. It was a tremendous relief that Huashan had not become entangled with a sycophant like Eunuch Hong.

“There are more than one or two sects in Shaanxi. And I didn’t go outside while training at the main sect, so even if I heard their names, I might not recognize them.”

“Is that so? Then perhaps you would recognize them if you saw their faces?”

“…?”

At the sight of Li Feng’s expression, Eunuch Hong picked up the chopsticks lying on the table.

“You asked earlier why I was here, didn’t you?”

The beautifully crafted silver chopsticks tapped against a wine cup.

Ping.

The clear sound spread through the hall.

Eunuch Hong smiled with his eyes at the bewildered Li Feng.

“I invited a few acquaintances. Famous and powerful martial artists whom His Highness would enjoy meeting.”

At that moment, a powerful shout rang out from beyond the iron gate.

“The Three Hands of Zhongnan request an audience!”

“The Three Hands of Zhongnan… The Zhongnan Sect!”

Li Feng’s complexion changed drastically.

Huashan and the Zhongnan Sect had been bitter rivals fighting for supremacy in Shaanxi for a full hundred years.

Eunuch Hong’s intentions were every bit as clear as the smile on his face.

“They’re fellow Shaanxi men, so I thought I’d arrange a gathering. You don’t mind, do you?”

Just as Li Feng clenched his fists, the massive iron gate opened and three imposing men strode into the hall.

One of them had a familiar face.

“Well, well. If it isn’t Li Feng of Huashan?”

Li Feng shuddered. The moment he saw that man’s face, the humiliating memory from ten years ago came rushing back.

“How did you get here?”

The sharp-eyed man answered casually.

“How else? When the Deputy Military Commissioner of Shanxi Province invites you, you have to come running even if it’s a thousand li[809] away. Isn’t that right?”

“You’re too kind. I’m the one grateful that you accepted the invitation.”

Li Feng ground his teeth. Gong Ilhyuk, the third of the Three Hands of Zhongnan, grinned at him.

“Anyway, you’ve done well for yourself. Assistant Military Commissioner, someone like you… Huashan must have spread around quite a few silver nyang[810] for you. Hmm?”

“How dare you insult Huashan?”

“Insult Huashan? You’re the one who insulted it. Ten years ago, who was it that fell to his knees after only a hundred or so exchanges with that magnificent Huashan martial arts?”

“You bastard!”

A thunderous shout burst from Li Feng’s mouth.

At the moment he glared at Gong Ilhyuk with eyes that seemed to pour out streams of flame, a third shout rang out from beyond the iron gate.

“The young prodigies of Shanxi Murim request an audience!”

[809] The Chinese li is a unit of distance equal to about 500 m (0.311 mi). A thousand li is about 500 km (311 mi).

[810] A silver nyang is a historical unit of silver currency.

Chapter 139

Less than a shichen[811] after the six-horse carriage carrying Jin Taekyung and his group departed, the streets of Taiyuan heated up once again.

This time, it was because of the fifty mounted soldiers surrounding the four-horse carriage, as well as the martial artists radiating sharp, piercing gazes.

“That’s…”

“It’s the Jin Family of Taiyuan!”

“Woooooah!”

“First the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, and now the Jin Family of Taiyuan? What a feast for the eyes today!”

Inside the carriage, Jin Wikyung’s ears pricked up at the cheers pouring in from every direction.

“Mukyung, did you hear that just now?”

Jin Mukyung yawned and nodded.

“Yes. I heard it.”

“Wipeng, you too?”

Wipeng answered with an exasperated expression.

“You don’t care whether I heard it or not. Just say what you want to say.”

“Why do you always speak like that? Does it make you feel better?”

“Feel better? I’m about to give myself an ulcer as it is. So what did you want to say?”

“Those people just said Taekyung…”

“Wow. This is driving me insane.”

Jin Wikyung pretended not to hear Wipeng’s muttering and continued.

“It seems he’s on his way to attend a luncheon with the City Lord. He might even have arrived by now.”

“He probably has. It’s just a stone’s throw away.”

“You don’t think anything will happen, do you?”

“The Third Young Master isn’t some little child left by the water. He’s probably being treated to such a lavish meal that the table legs are breaking. Stop worrying.”

“I don’t know. He’s such a free-spirited child.”

Wipeng’s eyes went round as though he were asking what the hell that was supposed to mean.

“Free-spirited? Isn’t this more a case of him being reckless and out of control?”

“Ahem.”

---

[811] A shichen is a traditional Chinese time period of approximately two hours.

"You could just say you're worried he'll cause trouble. Why dress it up like that…?"

"Shut your mouth."

"Yes. I won't say another word. If you're really that worried, ask the Second Young Master over there."

At Wipeng's indifferent reply, Jin Wikyung's gaze shifted slightly to the side.

In truth, Wipeng's advice was appropriate. Jin Mukyung was the only person among them who had ever met Shanxi's current City Lord, even once.

The problem is that he won't tell us anything else.

Jin Mukyung had dismissed his luncheon with the Shanxi City Lord with a single phrase—It was fucking awful—and had firmly kept his mouth shut ever since.

"Mukyung, by any chance…"

The answer came before he could finish.

"There shouldn't be any problems."

Jin Wikyung let out a sigh of relief at the decisive answer, but Jin Mukyung added one more thing.

"As long as he has a strong stomach."

"…A strong stomach? What are you talking about all of a sudden?"

This was a meal hosted by a member of the imperial family and the City Lord. Was he saying they might serve food crawling with maggots at such a grand banquet?

As Jin Wikyung stared at him in confusion, Jin Mukyung's face slowly twisted.

"There's someone there as revolting as a bug."

The Shanxi Provincial Office, where the City Lord resided, had long since ceased to resemble an ordinary estate.

The Jin Family of Taiyuan and the Mount Heng Sword Sect, which I had visited not long ago, were both enormous, but they looked laughably small compared to this place.

What am I supposed to call this? A fortress? Or a castle?

I had known for a long time that the continent operated on a massive scale, but this was beyond anything I had imagined.

Cheongpung, the other young prodigies, and I all gaped as we looked around. The official smiled faintly.

"What do you think?"

"It's big. Extremely big."

"It can easily accommodate several thousand people, so it has to be. If we had to defend it during wartime, we even have enough grain to last ten years."

The official pointed to several enormous warehouses one after another. He added that they were filled with food.

“All of those?”

“Of course.”

The official continued with a proud smile, like a resident of a Gangnam[812] apartment showing off his building.

“Provincial offices are generally built large and sturdy in preparation for wartime, but they aren’t normally this large.”

“Then…?”

“Have you already forgotten who lives here?”

“Oh.”

Right. He wasn’t merely the City Lord. He was a member of the imperial family. On top of that, he held an official royal title—he was a king in his own right.

“Then is this the royal palace?”

“In a manner of speaking.”

We continued moving, looking around like country bumpkins.

Everywhere we looked, servants and maidservants hurried about their business, while elite soldiers with razor-sharp discipline stood guard or sparred in the training grounds.

They’re pretty good.

The most surprising thing was the remarkably high quality of the soldiers.

Most of the soldiers standing guard were around Level 20, while the commanders wearing fairly impressive armor were comfortably above First Rate.

Well, it’s not as if there’s any reason soldiers shouldn’t learn martial arts when they’re readily available.

If anything, it would make the army stronger. It was something that ought to be encouraged.

I kept walking while stealing glances at the training grounds.

Boom! Boom! Boom!

“Thrust!”

“Argh!”

It was noon, with the sun already high overhead.

Hundreds of spearheads flashed in time with the drums, and the soldiers gathered and scattered in perfect unison, moving as one body.

Watching them train in formations, tactics, and battle strategies, one word suddenly came to mind.

Raid team.

[812] Gangnam is an affluent district of Seoul associated with expensive real estate.

Uniform weapons. Coordination drilled into them through systematic training. In a large-scale battle, that kind of teamwork would display terrifying power.

Their individual skills might be inferior to those of Murim martial artists.

A battle of dozens against dozens might be another story, but if hundreds fought hundreds, or thousands fought thousands, even an ordinary Peak master couldn't turn the tide by himself.

That was the terrifying strength of a trained group.

Make up for inferior quality with numbers and training. Is that it?

It was exactly what one would expect from a unified empire that had ruled a vast territory for centuries.

Wasn't that part of the reason those proud Murim martial artists acknowledged that they were subjects of a Great Nation?

And yet…

What the hell are they keeping all this for? To trade it in for candy?

There were already more than several hundred soldiers in sight. If even a portion of them had been sent to northern Shanxi, the Red Wind Band would have run so fast they'd have left their pants behind.

Fuck. Some of us nearly died going through all that trouble.

Seeing the true face of incompetent public authority suddenly plunged me into a spell of hollow enlightenment.

What good was owning the finest sword under heaven? If you didn't draw it from its scabbard, it was no different from a club.

Just as I was cursing them inwardly, the official spoke.

"Well, we're almost there."

He was right. A massive iron gate came into view at the end of a long corridor lined with dozens of pillars, drawing anxious sighs from both sides.

"Phew…"

"Whew. What do I do, Jeong? I'm so nervous."

"Don't worry. You have me."

"…What a fucking load of bullshit."

They say people destined to succeed will succeed, but I had no idea how those two had managed to hit it off in the middle of all this.

Maybe getting beaten together made them fall for each other?

What kind of country is this?

Unable to hide my discomfort as a two-star general of the Singles Brigade, I heard Cheongpung ask brightly as he walked along with a light step.

"Is the king in there?"

King.

At that single word, the young prodigies of the Five Gates of Shanxi gaped, while the official leading us leaped as though he had been stung by a bee.

“A king? How impudent!”

“Huh? Isn’t he a king?”

“Of course he’s a king!”

“Then I was right, wasn’t I?”

“No, that’s not what I mean…!”

At this rate, one of two things would happen. The official would collapse from high blood pressure, or he would invoke treason and immediately summon the hundreds of soldiers training in the grounds.

I wanted neither, so I stepped in to mediate.

“First, calm down. And, Young Master Cheongpung.”

“Yes, Benefactor.”

“You can’t call him the king. You have to say ‘His Highness.‘ Right?”

I directed the last question at the official. He glared at Cheongpung and nodded furiously.

“Absolutely! You must!”

“Oh, really?”

“Phew. Yes.”

Cheongpung blinked his clear eyes.

“Why?”

“…Young Master Jin. Do we really have to take this bastard—I mean, this person—with us?”

“I don’t mind leaving him out. But are you sure you’ll be all right?”

The official fell silent for a moment.

If he took five people without Cheongpung, he would be reprimanded by his superiors and lose his job. But if Cheongpung let his tongue slip just once, he might lose his head.

A moment later, when he spoke again, his face looked ten years older.

“…Let’s just go.”

Cheongpung beamed.

“Thank you. If there’s time, I’ll put in a good word with the king—I mean, His Highness.”

“Please, just keep that gentleman’s mouth shut.”

While the official rattled off every precaution we needed to take, along with his earnest pleas, we finally reached the iron gate.

The gate was enormous and incredibly thick. Quiet voices drifted from behind it.

Assistant Military Commissioner, Huashan, insult?

Those fragments alone gave me no clue what they were discussing. Still…

The atmosphere doesn't seem very good.

I had a feeling this wasn't the best place for people to sit across from one another over a meal.

At that moment, a man standing at attention before the gate shouted loudly,

"The young prodigies of Shanxi Murim request an audience!"

Groooan.

The iron gate began to open at the same time.

The official gave me one final warning with a worried expression, stealing a sidelong glance at Cheongpung.

"Please just keep that man's mouth shut."

"…Ah. Yes."

He must have been seriously worried.

The moment we entered, it felt as though my eyes had brightened.

The lavishly decorated grand hall was filled with a long table like the ones I had only seen in movies set in magic schools, along with all kinds of food.

And the moment I saw the five people who had arrived ahead of us, only one thought crossed my mind.

We're screwed.

When it came to reading the room, I was second to none. After scraping by as an F-rank Hunter for so long, always watching everyone's mood, I could size up an atmosphere in 0.1 seconds.

Like right now.

What a wonderful atmosphere.

The air around the five people was pulled taut. I had sensed something was wrong from outside, but it was even worse than I had expected.

It was fortunate everyone was empty-handed given the occasion. If they'd had anything hanging from their waists, swords would already have been drawn.

"Well… Now that our guests have arrived, shall we end this reunion here?"

A man's delicate voice broke the tension.

Though was he really a man? He was slender enough to seem like a woman, with a pale face and lips as red as though they had been painted with dye.

SYSTEM

Level 22: Hong Jin

He smiled at me.

“What a strikingly handsome young man, just as one would expect of a young prodigy of the martial world. I heard a young hero from the Jin Family of Taiyuan would be joining us today. Might that be you…?”

Now was the time for introductions. I performed a fist-and-palm salute toward the five men.

“My name is Jin Taekyung of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.”

The unpleasant atmosphere immediately eased somewhat. Surprise painted over the traces of displeasure and ridicule lingering on the other four faces.

“If you’re Jin Taekyung of the Jin Family of Taiyuan…”

A huge man dressed in black martial robes muttered.

From the moment I first saw him, he had radiated tough-guy energy. His name was Li Feng, and the number 68 hovered above his head.

Is he affiliated with the military?

I couldn’t judge everything from a first meeting, but that was the impression he gave. A proud and upright soldier. That was my first impression of him.

Li Feng, Li Feng… At Level 68, he’s probably Supreme First Rate?

Just as I was engraving his name and Level into my mind, the other three men reacted.

“Hm. That’s the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi?”

“He’s young. No, he’s a child.”

“He doesn’t particularly look as impressive as the rumors claim…”

Their curious gazes held surprise, a hint of jealousy, and a subtle sense of superiority.

In situations like this, there was usually no need to ask about the other person’s identity. They were the sort of people desperate to show off.

“Apologies for the late introduction, Junior.”

A sharp-eyed man grinned as he spoke to me. The other two stood with their arms folded, looking at me like I was a cute little chick.

This is weirdly irritating.

Who the hell were they to act like my Seniors right off the bat?

My question was answered soon enough.

“Oh, you don’t know yet, do you? We came from Shaanxi. The Zhongnan Sect of Shaanxi—have you heard of it?”

My mouth fell open before I knew it.

“Th-the Zhongnan Sect? That Zhongnan Sect?”

The three men’s faces blossomed with smiles.

“Haha! Look how surprised he is.”

“Exactly.”

“Perhaps you know our sect well?”
I shouted, suddenly brimming with excitement.
“I do! I know it very well! I had so much fun reading about it!”
“We’re glad to hear you know us… Wait. What do you mean, ‘reading about it’?”
“What else? Obviously, The Reign…”
I stopped halfway through my answer.
Ah. This wasn’t a novel.

Chapter 140

Gong Ilhyuk of the Three Hands of Zhongnan stared dubiously at the young man before him.

What's with this guy?

Jin Taekyung, the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi. He was the driving force behind a whirlwind that had quietly spread his name as far as Shaanxi in the span of only a few months.

Gong Ilhyuk mulled over what Jin Taekyung had said.

The Reign...[813] What was it?

It definitely seemed as though he had been about to say something before stopping himself.

Unlike his enthusiastic reaction when he first heard the name of the Zhongnan Sect, he now looked completely deflated and let out one deep sigh after another.

"Whew."

"...What's with the sighing?"

"It's nothing. Really."

"What do you mean, nothing? Go on. Finish what you were saying."

Gong Ilhyuk was beginning to feel irritated. What kind of sect was his? It was none other than the famous Zhongnan Sect.

It was one of the great pillars of Murim, a sect that had proudly earned its place among the Nine Sects and One Gang on the strength of centuries of history and deeply rooted martial traditions.

And yet...

Instead of being grateful that I acknowledged him, he sighs?

No matter how successful the Jin Family of Taiyuan had become, it was still merely a family from the frontier.

Compared to the Zhongnan Sect, one of the Nine Sects and One Gang, it was a firefly before the sun. In both background and personal fame, Jin Taekyung was an insignificant greenhorn far beneath him.

Arrogant bastard.

Gong Ilhyuk had spent his entire life taking pride in being a disciple of the Zhongnan Sect. Naturally, he was offended.

The other two members of the Three Hands of Zhongnan also regarded Jin Taekyung with displeasure.

"Ahem."

"Young friend, you have a habit of stopping halfway when you speak."

[813] "The Reign" is the opening fragment of a wuxia novel title Taekyung remembers.

As the atmosphere grew increasingly sour, Jin Taekyung waved a hand.

“No, it’s not like that. I just misunderstood something on my own.”

Gong Ilhyuk forced himself to speak magnanimously.

“What did you misunderstand? Tell me. I’ll answer everything.”

“It’s really nothing…”

“Ah, just tell me!”

“Huh? Why are you shouting?”

Gong Ilhyuk took a deep breath.

He was almost forty years old. Yet here he was, getting worked up over a brat barely twenty.

For some reason, just looking at that handsome face got under his skin.

“It’s not that… Whew. Anyway, tell me.”

“Hmm.”

Jin Taekyung finally spoke, as though he had no other choice.

“Then may I ask you one thing?”

“Anything.”

“What is the name of the current chairman of the Zhongnan Sect—or rather, the Sect Leader?”

“Hm? You mean the Sect Leader’s name?”

“Yes.”

What kind of question was that? Puzzled, Gong Ilhyuk answered.

“His family name is Gong. His given name is Iljung.”

“Ah. Yes.”

His indifferent response made it sound as though he had no idea who that was. Veins bulged on the foreheads of all three men.

“Have you never heard the Sect Leader’s name?”

Jin Taekyung scratched the back of his head.

“I might have. Or maybe not…”

“…Then what about his title, the Wind-and-Cloud Sword Lord?”

“Wind-and-Cloud Sword Lord Gong Iljung. Wind-and-Cloud Sword Lord Gong Iljung… Hmm. Doesn’t ring a bell.”

It was beyond absurd.

The Sect Leaders and Family Heads of the Nine Sects and One Gang and the Five Great Families were all renowned masters whose names resounded throughout the world. No martial artist could possibly be unaware of them.

Yet this fellow, a member of the Jin Family of Taiyuan rather than some half-baked martial artist, didn’t even know the Sect Leader of the Zhongnan Sect.

Worse, he casually repeated the man’s name as though they were friends.

Is this bastard mocking the Zhongnan Sect?

Gong Ilhyuk's head was still reeling from the shock when Jin Taekyung suddenly looked up at him.

"Oh? Come to think of it, your names are similar. Gong Iljung, Gong Ilhyuk."

At least he had some basic social awareness. Gong Ilhyuk's irritation eased slightly.

"He's an elder of my family."

"Oh, a family elder! Then are you two…?"

"He's my father's cousin."

"Your father's cousin!"

Seeing Jin Taekyung's eyes widen, Gong Ilhyuk squared his shoulders.

It wasn't just anyone. He was the Wind-and-Cloud Sword Lord. Being related to the Sect Leader of the Zhongnan Sect was an immense honor.

"Ahem. Don't spread it around too much. If this became widely known, people would start treating me differently."

In truth, no one wanted that fact widely known more than Gong Ilhyuk himself.

He had enjoyed all manner of benefits by invoking the Wind-and-Cloud Sword Lord's name: superior martial arts, elixirs, and even the title of Three Hands of Zhongnan.

If he continued advancing at this rate, it was only a matter of time before he seized an important position within the Zhongnan Sect.

"You understand what I mean, don't you? If you truly must tell someone, limit it to a few close friends…"

Jin Taekyung waved him off.

"No way. I'd never tell anyone. It would obviously hurt Great Hero Gong's reputation. People would say, 'That bastard only made it this far because of his connections.' Oops. Sorry. Anyway, that kind of rumor would be troublesome, wouldn't it?"

Gong Ilhyuk gave a dry cough. Even he had to admit that the boy wasn't entirely wrong.

"Ahem. It's not as though it would hurt me that much. I only meant that there might be people who are curious about me…"

"Curious about you? I don't have a single friend, so there's no one I could tell."

"…Your eldest brother, the Lesser Family Head of the Jin Family, might be curious. Or Heaven Shaking Sword."

"Oh, you don't know much about my family situation. My eldest brother is incredibly busy right now. My second brother isn't interested in much besides martial arts."

"…Is that so?"

"Yes."

There was nothing more Gong Ilhyuk could say.

As Gong Ilhyuk continued giving irritated coughs, Jin Taekyung smiled brightly.

“Besides, what would be the point of telling anyone? If he’s only your father’s cousin, you’re practically strangers. Here I thought you might be father and son or something.”

“…!”

Nothing in the world was more exhilarating than screwing someone over with a smile.

It was especially satisfying with arrogant bastards. Land the blow properly, and the rush was twice as sweet.

Ah, I could get addicted to this.

The Three Hands of Zhongnan, was it?

I hadn’t liked them from the start. Not the way they looked down on everyone, nor the way they strutted around because they belonged to some great sect.

So it really is different from the novel.

Back in high school, I’d dreamed of becoming a disciple of the Zhongnan Sect.

But as expected, reality was a cesspool.

I held back my laughter as I watched Gong Ilhyuk’s fists tremble.

Cute bastard. He’s so much fun to tease.

I wanted to keep going, but this was probably enough. If the Jin Family of Taiyuan was a local player, these guys were national-level. Nothing good would come of picking a fight with them.

Fortunately, a voice suddenly cut in and lightened the atmosphere.

“Aren’t you gentlemen monopolizing the conversation a little? The other guests must feel lonely. We haven’t even finished the introductions.”

The nasal, lilting voice gave me goose bumps once.

Then the pretty middle-aged man looked at me and winked, giving me goose bumps all over again.

“I haven’t introduced myself yet, have I? I’m Hong Jin, the Deputy Military Commissioner of Shanxi Province.”

“Deputy Military… what?”

“The Deputy Military Commissioner. Ah, you’re a martial artist, so I suppose this is your first time hearing of the office?”

“Yes.”

I'd heard of Comrade Chairman, but Comrade Deputy Military Commissioner[814] was a new one.

Hong Jin giggled as he looked at me blinking.

Good heavens. A middle-aged man was giggling.

"Why that expression? Did something bad happen?"

"…No. I'm just so happy."

"Happy? Ho ho ho, you're adorable. Don't you agree, Assistant Commissioner Li?"

He called me cute. Fuck, that bastard called me cute.

I barely managed to suppress my nausea as the man I had glimpsed earlier greeted me bluntly.

"I am Li Feng, Assistant Military Commissioner of Shanxi Province. I oversee the training of the soldiers attached to the Shanxi Provincial Office."

"And he's my direct subordinate. Isn't that right, Assistant Commissioner Li?"

Li Feng's thick eyebrow twitched.

We had known each other for less than five minutes, but I already knew one thing.

Li Feng hated Hong Jin.

That alone made him worthy of courtesy. I offered him a respectful fist-and-palm salute.

"My name is Jin Taekyung of the Jin Family of Taiyuan."

"I have heard much of your reputation. A great new star has risen in the martial world of Shanxi."

"A new star? You flatter me."

Li Feng shook his head gravely.

"No. Rumors are often exaggerated, but after seeing Young Hero Jin today, I can tell they were all true."

Kind words deserved kind words in return.

I brought up the soldiers I had seen on the way here.

"I was surprised by how skilled the soldiers were. I wondered who had trained them, but I suppose it was only natural that it would be you."

I gave him a firm thumbs-up, and a smile flickered across Li Feng's lips.

It had been so long since I'd had a normal, pleasant conversation that I was almost moved.

"If it would not be discourteous, could you introduce the others as well?"

"Of course. This is…"

"Greetings! To the respected Seniors of Murim and those who toil day and night for the sake of the nation…"

---

[814] The Korean title dojihwi dongji ends in dongji, which sounds like the word for "comrade." Taekyung is joking about that similarity.

"…"

What was this, a job interview at a conglomerate?

The young prodigies of the Five Gates of Shanxi had been waiting for their chance. They fell over one another to deliver extravagant introductions and lavish everyone with flattery.

That left only one person.

"All right. Junior, where are you from, and who are you?"

At Gong Ilhyuk's question, delivered with all the smugness of someone high on his seniority, Cheongpung blinked.

"Me?"

"Who else would I mean?"

"One, two, three, four… There are plenty of people besides me."

A vein bulged on Gong Ilhyuk's forehead.

"Not that! You're the only one who hasn't introduced himself!"

"Oh, I see. You called me Junior, so I didn't think you meant me."

"Good heavens! In Murim, we all share the same path! We're all seniors and juniors to one another. How do you not know that?"

If it had been me, I would have laid the sarcasm on thick.

But Cheongpung was Cheongpung.

He was in a different class from ordinary people.

"Wow, I've never been anyone's junior before! Please take good care of me!"

"…What kind of person is this?"

Sometimes, a pure child was much harder to deal with than an adult who had been properly tainted by the world.

Cheongpung spoke with a bright smile.

"My name is Cheongpung, and I live in Shanxi."

Gong Ilhyuk had been left speechless, but he finally came to his senses and stammered out a question.

"Ahem. Then you must also be one of the young prodigies of the Five Gates of Shanxi."

"Huh? No."

"You're not?"

"No. I came from Henan."

"You just said you were from Shanxi."

"I live in Shanxi, so that makes me a Shanxi man. Hehe."

"You… Whew."

A furrow appeared in Gong Ilhyuk's forehead.

He clearly wanted to throw a punch right then and there, but the occasion forced him to hold himself back.

“Fine. Then which sect in Henan are you from? The Iron Blood Sect? The Five Tigers Sword Sect?”

“Where are those?”

“You’re from Henan, yet you’ve never heard of the Iron Blood Sect or the Five Tigers Sword Sect? How does that make any sense? What, are you from Shaolin Temple?”

“Oh, I only stayed in Henan for about two weeks before moving to Shanxi, so I don’t know much about it.”

“You said you were from Henan!”

“I did come from Henan, but before that, I was in Shaanxi…”

“You little bastard! Just say the whole world is your hometown!”

Gong Ilhyuk finally exploded. With a roar, he reached for Cheongpung’s collar—or tried to.

Grab.

His wrist was caught with absurd ease.

Gong Ilhyuk let out a hollow laugh.

“Well, look at you. You know at least one trick, huh?”

“Ah, I just reacted on instinct. I’m sorry, Senior.”

“On instinct? And you’re apologizing?”

Seeing Cheongpung apologize with a miserable expression, Gong Ilhyuk gave a short laugh.

“No. There’s no need to let go. No need to apologize, either.”

“Really?”

“Yes. But you’ll pay dearly for your reckless bravado.”

“What? What does that mean?”

“You’re about to find out.”

I stepped in at that exact moment.

I threw myself in front of Cheongpung, and Gong Ilhyuk regarded me coldly.

“Move aside, Junior.”

“Pardon me, Senior.”

“Pardon you… Should I take this to mean the Jin Family of Taiyuan intends to oppose the actions of our sect?”

I answered calmly.

“Not at all. I only want to stop this from becoming a bigger problem.”

“A problem? What problem?”

“His Highness will be arriving soon, won’t he? And there are plenty of eyes on us.”

“Plenty of eyes. Deputy Military Commissioner, what do you think?”

I could see Hong Jin smiling behind Gong Ilhyuk.

His lilting voice followed.

“Well, I don’t think it will be much of a problem.”

Li Feng immediately objected.

“This is the grand hall. We cannot tolerate even a minor disturbance.”

“Assistant Commissioner Li, I find the word ‘tolerate’ unpleasant. Anyone listening might think you were my superior.”

“Deputy Military Commissioner!”

“Why, Assistant Military Commissioner?”

No sooner had Hong Jin finished speaking than the other two members of the Three Hands of Zhongnan quietly stepped in front of Li Feng.

True to the Zhongnan Sect’s reputation, both were at least Supreme First Rate masters.

Li Feng bit down hard on his lip, then looked at me and muttered,

“I’m sorry.”

Gong Ilhyuk smiled triumphantly.

“Well? What will you do now?”

What else could I do?

I shrugged once and stepped back. Gong Ilhyuk’s smile deepened.

“A wise choice.”

“I only wanted to prevent the problem from getting bigger. You understand, right?”

“Of course. Everyone here will remember it clearly.”

“I hope so.”

Cheongpung stared blankly at me.

“Benefactor, did I do something wrong?”

Gong Ilhyuk answered before I could.

“What? Wrong?”

His murderous gaze swung toward Cheongpung.

“Are you insulting me and the Zhongnan Sect right now?”

“That’s not it. I was just…”

“Can’t you shut that mouth of yours?”

A complicated, subtle expression appeared on Cheongpung’s face.

Then he said the one thing more than enough to make Gong Ilhyuk lose his reason.

“Wow, no one’s ever sworn at me before. This is fascinating.”

“You goddamn bastard…!”

Whoosh!

A heavy sound split the air.

Gong Ilhyuk’s fist shot toward Cheongpung’s ribs at blinding speed.

Then—

Crack. Crunch.

“…!”

“…!”

Amid the stunned silence, one man’s mouth fell open in agony.

His fist had been crushed. Bone jutted through the torn flesh of his forearm, and Gong Ilhyuk, drenched in blood, asked in a trembling voice,

“Wh-what is this? What kind of fist technique…?”

If he hadn’t asked, I would have.

I had expected this result, but not to this extent.

With a single counter, Cheongpung had rendered Gong Ilhyuk, a master above Level 70, completely helpless.

And…

“That wasn’t a fist technique.”

At my mutter, Cheongpung answered with a face that looked ready to vomit.

“Benefactor is right. It wasn’t a fist technique. It was a palm technique called the Taeeul Miri Palm. But Senior, you’re bleeding too much. The smell of blood is making my stomach churn. Urk!”

What a lunatic.

I let out a hollow laugh as Cheongpung flung Gong Ilhyuk aside and began to dry-heave.

That was when—

“Ta-Taeeul Miri Palm!”

Li Feng asked with his eyes wide.

“Did you just say Taeeul Miri Palm? Are you certain?”

“Urk, yes. My grandfather taught me.”

“M-May I ask his name?”

“Urk, Mae Jonghak—bleeegh!”

Splash!

I was shocked that Cheongpung had vomited in the very place where the king was about to arrive, but Li Feng seemed unfazed.

He trembled as though he had been struck by lightning, then squeezed out a single word.

“The Sword Saint…!”

Chapter 141

I recalled something Jin Mukyung had told me a few days ago.

One God, Three Saints, Ten Kings.

Great martial artists who had already become legends.

Going by that order, Sword Saint Mae Jonghak had to be one of the top five Supreme Peak masters in the world.

Now even the Sword Saint is showing up.

Jin Mukyung had told me that the Fire King earned his place among the Ten Kings by hunting down and killing a thousand members of the Demonic Cult over four days and nights.

If that was what it took to earn a place among the Ten Kings, just how formidable was the Sword Saint, whose name ranked ahead of his?

Why do nothing but monsters keep popping up?

I was dumbfounded, but then I looked at Cheongpung and found myself nodding.

Beans grow where beans are planted. A monster had raised a monster.

There's no way a gifted freak like that could appear out of nowhere.

Cheongpung was unquestionably a Peak master.

He was only twenty years old. If he had grown up under the guidance of a phenomenal master like the Sword Saint, it made perfect sense.

"Urk, bleeegh!"

…Actually, it was starting to make less sense. How had someone like that become a Peak master?

I asked Cheongpung, who was still retching, "Are you all right?"

"I'm all right, urk!"

"You're clearly not."

"More importantly, Senior looks badly hurt, bleegh!"

"Don't call me Senior. I'm fine. A little spit and this much will heal right up."

"Really?"

Of course not.

I patted Cheongpung on the back and glanced around. Everyone except Hong Jin was staring at us wide-eyed.

"S-Sword Saint Mae Jonghak? The Sword Saint I know?"

"That idiot is the Sword Saint's grandson?"

"What on earth is going on…?"

Gong Ilhyuk's reaction stood out most of all. Apparently forgetting his pain, he stared blankly at Cheongpung before suddenly shouting.

“Nonsense! The Sword Saint has been in seclusion for more than thirty years! How dare a piece of trash like you claim to be the Sword Saint’s heir?”

“Sorry to interrupt.”

I scratched my chin and continued.

“Why don’t you stop the bleeding first? You’re losing an awful lot of blood.”

“…”

Gong Ilhyuk’s face turned bright red. He had to be embarrassed. His arm had been shattered with a single blow, yet he was still calling someone else a piece of trash.

“Tch. If only I hadn’t let my guard down…”

“Then shall we arrange a rematch once you’ve recovered? I can lend you my family’s training ground.”

Even if they fought a hundred times, Gong Ilhyuk would lose all hundred. The gap between them was that obvious.

The proof was that the moment I offered to set it up, Gong Ilhyuk went silent as though he had swallowed honey.

“Stop the bleeding first. Stop the bleeding.”

“…You bastard.”

Gong Ilhyuk glared at me murderously.

It seemed he had finally realized that I disliked him, but I didn’t feel particularly threatened.

You should’ve stopped when I told you to.

If word of what happened today got out, they were the ones who would suffer. They had gotten entangled with the Sword Saint’s grandson, and even the Sect Leader of the Zhongnan Sect—Gong Ilhyuk’s father’s cousin—wouldn’t be happy about that.

Meanwhile, I wasn’t even directly involved, and I had gained an unexpected golden connection.

Listen here, I gave the Sword Saint’s grandson candied hawthorn skewers[815], took him to the hot springs, and did it all, okay? You bastard.

So this was how candied-hawthorn[816] stock went through the roof.

I was smiling inwardly when Gong Ilhyuk finished stopping the bleeding and sneered.

“Come to think of it, this is ridiculous. As far as I know, the Sword Saint had no children. How could he possibly have a grown grandson?”

Cheongpung, who had just stopped retching, tilted his head.

“That’s not true. I really am his grandson.”

---

[815] Candied hawthorn skewers are fruit skewers coated in hardened sugar.

[816] Candied hawthorn skewers are fruit skewers coated in hardened sugar.

“The entire world knows that the Sword Saint devoted his entire life to martial arts! You’re obviously lying!”

“No, I’m really not.”

Cheongpung continued with a miserable expression.

“I really am my grandfather’s grandson. A crane brought me to him twenty years ago.”

“…?”

“…?”

What the fuck was that supposed to mean now?

As everyone’s attention turned toward him, Cheongpung looked back at me with a confused expression.

“Benefactor, am I mistaken?”

“What exactly do you know?”

“That cranes bring babies. Grandfather told me babies are chosen by Heaven, and when the time comes, a crane delivers them.”

“Who told you that?”

“My grandfather.”

“Oh.”

The story practically wrote itself. Their surnames were different, so the Sword Saint had obviously adopted him from somewhere…

Cheongpung had grown up alone with his grandfather in the mountains from an age he couldn’t even remember.

Whatever his grandfather told him, he must have simply accepted it.

“Cranes don’t bring babies? Then am I not my grandfather’s grandson?”

“Well, that’s…”

I continued with a heavy heart. Cheongpung was twenty years old. Now that he had come down from the mountains, it was time for him to learn about the world one thing at a time.

“There are three stages involved in having a child: ovulation, fertilization, and implantation. Try it.”

“With Benefactor?”

“Why would you do it with me? Are you insane? I said repeat the words out loud.”

“Yes. Ovulation, fertilization, implantation…”

However, my ambitious attempt at sex education had to end the moment it began.

“You bloody little bastards! How dare you behave like this in front of a great Senior of Murim!”

The owner of that growling voice was, of course, Gong Ilhyuk.

With help from the other two men officially known as the Three Hands of Zhongnan—but more accurately described as his lackeys—he had even gotten his arm splinted. Now he glared at us.

“A frontier bumpkin and a fool who throws his weight around just because he’s strong dare look down on a disciple of the great Zhongnan Sect?”

Cheongpung’s eyes went round.

“Am I the fool?”

“Probably.”

“Then Benefactor is the frontier bumpkin?”

“Thank you so much for clearing that up.”

I let out a deep sigh. The man was old enough to know better, yet he still couldn’t read the situation. Was his background as a member of the Zhongnan Sect, and his faith in his father’s cousin, simply too strong?

“Well, our Senior sure has a loose mouth.”

“What did you say?”

“Never mind me. What are you going to do if what this friend said is true?”

“If it were true, there’s no way Li Feng wouldn’t have recognized him.”

Li Feng? Why was Li Feng coming up now?

I looked at Li Feng, puzzled. He had gone rigid as though he had seen a ghost, but now he finally parted his lips.

“I am a lay disciple of Huashan. Until ten years ago, I was at the main sect.”

Gong Ilhyuk added with a mocking grin, “That fellow was quite prominent among the lay disciples. At least, until he lost to me during a friendly duel with our sect. Isn’t that right?”

“That’s right. I stayed at the Zhongnan Sect for two days for the duel, but I ate something bad and fell seriously ill.”

“That story again. Don’t you ever get tired of it?”

“Isn’t it a remarkable coincidence, no matter how often I think about it? Everyone scheduled to duel you, myself included, suffered the same fate.”

“…So you still can’t accept your defeat?”

“No. I accepted it long ago. In fact, thanks to you, I learned what Murim was really like. As tuition goes, it was a cheap lesson.”

Gong Ilhyuk’s eyebrow twitched at Li Feng’s calm tone.

“Enough pretending to be magnanimous. Answer me honestly. Have you ever seen that fool at Huashan?”

“Before that, let me ask you one thing. Do you still think I left Huashan because of you?”

“Of course. You ran away from Huashan less than two months after our duel. What excuse are you going to make now?”

“It’s true that I was discouraged for a while… but you’re wrong.”

Li Feng shook his head and continued slowly.

“It was about a month after that day. My Master suddenly said he had somewhere to go. When I followed him there, I found all the leaders of our sect gathered together, including the Sect Leader.”

“Did they hold a consolation banquet for a lay disciple? Huashan is more generous than I thought.”

“It is a generous sect. After all, they allowed a failure like me to accompany them on an important visit to see our Grandmaster.”

Gong Ilhyuk’s eyes narrowed.

“Your Grandmaster? Could it be…?”

“There is only one Grandmaster in our sect. Sword Saint Mae Jonghak. The one everyone knows.”

Gasps rose from several places around the hall. Meanwhile, growing unease spread across Gong Ilhyuk’s face.

“That’s impossible. I heard the Sword Saint hadn’t shown himself in a long time…”

“That’s true. But he was still on Huashan. His seclusion was simply so deep that we hadn’t been able to find him.”

“Th-Then what happened?”

“We combed through Huashan from top to bottom. Only after breaking through ten formations did we reach his residence. Can you guess what I saw there?”

Everyone present could guess. Li Feng’s gaze was fixed on Cheongpung’s face.

“A cute little boy. He was much smaller than the other children his age, but he was diligently swinging a sword… No one could laugh. Who could laugh after seeing a monster perform the Plum Blossom Sword Technique at the age of ten?”

“…!”

“…!”

Silent shock spread through the crowd. Gong Ilhyuk stammered.

“That—that’s impossible. As far as I know, one must be at least First Rate to perform the Plum Blossom Sword Technique…”

“Unimaginable things sometimes happen in Murim. Compared to that, pulling dirty tricks in a friendly duel is nothing.”

Li Feng gave a self-deprecating laugh.

“After more than a month of facing the wall in training[817], I came to a realization. I had no reason to remain there. That was why I left Huashan. What do you think? Isn’t it amusing?”

Li Feng’s story hit hard. Everyone, myself included, stared silently at Cheongpung.

[817] Wall-facing training is a meditative practice of sitting facing a wall to cultivate concentration.

Suddenly, I remembered the conversation I'd had with him at Honghwa Inn the night before.

"I was ten years old. One day, dozens of people came barging in and made a scene. I remember my grandfather shouting at them to get the hell out before he set fire to the mountain."

"Ah. So that's why he keeps changing where he lives…?"

"Yes. Fortunately, the mountain is so large that he's managed to avoid them for ten years."

Until then, I hadn't known that the people who had come to cause trouble ten years ago were the leaders of Huashan, or that the Sword Saint Mae Jonghak was Cheongpung's grandfather.

And the part about them making a scene was only how it had appeared from young Cheongpung's perspective. The reality had probably been very different.

Who would cause trouble for the Sword Saint? That's a perfect way to get yourself killed.

The Sword Saint who had threatened to set fire to his own sect wasn't exactly ordinary, either.

In any case, on the day Huashan had nearly become a real volcano, Li Feng had met Cheongpung as a child and clearly despaired after witnessing his talent.

Fair enough. First Rate at the age of ten.

Countless people failed to reach First Rate even after turning twenty.

Two of the rising martial artists from the Five Gates of Shanxi present here still fell short of being called First Rate masters.

And yet Cheongpung had reached that realm at the age of ten.

Could Jin Mukyung have done the same?

The moment that question occurred to me, Gong Ilhyuk shouted as though having a fit.

"Proof! What proof is there that he's that child?"

The rising martial artists of the Five Gates of Shanxi who had been trying desperately to curry favor, Hong Jin, who had been watching with great interest, and even the other two members of the Three Hands of Zhongnan all frowned as though they had planned it together.

"There is no proof. All I have is my memory."

"Exactly. Mountains and rivers change in ten years. Should I really trust your paltry memory?"

"No. To be honest, I'm not certain either. I don't know how that child grew up."

Li Feng answered calmly, then suddenly drew his sword.

Shing.

He studied the blade as it radiated a cold chill, then asked Cheongpung, “Young Hero, how much do you know about Huashan’s martial arts?”

Cheongpung answered with a bewildered expression.

“Uh, I’m not from Huashan.”

“You’re not from Huashan…”

“No. My grandfather just taught me various things because he said they would be good to learn.”

“Then allow me to ask. Of the Six Harmonies Sword, Plum Blossom Sword Technique, Supreme Clarity Sword, Taeeul Miri Palm, Falling Flower Chasing Shadow Palm, and Scattering Flowers Shadowless Hand… how many do you know?”

“All of them.”

“Heh. All of them. Every one.”

Li Feng gave a hollow laugh and handed his sword to Cheongpung.

“Could you perform the Plum Blossom Sword Technique?”

“My grandfather told me not to show my martial arts to anyone.”

“One form—no, a single sword stroke will suffice.”

After hesitating, Cheongpung took hold of the hilt.

“Then I’ll show you briefly.”

The instant he finished speaking, something changed.

Sssssss.

Sword Energy? No.

From Cheongpung’s head to his toes, tangible strands of purple qi flowed from his entire body.

It was Extreme Yang internal energy so potent that merely being near it scorched the breath in one’s lungs.

“The Zaha Divine Technique[818]…!”

Li Feng let out a cry of delight.

At that moment—

Whoosh!

The tip of Cheongpung’s sword traced a beautiful arc.

Like plum blossoms falling at the end of the season, a single streak of Sword Energy cleaved the enormous table in half.

The food, the dishes, even the sturdy table.

“Ah…”

A gasp escaped me before I knew it.

[818] A Huashan internal-energy technique.

Breaking things was easy. But Cheongpung's Sword Energy was so sharp and clean that, if the table hadn't collapsed a moment later, no one would have noticed it had been cut.

Boom! Crash!

As the table split in two and collapsed, Li Feng clasped his fist and palm in an exceedingly respectful salute.

"Li Feng, lay disciple of Huashan, pays his respects to Martial Uncle Cheongpung."

Chapter 142

"Li Feng, lay disciple[819] of Huashan, pays his respects to Martial Uncle Cheongpung."

Zaha Divine Technique. Plum Blossom Sword Technique. And finally, the last word to come from Li Feng's mouth:

Martial Uncle.

Gong Ilhyuk's face darkened at this unbelievable turn of events.

Then is that bastard really…?

Even if Cheongpung wasn't the Sword Saint's biological grandson, one thing was certain.

The idiot bowing over and over with a bewildered look on his face had inherited everything from the Sword Saint, Mae Jonghak.

"Th-this can't be. It's impossible. This makes no sense…"

As Gong Ilhyuk stammered in denial, a lilting voice reached his ears.

"Great Hero Gong."

"Ah, Deputy Military Commissioner."

Gong Ilhyuk's expression brightened when he spotted Hong Jin.

The Zhongnan Sect had been pursuing various ventures through its government connections, and Hong Jin was one of the powerful figures in Shanxi Province they had come to know in the process.

He was also the only person who could offer Gong Ilhyuk a lifeline in his current predicament.

"What happened?"

Hong Jin's gentle voice put Gong Ilhyuk at ease.

"I must have been mistaken for a moment."

"Mistaken? About what?"

"I merely thought he was some fraud going around trading on the Sword Saint's name…"

"Well, I know next to nothing about martial arts, but he didn't look like a fraud to me."

"There, there was only a slight misunderstanding."

"A misunderstanding…"

Hong Jin murmured the word quietly, then stared directly at Gong Ilhyuk.

"Great Hero Gong."

"Yes, Deputy Military Commissioner."

"Do you know why I invited you and the others from the Zhongnan Sect here?"

[819] A lay disciple belongs to a sect without being a monk or entering monastic life.

“Yes. Of course I do.”

There were two reasons.

First, to become acquainted with Prince Shangshan, the City Lord of Shanxi and a member of the imperial family, and receive his approval for their new business venture.

Second, to put Hong Jin’s political rival, Li Feng, firmly in his place.

“But as you know, I’ve been rather busy lately. I was so distracted that I forgot to tell His Highness that other guests would be coming.”

“I see.”

The nasal quality had vanished from Hong Jin’s voice, leaving it completely dry. Gong Ilhyuk asked anxiously,

“But why are you suddenly bringing that up…?”

“I’d like you to leave for today.”

“What?”

“Wouldn’t the presence of uninvited guests put His Highness in a bad mood?”

It was an unmistakable order to leave. And on top of that, Hong Jin had called them uninvited guests.

Gong Ilhyuk protested.

“Uninvited guests? Deputy Military Commissioner, what exactly do you mean?”

“Oh my, must I say it twice? I mean exactly what I said. I failed to tell His Highness you were coming.”

Hong Jin was originally a palace attendant. He had remained at Prince Shangshan’s side since the prince was an infant, and thanks to that, he had risen to the post of Deputy Military Commissioner, becoming the power behind the Shanxi Provincial Office and the second-ranking figure in the military.

The young prince favored him above all others. And yet he was sending guests away merely because he had failed to mention them in advance?

“I, I’m not sure I understand what you’re saying, Deputy Military Commissioner…”

Hong Jin smiled sweetly at the flustered Gong Ilhyuk.

“Great Hero Gong.”

“Yes?”

“I didn’t think you were like this, but you’re a little slow, aren’t you?”

“…What?”

“Or are you simply bad at taking a hint?”

The sudden verbal abuse plunged the hall into silence. Gong Ilhyuk and the other two members of the Three Hands of Zhongnan clenched their trembling fists.

“You go too far.”

“Oh my, if that’s how it felt, then you understood my intentions perfectly. I did go a little too far on purpose.”

"Deputy Military Commissioner!"

"Lower your voice. This is the grand hall."

"Why are you suddenly acting like this? Are you disappointed in me because of what just happened?"

"I said lower your voice. And I'm not disappointed in you, Great Hero Gong. We aren't friends. We're hardly close enough to expect anything from each other, much less be disappointed."

"That… have you forgotten your agreement with our Zhongnan Sect?"

"Agreement? Oh, the one about opening a route into Shanxi Province?"

Hong Jin gave a short laugh and continued.

"That's how business works. Until a deal is finalized, it can fall apart at any moment. Surely you didn't think a few words meant everything was settled when His Highness hasn't even given his approval yet?"

Gong Ilhyuk barely managed to suppress his rising anger.

He had already boasted to his sect as though the deal were complete.

If the venture succeeded, he would receive a commensurate reward. If it failed, however, he would not escape a reprimand. He had no choice but to coax the eunuch standing before him.

"If this venture succeeds, wouldn't it benefit you as well, Deputy Military Commissioner? The Zhongnan Sect never forgets gratitude or grudges."

Adding grudges to gratitude was a veiled threat—a warning that Hong Jin might make an enemy of one of the Nine Sects and One Gang.[820]

Hong Jin had served as a palace attendant since childhood and witnessed all manner of political intrigue. There was no chance he had missed the hidden meaning behind Gong Ilhyuk's words.

Tsk. This is why martial artists are the way they are.

Hong Jin clicked his tongue inwardly.

Every word and action was clumsy and blatant.

Compared to a half-polished man like Gong Ilhyuk, Li Feng—taciturn, stubborn, and every inch a martial artist—was a far more troublesome opponent.

He doesn't even realize who holds the upper hand right now.

If he had a goal he wanted to achieve, even crawling on the ground would hardly have been enough. And yet he had added a threat on top of everything else.

That settled Hong Jin's decision.

"Great Hero Gong, I'm such a delicate person. Words like that frighten me too much to keep working with you."

"Ah, if there was any room for misunderstanding…"

[820] The Nine Sects and One Gang are a grouping of major Murim factions.

Gong Ilhyuk was about to apologize as though he had no idea what Hong Jin meant when Jin Taekyung, who had been watching the two men with a bored expression, casually tossed out a remark.

“Room for misunderstanding, my ass. Not even a passing dog would believe that.”

“You, you…!”

“Hey, Seniors of the Zhongnan Sect. I don’t know what kind of incredible business you’re running, but couldn’t you discuss it somewhere else later? I’m already miserable enough about the table being overturned.”

Hong Jin let out a quiet laugh at the sight of Taekyung licking his lips while looking at the food scattered across the floor.

“Don’t worry. Once these gentlemen leave, I’ll have fresh food brought in. Isn’t that right?”

Now Hong Jin was practically shoving them out the door.

Gong Ilhyuk gritted his teeth.

“Deputy Military Commissioner, I admit my judgment is terrible. But please think carefully about what you stand to gain and lose from today’s events.”

“You seem to be mistaken. I reached this decision after thoroughly weighing the practical benefits.”

“What does that mean…?”

“We’ll continue with the project. We’ll build a dedicated trade route and trading post connecting Shaanxi and Shanxi, and we’ll expand the scale as well.”

“Then that’s all the more reason to join hands with our sect!”

Hong Jin’s eyes widened at the desperate shout.

“Is the Zhongnan Sect the only sect in Shaanxi? As far as I know, there’s a place far older than the Zhongnan Sect—and one with a much better reputation among the public.”

“…Are you talking about Huashan?”

Gong Ilhyuk’s face twisted.

Huashan and the Zhongnan Sect had been bitter rivals, constantly at odds, for the past several hundred years.

If this project went to Huashan instead of some other sect, Gong Ilhyuk knew he would face far more than a light reprimand.

“How could you do this to me?”

“Of course I can. There’s a better option right in front of me.”

“Our sect is by no means inferior to Huashan. In fact, I can proudly say that in this generation, we have surpassed them.”

“‘I can proudly say.‘ It’s good to see such loyalty to one’s sect. But from my perspective, wouldn’t the phrase ‘acknowledged by all’ sound better?”

Hong Jin continued without missing a beat.

“Great Hero Gong, let me ask you directly. Does the Zhongnan Sect have a master like the Sword Saint?”

“…That is…”

“Then does it have a young prodigy as outstanding as Cheongpung over there?”

“…”

None of the Three Hands of Zhongnan, Gong Ilhyuk included, could easily answer.

The Sword Saint?

The Zhongnan Sect’s Sect Leader, the Wind-and-Cloud Sword Lord, was occasionally compared to the Ten Kings, but that was as far as it went.

As for a monster like Cheongpung, none of them had ever heard of such a person, much less seen one. Gong Ilhyuk in particular flushed red, having attacked first only to be brought to his knees in a single exchange.

“B-but our sect has no fewer Peak masters than Huashan.”

“I’ve heard that the strength of a Murim sect doesn’t depend on how many masters it has, but on what kind of masters it possesses.”

Hong Jin’s remark struck the heart of the matter, leaving Gong Ilhyuk momentarily speechless.

But no matter what it took, he had to prevent Huashan from taking their place.

“Furthermore, every venture we’ve undertaken with the government has been completed successfully. Huashan, on the other hand, has no experience with this sort of project. They’re bound to be clumsy and make mistakes.”

“Oh my, is that so?”

Hong Jin smiled and turned toward someone.

“Assistant Commissioner Li, what do you think?”

Li Feng, who had watched everything in silence, answered.

“That is true. Huashan does tend to draw a firm line between the government and Murim.”

Hong Jin frowned, and color returned to Gong Ilhyuk’s face.

But Li Feng’s heavy voice continued.

“However, doesn’t everyone have a first time?”

“Li Feng, you bastard!”

Hong Jin burst out laughing.

“Our Assistant Commissioner Li has truly come a long way.”

“Thanks to you.”

The two men had exchanged almost exactly the same words only half an hour earlier, but the atmosphere was now the exact opposite.

They continued their conversation in a warm and friendly atmosphere.

“I’d like you to act as our intermediary, Assistant Commissioner Li. What do you think?”

“Of course. I’ll send a messenger pigeon to my Master. The Sect Leader will be pleased to hear this news as well.”

“Ah, and you should also tell him that we have an honored guest here.”

Li Feng followed Hong Jin’s meaningful glance and smiled faintly.

“That is news our Grandmaster will be pleased to hear.”

“It’s a good start.”

“I think so too.”

Completely excluded from the conversation, Gong Ilhyuk trembled from head to toe.

Things had already gone too far to turn back. He swept a gaze filled with fury and betrayal across the room.

“How dare you look down on the Great Zhongnan Sect.”

“Hey, there’s something I’ve been meaning to say.”

The voice belonged to Jin Taekyung, who had suddenly cut into the conversation. He gave a short laugh and continued.

“We’re not looking down on the Zhongnan Sect. We’re looking down on you. You might not know this, but I’m a huge fan of the Zhongnan Sect. The Reign…[821] Anyway, I faithfully kept up with it through volume thirty-four.”

“What kind of bullshit are you spouting? A family without even a proper pedigree like the Jin Family of Taiyuan has no place butting in!”

Taekyung put on a wounded expression and poked Cheongpung in the side.

“Young Master Cheongpung, that old man says our family doesn’t even have a family tree.”

“What? He said that to my Benefactor?”

“Yeah. I know he’s a Senior, but isn’t that going too far? I’m too scared of the Nine Sects and One Gang[822] to answer him myself, so could you say something for me?”

“M-me? I’m not very good at things like that.”

“Am I not your Benefactor? Was I only your Benefactor in name?”

“No, of course not.”

“Then say what I tell you.”

After Taekyung finished whispering something to him, Cheongpung hesitantly opened his mouth.

“G-get… get…”

“Young Master Cheongpung, louder! You can do it!”

Buoyed by Taekyung’s encouragement, Cheongpung squeezed his eyes shut and shouted,

“Get lost, you boomer bastards!”

---

[821] The Reign… is the opening fragment of a wuxia novel title.

[822] The Nine Sects and One Gang are a grouping of major Murim factions.

"…!"

"…!"

Boomer? They didn't know exactly what it meant, but that wasn't important. It had been followed by the word bastards.

"You goddamn…!"

All three men, Gong Ilhyuk included, glared with their eyes wide open.

Who were they?

They were disciples of the Zhongnan Sect's headquarters. They were accustomed to the admiring gazes of others, and this was a humiliation they could never wash away.

But…

Gong Ilhyuk ground his teeth. "Let's go!"

Swallowing his outrage, he turned away. Neither the opponent nor the place was suitable for repaying this humiliation.

I'll make them pay for this someday. I swear it!

Blood dripped from the fist he clenched so hard it seemed it would crush.

He stormed out of the grand hall, his footsteps heavy and violent.

Behind him came the voices of Jin Taekyung and Cheongpung.

"Wow, you're good at swearing. Was that your first time too?"

"Yes! I've never sworn before!"

"For a first attempt, you've got some real talent. You should learn a lot from me from now on. As you go through life, there are plenty of times you'll need to use them even if you don't want to."

"Yes!"

Chapter 143

After the humiliated Three Hands of Zhongnan stormed out, Hong Jin pulled a small bell from his robes and shook it.

“Well, now that the uninvited guests are gone, I suppose we should clean up.”

Ding. Ding. Ding.

Exactly three times. Before the sound had even faded, the iron doors opened and dozens of servants entered, bowing at the waist.

“Clean the grand hall and bring out a fresh meal.”

“We’ll carry out your orders.”

They bowed once more, then moved with perfect coordination.

Without batting an eye, they began clearing away the split table, the scattered food, and even Cheongpung’s vomit.

They’re professionals. Absolute professionals.

They’d put most cleaning companies to shame.

Unlike me, Cheongpung had been groaning with the look of someone who desperately needed the bathroom. He cautiously approached the servants.

“I-I’m sorry. Let me help.”

One of the servants shook his head.

“No, sir. This is our duty.”

“But I made the mess, so at least let me…”

No matter how sturdy the servants were, they were facing a Peak master. They had no choice but to follow Cheongpung’s wishes.

But the moment Cheongpung wrested the cleaning tools from them and began cleaning up the vomit, he froze.

“Urk, uweeek!”

“…”

Please just stay still. Stop making more work for them.

As Cheongpung emptied his stomach yet again, Hong Jin gave Li Feng a doubtful look.

“Assistant Commissioner Li, is that young man really Sword Saint Mae Jonghak’s Disciple?”

“Certainly.”

“Then why is he like that?”

“Ahem.”

Li Feng cleared his throat, his face reddening. To him, Cheongpung was both Sword Saint Mae Jonghak’s Disciple and an elder of his sect, but even he couldn’t deny that Cheongpung was a little strange.

"I suppose it's because he's spent his life completely removed from the secular world."

"No, but even so. Are you saying Great Hero Mae didn't teach him the basics?"

"Well… from what I've seen and heard, my Grandmaster is rather unusual himself."

Rather unusual.

It was a valiant attempt to put things politely, but what I heard was, They're two of a kind.

Hong Jin must have gotten a similar impression, because he fell silent for a moment.

"Are you sure we can entrust this matter to Huashan?"

"…Yes."

Li Feng's answer came half a beat late. Hong Jin shook his head in disbelief.

"We can discuss that later. Shall we get going?"

His words made me suspicious, so I asked,

"Where? His Highness hasn't even arrived yet."

"That's exactly who I'm going to fetch."

"What?"

"If we stay here, we'll be waiting until sunset. I have a rough idea where His Highness is."

I watched Hong Jin turn away with a wink.

He'd be a decent guy if he just stopped doing that.

I was grateful that he had taken our side, but that was that, and this was this.

My backside is precious.

Hong Jin and Li Feng walked side by side at the front.

As I followed them, I gradually began to understand what positions they held here and how much influence they wielded.

"Loyalty!"

People's emotions show in their eyes, their bearing, and their voices.

The soldiers snapped off energetic military salutes to Li Feng, and their boundless respect was plain to see.

Understandable.

Li Feng, a lay disciple of Huashan, was a Supreme First Rate master. Respecting strength was a male instinct, and even at a glance he radiated an unmistakably masculine presence. From what little I'd seen, he was steadfast and taciturn.

But he isn't completely inflexible, either.

The fact that he'd accepted Hong Jin's proposal proved as much. Their relationship had clearly been hostile, but Li Feng knew when to join hands and when to let go.

No one disliked a superior who was reasonably flexible.

Then what about Hong Jin?

I shifted my gaze to the side.

Not a single soldier showed Hong Jin any respect as he walked along, frivolously wiggling his backside. If anything, some of them even cast contemptuous looks his way.

However…

"I-I pay my respects to Deputy Military Commissioner Hong."

"Mm. Yes. Good work."

"Yes, sir!"

Several officials and servants we passed practically groveled before him.

Their trembling voices and cautious footsteps made their feelings obvious.

They were afraid.

Respect and fear.

They were opposing emotions, but they had one thing in common.

Both came from the art of handling people. Li Feng and Hong Jin each held the support of their subordinates through respect and fear.

So one controls the military while the other controls civil affairs?

Shanxi Province was called a frontier region, but its size couldn't be ignored.

It was a respectable autonomous territory with a vast area and a population of several million registered in its household records.

Where there was land, people gathered. Where people gathered, power and wealth flowed. Even within the Shanxi Provincial Office, a fierce, unseen struggle for power was underway.

From what I've heard, Hong Jin seems to have the upper hand. But that's none of my business.

I was too busy making a living to get involved in someone else's power struggle.

After walking for some time while lost in thought, we passed through nine gates and came upon a group of people.

"Deputy Military Commissioner, and Assistant Military Commissioner, have you arrived?"

The tenth gate was particularly large and tall. I couldn't tell whether it had truly been built that way or only seemed so because a hundred soldiers surrounded it without leaving so much as a crack.

Wow. Talk about tight security.

Would a Peak master, and one capable of using Sword Energy at that, be needed to try anything here? Every one of the guards was heavily armed with armor, spears, swords, bows, and more. Sharp eyes gleamed from beneath their helmets.

Cheongpung, who had spent the entire walk exclaiming at everything around us, lowered his voice and whispered to me.

“Wow. What do these people do?”

“I’m not sure. Perhaps they’re the royal guard protecting Prince Shangshan?”

“The royal guard? They’re amazing…”

Cheongpung murmured vacantly, then clenched his fists.

“Benefactor, I’ve made up my mind.”

“About what?”

Why do I get nervous every time he opens his mouth?

Of course, my premonition proved correct again.

“I want to join the royal guard too!”

“…I don’t think that’s such a good idea.”

The Sword Saint probably wouldn’t be pleased to hear that.

I rubbed my throbbing forehead.

“Um, shouldn’t you get your grandfather’s permission first?”

“It’s all right. Grandfather said life is short, so whenever I find something I want to do, I should try it.”

“And that something is joining the royal guard?”

“Yes.”

Cheongpung stared intently at the royal guards standing in perfect rows, his eyes shining.

More precisely, he was staring at their gleaming black armor.

No way. Is this bastard…?

“…It’s not because the armor looks cool, is it?”

“Gasp.”

That was it.

What kind of lunatic joined the royal guard because he wanted their merchandise?

Li Feng, who had overheard our conversation, approached with a face that looked ten years older.

“Martial Uncle Cheongpung, I may be nothing more than a lowly lay disciple, but you are Huashan’s direct Disciple, someone who will bear the future of the sect on your shoulders. To abandon the sect and devote yourself to the military… Please be careful with what you say and do…”

Cheongpung looked as though Li Feng had hit the bull’s-eye. He frantically waved his hands.

“N-No, that’s not it. Really.”

“Is that so?”

“Yes, yes!”

“Then I’ll take your word for it. I was considering bringing you a suit of armor on the way out, if you needed one, but…”

Cheongpung took the bait immediately.

“Thank you. I’ll accept it gratefully, Great Hero Li.”

“…”

“…”

Is this bastard serious?

Oblivious to the sudden chill in the air, Cheongpung grinned.

“Great Hero Li is a good person.”

“I’m not Great Hero Li. I’m your Martial Nephew, Martial Uncle Cheongpung.”

“Martial Uncle, Martial Nephew. Those words feel awkward… Can’t we just call each other whatever feels comfortable?”

“No. Our sect’s hierarchy is strict. Call me Martial Nephew from now on. Then I’ll give you the armor.”

“Hmm. Even so…”

Li Feng delivered his final blow to the hesitating Cheongpung.

“If you call me Martial Nephew from now on, I’ll give you the weapons used by the royal guard as well.”

“Gasp…!”

Game over.

Merchandise wasn’t complete without the full set. On the verge of obtaining the Royal Guard Armor Set, Cheongpung spread his arms, his face glowing with joy.

“Martial Nephew Li Feng!”

Li Feng answered awkwardly.

“M-Martial Uncle Cheongpung.”

“I like Martial Nephew Li Feng best in the whole world!”

“…Thank you, Martial Uncle.”

I felt sorry for the Sword Saint, who had spent twenty years raising that bastard as his grandson.

While even the royal guards were distracted by this unexpected farce, Hong Jin let out a deep sigh.

“What are you doing? Why haven’t you opened the gate?”

The young prince barely came up to my chest, if that. Prince Shangshan, Zhu Bao, was much smaller than I had expected—and much stronger.

Ssshhk, ssshhk, ssshhk!

That was not a sound a mere ten-year-old child should have been able to make with a sword.

His sword paths were sharp, and his footwork technique carried him busily across the training ground.

Even I, who wasn't particularly well versed in sword techniques, could tell that his skill was more than enough to make me nod in approval.

So there was a reason he invited us.

When I first received Prince Shangshan's invitation, I'd had only one thought.

I'll go tell him a few heroic tales he wants to hear.

That was about it.

But this child was different. Instead of telling him stories about my exploits, I might have to teach him about martial arts.

"What do you think of His Highness?"

Hong Jin asked after dismissing all the attendants waiting outside the training ground with a single gesture.

Even then, the young prince was so absorbed in his martial arts that he didn't notice who had arrived or who had left.

"Exactly what sort of impression are you asking for?"

"Well, for starters, his martial arts?"

I answered honestly.

"He's better than I expected. No, he's outstanding. When did he begin learning?"

"He began showing an interest in martial arts three years ago."

"Three years…"

"Yes. Ever since the day he first held a sword, he hasn't missed a single day of martial arts training unless something unusual happened."

Li Feng smiled proudly and added, "He is unlike an ordinary child in many ways. His determination is remarkable. Much like yours, Young Hero Jin."

"Mine?"

"That's right. I heard Young Hero Jin worked himself to the bone from a young age. You've been making quite a name for yourself, just as one would expect from a master the Jin Family of Taiyuan secretly raised with such painstaking care."

"Uh… yes, I suppose."

That was a bogus rumor the Jin Family of Taiyuan had spread for public consumption.

In reality, I couldn't even remember what I'd been doing at the age of ten.

Probably going to elementary school or something.

Li Feng continued.

“You have no idea how delighted His Highness was when he heard the story of the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi. He must have been eagerly awaiting the chance to meet Young Hero Jin today.”

“…For someone who was looking forward to it, hasn’t he kept us waiting rather a long time?”

It felt like we’d been waiting for almost an hour. Was it because he was a prince? The little brat already had no basic manners.

Li Feng smiled faintly at my timid complaint.

“His Highness has a habit of immersing himself in martial arts whenever he is nervous. If he has offended you, please accept my apologies.”

There was no need to apologize over something like that. Just as I waved my hands dismissively, Hong Jin cupped both hands around his mouth and shouted,

“Your Hiiighness—!”

The small figure practicing his sword technique stopped dead at the shrill call. A moment later, he noticed us and crooked a finger.

“What is that supposed to be?”

“What do you think? His Highness is calling us.”

“What are we, neighborhood mutts?”

“Wow, I’ve never been a neighborhood mutt before!”

“…Please shut your mouth. No one here has ever been a neighborhood mutt.”

Suppressing my frustration, I walked toward the training ground.

Prince Shangshan Zhu Bao. With every step, his face drew closer.

The rude ones always seem to be handsome.

Even at such a young age, his already fully formed features were sharp and distinct. His black eyes stared directly at me.

When I reached him, a voice that was still unmistakably childish drifted out.

“Do you know who I am?”

I had at least learned the basics of etiquette by now. I lowered myself onto one knee so that our eyes were level.

“Yes. His Highness, Prince Shangshan.”

“I do not yet know your name.”

“My name is Jin Taekyung of the Jin Family of Taiyuan.”

A faint trace of surprise appeared in his previously dignified eyes.

“T-The Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, Jin Taekyung?”

“That’s right.”

I wondered how he would react.

The young prince remained silent for a long moment. Then he suddenly pulled something from his robes.

A wooden tablet about the size of an adult’s palm and a dagger.

“This…”

“…?”

He had handed them to me, so I accepted them. But what was I supposed to do with them?

As I stood there in bewilderment, Zhu Bao delivered a single dignified word.

“I would like your signature.”

“…”

Oh. He wants an autograph?

Chapter 144

He wanted my autograph. A king, no less.

What the hell is this?

I never saw this scenario coming.

As I stood there speechless with bewilderment, a pair of large eyes gazed steadily at me.

“Have I asked too much of you?”

“No, it’s not that… What are you planning to do with my signature?”

“Hmm. If you don’t want to, you don’t have to.”

Beneath the archaic speech straight out of a historical drama lurked an eagerness he couldn’t quite hide.

The tips of his feet scraped at the training ground floor like a puppy, and both his hands kept fidgeting restlessly. Those were proof enough.

The little guy is cute, though.

He was still a child. King or not, he couldn’t hide his age.

His expression was full of dignity, but his body was honest. A quiet laugh escaped me.

“Why are you laughing?”

“It’s nothing. So I just carve my name into this wooden tablet?”

The young king’s lips twitched.

“Preferably with your alias as well.”

Why was he answering so seriously over something like this? I held back my laughter and picked up the dagger.

Scritch, scritch, scritch.

Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, Jin Taekyung. I rested the wooden tablet on my knee and carefully carved the seven characters into it.

That was when Zhu Bao suddenly asked, “Wouldn’t it be easier if you used Sword Energy?”

“It would.”

“Then why aren’t you using it?”

“It’s not that I won’t. I can’t.”

“You can’t use Sword Energy?”

“I mean exactly what I said. I’m not a Peak master yet, so I can’t use Sword Energy.”

“You’re… not a Peak master?”

I raised my head slightly. Zhu Bao was staring at me with a shocked expression.

“Aren’t you the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi?”

"Yes, that's me."

"And yet you can't use Sword Energy? You're not a Peak master?"

"…That can happen."

"No, it can't!"

Wow. He almost sounded hurt.

I'd already been feeling inadequate with all the Sword Energy I'd been seeing lately. Now a little kid I had never seen before was twisting the knife.

Is being unable to use Sword Energy a crime?

I was hurt in my own way, and the young prince's fandom had taken a hit too.

I was wiping my nose in wounded frustration when he exclaimed, "How can you be so strong when you aren't even a Peak master?"

"What?"

"One Question, One Kill Jopil, Blade of Flowers Jin Baekyang, and most recently Pung Yang, the Red Wind Band Leader. Weren't all the enemies you defeated powerful Peak masters?"

Jopil was the only one I could honestly claim to have defeated entirely through my own strength, but I nodded anyway.

"That's right."

"How was such a thing possible?"

"Well…"

The Inventory is fucking amazing. And nobody can withstand a group beating.

Whenever things look hopeless, try digging through your Inventory. You might find an elixir worth half a jiazi[823] or a weapon made of Ten-Thousand-Year Cold Iron.

…I can't exactly answer that way.

An image was something you built for yourself.

I opened my mouth with a gentle smile.

"Isn't it because I was stronger?"

"Wow!"

"There's a saying in Murim. The strong do not survive. Those who survive are strong."

"Wow!"

"I've fought three Peak masters so far. I was once even attacked by dozens of First Rate masters."

"How could that be!"

Zhu Bao clenched his tiny fists and gasped in admiration.

He gave such great reactions that it made me want to keep talking. I continued, recalling the moments of crisis I had fought my way through.

---

[823] A jiazi is a traditional sixty-year cycle; half a jiazi is thirty years.

“But every time, I fought with everything I had and survived. Peak masters? Sword Energy? Those things aren’t important.”

“Sword Energy isn’t important? Do you mean that?”

“Of course.”

It’s fucking important.

Every bastard I met kept drawing out Sword Energy like endless strands of rice cake, and I was the only one who couldn’t use it.

Every fight left me wondering whether I had a human life or a fly’s.

Make sure you eat plenty of elixirs. Without Sword Energy, your body will suffer.

With outrageous disrespect, I placed a hand on the young king’s shoulder and whispered, “The desire to win. The unbreakable will to never give up until the very end. That is what made the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi who he is today.”

“An unbreakable will…!”

Zhu Bao’s small body trembled. Then, after letting out a heated sigh, he asked, “Can I become like you?”

“You can. From what I just saw of your training, you look like you’ll become a master in no time.”

“D-Do you really mean that?”

It’ll be tough without the System.

But you have to water a growing sprout.

I nodded at his enormous, sparkling eyes, carved a few more characters into the finished tablet, and handed it to him.

“Whenever things get hard, look at this and take heart.”

“What is this…?”

The young king examined the tablet and broke into a radiant smile.

“Thank you very much. I shall have this tablet enlarged and hang it on the signboard of the Shanxi Provincial Office.”

“…That?”

“Of course. Everyone who enters or leaves this place shall read your celebrated words.”

I looked at Zhu Bao, who was gazing fondly at the wooden tablet, and thought,

He’s going to hang that on the signboard of the Shanxi Provincial Office?

Dreams☆come true.[824]

—Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, Jin Taekyung—

…That?

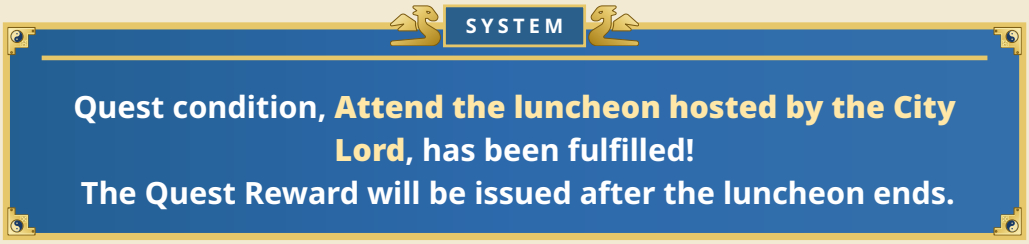
[824] “Dreams come true” is a slogan associated with South Korea’s run at the 2002 FIFA World Cup.

When we returned to the grand hall, it had been restored to pristine condition as though nothing had ever happened.

Once the servants filled the newly placed tables with delicacies from land and sea, Prince Shangshan Zhu Bao, seated at the seat of honor, spoke.

“I thank you all for willingly answering my summons. Now, please eat your fill.”

Ding.



The atmosphere that followed was warm and cheerful. With the young king, both host and master of the gathering, grinning from ear to ear, how could it not have been?

“I have heard that One Question, One Kill Jopil was an exceptionally vicious man. Could you tell me what he was like?”

“Oh, that bastard was absolutely brutal. Well, you see…”

“I’ve heard that Blade of Flowers Jin Baekyang was a Peak master whose name was known even in the Central Plains. How strong was he?”

“Fucking strong. The man was insane.”

“Young Hero Jin, His Highness is listening. Please mind your language.”

“Ah, sorry. Anyway, to tell you about what happened then…”

After telling stories for quite some time, I was exhausted. I tossed Cheongpung to Zhu Bao, who continued asking me questions, and quietly began edging away.

“Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi, where are you going?”

“You know the Sword Saint, Mae Jonghak, right? This guy is his disciple.”

“The Sword Saint!”

“And he’s a Peak master, too. Ask him to teach you Sword Energy.”

Leaving Zhu Bao as delighted as a child meeting Santa Claus, I slipped off to one side.

I spotted the young prodigies of the Five Gates of Shanxi silently cramming food into their mouths and two men engaged in a rather serious discussion.

Neither group was particularly inviting company.

I’ll just eat.

But before I could manage more than a few pieces of meat, a syrupy voice wormed into my ear.

“Young Hero Jiiin.”

“…What?”

Hearing that voice killed my appetite on the spot.

“What are you doing over there all by yourself? Come talk with us.”

“No, thank you. I’m hungry.”

“It’s about the Jin Family of Taiyuan.”

“I don’t get involved in family affairs. Talk to my eldest brother separately.”

“What a shame. Then I suppose we’ll have no choice but to entrust it to the Seongun Escort Bureau.”

The Seongun Escort Bureau? The name sounded familiar. Then I remembered—it belonged to the family of the guy I’d beaten black and blue at Honghwa Inn yesterday.

Hadn’t that guy been the Seongun Escort Bureau’s Young Bureau Head?

“Why the Seongun Escort Bureau?”

Hong Jin curled up the corners of his mouth.

“Oh, nothing. Please eat your meal. They say even a dog is left alone while it’s eating, so how could I bother the Sleeping Dragon of Shanxi?”

“…”

“Hee-hee. I was joking. Don’t look so serious. Come over and sit down.”

Hong Jin pulled out the chair beside him. I sat down as though I had no choice.

Beside Li Feng, of course.

I’ll say it again: my ass is precious.

“Let’s hear what this is about. I’m not very knowledgeable in this area, so I may not be much help.”

Hong Jin had been pouting in feigned disappointment. Now he spoke.

“It doesn’t matter if Young Hero Jin doesn’t make a decision here. You only need to pass the matter along to the Lesser Family Head. Now, Assistant Commissioner Li?”

Li Feng took over.

“We would like to borrow the strength of the Jin Family of Taiyuan for this matter.”

“This matter being…?”

“I believe you’re aware of our plan to focus on connecting Shaanxi and Shanxi.”

“The thing you originally intended to do with the Zhongnan Sect?”

Hong Jin, who had been watching us, nodded.

“To be honest, the Zhongnan Sect isn’t a bad partner. It’s a massive sect belonging to the Nine Sects and One Gang, and its leadership, including the Sect Leader, the Wind-and-Cloud Sword Lord, has a practical nature. They’re different from the other, relatively closed-off Murim sects.”

“Then was there really any need to switch partners? If you hadn’t intended to work with Huashan from the start, leaving things as they were might have been better.”

"It was a decision I reached after giving it a great deal of thought. Although we overturned it today."

Hong Jin smiled faintly and continued.

"I'm not a martial artist, but I'm well aware of the Sword Saint's standing in Murim."

"…"

"But it has been more than thirty years since the Sword Saint disappeared. If we had known sooner that he had remained at Huashan and was raising successors, we wouldn't have chosen the Zhongnan Sect."

When he finished speaking, Hong Jin shot Li Feng a reproachful look.

Apparently, Li Feng had known about the Sword Saint and Cheongpung for the past ten years without breathing a word of it.

"Deputy Military Commissioner, I'll say it again: that was classified information belonging to our sect. There was simply no longer any reason to conceal it once Martial Uncle Cheongpung descended the mountain."

Li Feng replied calmly, then turned to me.

"I'll get straight to the point. We need an Escort Bureau capable of expanding into the Central Plains, starting with Shaanxi."

Ah, I had a rough idea of what was going on.

They were asking the Jin Family of Taiyuan to provide material or human resources.

"Are you planning to create an Escort Bureau?"

"Something similar. However, we would like to borrow the name of the Jin Family of Taiyuan. In return, we'll provide half the funding and every possible convenience."

They were openly offering to back us. Wouldn't it be better for them to create an Escort Bureau themselves at this point?

As I wondered about that, I suddenly remembered what Jin Mukyung had told me a few days ago.

He said that the current Emperor also assassinated his older brother, the Crown Prince, and ascended the throne. I'm sure of it.

It was only an unconfirmed rumor, but judging by how cautiously these two were acting, it didn't seem entirely baseless.

Could the Emperor's wariness have been the reason he sent his only younger brother to Shanxi Province, a region treated as a frontier?

Hmm. Something about this smells fishy too.

As I wondered whether I had gotten myself entangled in something dangerous, the two men spoke to me.

"We'll arrange a meeting regarding this matter in the coming days. Please put in a good word with the Lesser Family Head."

"Young Master Jin, you know this is a good offer, right?"

"I know. I do, but…"

Looked at one way, this was someone else's family feud. Ordinary brothers might fight over who got an extra ice cream, give each other bloody noses, and call it a day.

But this wasn't ice cream. It was the imperial throne.

A bloody nose wouldn't be the end of it.

"I'll make sure to pass it along to my eldest brother."

I deliberately kept my answer noncommittal. Jin Wikyung would be the one making the decision anyway, so there was no reason for me to worry about it—unless he asked for my opinion first.

"That will be enough. He won't simply dismiss something Young Master Jin tells him. We've heard plenty about how much the Lesser Family Head cherishes his younger brothers."

So the whole neighborhood knows.

I drained my cup of liquor with an embarrassed look, only to meet the eyes of the four of them sitting at the far end of a table some distance away. They all looked as though they were about to get indigestion.

Oh, right. I'd almost forgotten something.

"Excuse me. Comrade Chairman[825]—no, Deputy Military Commissioner."

"Yes?"

"That Escort Bureau business. Wouldn't it be enough to simply change the sign?"

Unlike the bewildered Li Feng, Hong Jin grinned.

"You have a place in mind?"

"The one the two of you were talking about earlier."

"The Seongun Escort Bureau? Don't take them too lightly. It's the foremost Escort Bureau in Shanxi, after all. They'll be difficult to swallow in one bite."

"That's why we have to chew thoroughly."

One look at their Young Bureau Head had told me exactly what we were dealing with. With Hong Jin and Li Feng backing the Jin Family of Taiyuan as it now stood, we could chew them up bones and all—and still digest them.

[825] "Comrade Chairman" imitates a North Korean style of addressing a leader.

Chapter 145

Hong Jin let out a quiet laugh and tipped back his cup.

“Our Young Master Jin is greedier than I thought.”

“I’m about as greedy as anyone else. And I have a favor to ask. Could you just call me Young Master Jin?”

“Oh my. Pretending you don’t like it when you do.”

“Fucking hell…”

“Hmm? What did you just say?”

“Ah, I said it’s nice. Like we’re family.”

“Family, huh? I like the sound of that. I’m already looking forward to meeting Lesser Family Head Jin.”

Right. No matter how much I ran my mouth here, the final decision would come down to Jin Wikyung and Hong Jin.

They were both practically professionals at this sort of thing. The amateur should know when to step aside.

“By the way, what do you have against the Seongun Escort Bureau?”

“I wouldn’t call it a grudge… I’m just giving someone I dislike an extra slap. The chance to pick up a few crumbs along the way doesn’t hurt either.”
